 propose or accept any ways of preventing an open Rupture. So that the King made it his Business and his great Pleasure to visit his Docks and Ports, and give Orders for fitting and furnishing a Fleet with all possible Expedition, to be under the Command of Prince Rupert, and to sail for Guinea, if the Dutch Fleet under Admiral Opdam should happen to pass the Chanel, and pursue their intended Voyage to those Coasts. On Octob. 15. Prince Rupert, with his Squadron of sixteen Men of War, came to the Spit-Head; and at the beginning of November the Duke of York, Lord High Admiral of England, went down to Portsmouth, and joining with the Prince and Earl of Sandwich, took Charge of the Navy, and struck such a Terror upon the Coasts of Holland, that Opdam was glad to lay still with his Fleet in the Goree, while the Dutch Bourdeaux Fleet, laden home with Wine and Brandy, fell most of them into English Hands, and with many other of their laden Ships, to the Number of above one hundred and thirty, were brought into our Ports, and by the Admiralty condemn'd for lawful Prizes, tho' no War had been actually declared; which Proceeding was thought to be more Arbitrary than the Law of Nations did allow. It is however a Justice to observe, that this way of dealing with our Friends before we had pro-nounc'd them Enemies, was not meerly a Trick of France, or an Intrigue of our own Ministry, (as some have labour'd to represent it) but it was the very Voice of the English People, and especially the Cry of all our Merchants and Traders. The City of London were so full of ill Resentments against the Dutch for engrossing and usurping upon Navigation and Commerce, that they not only lent a hundred thousand Pounds (as before remembred) for Expedition of the Fleet; but, when the King still wanted another like Sum, they advanc'd it with the same Readiness, upon a Motion of the Earl of Manchester Lord Chamberlain, in a Speech deliver'd at the Guild-hall in London on Thursday Dec. 1. where were present many Members of both Houses of Parliament, who brought with them an Order presented by the Lord Chamberlain to the Lord Mayor, and read by Mr. Avery Deputy Town-Clerk, in these Words: "Die Veneris 25. Nov. 1664. Ordered by the "Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in "Parliament assembled, that the Thanks of both "Houses of Parliament be given unto the City of "London for their Forwardness in assisting his Ma"jesty; and in particular, by furnishing him with "several great Sums of Money toward his Prepara"tions for the Honour, Safety, and Trade of this "Nation.

 “ decline meeting with all the Naval Power of the “ United Provinces; that he had almost emptied “ his own Stores, and had very liberally borrowed “ of the City of London; so that to discharge the “ one, and replenish the other, would require little “ less than eight hundred thousand Pounds: that “ he had Reason to expect from them a speedy and “ substantial Supply; and must desire them to “ frame their Resolutions with all necessary Expe“ dition. The most affecting Words of the Speech “ were these: Mr. Speaker, and you Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I know not whether it be worth my Pains to endeavour to remove a vile Jealousie which some ill Men scatter abroad, and which, I am sure, will never sink into the Breast of any Man who is worthy to sit upon your Benches, That when you have given me a noble and proportionable Supply for the Support of a War, I may be induced, by some evil Counsellors (for they will be thought to think very respectfully of my Person) to make a sudden Peace, and get all the Money for my own private Occasions. But let me tell you, and you may be confident of it, that when I am compelled to enter into a War for the Protection, Honour, and Benefit of my Subjects; I will (God willing) not make a Peace, but upon the obtaining and securing those Ends for which the War is entred into: and when that can be done, no good Man will be sorry for the Determination of it. The “ Speaker was instructed to answer, that “ The Com“ mons of England could not sufficiently express “ their Loyalty and Affection to the King, nor the “ deep Sense which they All had of the Injuries and “ Violations committed by the Dutch; that they “ had considered the Burden of his Majesty’s Ex-“ pences, and the Necessity of his Naval Preparati“ ons; and begged Leave to assure him of their “ Readiness and Constancy to yield him all the Du“ ties of Assistance and Obedience with their Lives “ and Fortunes.

By the 11th of February the Bill was ready for the King’s Assent, and pass’d into an Act for granting a Royal Aid of twenty four hundred threescore and seventeen thousand and five hundred pounds. Hitherto no War proclaim’d, tho’ the Acts of Hostility had been in a manner commanded by an Order of the King in Council dated in December, setting forth, that his Majesty taking into due Consideration the Injuries, Affronts, and Spoils done by the Subjects of the United Provinces, to the Ships, Goods, and Persons of his Majesty’s Subjects, and having made frequent Demands of Redress which were ineffectual, he did therefore now, by Advice of his Privy Council, order, that general Reprisals should be granted against the Ships, and Goods, and Subjects of the United Provinces.

But the Hearts of the trading part of the Nation being now entirely turn’d against the Dutch, and the Parliament shewing the Sense of the People by a Royal Aid apparently meant for that purpose, the King order’d the drawing up a formal Declaration of War, which it is proper to insert.

 tion of War.

 “ His Majesty’s Declaration touching his Proceed“ ings for Reparation and Satisfaction for several “ Injuries, Affronts, and Spoils, done by the East “ and West-India Companies, and other the Subjects “ of the United Provinces, being this Day read at the “ Board, was approved: And it was order’d, that “ His Majesty’s Printers do forthwith cause the “ same to be Printed and Publish’d.

Richard Brown.

And it was so Printed and Published in these Words:

“ WHEREAS upon Complaint of the several In“ juries, Affronts, and Spoils done by the “ East and West-India Companies, and other the Sub“ jects of the United Provinces, unto and upon the “ Ships, Goods, and Persons of our Subjects, to “ their grievous Damages, and amounting to vast “ Sums; instead of Reparation and Satisfaction, “ which hath been by us frequently demanded, we “ found that Orders had been given to De Ruyter, “ not only to abandon the Consortship against the “ Pirates of the Mediterranean Seas (to which the “ States General had invited us) but also to use “ all Acts of Depredation and Hostility against “ our Subjects in Africa.

“ We thereupon gave Order for the detaining “ the Ships belonging to the States of the United “ Provinces, their Subjects and Inhabitants; yet “ notwithstanding we did not give any Commission “ for Letters of Mart, nor were there any Pro“ ceedings against the Ships detained, until we had “ a clear and undeniable Evidence that De Ruyter “ had put the said Orders in Execution, by seizing “ several of our Subjects Ships and Goods.

“ But now since finding by these fresh Injuries “ and Actings of theirs, and the Intelligence we “ have had of their great Preparations for War, “ and their granting of Letters of Mart against “ our People, that both our Forbearance and the “ other Remedies we have used to bring them to a “ Compliance with us, have proved ineffectual, and “ that they are resolv’d what they have done by “ Wrong, to maintain by Arms and War against “ us.

“ We have thought fit, by and with the Advice “ of our Privy Council, to declare, and do hereby “ declare to all the World, that the said States are “ the Aggressors, and that they ought in Justice to “ be so looked upon by all Men; so that as well “ our Fleets and Ships, as also all other Ships and “ Vessels, that shall be commissioned by Letters “ of Mart from our dear Brother the Duke of York, “ Lord High Admiral of England, shall and may “ lawfully fight with, subdue, seize, and take all “ Ships, Vessels, and Goods belonging to the said “ States of the United Provinces, or any of their “ Subjects or Inhabitants within any their Territo“ ries.

“ And we do hereby command as well all our “ own Subjects, as advertise all other Persons of “ what Nation soever, not to transport or carry any “ Souldiers, Arms, Powder, Ammunition, or any “ other Contraband Goods, to any of the Territo“ ries, Lands, Plantations, or Countries of the said “ States of the United Provinces; declaring, that “ whatsoever Ship or Vessel shall be met withall, “ transporting or carrying any Souldiers, Arms, “ Powder, Ammunition, or other Contraband Goods “ to any of the Territories, Lands, Plantations, or “ Countries of the said States of the United Provin“ ces; the same being taken, shall be condemned “ as good and lawful Prize.

“ And we do farther declare, that whatsoever Ship “ or Vessel, of what Nation soever, shall be met

Batenefs of De Ruyter.

The highest Provocation to this War was the per-fidious batenefs of De Ruyter, who commanded the Squadron sent by the States in conjunction with an English Fleet under Sir John Lamson, to reduce the Algerines to the Terms of Peace and free Trade; when as soon as De Ruyter enter'd the Straights, and had cruised a little about Gibraltar, he deserted the English and the common Service, and sail'd away to the Coasts of Guiney, and dispossest the English of their Factories at Cape-Verd and the Isle of Gogee; and after that struck off to the Barbadoes, and made an attempt of Landing, but was beat off with Loss and Shame; and then stood for Long-Island, and there committed great Depredations upon the English: thus ingloriously beginning a Piratick War under the sacred Bands of Friendship and Alliance. And they insulted the English for the Losses by such treachery brought upon them: For a Dutch-man in London pretending himself to be a Swede, lately come from Guiney, made it his proffest Business and Pleasure to report the utter destruction of the English there by De Ruyter; for which insolence he was on Febr. 25.
 whipp'd thro' the Streets of London.

The States all the while affected to be Silent, and hop'd to decline the Imputation of being the first Aggressors; tho' their Orders and the Execution of them sufficiently betray'd, that they did not wait to be on the Defensive side. When charg'd by our Ambassador with many Instances of their Violation of Faith and Honour with us; they condescended to publish a very disingenuous Libel entitul'd, An Extract of the Memorials of the States General of the United Provinces upon the Memorial of Sir George Downing, Envoy Extraordinary of the King of Great Britain.
 Wherein were so many Invectives against the King, and so many Aspersions upon the English Nation, that it put Sir George upon the necessity of a printed Vindication. And the States (as if designing no more than a Paper War) contented themselves with a second Libel called, A Summary Observation and Deduction deliver'd by the Deputies of the States General, upon the Memorial of Sir George Downing Envoy, &c.
 When they saw the English upon denial of Satisfaction to be in earnest for a War, they sent away Monsieur Beninghen to inform the King of France of their prospect of a Rupture with England, who seem'd to promise them his Favour and Protection; and yet to take advantage of their Necessities, he orders his Ambassadour in Holland to demand Reparations for the loss of two very considerable East-India Ships formerly taken from his Subjects.

We ought to look back on the Church of Scotland, where Presbytery began to vanish upon the first appearance of Monarchy; and all the Miseries and Confusion of that Kingdom were expressly enough charged upon the Kirk Party, in one of the first Acts of Parliament for Observation of the twenty ninth of May, having this Preamble, The States of the Parliament of the Kingdom of Scotland, taking into their Consideration the sad Condition, Slavery and Bondage this ancient Kingdom has groan'd under these twenty three Years, in which, under very specious pretences of Resor- mation, a publick Rebellion has been by the Treachery of some and Mispervasion of others, violently carried on against sacred Authority, to the Ruin and Destruction, as far as was possible, of Religion, the King's Majesty and his Royal Government, the Laws, Liberties and Property of the People, and all the publick and private Interests of the Kingdom; so that Religion itself hath been prostituted for the warrant of all these treasonable Invasions made upon the Royal Authority, and disloyal Limitations upon the Allegiance of the Subjects: Therefore, &c. And yet the Kirk had a right of Establishment by Law, but so weak in the Hearts of the People, and especially of the Nobles and Lairds, that it was to fall of itself, without the Honour of a legal Dissolution. Upon this prospect of a favourable turn, in the beginning of 1661. some of the most worthy Scotch Presbyters Mr. James Shoup, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Farnel, Mr. Loghton came to London, and were there first ordained Deacons and Presbyters, and then consecrated Bishops, by the Bishop of Winchester and two other assisting English Prelates; by which Act they expressly renounc'd the Validity of their former Ordination, and obtain'd a Royal Proclamation dated Sept. 6. declaring the King's Pleasure to be for restoring the Government of the Church of Scotland by Archbishops and Bishops, as it was exercised in the Year 1637. and farther signifying that he had nominated and presented Archbishops and Bishops to the several Sees, to be invested with the same Authority they had in the Reign of his Royal Grandfather. To obey and execute this good Intention, the Privy Council of Scotland on Jan. 9. following, did strictly discharge all Ecclesiastical meetings in Synods, Presbyteries and Sessions, until they should be authoriz'd by the Archbishops and Bishops, upon their entry on the government of their respective Sees. And in farther pursuance of this good Delign, the restoring Episcopacy in Scotland, the Parliament in their second Sessions made an Act to reintegrate the Bishops to the Exercise of their Episcopal Function, and to all their Privileges, Dignities, Jurisdictions and Possessions, due and formerly belonging thereunto. And another Act did command all Ministers to repair unto their Diocesan Assembly, and concur in all Acts of Church Discipline, as they should be thereunto required by the Archbishops or Bishops of the Diocese, under pain of being suspended from their Office and Benefice, till the next Diocesan meeting for their first Fault; and if they amend not, to be deprived and the Church to be declared vacant. And whereas by the Presbyterian Discipline all the Right of Patronage in Parochial Churches was taken from the Nobility and other Laity, and even from the Crown; the Parliament did now provide in their second Session 1662. that all Ministers who had enter'd to the Cure of any Parish within Burgh or Land, in or since the Year of our Lord 1649. to have no right to uplift the Rents of their respective Benefices, modified Stipends, Marsh or Glebe for this instant Year 1662.

 nor for the Year following, unless they should obtain a Presentation from the lawful Patron, and have collation from the Bishop of the Diocese where he liveth, before the twentieth of September next. And to pluck up the Root of all Evil, on Sept. 5. 1662. the Parliament formed a Declaration to be subscrib'd by all who shall have any publick Charge, Office or Trust within the Kingdom in these Words:

I A. B. do sincerely affirm and declare, that I judge it unlawful to Subjects, upon pretence of Reformation, or any other pretence whatsoever. to enter into Leagues and Covenants, or to take up Arms against the King, or those commissioned by him; and that all these Gatherings, Convocations, Petitions, Protestations, and erecting and keeping Connsel Tables, that were used in the beginning, and for the carrying on the late Troubles, were unlawful and seditious. And particularly that those Oaths whereof the one is called the National Covenant, and the other entituled A solemn League and Covenant, were and are in themselves unlawful Oaths; and were taken by and imposed upon the Subjects of this Kingdom against the ſaid Oaths, or either of them, to endeavour any Change or Alteration of the Government, either in Church or State, as it is now eſtabliſhed by the Laws of the Kingdom.

This Revolution and Eſta bliſhment of the Church of Scotland was during the Commiſſion of the Earl of Middleton, who did all that was poſſible to aſſert the King's Supremacy, and to ſettle him a good Revenue. But in the beginning of 1663. the Earl of Middleton was removed, and the Earl of Rothes was appointed to be High Commiſſioner of Scotland; a Ringleader of the Presbyterians under King Charles I. and even the principal of thoſe Conſpirators who ſubſcribed a Letter to the King of France, directed Au Roy, to aid their Kirk and Covenant againſt their lawful Prince. And yet now under his Adminiſtration the Presbyterians loſt ground more and more. The ſtanding High Commiſſion for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes was in hands that extended their Authority in a moſt vigorous manner. And the Parliament to demolish all the Remains of Kirk Diſcipline, ordain'd a new Conſtitution of a National Synod or General Church Aſſembly, whereby the external Government of the Church was declared to be inherent in the King, by virtue of his Prerogative Royal in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical; that the Members of this Synod were to be only Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, the Moderators of Meetings for Exerciſes, with one Miniſter of each Meeting, to be choſen by the Moderator and plurality of Miniſters for the ſame. The Synod to meet at ſuch Time and Place only as his Maſteſty ſhould appoint by Proclamation; and to Debate of ſuch Matters only relating to the Government and Doctrines of the Church, as his Maſteſty ſhould recommend. And laſtly, no Aſſembly to be held without the preſence of his Maſteſty or his Commiſſioner. And in the next Seſſion of Parliament, a Proclamation was iſſued out, commanding all Miniſters who had enter'd before the Year 1649. and ſince the reſtitution of the Church Government by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, had relinquish'd their Miniſtry, or had been depoſed by their Ordinary to remove themſelves within forty Days after their Relinquishment or Depoſal, out of the Pariſhes whereof they had been Incumbents, and not to reſide within twenty Miles of the ſame, nor within ſix Miles of Edinburgh, or any Cathedral, nor within three Miles of any Burgh Royal, nor to inhabit two in one Pariſh, upon penalty of incurring the Laws made againſt Movers of Sedition.

The Church of England loſt a great Prelate, Dr. Accepted Fremon Archbiſhop of York, who had been elected Preſident of Magdalen College in Oxford 1626. and inſtall'd Dean of Glouceſter 1631. and conſecrated Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield 1644. and tranſlated to York in October 1660. He died at his Manor of Biſhop's-Thorp on March 28. 1664. and was buried on May 3. under the great Eaſt Window of his Cathedral Church, with a ſplendid Monument ſoon after erected for him.

The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury held their frequent Seſſions, and having diſpatch'd the Buſineſs of Religion, they fell upon a matter of Eccleſiaſtical Cogniſance, the better Government of Grammer Schools; ſeveral Complaints had been made of the Faults and Defects of Lilly's Grammer. The uſe of which had been preſcrib'd by the Royal Eccleſ. Supremacy; and therefore it was thought proper that a new publick Form of Grammer ſhould be new drawn up and approv'd in Convocation, to be enjoind by the ſame Royal Authority. Hence on April 20. the Archbiſhop and his Brethren conſulted of bringing in ſuch a new Form of Grammer, and of appointing fit Perſons for the Examination and Correſtion of it. On May 4. ſuch a Form of Grammer was brought in by Dr. John Pierson, and the Reviſal of it was recommended to a Committee of both Houſes. But this matter dropp'd as a dubious and difficult Task, or at leaſt was interrupted by the death of the Prolocutor Dr. John Barwick Dean of St. Paul's; into whoſe place the inferior Clergy elected Dr. John Dolben Dean of Weſtmiſter, who was preſented to the Archbiſhop, and confirmed by him on Friday December 2. Nothing more was done till Febr. 18. when the Archbiſhop deſired the Biſhops, when they ſhould come to their reſpective Dioceſes, to return to him an Account of the Names of all Miniſters who had been ejected from their Cures, and the places of their Habitation. And on March 4. his Grace recommended to the ſaid Biſhops, their taking all poſſible Care and Diligence, that all Miniſters and Curates within their reſpective Dioceſes ſhould read the Divine Service as preſcribed by Law, diſtinctly and fully, without omiſſion of any part in the right Order and in Canonical Habit.

This Year began a very remarkable Change in the Liberties and Properties of the Clergy of England, by altering the way of taxing themſelves, and being tax'd in common with the People in Parliament. It muſt be obſerv'd, that by original Conſtitution the Lords Spiritual and Prelates and Clergy were eſteem'd one of the three Eſtates of the Realm, and therefore met in Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies on the civil Account of giving their own Money, and ſecuring their own Secular Rights and Liberties. This was the true and only Reaſon of the inferior Prelates and Clergy being call'd to Parliament by a Clause of Premunientes inſerted in the Parliamentary Writ of Summons to every Biſhop, as the Practice began in 23 Ed. 1. by which Parliamentary Summons, the Lower Clergy never found place among the Temporal Commons, as the Biſhops had long before done among the Temporal Lords; but they were only to meet in a diſtinct Aſſembly in Parliament time, for the Parliamentary purpoſe of Aiding the King with Money, and making their Petitions for any Redreſs of Grievances, or Grant of Liberties, &c. And theſe Parliamentary Convocations medled only with the Civil Rights of the Church, not concerning themſelves with Doctrine or Diſcipline or other Spiritual Things, which were reſerved to the proper Eccleſiaſtical Synods, that were called independently on Parliaments, to meet in two Provincial Aſſemblies, before the reſpective Archbiſhops. This Conſtitution of the Church was not alter'd by the Reformation, any farther than as the Eccleſiaſtical Synods could no longer be called but by the King's Writ, nor act but by his Authority, becauſe he was now declared the Supreme Head. And there was a leſs Change in the Parliamentary Convocations, they gave their Money as before, only their Grants of Subſidy were now generally confirm'd by Acts of Parliament; and yet they gave Benevolences as formerly, to be levied and paid according to Rules and Conſtitutions of their own making. But by degrees theſe two different Aſſemblies of the Clergy in Eccleſiaſtical Synods and in Parliamentary Convocations, grew in effect into one Body, becauſe the Provincial Writs generally brought the Clergy together at the ſame time with the Premunientes Clause; not but that they had ſtill a diſtinct Capacity, and might have a ſeparate Being; and they actually had ſo in 1640. when the Parliamentary Convocation expiring with the Parliament diſſolv'd, the Provincial Synod did continue in a legal Being, till diſſolv'd by a ſeparate Writ, as the Judges themſelves affirmed to be Law. In ſhort, by virtue of ſuch original Conſtitution, the Clergy tax themſelves, and were never included in any Bill of the Lay Commons, till the times of Rebellion and Uſurpation, when the Church of England being diſſolv'd, this Right among others was ſwallow'd up; and the Schiſmatical Miniſters having no great title to be diſtinguiſh'd from the common People, had their Benefices tax'd in common with Lay Eſtates. But when the Church was reſtor'd in 1660. this original Right was reſtor'd with 16 Car. II. vocation, when the Clergy granted to the King four Subsidies, and had their separate Grant confirm'd by Act of Parliament, Stat. 15 Car. II. cap. 10. But it so happen'd, that the Bishops and Clergy now thought themselves griev'd in this Method of Taxing, by which they paid more in proportion than the Laity, and were subject more to the Pleasure of the Court, and more to the Humour of the Commons, who expected and often requir'd that the Clergy should give beyond their Proportion, and even beyond their Abilities. And besides all these Mischiefs and Dangers, the Body of the Clergy were left too much at the mercy of the Convocation Di-vines, who were many of them Court-Chaplains and Seekers of Court-Preferment, and so might be tempted to raise their own Fortune by laying a heavier Burden on their Brethren. The Experience or the Fear of these Evils put the Archbishop and some of the chief Bishops into a Consult with the Lord Chancellour, the Lord Treasurer, and some other prime Ministers of State; wherein it was concluded, that the Clergy should tacitly recede from the Custom of Taxing themselves, and should be included in the Money-Bills prepared by the House of Commons: and to encourage their Assent, should have two of the four Subsidies remitted to them; and should have a Clause of saving the antient Rights belonging to the Clergy, as in this part of the Act for granting a Royal Aid unto the King's Majesty, in the Session held at Westminster Nov. 24. 1664.

“ — Provided always, and be it Enacted by the “ Authority aforesaid, that all spiritual Promotions, “ and all Lands, Possessions, or Revenues annex'd “ to, and all Goods and Chattels growing or re“ newed upon the same or elsewhere, appertaining “ to the Owners of the said spiritual Promotions or “ any of them, which are or shall be charged, or “ made contributory by this Act towards the Pay“ ments aforesaid, during the time therein appoint“ ed, (which was to be rais'd, levied, and paid in the “ space of three Years) shall be absolutely freed and “ discharg'd from the two last of the four Subsidies “ granted by the Clergy to his Majesty, his Heirs “ and Successors, by an Act made in a former Ses“ sion of this present Parliament, intituled An Act “ for confirming of four Subsidies granted by the Clergy, “ any Clause or Thing in the said Act to the contra“ ry notwithstanding. — Provided always, that “ nothing herein contained shall be drawn into Ex“ longing unto the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, “ or Clergy of this Realm, or unto either of the “ Houses, Hospitals, or Cinque-Ports.

Whether this great Change in the manner of Taxing now introduc'd, and likely to continue, be more to the Interest or to the Prejudice of the Church and Clergy in England, is not so easie to determine: tho' excepting the former Independence of the State of the Clergy, and the Danger of being oppress'd when they shall hereafter fall under the Displeasure of a House of Commons; we must confess, that they have been hitherto better dealt with than while they tax'd themselves, and they seem only to have lost the Benefit of presenting their Articles of Grievances, and obtaining the more easie Redress of them, as a Reward of their Liberality to the Crown. Nay the Clergy have gain'd one Privilege, that of all Rectors and Vicars voting for Members of Parliament, which they never did, till their Money was now given by the Lay Commons; and therefore they ought to be now represented by them, and ought for the same Reason to lose their Votes in all Parliamentary Elections, if ever they could reassume the Practice of Taxing themselves.
 There is a Clause that does sufficiently reserve that Right: but supposing the Clergy should think fit to claim it, it is a great Question whether the House of Commons will allow it; who, being now in possession of the Custom of Taxing the Clergy, may not be willing to relinquish that Custom. 1665.

On March 23. his Royal Highness the Duke of Tork set out, with a noble Attendance, to go aboard the English Fleet; which being now ready to sail, a proper Care was taken to complete the Preparation by an Order for a General Fast to be observed on April 5. To implore the Blessing of God upon his Majesty's Forces employ'd against the Dutch. And it was remarked, that the Queen-Mother and Queen-Consort did eminently shew their Zeal on this Occasion; and did, by express and particular Appointment, command all their Domesticks to set themselves apart with entire Abstinence and extraordinary Devotions for the Service of the Day.

17 Car. II.
 The Duke of York Admiral.

The Dutch were not ready to come forth; and did not indeed seem to be in earnest for a War: They were rather solliciting the King of France to interpose; who, accordingly, sent Monsieur Vernevel and Courtine his Ambassadors extraordinary to our Court, who came to London Apr. 6. and had Audience of the King May 9. Their chief Errand was reported to be the Mediation and Composure between England and Holland; but they could not effect it, because it is most probable their Master did not intend it. In the mean while, all the Dutch could do, was to enlarge their Einbargo upon the English, and to provide, that none of the Subjects of that State should insure any Goods belonging to the Subjects of the King of England, and to forbid all Neuters to carry Counterband Goods to any of the Dominions of his Britannick Majesty. King of France
 seems to mediate.

Some of our Cruisers began with good Success, and took three Dutch Frigats; the first a Caper of 7 Guns and 47 Men; the other two were Direction- Ships; one of 32 Guns and 80 Men, taken by the Diamond, wherein Captain Golding, a brave Officer, was slain; the other of 22 Guns and 60 Men, taken by the Tarmouth, after stout Resistance. One of these Direction-Ships was commanded by young Everts, whom the Duke treated with great Courtesie, and the King gave him his Liberty, and a considerable Present, as an Acknowledgment for the good Offices he had formerly received from his Father in Holland. On April 21. his Royal Highness set Sail with the whole Fleet, made up of one hundred and fourteen Sail; and finding the Chanel clear, he resolved to visit the Dutch upon their own Coasts, and came before the Texel on Apr. 28. and sent in a Squadron so near the Shore and Harbour, that the Dutch were in a great Alarm and Consternation, and erected Beacons all along the Sands from the Texel to the Maese, to give notice upon any Attempt of Landing. All this Daring of the English could not draw out the Dutch Fleet; and therefore, after the taking many rich Merchant-Men in the very Mouth of their Rivers and Ports, the Duke carried back his Navy to the English Coasts. The Dutch took that Opportunity of coming out, and by May 29.
 appeared about the Dogger Sands, divided into seven Squadrons; 14 Men of War and 2 Fireships under Opdam, a like number under John Everts, 15 Men of War and 1 Fireship under Cortenaar, 14 Men of War and 1 Fireship under Stillingwers, 16 and 1 Fireship under Trump, 14 and 1 Fireship under Cer-nelius Everts, and 16 with 2 Fireships under Schran; in all 102 Men of War, 11 Fireships, and 7 Yatches, besides Tenders. And by the Duke's retiring from the Holland Coasts, they took the Advantage of intercepting our Hamburgh Fleet, who had sent to the Duke, lying before the Texel, for a Convoy, which was dispatch'd to them; and bringing them along the Holland Coasts when the Duke was sail'd away, and missing of the Roe-Ketch, which the Duke had sent to meet them, and give them Notice of the Duke's Removal; they fell in with a Squadron of the Dutch sent out on purpose to watch and attack 'em, and were most of them taken. And returns.
 Then the Dutch came out, And take our Ham-burgh Fleet.

This incensed the Duke to come the sooner to a general Engagement. So having weigh'd Anchor from 1665. from the Gunfleet on May 30. he came to Southold Bay on June 1. and bore up to the Dutch Fleet, and engaged them June 3. and obtained a very signal Victory, taking 18 capital Men of War, and sinking and firing about 14 more, and blowing up Opdam in his Flag Ship, with 500 Men and 84 Guns. On our side was lost but one Ship, the Charity; and that had been before taken from the Enemy: But we lost many brave Men of Quality and Courage; the Earl of Falmouth, the Lord Miskerry, and the Honourable Mr. Boyle, fell all three by one Cannon Shot, so very near the Person of the Duke, that he was sprinkled with their Blood and Brains. The Earl of Portland, the Earl of Marlborough, and Rear-Admiral Sampson, were kill'd in the Fight; and Sir John Lamson soon after died of his Wounds.

Our Loss of many great Men.

The Duke fights and obtains a signal Victory.

It is fit for History to be adorned with this admirable Letter, wrote on Shipboard upon the Coasts of Holland by the Right Honourable James Earl of Marlborough, a little before his Death; directed To the Right Honourable Sir Hugh Pollard, Comptroller of his Majesty's Household.

A Letter from the Earl of Marlborough.

I Believe the Goodness of your Nature, and the Friendship you have always borne me, will receive with Kindness the last Office of your Friend. I am in Health enough of Body, and (through the Mercy of God in Jesus Christ) well disposed in Mind. This I premise, that you may be satisfied that what I write proceeds not from any fantastick Terrour of Mind, but from a sober Resolution of what concerns myself, and earnest desire to do you more Good after my Death, than mine Example (God of his Mercy pardon the Badness of it) in my Life-time may do you harm. I will not speak ought of the Vanity of this World; your own Age and Experience will spare that Labour. But there is a certain thing that goeth up and down the World, call'd Religion, dressed and pretended fantastically, and to Purposes bad enough, which yet by such evil-dealing loseth not its Being: The great good God hath not left it without a Witness, more or less, sooner or later, in every Man's Bosom, to direct us in the Pursuit of it: And for the avoiding of those inextricable Disquisitions and Entanglements our own frail Reasons would perplex us withall, God in his infinite Mercy hath given us his holy Word, in which as there are many things hard to be understood, so there is enough plain and easie, to quiet our Minds, and direct us concerning our future Being. I confess to God and You, I have been a great Neglector, and I fear a Despiser of it: God of his infinite Mercy pardon me the dreadful Fault: But when I retired myself from the Noise and deceitful Vanity of the World, I found no true Comfort in any other Resolution than what I had from thence. I commend, from the bottom of my Heart, the same to your (I hope) happy Use. Dear Sir Hugh, let us be more generous than to believe we die as the Beasts that perish; but, with a Christian, Manly, Brave Resolution, look to what is eternal. I will not trouble you farther. The only great God, and holy God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, direct you to an happy End of your Life, and send us a joyful Resurrection. So prays,

Old-James near the Coast of Holland, April 24. 1665.

Your true Friend, Marleburgh.

I beseech you to commend my Love to all mine Acquaintance: particularly I pray you that my Cousin Glafcock may have a sight of this Letter, and as many Friends besides as you will, or any else that desire it.

To return to the glorious Victory. Two thousand six hundred and thirty three Dutch Prisoners, whereof thirteen were Commanders, were brought to Colchester on June 19. before which Day the Duke himself came Post to Whitehall, and received the Congratulations of the Court. And a solemn Day of publick Thanksgiving for the late Victory, was observed in London and Westminster on June 30. and throughout all other Parts of England and Wales on July 4. And the King having waited on his Royal Mother to the Sea Coasts of Kent, in order to her Return into France, on June 29. went aboard the Royal-Charles in the Buoy of the Nore, where he bestowed the Honour of Knighthood upon several Captains who had behav'd themselves with the most distinguishing Valour in the late Fight, as Rear-Admiral Tiddiman, Captain Jordan, Captain Spragge, and Captain Cuttings; as he had some few Days before conferred the same Honour, for the same Service, on Capt. Christopher Mings and Capt. Jeremy Smith. In Holland, the Misfortunes of their Fleet put the common People into so many Complaints and Murmurs, that the States were forced to comply with the popular Passions, and to question many of the Officers for Cowardice, or for ill Management, or even for Treachery itself; and, for a Sacrifice, to execute three of their Sea-Captains at the Helder; and to order two more to have their Swords broken over their Heads, and to make another stand some hours upon a Scaffold with a Halter about his Neck. All which Ceremony of Justice was rather to appease the Madness of the People, than to vindicate the Honour of their Country.

The Joys in England were soon abated by the dreadful Calamity of a raging Pestilence, which broke out in London about the middle of May, and spread with intolerable Infection through the City and Suburbs; and within those Bounds swept away 97306 Persons. It happen'd just forty Years after the Plague that dreadfully prevail'd in 1625, and made some People impute a Fatality to that Number; as if in this sense the Land was to have Rest but forty Years. The King retired to Hampton-Court, and thence to Salisbury, leaving the contagious Cities of London and Westminster to the affectionate Care of George Duke of Albemarle, who in the Heat of the Distemper continued at Whitehall, and gave Orders and Relief with such an unshaken Courage, as if he had been born to triumph over Diseases and Death. The first Method of Healing, was by Proclamation to command a General Fast, to be Religiously observed throughout the Kingdom of England, to the End that Prayers and Supplications might be every where made for the Removal of so heavy a Judgment; in a Form drawn up by the Bishops, and appointed by the King to be likewise used in all Churches and Chapels within the Bills of Mortality, on every Wednesday in the Week, during the Contagion. A second Office of Piety and Charity, was to order the making of continual Collections, publick and private, for Relief of the Sick and Needy in the time of such miserable Distress. A third Means of stopping the Plague, or hindring the Tumults and Distractions that might arise upon it, was to publish a Proclamation requiring all disbanded Officers and Soldiers who had served in the Armies of any of the late usurped Powers, to depart the Cities of London and Westminster, and not to return within twenty Miles of the same till November following. And lastly, Another way of restoring wholesome Breath was made use of, by ordering continual Fires to be kindled and kept in all the Streets and open Places of the City three whole Days and Nights together, to purifie the Air.

The Lord High Admiral, the Duke of Tork, cared not to adventure his Person in another Sea-Fight, and therefore committed to the Earl of Sandwich the chief Command of the Navy; which, having repaired the Losses sustained in the late Action, and having fitted out for Service several of the Dutch Prizes, on the 5th of July they weigh'd about sixty 1665. Sail from Soulbay, and made for the Coast of Holland; the Standard was born by the Earl of Sandwich, under whom Sir George Aſene was Vice-Admiral, and Sir Thomas Tyddeman Rear-Admiral, Sir William Pen was Admiral of the White under him Sir William Berkeley Vice-Admiral, Sir Joseph Jordan Rear-Admiral. The Blew Flag was carried by Sir Thomas Allen, whose Flag Officers were Sir Chriſtopher Minns, and Captain Hanman. The Dutch waited for the return of De Ruyter from Newfoundland, to which place, after his being beat off from Barbadoes, he had ſteer'd his Courſe with 17 Dutch Men of War, and arriving at St. John's, he took the Diamond of Plimouth and the Unity of Dartmouth, and plunder'd the Colony of their Proviſion and their very Cloaths: At Bay Bulls Harbour he took two Ships more, and in Pitt's Harbour three other Ships, and ranſack'd all the fiſhing Coaſts, and brought away above a hundred of the moſt able Seamen, becauſe they reſuſed to enter into the Service of the States. With theſe few Prizes and his own Ships extremely damag'd, he crept home by the Coaſt of Norway and Denmark, and was immediately made Admiral of the Dutch Fleet, yet rather to carry the Flag than to command the Maritime Affairs, which in a new Model were put under the Superintendency of three of their great Men, De Witt, Huygens and Boreel.

Actions of the Earl of Sandwich. The Earl of Sandwich finding the Dutch Fleet were not yet ready to meet him, fail'd in three Squadrons toward the North-Seas, and having notice that the Dutch Smyrna and Streights Fleet, with ſome of their East-India Men were got into the Harbour of Bergen in Norway, he ſent a Squadron of 22 Men of War under the Command of Sir Thomas Tyddeman, with Orders to ſail directly and attack them in that Port. This Enterprize had been more ſucceſſful, but that the Wind did not ſerve the Engliſh at the Mouth of the Harbour, and the Danes aſſiſted the Dutch in raiſing a Bartery on the Banks of it; but, however, the Engliſh Ships lay and fir'd with ſo much Reſolution, that ſome few of the Dutch were fir'd, and many were diſabled. In this Action was ſlain a near Relation of the Earl of Sandwich, the Honourable Edward Mountague, Son to the Lord Mountague of Boughton. After this Attempt, the Engliſh Fleet on Aug. 30. ſet ſail for the Coaſt of Holland, and having ſuffer'd much by a Storm that carried them back Northward, on Sept. 4. they met with the Dutch East-India Men, and ſeveral other Merchant-men under a good Convoy; and tho' the ſtormy Weather much favour'd the eſcape of the Dutch, yet we took eight good Men of War, two of their beſt East-India Ships, and twenty Sail of their Merchant-men. And on Sept. 9. a part of our Fleet fell in with 18 Sail of Hollanders, and took the greateſt part of them, bringing away with the other Prizes four Dutch Men of War, and above one thouſand Priſoners.

Parl. meet at Oxford. The Parliament having been Prorogued from March 2. to June 21. was by Proclamation on May 30. further prorog'd to a time which ſhould be prefixed at their Day of meeting on June 21. when it was accordingly prorog'd to Aug. 1. and then again prorog'd to meet at Oxford on Octob. 9. the King and Court chuſing that Place, as the moſt free from Infection. So on Octob. 10. the King ſeated on a Throne at the upper-end of the great Hall in Chriſt-Church, made an acceptable Speech before the two Houſes to this effect:

King's Speech. "That they might confidently believe, that had it not been abſolutely neceſſary to conſult with them, he would not have now called them together, when the Contagion had ſpread itſelf over ſo many parts of the Kingdom. That he had enter'd upon a War with the States General, by their Advice and Encouragement; and that therefore he deſired, they might receive Information of the Conduct and Effects of it, to the end he might have the continuance of their cheerful Supply. That this War had prov'd more chargeable to him than he could imagine it would have done. That 1665. 17Car.II. "the Addition and Recruits which the Dutch made to their Fleets, made it unavoidably neceſſary for him to make a proportionable Preparation. That as the Dutch endeavour'd by falſe Suggeltions to make themſelves Friends, ſo he himſelf had not been wanting to encourage thoſe Princes who had been wrong'd by the Dutch, to recover their own by force; to which end he had aſſiſted the Biſhop of Munſter with a conſiderable Sum of Money. That for theſe Reaſons his Supply already granted was near ſpent, and the Publick Occaſions would require much greater Aid. However, that he made not War for War's ſake, but was ready to receive all fair Propoſitions; tho' he thought indeed the Dutch were no leſs insolent than ever; and yet had gain'd no Advantage that he knew of.

Speech of the Lord Chancellor Hyde. When his Maſteſty had done ſpeaking, the Lord Chancellor Hyde made a much larger Speech, running over the whole Proceſs of State Affairs from before his Maſteſty's Reſtauration to the preſent Juncture, obſerving, "That notwithstanding the Affronts put upon the Royal Family in Holland during the Uſurpation, his Maſteſty was pleaſed to embark himſelf in one of their Ports, tho' preſt by the two Neighbour Kings to have taken his Paſſage thro' any part of their Territories.— That being return'd, the King was forc'd to ſupport himſelf upon Credit, till the Armies were diſbanded, and the Fleet paid off; which Debt was heightned by the neceſſary Supplies of his Maſteſty's Stores, ſo exhausted at that time, that there was not Arms for five thouſand Men, nor Proviſions for the ſetting out ten new Ships. That under all theſe Difficulties, his Maſteſty had replenish'd his Stores, had reduc'd the Expence of his Navy, by providing only a neceſſary Guard for the Narrow-Seas, and a Fleet againſt the Pyrates, which had brought them to Submiſſion. Then he repeated the ſeveral Injuries and Inſolencies committed by the Dutch; the neceſſity of vindicating the Rights and Honour of our Nation; the King's referring of this Cauſe to the Parliament, the Parliaments humble Deſires of Redreſs; the States preparations for War; and the whole Series of the War, and its ſucceſs until that time; and then reflecting upon the greatneſs of the King's Expence, he concluded with an earneſt Motion for farther ſpeedy and effectual Supplies.

Proceedings of the Commons. In answer to this, the Houſe of Commons ſoon return'd their Thanks to his Maſteſty for his gracious Care and Conduct, for the preſervation of his People, and advancement of the Honour of the Nation; declaring they would aſſiſt him with their Lives and Fortunes in carrying on the preſent juſt and neceſſary War. And they readily made good their Promiſe by granting an additional Supply of 1250000*l.* to be raiſed by Monthly Aſſeſſments, and threw in for a Benevolence one Months continuation of the Tax, to come in the Rear after the expiration of the other Payments, which they deſir'd his Maſteſty would beſtow upon his Royal Highneſs.

The Honour done to the University. On the laſt Day of their Seltions the Houſe of Commons conſidering, that they ſate in the Convocation Houſe, voted, that the Thanks of their Houſe ſhould be given to the Chancellor, Maſter and Scholars of the famous University of Oxford, for their eminent Loyalty to his Maſteſty, and to his Father of bleſſed Memory during the Rebellion; particularly for their Zeal and Courage in reſuſing to be viſited by the uſurp'd Powers, and to ſubſcribe the Solemn League and Covenant; and in publiſhing to the World their excellent Reaſons to juſtify their Reſuſal, and to aſſert his Maſteſty's and their own Rights. Which Thanks were accordingly preſented to the University in a full Convocation, by Mr. Lawrence Hyde, Sir Heneage Finch, Sir John Berkenhead, and Colonel Strangways, all which were now, or a little before made Doctors of Laws. And 1665. then on this 20th of October, the Money Bill, the 17 Car. II. Bill of Attainder of certain English Fugitives who had join'd with the Dutch, and a Bill for farther A's pass. restraint of the Nonconformist Teachers, with some other Bills, the Parliament was prorogued to the twentieth of February next ensuing, then to meet at Westminster; and at that meeting was again prorogued to April 23.

The Term kept at Oxford. On October 11. his Majesty by Proclamation had adjourn'd the Michaelmas Term from Westminster to Oxford; so that soon after the Recess of the Parliament, the several Courts of Justice sat in the publick Schools; Sir John Keeling then first appearing on the Bench as Lord Chief Justice of England, and and Sir William Norton one of the Judges of the same Court, in the place of Sir Wadham Windham deceased.
The next Hilary Term was from hence adjourn'd to Windsor, but upon ceasing of the Plague was from thence restored to Westminster.

Dutch Amb- In the heat of this Summers War, the Dutch had bassador. still their Ambassador Van Goteb Resident in England, but when they found his Solicitations for a Peace were to no purpose, they recalled him, and he took his leave of the King at Oxford, then receiving his Majesty's Letter to the States, wherein he positively charg'd them to be Authors of the War, yet signified to them his readines to come to any fair and honourable Terms of Accommodation. In the mean time, the Mediterranean Seas were well secured by a good Squadron of Ships under the Command of Sir Jeremy Smith, and the Channel by another strong Squadron Commanded by Sir Christopher Mims, who hearing of a Dutch Squadron near Ostend, sail'd after them, and chased them into the Wielings; and clearing the Seas and the very Coasts of all Dutch Vessels, he sail'd away for the Coast of Sweden, and came to an Anchor at the Mouth of the Elbe, where General Wrangle travel'd above thirty Miles to give a Visit and a Complement to the English Admiral, who entertained him on Ship-board with great Civility and Splendor.

Bishop of While the Dutch were so great Sufferers at Sea, Munster against the they had a greater Difficulty to defend themselves by Dutch. Land. For the Bishop of Munster, supported by the King of England's Money, had advanc'd into the Country of Friesland, and defeating several considerable Parties of the Dutch, had taken some Towns, and had spoil'd and burnt several Villages, whilst Prince Maurice with eighteen thousand Men was able to do little more than to look on. The Dutch had no Friends or Ailstants but the King of France, and Dukes of Lunenberg, and the Brandenburghers; these last were cold in the Cause, and chose rather to be negotiating a Mediation between the States of Holland and the Bishop of Munster. The Dukes of Lunenberg were altogether as indifferent in the matter, and sent to excuse themselves to the King of England, for what they had done, and pretending ignorance of the Grounds and Causes of the Bishops taking Arms. The greatest Hopes and Dependance of the States was to be in the French King, who yet sent them only a Supply of some sickly Troops, who could do no other Service but that of infecting a Camp, and therefore were sent to Quarter in the Brandenburgher's Country, as if going merely for fresh Air.

Is afraid of the advance- In the middle of Winter the French King began to ment of the English. be very sensible, that the English by Sea were much Superior to the Dutch, and therefore his Designs having been barely to keep the Ballance even, and to let them fight till they were both equally weaker than himself, he was now so much afraid of the Prevalency of the English, that he threatned to declare a War against them; but yet to make it rather an Intrigue than an open Rupture, he began with acquainting the Queen Mother of England, that tho' he could no longer keep off a Declaration of War against his Majesty of Great Britain, yet he should always preserve the same Esteem and Value for his Majesty's Person, hoping his Britannick Majesty would alway continue the same Kindness and Affec- 1665. tion for him. Accordingly upon January 27. the 17 Car. II.

French King's Declaration of War was publickly Declares Proclaim'd, upon pretence of succouring the States War a-General, in consequence of the Treaty made with gainst Eng-dor in France, enter'd his Remonstrance against the Injustice of that sudden Declaration, which subjected all English Men in their Persons and Effects to the immediate Acts of Hostility, contrary to the Treaties between the two Crowns, which allow'd the Subjects of each Kingdom three Months time for the withdrawing their Estates and Persons after any Rupture. And this prevail'd with the French King to issue out a second Order, giving the English the said Liberty of three Months to transport themselves and their Goods. King Charles had no inclination to break with the French, and therefore demurr'd a while, but finding his People heartily dispos'd to it, and knowing no other way to save his Honour, he did on Feb. 10. publish a Declaration, shewing, that whereas the French King pretending an Alliance Defensive with the States General, had proclaimed War against his Subjects, he was resolv'd to prosecute the War which the French King had so unjustly undertaken against him with his utmost Force by Sea and Land. He then issued out his Orders to all the Maritime Counties to put themselves into a posture of Defence, which they did with all possible alacrity, shewing the good old natural Aversion to the encroaching Power of France, and offering the continual Attendance of their Militia in Arms; but the King unwilling to give them a needless Trouble and Expence, was pleas'd to direct their Dismission and Return home till farther occasion should require.

The Duke of Ormond Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Parli in Ireland. was remanded back to that Kingdom, and being re-ceiv'd at Dublin in great splendour and Magnificence, held a Parliament there at the end of this Year, wherein several of the Members were accus'd and examined for having been in the Plot against the Government in 1663. and Robert Soapcat, Esq; Alexander Staples, Esq; and five others were called to the Bar, and there expelled the House, and made incapable of ever sitting in any Parliament of that Kingdom.

The Parliament in Scotland issued out a severe Parli. in Proclamation against the Conventicle Preachers as Scotland. movers of Sedition; being provok'd to it by the insolent Carriage of one Alexander Smith a deposed Minister, who being taken at a Conventicle, was conven'd before the High Commission Court, where he gave such reviling Language to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, who sat there as President, that the Lord Commissioner order'd him to be put in Chains twenty four Hours in the Thieves Hole.

As to Religion, the Government was more and State of more jealous of the Nonconformists, partly because Religion. some of the rigid Fanaticks went into the actual Service of the Dutch against their own Natural The Go-Prince and Country, for which they were attain- vernment ted in the Oxford Parliament, and the King after- provok'd ward set forth his Proclamation, commanding by the disbanded Armies to return into England by July 22.

Pains of High-Treason: And partly because the more moderate Dissenters shew'd no affection to a War against the Dutch, but rather desired they might be alway our Protestant Allies, and a Peace made with them to turn our Arms against the French: And again partly, because the Conventiclers in Scotland were very mutinous and insolent, and were thought to have held Correspondence with some of the Brethren in England. Hence to be the Orders of better informed of the Number and Strength of their the Abp.

ctions sent from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the bury to find several Bishops of his Province, requiring them out the 1665. 17 Car. II. " punctually to observe all the Canons and Rules concerning Ordination; and that, for the future, they yearly certify the Names of all Ordained by them; and that they forthwith make a Return of the Names and Degrees of all their Beneficed Clergy, and of Lecturers, Schoolmasters, and Uihers, and Practitioners of Physick; as likewise of all ejected Nonconformist Ministers, with their Place of Abode, and Manner of Life. Dated July 7. 1665. The Returns of the several Bishops made hereupon, are still preserved in Lambeth Library. And the Parliament at Oxford seem'd to be so apprehensive of Danger from that Party, that they made a Law more severe than any former against the Teachers of them, to prohibit their dwelling or coming, unless upon the Road, within five Miles of any Corporation, or any other Place where they had been Ministers, or had Preach'd after the Act of Oblivion, unless they first took the following Oath.

Corporation Act.

I A. B. do solemnly declare, that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatsoever to take up Arms against the King: And that I do abhor the traitorous Position of taking Arms by his Authority against his Person, or against those that are commission'd by him, in pursuance of such Commission. And I do swear, that I will not at any time to come endeavour the Alteration of the Government either in Church or State. So help me God.

Dissenters own Judgment of it.

If the Reader would have the Dissenters own Opinion and Account of this Act, he must take this late Report made of it in the Abridgment of Mr. Baxter's Life. — " The main Promoters of this Act among " the Clergy were Archbishop Shelden, and Bishop " Ward of Salisbury: And tho' the Earl of Southampton, Lord Treasurer (who was one that had ever adher'd to the King, but understood the Interest of his Country and of Humanity) vehemently oppos'd it, yet the Lord Chancellor and his Party carried it. When this Act came out, those Ministers that had any Maintenance of their own, found out some Dwellings in obscure Villages, or in some few Market-Towns that were not Corporations. And some that had nothing, left their Wives and Children, and hid themselves abroad, and sometimes came secretly to them by Night: but the most resolved hereupon to preach the more freely in Cities and Corporations, till they went to Prison. — But the Nonconformists being in this Act charg'd with seditious Doctrines and heinous Crimes, many were much concern'd. And hereupon they endeavour'd to find out a Sense in which the Oath might be taken safely, to prevent their passing under that Brand to Poverty. Dr. Bates consulted the Lord Keeper Bridgman, who profess'd a great Respect for him, about his taking it in a sound Sense. He, to satisfy him, promis'd to be at the next Sessions, and there on the Bench to declare openly, that by Endeavour in the Oath to change Church Government, was meant only unlawful Endeavour. Upon which Declaration, he and sundry other Nonconformists, to the number of twenty, took it at the Sessions, to avoid the Imputation of seditious Doctrine.

any Dissenters like the oath, which a very odd distinction.

The Matters of Fact here deliver'd are very much to be question'd, and the Scruple itself seems very unreasonable; for there hardly appears to be any distinction in a private Person's lawfully or unlawfully endeavouring any Alteration of the Government in Church or State, since whoever endeavours it, will be sure to think it lawful so to endeavour: And yet while a lawful Government is legally establish'd, the very Endeavours of private Men to alter it must be in themselves unlawful. There ought perhaps rather to have been a Scruple at the round Expression of not taking Arms against those that are commissionated by the King, in pursuance of such Commission; and they might rather desire to have it thus explain'd or understood, Those that are legally commissionated, in a legal Pursuance of such Commission.

1665. 17 Car. II. Dissenters always favour'd by the King.

Tho' our own Dissenting Brethren did, for the Reasons before mentioned, and upon Account of the then receiv'd Opinion, that Indulgence to them was a Favour to the Papists, happen to raise the Zeal or Jealousie of the two Houses of Parliament against them; yet the King and his secret Council were alway dispos'd to countenance and protect them: And the King, in Clemency and Good-nature, if not in Judgment and Conscience, gave a very generous and faithful Protection to the Foreign Protestants, and especially the French, even after the Breach with that Court; reserving his Promises of Safety and Protection to them in his Declaration of War: for which, on Feb. 28. some Deputies from the French Church in the Savoy attended his Majesty, with the humble Thanks of that Church for his good Protection and kind Indulgence express'd toward them in his late Declaration against France. And to give the greater Invitations of Security and Ease, the French Protestants had the Favour to have a new Church, and full Liberty of using it, granted to them in the City of Dublin: And when their first Assembly met at the opening of it, the Lord Lieutenant honour'd them with his Presence, and with a firm Assurance of continuing to them their Liberty and a peaceable Enjoyment of it.

The King protects the French Protestants.

The States of Holland having concluded a Peace with the Bishop of Munster, a mercenary Prince, and also with the King of Denmark, and depending on a joint Fleet from the King of France, began to put early out to Sea. Our Navy was in equal Forwardness: And because the Duke of York was no more to adventure in Person, and the Earl of Sandwich was sent Ambassadour to Spain, therefore Prince Rupert and the Duke of Albemarle were appointed to be his Majesty's Generals at Sea for this Summer's Expedition, having Sir Thomas Allen Admiral of the White, and Sir William Berkley of the Blue; and on Apr. 23. they went down to the Fleet, and entred on their Command of it. They lay some time in the Buoy in the Nore, where they were visited by his Majesty and his Royal Highness on May 3. and on the 23d arrived at the Gunfleet, and were riding in the Downs on May 29. when Prince Rupert received Orders to sail with the White Squadron to the West, to fight the French Fleet; who, by Report, were come out to join the Dutch. An artificial Rumour, that seems to have been given out on purpose to answer a double Design, of disappointing the Dutch and dividing the English. What follows, is said to be an Account given by Sir John Harman himself, who was Vice-Admiral of the Blue.

Our Fleet divided.

" At the same time Prince Rupert sailed from the Fleet, the Dutch put out to Sea, the Wind at North-East, a fresh Gale. This brought the Dutch Fleet on the Coast of Dunkirk, and carried the Prince to St. Helens on the Isle of Wight. But the Wind suddenly turning into the South-West, blew a strong Gale, which brought the Dutch and Duke to an Anchor; when Captain Eacon of the Bristol, by firing of his Guns, gave notice to the Duke of the Approach of the Dutch. The Duke summoned all the Captains on board, and in a Council of War agreed to weigh Anchor, and fight the Enemy. This was June 1. the Wind at South-West, blowing a stiff Gale, so that the Dutch were forc'd to cut their Cables, not having time to weigh Anchor: And tho' the English had the Weathergage of the Dutch, yet the Wind so bow'd the English Ships, that they could not use their lowest T'ie when they came up to fight. Sir William Berkley's Squadron led the Van: The Duke, when he came on the Coast of Dunkirk, to avoid running on a Sand, made a sudden Tack, which brought his Top-Mast to the Board; whereupon he was forced to lie-by four or five hours, till another was set up: But the Blue Squadron knowing nothing of this, sailed on, fighting through " his Ship the Swiftsure, a second Rate, taken; so " was the Effex, a Frigate of the third Rate; and

" Sir John Harman, in the Henry, got among nine " Ships of the Zealand Squadron, commanded by " Vice-Admiral Everts; and these so disabled the " Henry, that Everts offered Sir John Quarter if he " would yield: but Sir John told him it was not " come to that yet, and gave him a Broadside, and " killed Everts.

" Hereupon this Zealand Squadron failed to assist " their Fellows behind, and left Sir John to the " Mercy of three Fire-ships; one of which grappled
" the Henry on her Starboard Quarters: The Dutch
" Fire-Ships do not take Fire at first, as the English
" do, but first raise a Smoak incredibly stinking,
" and so thick as nothing can be seen at the least " distance; so as it could not be seen where the " Fire-Ship's Grappling-Irons were fixed: but up" on the Fire-Ship's taking Fire, Sir John's Boat" swain swang himself into the Fire-Ship, and by " the Light of the Fire found where the Grappling-" Irons were fixed in the Fire-Ship, and let them
" loose, and got on Board again. But another Fire-
" Ship grappled the Henry in her Lar-board Quar" ter Deck, and took Fire; and Sir John's Chap" lain, and about 50 more skipped into the Sea:
" whereupon Sir John ran among the Mariners, and " threatened to kill any who did not assist in quench" ing the Fire: whereupon Sir John's Cabin-Boy
" seeing the Sails on fire, with wet Cloths encoun" tred, and put it out; but the Cordage being burnt,
" the Cross-beam fell upon Sir John's Leg, and " brake it. By this time, the third Fire-Ship made " towards the Henry; but four Pieces of Cannon,
" laden with Chain-shot, disabled her, so that Sir
" John made a hard shift to bring his Ship into
" Harwich, and the next Day after fitted her up,
" and tho' his Leg were broke, went out to Sea a" gain to have fought, but the Fight was over be" fore he could come up to the Fleet.

" In this Day's Fight, wherein the English could " make no use of their lower Tire of Guns, and " therefore Sir Thomas Tiddiman, Rear-Admiral of " the Red, refused to engage; the English were " much damaged in their Rigging: yet next Day
" the Duke engaged the Dutch again, tho' above
" double his Number of Ships, and the Dutch hour" ly receiving fresh Supplies: So he did the Day " after, the 2d of June, when the Duke caused se" veral of his most disabled Ships, after he had ta" ken out their Men, to be burnt, and had but six" teen Ships left able to fight, with which he re" treated, putting them between the Dutch and his " unburn'd disabled Ships.

" Towards the Evening the English espied the " White Squadron making up towards them, and " therefore were striving to make the nearest way " to meet them. The Prince-Royal, commanded by " Sir George Askew, run on a Sand and was lost, and " Sir George made Prisoner. Yet next Day the " Fleets fought again; and by the Help of the " White Squadron, with much ado got into Har- " bour.

This Account seems to have too much Sharpness in it, as wrote with a strong Bias of Prejudice to the Court and Councils of that time; and therefore concludes with leaving it a Problem, whether it were a greater Treachery to divide the Fleet, or Madness to fight the Dutch with the rest, when they could not use their lower Tire of Guns. By more authentick Reports it did appear, that in the first Day's Fight the Dutch had two of their great Ships fired; and in the second Day's Engagement lost three Sail more; and in the last Day, when the Prince was joined, the English fought through the Dutch Fleet five several times with good Advantage, and so broke them, that they had not above 25 in any one Body, who only maintained a running Fight, having lost above

The Policy of the French King was on this occasion very eminent and odious; for, instead of sending his promised Fleet to assist the Dutch, he sent it to destroy the English in their Plantations upon the Leeward Islands, and almost totally expell'd the English out of St. Christopher's, and interrupted all the Trade in those Parts. And to do secret Mischief nearer home, he sends the Governour of Choufey over from France in a small Boat to carry a Letter to Major General Lambert there in Prison, and to offer him good Terms for contriving how to deliver up that Island to the French: But this perfidious Governour being apprehended, did at last confess the whole Matter, and he and his Pilot were executed on the common Gallows for Spies.

The Dutch had the credit of appearing at Sea again before the English were ready to come out;
and therefore seem'd to ride braving on our Coasts, and often to make toward France, in a second Expectation of meeting a French Fleet to join them, under the Command of Beaufort, who had other secret Orders. By July 19. the English Fleet under the same Command of Prince Rupert and the Duke of Albemarle, sail'd from the Bury in the Nore, the Flags being carried by Sir Joseph Jordan, Sir Robert Holmes, Sir Thomas Allen, Sir Thomas Tyddiman, Captain Ut- bunt, Sir Jeremy Smith, Sir Edward Spragge, and Captain Kemphorn. They soon came up with the Dutch, and obtain'd a glorious Victory, sinking and burning above 20 of their Ships, killing Evertson Admiral of Zealand, Tirrick Hiddes Admiral of Friezland, the Vice-Admiral of Friezland, and Rear-Adm. Van-Saen, with above 4000 common Seamen, and near 3000 wounded; and chasing their Ships along the Coasts of Zealand and Holland, till with the Advantage of Flats and Banks, over which our great Ships could not follow them, they got into the Heilings. And the good Use that was made of this Victory in a wife Pursuit of it, was a greater Honour to the English, and a severer Blow to the Dutch, than the Victory itself. There is this Account of it given by Authority.

A true and perfect Narrative of the great and signal Success of a Part of his Majesty's Fleet under his Highness Prince Rupert, and his Grace the Duke of Albemarle, burning one hundred and sixty Dutch Ships within the Ulster: As also the Town of Brandaris upon the Island of Schelling, by some commanded Men under the Conduct of Sir Robert Holmes, the 8th and 9th of this instant August. ACCOUNT of it given by the Publick.

ON the 29th of July his Majesty's Fleet, under his Highness Prince Rupert, and his Grace the Duke of Albemarle, weigh'd Anchor from within sight of Zealand, and steer'd their Course for the Ulster. but the Winds being contrary, they did not make the Island till the 7th of August, in which time several rich Ships happen'd to get in, which had otherwise fell into their hands. Being come to an Anchor, the Generals were informed, that the Islands of Ulster and Schel- ling were very ill guarded, notwithstanding there were Storehouses both for the States and the East India Fleet, and Riches to a good Value; and what did weigh most, a considerable number of good Merchant-Ships usually riding there. Upon which, it was resolv'd by the Generals, that there should be a speedy Attempt made. A Council of Flag-Officers was call'd; and it was determined there, that it should be carried on in the Manner following: viz. That 300 Men should be drawn out of each Squadron, consisting of two parts Landmen and the third Seamen: These to be commanded by nine Captains, viz. Sir Robert Hobmes, Rear-Admiral of the Red, to command in chief, Sir Philip Howard to command 120 Vohuntiers, Captain John Bellosis, Captain Hymon, " Captain

1666. Captain Wiltshire, Captain Haddock, Captain Guy, 18Car.II. Captain Silver, Captain Healing, Captain Butler, Captain John Holmes, each to Command a Company. Sir William Jennings was also Order'd, that in case they had attack'd both Islands at one time, he should have Commanded one Division of the whole. The Ships appointed for this Expedition were the Advice, Hampshire, Tyger, Dragon and Affurance Fourth Rates, the Garland, Pembroke, Sweepstakes Fifth Rates; Five Fireships and seven Ketches; which being in a readines on Wednes- day the 8th instant, about eight in the Morning weighed from the rest of the Fleet, and came to Anchor about a League from the Buoyes, where they met the Prince's Pleasure-Boat called the Fan- Fan, who had discover'd within a considerable Fleet of Ships near the Ulie, which proved to be 170 Merchant Ships, the least of which was not less than 200 Tons Burthen, with two Men of War, who had lately convoy'd near 100 of the aforesaid Ships from the Northward homeward bound; some from the Streights, some from Gu- inea, some from Russia, some from the East-Countries, the rest were outward bound Ships, all likewise richly laden.
 Sir Robert Holmes considering, that if he should proceed, as his Design was, first to attempt the Land, that numerous Fleet might possibly pour in such numbers of Men as might render the Success hazardous, resolv'd to begin with the Ships, and accordingly having order'd the Advice and Hampshire to lie without the Buoys, he weigh'd with the rest of his Fleet; and the Wind being contrary, he turn'd with much ado into Schelling Road, where the Tyger came to an Anchor, and immediately Sir Robert went on Board the Fanf- fan and put out his Flag; upon which the Officers came on Board him, where it was order'd, that the Pembroke, which drew the least Water, with the five Fire Ships, should fall in amongst the Enemies Fleet with what speed they could; Captain Brown with his Fire Ship chose very bravely to lye the biggest Man of War on Board, and burnt him downright. Another Fireship running up at the same time to the other Man of War, he backing his Sails escap'd the present execution of the Fireship; but so as to run himself by it on Ground, where he was presently taken by some of the Long-boats and fir'd. The other three Fireships clapp'd the three great Merchant Men on Board, which carried Flags in their Main-tops, and burn'd them. This put all their Fleet in a great confusion, which Sir Robert Holmes percei-ving, made Sign for all the Officers to come on Board again, and presently gave Order that Sir William Jennings, with all the Boats that could be spar'd, should take the advantage and fall in and burn and destroy all they could; but with a strict Command they should not Plunder. The Execution was so followed, each Captain effecting his Share, some 12, some 15 a-piece, that of the whole Fleet there escap'd not above eight or nine Ships, one of which, a Guincy Man of 24 Guns, and three small Privateers, who being driven up into a narrow corner of the Stream, serv'd to protect four or five Merchant-Men that were a-head of them; where it was not possible for our Boats to come at them, tho' even these few were much damag'd. This Work took up most part of that Day, being the ninth of August, so that we had that Day enough to fall upon the Island of the Ulie; Sir Robert Holmes being also inform'd by some Prisoners, that the Place was not so considerable as it had been represented; and Night coming on, and perceiving two of our Frigots, viz. the Dragon and Garland aground, it was thought most convenient for all Hands first to go to work to get them off, which being done, he continued in his Intention of attempting the Ulie the next Morning, as soon as the High-water would permit the Motion of his Vessels, but his Design was then likewise prevented; for so great a Gull and Rain happen'd that Night, that the Arms and Ammunition in the Boats, Hoys and Ketches having receiv'd much Damage, he thought it best to weigh, and as the Wind stood to attempt something upon the Island of Schelling, which, the Morning proving moderate Weather, he accordingly prosecuted, landing by the help of his Long Boats 11 Companies on shore, where he discover'd only some few scattering Fellows, but met with little or no opposition. Leaving therefore one Company to secure his Boats, himself with ten Companies marched up three Miles to the Capital Town called Brandwis, a very fair Town or Dorp of above 1000 Houses, where keeping five Companies upon the skirts of the Town, to prevent any Surprise of the Enemy, he sent the other five to fire and burn the Town; but finding them (as his Vigilance was to secure a safe Retreat) somewhat slow to execute that Order, and fearing they might be tempted to forger themselves in the Pillage, he himself was forc'd to set fire to some Houses on the Windward, the sooner to per-feet the Work and hasten his Men away, which burnt with that violence, that in half an Hours time the most part of the Town was in a Flame.

 The Town was reported by those that were found in it to have been very Rich, and so it appear'd by some of the Soldiers Pockets; but very few People were to be seen in it, having had time to run away from the Danger, except some old Men and Women, who were us'd with all Gentleness and Humanity.
 The remaining Villages of that Island, which are two or three, had certainly run the same Fortune, but considering it was near High-water, Sir Robert thought it not fit to lose that opportunity of getting off to Sea, which he thought more considerable than to stay 24 Hours for the destruction of them, remembering likewise, that the Channels between the Buoys were narrow, and not bold without a frank Wind. By High-water he got off all his Men, and set Sail out of that place, retaining still his first Intention of falling upon the Ulie; but as he was going on Board he receiv'd Orders from the Generals to return to the Fleet with all speed, which accordingly he did that Evening, being August 10. leaving behind him the Marks of a singular Conduct and most vigorous Execution, and bringing off besides a considerable Booty to the private Soldiers and Seamen, the States Pleasure-Boat of 12 Guns, without other loss than of six Men kill'd, and about as many wounded.

 18Car.II.

To recover these Disasters, or to seem not to feel them, the Dutch put to Sea again about the end of August, and on September 1. sail'd by Dover, making for the Coasts of France, still pursuing the vain hopes of being join'd by the French Admiral the Duke of Beaufort, who lay at Rochel with forty Sail.
 Our Fleet under the sole Command of Prince Rupert stood after them to the Bulloign-Road, where the Dutch to avoid fighting hawl'd close to shore, and had been there burnt and stav'd, if a sudden Storm had not oblig'd the English to return to St. Hellens, and given the Dutch opportunity to reach their own Coasts. The French Fleet made a little show of sailing, when three or four Men of War being separated from the rest, fell among a Squadron of ours, Commanded by Sir Thomas Allen, who took the Ru- by, a Ship of 1000 Tuns and 500 Men, Commanded by Monsieur la Roche; which Accident was a fair Pretence for the French Fleet to come no farther.
 And De Ruyter being forc'd to go home by Sickness, made the States recal their Fleet, and brought the People into great Murmurs at the ill Success of it.
Van Tromp and De Ruyter fell out, and laid the Miscarriage upon one another; the States favour the latter,

1666. ter, and took away Tromp's Commission, and con-18Car.II. find him to Amsterdam, and examin'd many of the Captains for Cowardice or Ill-conduct, putting some to Death and fining others.

Fire of London.

In the mean time there came a most dreadful Calamity upon the City of London, of which, this Account was given by Authority. "On September 2.
"at one of the Clock in the Morning, there hap-"pen'd to break out a sad and deplorable Fire in " Pudding-lane near New-fish-street, which falling out
" at that Hour of the Night, and in a Quarter of " the Town so close built with wooden pitch'd " Houses, spread itself so far before Day, and with " such distraction to the Inhabitants and Neighbours, " that Care was not taken for the timely prevent" ing the farther diffusion of it by pulling down
" Houses, as ought to have been: So that this la" mentable Fire in a short time became too big to " be master'd by any Engines or working near it.
" It fell out most unhappily too, that a violent " Easterly Wind fomented it, and kept it burning
" all that Day and the Night following, spreading " itself up to Grace-Church-street, and downwards " from Canon-street to the Water-side as far as the " Three Cranes in the Vintry.

"The People in all parts about it distracted by " the vastness of it, and the particular Care to car" ry away their Goods; many Attempts were made " to prevent the spreading of it, by pulling down " Houses, and making great Intervals, but all in " vain; the Fire seizing upon the Timber and Rub" bish, and so continuing itself even thro' those " Spaces, and raging in a bright Flame all Monday
" and Tuesday, notwithstanding his Majesty's own,
" and his Royal Highnesses indefatigable and per" sonal Pains to apply all possible Remedies to pre" vent it, calling upon and helping the People with " their Guards, and a great number of Nobility and " Gentry unweariedly assisting therein, for which " they were requited with a thousand Blessings from " the poor distressed People. By the favour of " God the Wind slacken'd a little on Tuesday Night, " and the Flames meeting with Brick Buildings at
" the Temple, by little and little it was observ'd to " lose its Force on that side, so that on Wednesday " Morning we began to hope well, and his Royal " Highness never despairing or slackning his per" sonal Care, wrought so well that Day, assisted " in some parts by the Lords of the Council before " and behind it, that a Stop was put to it at the " Temple Church, near Holbourn-Bridge, Pie-Corner, " Aldersgate, Cripple-gate, near the lower end of Cole- " man-street, at the end of Basing-hall-street, by the " Postern, at the upper end of Bishopsgate-street and " London-hall-street, at the Standard in Cornhill, at " the Church in Fan-Church-street, near Clothwork- " er's-Hall in Mincing-lane, at the middle of Mark-
" lane, and at the Tower-Dock.

"On Thursday by the Blessing of God it was " wholly beat down and extinguish'd; but so, as " that Evening it unhappily burst out again a " fresh at the Temple, by the falling of some Sparks
" (as is supposed) upon a Pile of wooden Build" ings: But his Royal Highness who watch'd there " that whole Night in Person, by the great La" bours and Diligence us'd, and especially by ap" plying Powder to blow up the Houses about it,
" before Day most happily master'd it.

"Divers Strangers, Dutch and French, were du" ring the Fire apprehended, upon suspicion that " they contributed mischiefously to it, who are all " imprison'd, and Informations prepar'd to make " a severe Inquisition thereupon by my Lord Chief " Justice Keeling, assisted by some of the Lords of " the Privy Council, and some principal Members " of the City; notwithstanding which Suspicions,
" the manner of the burning all along in a Train,
" and so blown forward in all its way by strong
" Winds, makes us conclude, the whole was the ef" fect of an unhappy Chance, or to speak better,

"the heavy Hand of God upon us for our Sins, 1666.
" shewing us the terrour of his Judgment in thus 18Car.II.
" raising the Fire, and immediately after his mira" culous and never enough to be acknowledg'd " Mercy in putting a stop to it, when we were in " the last Despair; and that all Attempts for the " quenching it, however industriously pursued,
" seem'd insufficient. His Majesty then satte hour" ly in Council, and ever since hath continued ma" king Rounds about the City in all parts of it
" where the Danger and Mischief was greatest, till " this Morning, September 8. that he hath sent his " Grace the Duke of Albemarle, whom he hath cal" led for to assist him on this great Occasion, to " put his happy and successful Hand to the finish" ing this memorable Deliverance.

Such was the Account given by Authority the " same Week wherein this Conflagration happen'd.
" On the Monument afterward erected near the place " where the Fire began, there was an Inscription to " this effect, that the dreadful Flames broke out in a " Lane adjoining, about Midnight, and being driven by " a high Wind, consumed not only the adjacent Parts but " Places far remote; and with incredible noise and fu" ry destroy'd eighty nine Churches, among which was the " Cathedral of Vaul's, City-Gates, Guild-Hall, many pub" lick Structures, Hospitals, Schools, Libraries, a vast " number of stately Edifices, thirteen thousand two hun" dred Dwelling Houses, four hundred Streets; of six and " twenty Wards it utterly ruin'd fifteen, and left eight o" thers shatter'd and half burnt. The Ruins of the City " were four hundred thirty six Acres, extending from the " Tower along the Thames side to the Temple Church, " and from the North-East Gate along the City Wall to " Holbourn-Bridge or Fleet-Ditch. It was mercilefs to " the Estates and Fortunes of the Citizens, but favourable
" to their Lives, that it might in all things resemble the " last and great Conflagration. The Destruction was sud" den, for in a short time the same City which was seen in " a flourishing Condition was reduc'd to nothing; and after " three Days, when the fatal Fire had in appearance over" come all means of Resistance and Humane Counsels, by " the Will of Heaven it stopt and was extinguish'd.

Various were the Opinions how this Fire began. Conject.
" Most People did then look upon it to be the hand of how this " God in a terrible Judgment upon a wicked City: fire be" gan.
" Some said, it was contriv'd and carried on by a " Conspiracy of Papists, which was offer'd to be made " appear in the Popish Plot. Others did suspect it an " insidious way of the Dutch and French making War

18 Car. II. that late Trial to Remembrance, and sent them back to a publick Gazette of Apr. 30. 1666. Numb. 48. wherein a notorious Account of the Discovery and Evidence of that Plot to fire the City is deliver'd in Print. And it so far encreas'd a Suspicion of the Malice of our Foreign Enemies, that those Conspirators so condemn'd and executed were said to be under the Direction of a Committee who sat constantly in London, and received Orders from another Council in Holland.

Parl. meet. The Parliament this Year was to have met on April 23. but for fear of the Contagion yet remaining, the King by Proclamation of April 6. prorog'd the Parliament to Sept. 18. next ensuing. At which time they met, and the King in a Speech exprest his Satisfaction to see them happily come together, after the sad Calamities of the Pestilence and the Fire; he then spoke of the Progress of the War, and his vast Expenses in it; and concluded with recommending the urgent Occasions of Supply. The Commons immediately resolved, that the humble and hearty Thanks of the House should be return'd to the King's Majesty for his great Care in the management of the War; and that they would grant a Supply proportionable to the great Occasions of carrying on the War. And soon after they voted a Royal Aid of one Million eight hundred thousand Pounds. And on Sept. 25. about three in the Afternoon, the two Houses of Parliament in a Body attended his Majesty, according to his appointment at the Banqueting-House in Whitehall, to manifest their hearty Concurrence in the Vote for supplying his Majesty with whatsoever was necessary for the carrying on of the War; which his Majesty received with all the satisfaction imaginable, and very graciously dismiss them. Both Houses were truly sensible of the restless and implacable Spirit of the Papists, and made their Address to his Majesty for putting the Laws in Execution against them: Upon which, on November 10. a Proclamation was given, for suppressing the Insolencies of the Papists, by charging and requiring all Popish Priests and Jesuits to depart the Kingdom, &c.

On Friday Jan. 18. his Majesty went to the Parliament, where he was pleas'd with the usual Solemnities to pass several Bills, of which these five were Publick. 1. An Act for raising Money by a Poll, and otherwise, towards the Maintenance of the present War.
2. An Act against Importing Cattle from Ireland, or other parts beyond the Seas, and Fish taken by Foreigners.
3. An Act for encouraging of Coyage. 4. An Act to continue a former Act for preventing Theft and Rapine upon the Northern Borders of England. 5. An Act for buying in Woollen only. Then after a Gracious Speech to both Houses, his Majesty return'd, leaving them to finish the remaining Business of this Session, which he was pleas'd to declare, he intended should end on Monday seven-night next. And accordingly on Feb. 8. his Majesty went again to the House of Lords, where appearing in his Robes, with the Crown on his Head, after a kind and affectionate Speech made to both Houses of Parl. he was graciously pleas'd to pass several Publick and Private Acts, proroguing the Parliament till October 10. next. The publick Acts were, 1. An Act for granting the Sum of twelve hundred fifty six thousand three hundred forty seven Pounds and thirteen Shillings to his Majesty, towards the Maintenance of the present War. 2. An Act explanatory of an Act for raising Money by a Poll, and otherwise, towards the Maintenance of the present War. 3. An Act for erecting a Judicature for determining of Differences, touching Houses burnt or demolished, by reason of the late Fire in London. 4. An Act for rebuilding the City of London. 5. An Act to prevent the Disturbances of Seamen and others, and to preserve the Stores belonging to his Majesty's Navy Royal. 6. An Act for the Relief of poor Prisoners, and setting them on work. 7. An Act for extending a former Act concerning Replevins and Avonries to the Principality of Wales and the County Prlatine. 8. An Act for the Redress of Inconveniencies by want of Proof of the Decease of Persons beyond the Seas, or absenting themselves, on whose Lives Estates depend.

ment of Tangier in the beginning of May. Henry Coventry, dor to Spain died at Madrid June 26. The Lord Willoughby Governour of the Antilles Islands, was unfortunately lost in a Hurricane near Martinico at the latter end of July. The Earl of Ossery was sworn of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council on June 12. and being called by his Majesty's Writ to the House of Peers, took his Place on Sept. 18. On the Death of Sir Hugh Pollard, Knight and Baronet, the Place of Comptroller of his Majesty's Household was confer'd on Sir Thomas Clifford, who was also sworn of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, with this publick Character, that it was

Robert Earl of Lindsey, Lord High Chamberlain of England was sworn of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council; and the Earl of Bridgewater was likewise sworn on Feb. 13. On March 8. came out a Proclamation for apprehending George Duke of Buckingham, importing, "That it did appear to his

In Ireland the Garison of Kinsale fell into a Irish Af-Mutiny about the middle of May, protesting in a Declaration, under their Hands, against diverting the publick Money to other Uses when it was designed for their Pay: They turn'd their Officers out of Town, and possess themselves of the Castle, and were making themselves a formidable Party; but the Earl of Arran with four Companies of the Royal Regiment, being sent from Dublin in the Dartmouth Frigot to reduce them, forc'd them from the Walls of the Town, and pursued them to the Castle, where they defended themselves with great Obstinacy, till his Grace the Lord Lieutenant himself arriv'd with some of his Horse Guards, and made them yield upon Discretion. The Tories were very insolent and troublesome, one Gerstloe at the Head of a great Party of them assaulted the Castle of Court-Ormsby in the County of Mayo, and took it. In Ulster several other Parties of them got together and did much Mischief. Sir James Wolfe his Majesty's Auditor General died at Dublin on Saturday Dec. 1.

In Scotland the rigid Presbyterians were as mutinous as the Popish Tories were in Ireland. Fifteen hundred of them got into a Body, and by degrees formed themselves into an Army, having their Foot commanded by one Wallace, and their Horse by one Lairmont, formerly a Tailor; most of the other Leaders of their Troops were cashier'd Preachers, by whose Advice they all took the Covenant at Lamrick, and being drawn up for Battle on Pentland Hills, their Word was The Covenant. They were absolutely defeated and dispers'd by the King's Forces, who had on their Right Wing his Majesty's two Troops of Guards, and the Major Generals Troop making four Squadrons; and on the Left the Lieutenant General Duke Hamilton, the Earls of Athol and Aysby, and many other Noblemen. Of the Rebels about 500 were kill'd, and 100 taken Prisoners, of which most were executed. After the quieting of this dangerous Insurrection, the Convention of the Estates met at Edinburgh in January, and fell immediately upon the effectual Means of securing the Kingdom from publick and domestick Dangers, and of putting the same into a posture of Defence, and of raising six thousand Pounds English by the Month, to maintain such Forces as should be employ'd in his Majesty's Service.

State of Religion.

Tuesday Aug. 14. was with Joy and Devotion observed as a Day of Thanksgiving for the signal Victory it pleas'd God lately to give his Majesty's Fleet over the Dutch, with a Form of publick Thanksgiving compos'd for that Occasion, and an excellent Sermon preach'd before his Majesty at Whitehall by the Reverend Dr. Dolben Clerk of the Closet and Dean of Westminster, published by his Majesty's special Command. This Example set in the Cities of London and Westminster on Aug. 14. was by like Authority follow'd in all parts of England upon Thursday Aug. 23. A Proclamation was given September 13. in a very pious and affectionate Style, for enjoining a General Fast to be observ'd throughout England and Wales, to be solemnly observ'd on Wednesday October 10. upon occasion of the late dreadful Fire in London. And by Act of Parliament the second of September was to be annually observ'd within the Bills of Mortality, for a Day of Fasting and Humiliation, with a publick Office prescrib'd for that purpose. The dreadful Plague had by slow degrees abated, but was not perfectly extirp'd till the beginning of this cold Winter, when Nov. 14. his Majesty in Council was pleas'd to Order, that Tuesday the twentieth of this Month should be observ'd in the Cities of London and Westminster and the several Parishes within the weekly Bills of Mortality, as a Day of Thanksgiving to God for allwaging the late Contagion and Pestilence.

Dangers of Popery.

The Fears and Jealousies of Popery were very just and very great, and were chiefly owing to the Mediations of the Queen-Mother in France, the private Solicitations of the Duke of York, and the unhappy perversion of his Dutchess, the like Inclinations of the new Ministry, and especially of Bennet and Clifford; and the King's own disposition to any thing that he was told should be consistent with his Interests and Pleasures. The Lords and Commons in Parliament, tho' so many of the Members were themselves a part of the Court, Camp and Ministry, would not be silent under these imminent Perils, but agreed in a zealous Address to the King for executing the Laws against Popish Priests and Jesuits, who were labouring to pervert his Majesty's Subjects; and for maintaining the true Religion establish'd in the Church of England. Which concurrent sense of the two Houses could not suffer the King to do less than to publish a Proclamation Nov. 10. for the banishment of all Popish Priests and Jesuits, and putting the Laws in speedy and due execution against all other Popish Recufants; his Majesty therein de-

Address of both Houses, to suppress the Infolence of the Papists.

1666. 18 Car. II. A Proclamation on Lucas.

The Protestant Dissenters were by the King's principle of Government as much unmolested as the Justices and Magistrates would possibly allow; and the destruction of Churches, and dispersion of the Clergy of London, gave the Nonconformist Preachers a better opportunity of gathering Congregations to them, their own History tells us, "This unhappy Fire made the way of the Nonconformists yet the plainer to them: For the Churches being burnt, and the Parish Ministers gone, for want of Places and Maintenance, the People's Necessities became unquestionable, for they had no places now to worship God in, saving a few Churches that were left standing, which would not hold any considerable part of them. Whereupon the Nonconformists open'd publick Meeting Houses, and were very full: And as Circumstances then stood, to have forbid the People to hear them, had been in effect to forbid them all publick Worship of God, and require them to live like Atheists.

Represented by themselves.

His Majesty at the close of the last Session had promised his two Houses of Parliament, that he would constitute Commissioners for taking the Accounts of the several Sums of Monies which had been rais'd and assign'd to his Majesty, during the present great and important Wars, to the end that his Majesty and his People might be satisfied in the faithful Application and Expence of them. In discharge of this Royal Word and Promise, the King granted a Commission under his Great Seal of England to John Earl of Bridgewater, Oliver Earl of Bolingbrook, Robert Earl of Ailesbury, Edward Viscount Comway, John Lord Lucas, and John Lord Crem, Peers of this Realm, together with Sir William Lomther, Sir Tho. Meares, Sir Humphry Winch, Sir Tho. Littleton, Sir William Thompson, Sir Thomas Osborne, Sir Thomas Gower, Col. Sam. Sandys, Giles Strangways, William Gormay, Edward Boscoven and John Jones, Esquires, being Members of the House of Commons, with full Power to examine and state the said Accounts; and they open'd their Commission on Wednesday April 17. by which manner of Proceeding it appear'd, that the Enquiry into publick Accounts was hitherto reserv'd to the King, and by him graciously promis'd to the People, and pursu'd in a Method that seem'd to signify, the Lords were as much concern'd in this matter as the Commons.

Commissioners for publick Accounts

The Ambassadors Extraordinary from Sweden (who took leave of his Majesty in a solemn Audience an April 26.) were Mediators for a Treaty of Peace with the Dutch to be negotiated at Breda: And for the management of it the King appointed the right Honourable Denzil Lord Hollis, one of the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, and the Honourable Henry Coventry, Esq; of his Majesty's Negotiation for Peace with Holland.

1667. Bed-Chamber, his Ambassadors Extraordinary for the said Treaty, who took their leave of his Majesty on May 1. and arriving in few Days at Breda, made their publick Entry there in a very solemn manner, and fell soon upon adjusting the Preliminaries of a common Treaty, which being settled about the beginning of June, the Ambassadors of England, France and Sweden, the Plenipotentiaries of the States, and of Denmark, repaired to the Castle belonging to the Prince of Orange, and fell upon the Business of a general Accommodation with great Care and Diligence. Mr. Coventry one of the English Ambassadors, to prepare for the finishing Strokes was sent over to the English Court for a private Conference with the King and his Cabinet Council, and came back with the full Resolutions of Agreement. So that on June 21. the Articles were sign'd by the several Ministers; yet the Instruments of Ratification were not interchang'd till August 14. when the Peace was immediately proclaim'd before the Doors of all the Plenipotentiaries; and was publish'd by Proclamation in the City of London on Aug. 24. and was afterward confirm'd by an additional Treaty, concluded by Sir William Temple in January following.

Confutation at Court. Mr. Rogers's Book.

There was this false step in the management of this Affair, that the King consented to a Motion for this Treaty without requiring a Cessation of Arms: and yet imagin'd that the commencing of a Treaty would of itself as effectually bring on that Cessation. So the King in a reliance upon the Honour of the Dutch, that they would not be open Enemies while they were treating to be Friends; and being easily inclin'd to save so great a part of the Revenue for other occasions, set out no Fleet and seem'd to make no Preparations for it. The Dutch took their Advantage of this Negligence and Security, and appeared abroad at Sea with a Fleet of above 70 Sail; and well knowing that our great Ships were laid up, they rode in triumph upon our Coasts and at the Mouth of the Thames, and seeing no opposition they failed up to the Medway, and made themselves Masters of the Fort of Sheerness, tho' stoutly defended by Sir Edward Spragg. To stop their farther Progress several Vessels were sunk about Musclev-Bank, the narrowest part of the River, and a strong Chain was put cross, and the Lord General, the Duke of Albemarle, was got down there with a Land Force to oppose them. But having the Advantage of an Easterly Wind and a stronge Tide, they prest on and broke thro' the Chain, and burnt the three Ships that lay to guard it, the Matthias, the Unity and the Charles the Fifth, all three Dutch Ships taken in the present War, damaging many other of our Vessels, and carrying along with them the Hull of the Royal Charles, which was twice fired by the English and as often quench'd by the Enemy. They advanc'd with six Men of War and five Fireships as far as Upnore-Castle, and burnt the Royal-Oak, and much injur'd the Loyal-London and the Great James, which they left most part under Water: And after all this Insult and Mischief, they fell down the River again with no great Damage to themselves but the running a-ground two of their Men of War, which they were forc'd to set on Fire.

The Consternation at Court, and in the City of London was extremely great. An Eye Witness has thought fit to give this Account of it. "I was on June 10. in the Morning walking in St. James's Park, when a Gentleman whisper'd to me, that the Dutch were enter'd the River. Then the King had fed his Ducks, and was walking on the West side of the Park; and as we walked Prince Rupert overtook us, and met the King at the farther end of the Pall-Mall; and the King told the Prince how he had shot a Duck, and such a Dog fetch'd it; and so they walk'd on till they came to St. James's House, and there the King said to the Prince, Let's go see Cambridge and Kendal (the Duke's two Sons who then lay a dying) but upon his Return to Whitehall he found all in an Up-1667. roar, the Countess of Casslemain (as 'twas said) bewailing above all others, that she should be the first torn in pieces.---I was at London in the Plague and Fire Years, yet in neither did I observe such Consternation and Confusion in the Looks of all Men, as at this time, and with great Cause: For if the Dutch had then come up to London they had found all open to them; not one Gun mounted at Tilbury-Fort, nor one Frigate ready in the River; so as they might have forced all the Ships in the River up to the Bridge, and there have burnt them, which would have certainly fir'd the Tower and all the Suburbs West to Blackwall, as well as Southwark below Bridge.

When the Dutch got out to Sea again, they made many other Attempts of Bravery or rather of Revenge, even after the Peace was actually concluded at Breda, they sail'd to Portsmouth with a Design upon our Ships in that Harbour, but finding them too well secured by the Diligence of the Earl of Macclesfield and Captain Eliot (whom the King had sent thither for that purpose) they appear'd before Plymouth on July 15. and made an Attempt upon Torbay on July 19. but were beaten off; then they stood Eastward, and again enter'd the River of Thames on July 23. and got above 25 Sail into Tilbury-Hope, where we had all our Naval Strength lying, about 18 Men of War and Fireships. Sir Edward Spragge who Commanded this English Squadron was unluckily absent when the Dutch came first up to them; and therefore the Dutch with their Fireships did some considerable Mischief; but Sir Edward returning on Ship-board, and being soon after join'd with a small Squadron from Harwich under Sir Joseph Jordan, the Dutch were glad to fall down the River again, with as much damage to themselves as to us. After this they bid defiance to the Town of Harwich, and landed three thousand Men near Felstone-Cliff, and made two Assaults upon Languard-Fort, and made a stand against the Train'd-Bands, under Command of the Earl of Suffolk, and without any great Loss or Execution they re-embark'd and sail'd away again for the River Thames, and came up once more as far as Hull-Haven, and engaged the Squadron of Sir Edward Spragge, made up of the Success and 18 other Men of War; where the Encounter was so sharp that the English stood off for Gravesend, and left the Dutch at Anchor in the Hope; but they soon fell down to the Buoy in the Nore, and leaving Sir Edward Spragge the Honour of seeming to pursue them, they got to Sea again, and made to the Western Coasts, and attempted to Land first at Wenbury in Devonshire, and then near Carland in Cornwall, and hover'd about with continual Alarms and Offers of Descent, till not being able any longer to dissemble their knowledge of a Peace, De Ruyster invited some of the Cornish Gentlemen on Board him, and gave them a liberal Entertainment, and excusing some of his later Acts of Hostility, he dismiss'd them Civily and sail'd home.

Other Attempts of the Dutch.

It was some wonder to the wiser Men, that these hostile Attempts of the Dutch did not seem at all to interrupt or retard the depending Treaty: there seem'd to be no Thoughts of Reprisal, or of any Demand of Satisfaction; nay, to obviate the Expectance of any Reparation, this Article was insert'd, That all Offences, Injuries, Damages, and Losses sustained on either side by the King and States, or their Subjects, during this War, or at any time before, upon any Cause or Pretence whatsoever, be totally expunged and buried in Oblivion: With another 4th Article, That all Ships, Goods, and Moveables, which had come at any time into the Power of either Party, or their Subjects, should remain with the present Possessors thereof, without any Compensation or Restitution for the same, without any exception of Time, Place, or Things.

No Satisfaction made for these Insults.

The Miscarriages of this Summer made it necessary that some one great Minister of State should bear the Odium of 'em, and be given up for a Sacrifice

Fall of the Earl of Clarendon.

 19 Car. II. pursuance of this common Policy, on Aug. 31. his Majesty thought fit to take the Great Seal from his faithful Minister the Earl of Clarendon, and give it to Sir Orlando Bridgman, with the Title of Lord Keeper; and by that Mark of Disgrace to give up the Lord Clarendon to the Malice of his Enemies, who soon hunted him into Impeachment and Banishment; though, no doubt, the greatest Displeasure taken at him, was for his heartily opposing Popery, and those new Ministers who were the profess'd Favourers and Promoters of it. The King discharg'd this wise Counsellor when he had greatest need of him; for he had within few Months before lost his other greatest Statesman, the Lord Treasurer South- ampton: and the King, not knowing where to find a single Person of equal Capacity for so great a Trust, made Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Treasurer of England, his Grace the Duke of Albemarle Lord General, the Right Honourable the Lord Ashley Chancellor of the Exche-Parliam. to meet before their time

The Terrois of the Dutch Fleet made another great Alteration in calling the Parliament together before their time: for the King was so surpriz'd, and the Ministry so afraid, that on June 26. his Majesty declared by Proclamation, That whereas the Parliament now in being did stand Prorogued till the 12th Day of October next, his Majesty having had reason to believe at the time of the said Prorogation, that his Affairs might have permitted the Attendance of the Members of both Houses on his Majesty's Service and their own Occasions in their respective Countries until that time; his Majesty now finding this his Kingdom invaded during a Treaty of Peace, and esteeming himself ever most safe in the Advice and Affection of his People, in Parliament, hath therefore thought fit to call together both his Houses of Parliament, straitly charging and commanding all and every the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all Knights, Citizens, Burgesses, and Barons of the Cinque-Ports, that they and every of them do personally appear, re-assemble themselves, and give their Attendance at Westminster on the 25th Day of July next, then and there to treat of the weighty Affairs of his Majesty's Kingdom.

In Obedience to this his Majesty's Proclamation, on Thursday the 25th of July the two Houses assembled at Westminster, and upon his Majesty's Desires, made known to them by the Lord Chancellor, ad-journ'd till Monday the 29th instant, at which time his Majesty came to the House of Lords with the usual Ceremonies, and made a gracious Speech to the two Houses, "excusing the Trouble of extraordinary Attendance, and telling them the Occasions of their Meeting were now less urgent, and therefore he could again dismiss them to the Day formerly prefix'd, and should take an Opportunity, in the mean while, to do some things which he hoped would not be unwelcome to them: and so Prorogued them to the 10th of October."

King's Speech.

Accordingly on Thursday Octob. 10. his Majesty with the usual Solemnity came into the House of Lords, where the House of Commons with their Speaker attending him, his Majesty in a short Speech acquainted them, "That at their last Meeting, about eleven Weeks since, he thought fit to Prorogue them to this Day, resolving there should be a Session now, and in the mean while giving himself time to do some things which he hoped would not be unwelcome to them, but be a Foundation for a greater Confidence between them for the future; which things he had since done, and would therefore now leave the other

 Speech to acquaint the two Houses with "his Majesty's farther Reasons for the late Prorogation, together with his Desires of recommending to their Wisdom the Obstructions of foreign Commerce, and the Settlement of such a Ballance of Trade between the Subjects of this Kingdom and those of Scotland, that we may not be prejudiced by the Import of their Commodities hither, nor yet they so far discourag'd as to leave off Trading here, and find out another Vent abroad: in stance of his Parliament. That as to the Accounts of the Monies given towards the War, which his Majesty formerly promis'd should be given them, his Majesty had commanded his Officers to make them ready: and since that way of Commission wherein he put the Examination of them had been ineffectual, his Majesty was willing the Parliament should follow their own method to examine them in what way and as strictly as they pleas'd, assuring them he will leave every one concerned to stand or fall according to his own Innocency or Guilt. That his Majesty having reason to believe, that some disaffected Persons taking Advantage of the Publick Necessity, had spread abroad Discourses and Rumours reflecting upon the Government; yet his Majesty promis'd himself, from the good Affections of his Parliament, that every one of them, in their several Places, would endeavour to preserve a good Understanding betwixt him and his People: Adding, That if any just Grievances shall have happen'd, his Majesty will be as willing and ready to redress them for the future, as they to have them represented: His Majesty not doubting, but that they will give healing and moderate Counsels, and imprint that known Truth into his Subject's Hearts, that there is no distinct Interest betwixt the King and his People, but that the Good of the one is the Good of both.

 Lord Keeper's
 Speech.

The House of Commons took into Consideration his Majesty's gracious Speech, and resolv'd upon an Address of Thanks to his Majesty, in which they desired and obtained the Concurrence of the Lords: Accordingly on Octob. 15. after Noon, the two Houses in a Body, with their Speakers, attended his Majesty in the Banqueting-House at White- hall; where the Lord Keeper, as Speaker of the House of Lords, in the Name of the two Houses, made this following Address to his Majesty.

Procedings of the Commons.

"WE your Majesty's Loyal and Faithful Subjects, the Lords and Commons in Parliament assembled, having taken into our serious Consideration your Majesty's gracious Speech, wherein you were pleas'd to let us know, that your Majesty thought fit to Prorogue this Parliament till the 10th of October, that you might give your self time to do something which would not be unwelcome, but a Foundation for a greater Confidence for the future between your Majesty and your People; We find Ourselves bound in Duty to return your Majesty our humble and hearty Thanks for the gracious Declaration of your Royal Intentions in that your Majesty's gracious Speech, and in that deliver'd by your Majesty's Command by the Lord Keeper. And particularly that your Majesty hath been pleas'd to disband the late rais'd Forces, and to dismiss the Papists from out your Guards and other military Employments: For your Majesty's Care in quickning the Execution of the Act for restraining the Importation of foreign Cattel; For causing the Canary Patent to be surrendred and vacated:
 And that, more especially, your Majesty hath been pleas'd to displace the late Lord Chancellor, and remove him from the Exercise of Publick Trust and Employment in Affairs of State.

Address to the K.

1667. To which Address his Majesty was pleased to 9 Car. II. make his Return to this effect: That he thanked the Houses for their Thanks; that he was glad that what he had done had so well pleased them; and, that for what concerned the Earl of Clarendon, he should not, during his Life, be employed in any Places of Publick Trust.

As to the Case of this great Man, the Earl of Clarendon; It was on Octob. 26. that Mr. Edward Seymour charg'd him in the House of Commons viuâ voce with many great Crimes: whereupon, after a long Debate upon the manner of Proceeding, a Committee was appointed to reduce the Accufation to Heads, and present them to this House. And accordingly on Novemb. 6. Sir Thomas Littleton reported, that the Accufation was reduced to Heads, which he read in his Place, and afterward delivered the same in at the Clerk's Table; which are as followeth:

- I. " That the Earl of Clarendon hath designed a Standing Army to be raised, and to Govern the Kingdom thereby, and advised the King to Dissolve this present Parliament, to lay aside all Thoughts of Parliaments for the future, to Govern by a military Power, and to maintain the same by free Quarter and Contribution.
- II. " That he hath, in the Hearing of the King's Subjects, falsely and seditiously said, That the King was in his Heart a Papist, or Popishly affected; or Words to that effect.
- III. " That he hath received great Sums of Money for the procuring of the Cumary Patent, and other illegal Patents; and granted illegal Injunctions to stop Proceedings at Law against them, and other illegal Patents formerly granted.
- IV. " That he hath advised and procured divers of his Majesty's Subjects to be Imprisoned against Law, in remote Islands, Garisons, and other Places, thereby to prevent them from the Benefit of the Law, and to produce Preidents for the Imprisoning any other of his Majesty's Subjects in like manner.
- V. " That he procured his Majesty's Customs to be Farmed at Under-rates, knowing the same; and great pretended Debts to be paid by his Majesty, to the Payment of which his Majesty was not in strictness bound: and afterwards received great Sums of Money for procuring the same.
- VI. " That he received great Sums of Money from the Company of Vintners, or some of them, or their Agents, for inhancing the Prizes of Wines, and for freeing them from the Payment of legal Penalties which they had incurred.
- VII. " That he hath in a short time gained to himself a greater Estate than can be imagined to be gained lawfully in so short a time, and, contrary to his Oath, he hath procured several Grants under the Seal, from his Majesty to himself and Relations, of several of his Majesty's Lands, Hereditaments, and Leafes, to the Disprofit of his Majesty.
- VIII. " That he hath introduced an Arbitrary Government in his Majesty's foreign Plantations, and hath caused such as complained thereof before his Majesty and Council, to be long imprisoned for so doing.
- IX. " That he did reject and frustrate a Proposal and Undertaking approved by his Majesty for the Preservation of Mevis and St. Christopher's, and reducing the French Plantations to his Majesty's Obedience, after the Commissions were drawn for that purpose; which was the Occasion of our great Losses and Damage in those Parts.
- X. " That he held Correspondence with Cromwel and his Complices when he was in Parts beyond the Seas attending his Majesty, and thereby adhered to the King's Enemies.
- XI. " That he advised and effected the Sale of Dunkirk to the French King, being part of his Majesty's Dominions, together with the Ammu-

- nitions, Artillery, and all sorts of Stores there, and for no greater Value than the said Ammunition, Artillery, and Stores were worth.
- XII. " That the said Earl did unduly cause his Majesty's Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England to one Dr. Cromber, to be altered, and the Enrollment thereof to be unduly rased.
- XIII. " That he hath in an arbitrary way examined and drawn into question divers of his Majesty's Subjects, concerning their Lands, Tenements, Goods, Chartels, and Properties, determined thereof at the Council-Table, and stopped Proceedings at Law by Order of the Council-Table, and threatned some that pleaded the Statute of 17 Car. 1.
- XIV. " That he hath caused Quo Warranto's to be issued out against most of the Corporations of England, immediately after their Charters were confirmed by Act of Parliament, to the intent he might require great Sums of Money of them for renewing their Charters; which when they complied withall, he caused the said Quo Warranto's to be discharged, and Prosecution therein to cease.
- XV. " That he procured the Bills of Settlement of Ireland, and received great Sums of Money for the same in most corrupt and unlawful manner.
- XVI. " That he hath deluded and betrayed his Majesty and the Nation in all foreign Treaties and Negotiations relating to the late War, and betrayed and discovered his Majesty's secret Counsels to his Enemies.
- XVII. " That he was a principal Author of that fatal Council of dividing the Fleet about June 1666.

After a second Reading of these Heads of Accufation, it was reasonably moved, that in regard the Articles were many, they might be refer'd to the Committee to see how far they were true, because Fame is too slender a ground to bring a Man up on the Stage. But this was carried in the Negative; and the Articles were again singly and separately read over, and several Members spoke to the Truth or Probability of them: And the Question being put, Whether this House hath sufficient Inducement to Impeach, it was carried in the Affirmative. And after farther Debate, whether to Impeach of Treason or high Misdemeanours only, it was resolved that an Impeachment of Treason, and other Crimes and Misdemeanours, be carried up to the Lords against Edward Earl of Clarendon by Mr. Seymour; who on Novemb. 12. went up to the House of Lords; and the Lord Keeper Bridgman being come to the Bar to meet him, he deliver'd himself to this purpose.

My Lords,

THE Commons assembled in Parliament having been informed of several traitorous Practices, and other high Crimes and Misdemeanours committed by Edward Earl of Clarendon, a Member of this honourable House; and I do accordingly impeach him of High Treason, and other Crimes and Misdemeanours, in the Name of the said Commons, and of all the Commons of England. And they have farther commanded me to desire your Lordships to sequester him from Parliament, and to commit him to safe Custody, and in convenient time they will exhibit Articles against him.

The Lords were generally dissatisfied with this Proceeding, and did not commit the Earl to Custody, and gave this Reason for their not doing it, in a Conference with the Commons, Because the Accufation is only of Treason in general, without charging any thing in particular. The Commons, highly displeas'd at the Lords not committing the Earl, refer'd it to a Committee to bring in Reasons why a Person generally charged by the House of Commons for High Treason ought to be committed to safe Custody,

1667. dy, tho' the particular Treason be not specified at the 19Car. II. time of such Charge. Which Reasons and the Precedents to enforce them were communicated at a free Conference; after which, on December 2. the Lords sent down a Message to the Commons by two Judges to this effect, That upon the Report made to them of the last free Conference, they are not satisfied to Commit or Sequeſter from Parliament the Earl of Clarendon, without the particular Treason be mention'd or assign'd. And in Return the Commons did resolve, That the Lords not having complied with the Desire of the Commons in committing the Earl of Clarendon, and ſequeſtring him from Parliament upon the Impeachment from this Houſe, is an obſtruction to the publick Juſtice of the Kingdom, and is a Preſident of evil and dangerous Conſequence.

Difference between the two Houſes.

The Earl withdraws and leaves a Paper.

The Earl ſeeing no hopes of allaying this Storm ſo raiſed againſt him, thought it moſt adviſeable to withdraw himſelf, and only to leave behind him ſome written Vindication of his Innocence and Honour, which he did in a Paper thus entitul'd.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, the Humble Petition and Addreſs of Edward Earl of Clarendon.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

I Cannot expreſs the unſupportable Trouble and Grief of Mind I ſuſtain under the Apprehenſion of being Miſrepreſented to your Lordſhips; and when I hear how much of your Lordſhips time hath been ſpent upon the mention of me, as it is attended with more publick Conſequences, and of the Differences of Opinion which have already, or may probably ariſe between your Lord-ſhips and the Honourable Houſe of Commons, whereby the great and weighty Affairs of the Kingdom may be obſtructed in the time of ſo general a Diſſatisfaction.

I am very unfortunate to find myſelf to ſuffer ſo much under two very diſadvantageous Reflections, which are in no degree applicable to me.

The Fiſt, From the greatneſs of my Eſtate and Fortune collected and made in ſo few Years, which if it be proportionable to what is reported, may very reaſonably cauſe my Integrity to be ſuſpected.

The Second, That I have been the ſole Manager and chief Miniſter in all the Tranſactions of State ſince the King's Return into England to Auguſt laſt, and therefore that all Miſcarriages and Miſfortunes ought to be imputed to me and my Councils.

Concerning my Eſtate, your Lordſhips will not believe that after Malice and Envy have been ſo inquiſitive and ſo ſharp-ſighted, I will offer any thing to your Lordſhips but what is exactly true; and I do aſſure your Lordſhips, in the fiſt place, that (excepting from the King's Bounty) I have never received nor taken one Penny but what was generally underſtood to be the juſt lawful Perquiſites of my Office, by the conſtant Practice of the beſt Times, which I did in my own Judgment conceive to be that of my Ld Coventry and my Ld Eliſmere; the Practice of which I conſtantly obſerved, altho' the Office in both their Times was lawfully worth double to what it was to me, and I believe now is. That all the Courteſies and Favours which I have been able to obtain from the King for other Perſons in Church or State, or in W'eſtmiſter-Hall, have never been worth to me five Pounds: So that your Lordſhips may be confident I am as innocent from Corruption as from any diſloyal thought, which after near 30 Years Service of the Crown in ſome Difficulties and Diſtreſſes, I did never expect would be objected to me in my Age. And I do aſſure your Lordſhips, and ſhall make it very manifeſt, that the ſeveral Sums of Money, and ſome parcels of Land, which his Maſteſty hath bountifully beſtowed upon me, ſince his Return into England, are worth more than all I have amounts unto; ſo far am I from advancing my Eſtate by indirect means. And tho' this Bounty of his hath very far exceeded my Merit or my Expectation, yet ſome others have been as fortunate at leaſt in the ſame Bounty, who had as ſmall pretences to it, and have no great Reason to envy my Condition.

Concerning the other Imputation of the Credit and Power of being Chief Miniſter, and ſo cauſing all to be done that I had a mind to, I have no more to ſay, than that I had the good Fortune to ſerve a Maſter of a very great Judgment and Underſtanding, and be always join'd with Per-ſons of great Ability and Experience, without whoſe Advice and Concurrence never any thing hath been done.

Before his Maſteſty's coming into England, he was conſtantly attended by the then Marquis of Ormond, the late Lord Culpeper, and Mr. Secretary Nicholas, who were equally truſted with myſelf, and without whoſe joint Advice and Concurrence, when they were all preſent (as ſome of them always were) I never gave any Council. As ſoon as it pleaſed God to bring his Maſteſty into England, he eſtabliſhed his Privy Council, and ſhortly out of them he choſe a number of Honourable Perſons of great Reputation (who for the moſt part are ſtill alive) as a Committee for Foreign Affairs, and Conſideration of ſuch things as in the Nature of them required much Secrecy, and with theſe Perſons he vouchſafed to join me;
and I am confident this Committee never tranſacted any thing of Moment (his Maſteſty being always preſent) without preſenting the ſame firſt to the Council Board, and I muſt appeal to them concerning my Carriage, and whether we were not all of one Mind in matters of Importance.

For more than two Years I never knew any Differences in the Councils, or that there were any Complaints in the Kingdom, which I wholly impute to his Maſteſty's great Wiſdom, and the entire Concurrence of his Counſellors, without the vanity of aſſuming any thing to myſelf:
And therefore I hope I ſhall not be ſingly charged with any thing that hath ſince fallen out amiſs. But from the time Mr. Secretary Nicholas was removed from his Place there were great Alterations; and whoſoever knew any thing of the Court and Councils, know well how much my Credit hath ſince that time been diminithed, tho' his Maſteſty graciously vouchſafed ſtill to hear my Advice in moſt of his Affairs: Nor hath there been from that time to this above one or two Perſons brought to the Council, or preferred to any conſiderable Office in the Court, who have been of my intimate Acquaintance, or ſuſpected to have any Kindneſs for me; and moſt of them moſt notoriously known to have been very long my Enemies and of different Judgment and Principles from me, both in Church and State, and have taken all opportunities to leſſen my Credit with the King, and with all other Perſons, by miſrepreſenting and miſreporting all that I ſaid or did; and perſwading Men I have done them ſome prejudice with his Maſteſty, or croſſed them in ſome of their Pretentions; tho' his Maſteſty's Goodneſs and Juſtice was ſuch, that it made little Impreſſion upon him.

In my humble Opinion, the great Miſfortunes of the Kingdom have proceeded from the War, to which it is notoriously known, that I was always moſt averſe, and may without Vanity ſay, I did not only foreſee, but declare the Miſchiefs we ſhould run into, by entering into a War before any Alliances made with the Neighbouring Princes, and that it may not be imputed to his Maſteſty's want of Care, or the Negligence of his Counſel-lors, that no ſuch Alliances were enter'd into, I muſt take the boldneſs to ſay, his Maſteſty left nothing unattempted in order thereunto, and know-

1667. 19 Car. II. " knowing this well, that France resolv'd to begin " a War upon Spain, as soon as his Catholick " Majesty should depart this World, which be" ing much sooner expected by them, they had " in the two Winters before been at great Charges " in providing plentiful Magazines of all Pro" visions upon the Frontiers, that they might be " ready for the War, his Majesty used all possible " Means to prepare and dispose the Spaniard with " that Apprehension, offering his Friendship to that " degree as might be for the Benefit and Security " of both Crowns.

" But Spain flattering itself that France would not " break with them, at least, that they would not " give them any Cause, by administering matter of " Jealousie to them, never made any real Approach " towards a Friendship with his Majesty, but both
 " by their Ambassadors here, and to his Majesty's " Ambassador at Madrid, always persisted as Prelimi" naries upon the giving up of Dunkirk, Tangier
 " and Jamaica.

" Tho' France had an Ambassador here, to whom " a Project of a Treaty was offer'd, and the Lord
 " Hollis his Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, used all " Endeavours to pursue and prosecute the said " Treaty, yet it was quickly discern'd, that the " principal Design of France was to draw his Maje" sty into such a nearer Alliance as might advance " their Design, without which they had no mind to " enter into the Treaty propos'd. And this was " the state of Affairs, when the War was enter'd in" to with the Dutch, from which time neither " Crown much consider'd the making any Alliance " with England.

" As I did from my Soul abhor the entering into " this War, so I presumed never to give any Ad" vice or Counsel for the way of managing it, but " by opposing many Propositions, which seem'd to " the late Lord Treasurer and myself to be unrea" sonable, as the payment of the Seamen by Tickets, " and many other Particulars which added to the " Expence, my Enemies took all occasions to inveigh " against me, and making their Friendship with o" thers out of the Council of more licentious Princi" ples, and who knew well enough how much I " disliked and complain'd of the Liberty they took " to themselves of reviling all Counsels and Coun" sellors, and turning all things serious and sacred " into Ridicule; they took all ways imaginable to " render me ungrateful to all sorts of Men (whom
 " I shall be compelled to name in my defence) per" swading those who miscarried in any of their De" signs, that it was the Chancellor's doing; where" of I never knew any thing. However, they could " not withdraw the King's Favour from me, who " was still pleas'd to use my Service with others,
 " nor was there ever any thing done but with the " joint Advice of at least the major part of those " who were consult'd with. And as his Majesty " commanded my Service in the late Treaties, so I " never gave the least Advice in private, nor wrote " one Letter to any one Person in either of those " Negotiations but upon the Advice of the Council,
 " and also after it was read in Council, or at least
 " by the King himself and some others: And if I " prepared any Instructions or Memorials it was by " the King's Command, and the Request of the Se" cretaries who desired my Assistance: Nor was it " any Wish of my own, that any Ambassador " should give me any Account of the Transactions,
 " but to the Secretaries, to whom I was always " ready to advise, nor am I conscious to myself of " ever having given Advice that both prov'd mis" chievous or inconvenient to his Majesty; and I " have been so far from being the sole Manager of " Affairs, that I have not in the whole last Year
 " been above twice with his Majesty in any Room " alone, and very seldom in the two or three Years " Preceding. And since the Parliament at Oxford,
 " it hath been very visible, that my Credit hath 1667. 19 Car. II. " been very little, and that very few things have " been hearken'd to, which have been propos'd by " me, but contradicted eo nomine because propos'd

 " by me.

" I most humbly beseech your Lordships to re" member the Office and Trust I had for seven " Years, in which, in discharge of my Duty, I was " obliged to stop and obstruct many Mens Preten" ces, and refused to set the Seal to many Pardons
 " and other Grants, which would have been profit" able to those who procur'd them, and many " whereof, upon my Representation to his Majesty,
 " were for ever stopt, which naturally has rais'd
 " many Enemies to me. And my frequent concur" ring, upon the Desires of the late Lord Treasurer " (with whom I had the Honour to have a long " and vast Friendship to his Death) in representing " several Excesses and Exorbitances, the yearly Issue
 " so far exceeding the Revenues, provok'd many " Persons concern'd, of great Power and Credit, to " do me all the ill Offices they could. And yet I " may faithfully say, that I never medled with any " part of the Revenue or the Administration of it,
 " but when I was desired by the late Lord Treasurer
 " to give him my Assistance and Advice, having had " the Honour formerly to serve the Crown as Chan-" cellour of the Exchequer, which was for the most " part in his Majesty's Presence. Nor have I ever " been in the least degree concern'd, in point of " Profit, in letting any part of his Majesty's Reve" nue, nor have ever Treated or Debated it but in " his Majesty's Presence, in which my Opinion
 " concurr'd always with the major part of the Coun" sellors who were present.

" All which upon Examination will be made ma" nifest to your Lordships, how much soever my " Integrity is blasted by the Malice of those who I " am confident do not believe themselves. Nor " have I in my Life upon all the Treaties, or o" therwise, received the value of one Shilling from " all the King's or Princes in the World (excepting
 " the Books of the Louvers Print, sent me by the " Chancellor of France by that King's Direction)
 " but from my own Matter, to whose intire Service " and the Good and Welfare of my Country, no " Man's Heart was ever more devoted.

" This being my present Condition, I do most " humbly beseech your Lordships to entertain a fa" vourable Opinion of me, and to believe me to be " innocent from those foul Aspersions, until the con" trary shall be proved, which I am sure can never " be by any Man worthy to be believ'd: And since " the Distempers of the Times, and the Difference " between the two Houses in the present Debate, " with the Power and Malice of my Enemies, who " gave out that I should prevail with his Majesty
 " to Prorogue or Dissolve this Parliament in Dis" pleasure, and threaten to expose me to the Rage
 " and Fury of the People, may make me to be " look'd upon as the Cause which obstructs the " King's Service, and Unity and Peace of the King" dom.

" I most humbly beseech your Lordships, that I " may not forfeit your Lordships Favour and Pro" tection by withdrawing myself from so powerful " a Persecution, in hope that I may be able by such " withdrawing hereafter to appear, and make my " Defence, when his Majesty's Justice (to which I " shall always submit) may not be obstructed or " controuled by the Power and Malice of those who " have sworn my Destruction.

CLARENDON.

Upon News at Court of the Earls withdrawing, Patrick there was care taken to give this publick Advertisement of it. Whitehall December 2. Tuesday Morning of the Earls became publick the first notice of the Earl of Clarendon's withdrawing. having withdrawn himself, but the time when he retir'd is not certain. This Afternoon his Majesty was play'd 1667. to declare his Pleasure in Council, that the said Earl be put out of the Council, and remain henceforth divorced of the Place of a Counsellor. The Lords, on Dec. 3. sent a Message to the Commons by two Judges, that they had received a large Petition from the Earl of Clarendon, which intimated that he was withdrawn. Whereupon the Commons order'd, that Sir Thomas Clifford, Comptroller of the King's Household, be sent to the King, to desire the Ports may be stopped. And at a Conference between the two Houses, the Duke of Buckingham deliver'd up the Earl's Petition in this way of Insult and Derision; "That the Lords had command'd him to deliver to the Commons that scandalous and seditious Paper sent from the Earl of Clarendon: they bid me present it to you, and desire you in convenient time to send it to them again; for it has a Stile which they are in love with, and they desire to keep it. This way of ridiculing the Afflictions of a great Man, and turning the Justice of the Nation into a Jest, could not but offend all sober serious People, and made them the more capable of understanding Who it was Whom the Earl in his Paper chiefly meant, when he com-plain'd of some Enemies of more licentious Principles, who took to themselves the Liberty of reviling all Counsels and Counsellors, and turning all things serious and sacred into ridicule.

The Commons, to justify their own Proceeding, insist'd upon the Question, That the Paper sent to the Lords by the Earl of Clarendon, and by them sent down to the House of Commons, and now read, is scandalous and seditious, and doth reproach the King and the publick Justice of the Nation. And after a Motion and Debate for burning the Paper, or desiring the Lords to burn it (as was done by the Hands of the common Hangman on Dec. 12.) and a Proposal for bringing in a Bill of Attainder; the House at last agreed in this Vote, Resolved, that this House taking notice of the Flight of the Earl of Clarendon, being under an Impeachment of High Treason by this House, the Kings Majesty be humbly desired to issue out his Proclamations for summoning the said Earl to appear by a Day, and to apprehend him in order to his Trial. And Resolved, To send to the Lrds for their Concurrence to this Vote. But the Lords, who seem'd to have a more favourable Opinion of the Person accused, as well as a Concern for their own Rights, would not concur; and on Dec. 14. deliver'd their Reasons for not concurring, having the Day before sent down to the Commons a Bill for banishing the said Earl, and therefore now declaring, that their Lordships, upon Consideration of the whole State of Affairs, and of the Kingdom, had, upon Grounds of Prudence and Justice, thought fit for securing of King and Kingdom, to proceed in a Legislative way against the said Earl, and had to that end pass'd and sent down to them a Bill of Banishment and Incapacity against him. After many Speeches and Debates among the Commons, some being against the Bill, because it went too far in condemning a Man before the Hearing of him; others opposing it upon a contrary Opinion, that the Penalty of Incapacity and Banishment were not adequate to the Crimes which that House had charged against him; on Dec. 18. the Bill was read the third time, and the Question being put for passing of it, they five were for it, and forty two against it.
 And it easily obtained the Royal Assent; for it was indeed the wisest Course to prevent a Legal Answer, and to stop the Discovery of some Secrets that must have been otherwise expos'd.

This Summer the French King, with a mighty Army, had taken into Holland's, and taken Charleroy, Oudenard, Toumay, Doras, Comtrich, Lisle, and other Parts of the Spanish Netherlands; and had farther advanc'd his Conquests in Alsatia and Franche-Comte; that he began to strike a Terror upon the Dutch, and a reasonable Jealousie upon the English, and to make it their natural Interest and Inclination to stop the furious Progress of his Arms. Under this Disposition, the King, sent to Sir William Temple, his then Resident at Brussels, to take joint Measures with the States for a defensive Alliance against the French.

 The States being very apprehensive of their Danger, did wisely and readily comply with the Proposals offer'd by Sir William, who stept over to wait on the King, and to take his more immediate Instructions, and within five Days after was sent back with Powers to conclude a stricter Defensive League between his Majesty and the States General, which was soon concluded and sign'd at the Hague, and brought over to Whitehall by Mr. Temple Brother to the Envoy on Jan. 19. And because the Swedes soon after enter'd into it, it was call'd the Triple Alliance; so grateful to the Parliament, and so very pleasing to the People, that it was of mighty Service to the King and his Ministry, and cover'd them a while from all Suspicion of Popery and a French Interest.

On Decemb. 19. after passing the Bill against the Earl of Clarendon, and a Bill for taking the Publick Accounts, &c. the Parliament adjourn'd to Feb. 6.
 and then meeting, adjourn'd again to Monday Feb.
10. on which Day his Majesty was pleas'd to come to the House of Lords, and having on his Crown and Robes, with the usual Solemnity took his Seat, where the House of Commons with their Speaker attending him, his Majesty was pleas'd to express himself to both Houses in this following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Am glad to see you here again, to tell you what I have done in this Interval; which I am confident you will be pleas'd with, since it is so much for the Honour and Security of this Nation.
 I have made a League Defensive with the States of the United Provinces, and likewise a League for an efficacious Mediation of Peace between the two Crowns; into which League, that of Sweden, by its Ambassadour, hath offer'd to enter as a Principal.
 I did not at our last Meeting move you for any Aid, tho' I lie under great Debts contracted in the last War; but now the Posture of our Neighbours abroad, and the Consequence of this new Alliance, will oblige me, for our Security, to set out a considerable Fleet to Sea this Summer; and besides, I must build more great Ships; and 'tis as necessary that I do some things in order to the fortifying some of our Ports. I have begun something my self in order to these Ends; but if I have not your speedy Assistance, I shall not be able to go through with it. Wherefore I do earnestly desire you to take it into your speedy Consideration; for the loss of a little time now, may beget a Prejudice not to be repaired. And for the settling a firm Peace as well at home as abroad, one thing more I hold my self oblig'd to recommend to you at this present, which is, that you would seriously think of some Course to beget a better Union and Composure in the Minds of my Protestant Subjects in Matters of Religion; whereby they may be induc'd not only to submit quietly to the Government, but also cheerfully give their Assistance to the Support of it.

At the same time, by the Mediation of the Earl of Sandwich his Majesty's Ambassadour Extraordinary to Spain, and of Sir Robert Southwell his Majesty's Envoy to Portugal, a Peace was concluded between those two Crowns, and the King of England declared the Mediator and Guarantee of it. So that all things seem'd to be put into a condition of reducing the exorbitant Power of France, and restoring the Ballance of Europe.

At the beginning of this Year, March 25. died the Earl of Cleveland, Captain of his Majesty's Band of Pensioners; which Office was confer'd on the Lord Bellasis. On Wednesday May 22. died at the Palace of St. James's the Duke of Kendal, second Son to his Royal Highness; and the Duke of Cambridge, his elder Brother, after a grievous and tedious Distemper,

Death
Great Men.

1667. stemper, died at Richmond on Thursday June 20. to the great Affliction of the Court. The wife and good Minister of State, Thomas Earl of Southampton, Lord High Treasurer of England, died on May 16. at his House in New Southampton Square. The excellent Poet Mr. Abraham Cowley died on July 28. and had the Honour of a publick Funeral and a proper Monument bestow'd on him by the Generosity of the Duke of Buckingham: And this Account was publish'd of it; Whitehall, Aug. 4. Yesterday in the Evening the Body of Mr. Abraham Cowley, who died the 28th past, was convey'd from Wallingford-House to Wetminster-Abbey, accompanied by divers Persons of eminent Quality, who came to perform this last Office to one who had been the great Ornament of our Nation, as well by the Candour of his Life as the Excellency of his Writings.

In Matters of Religion, it is observable that the Nonconformists were pleas'd with the Fall of the Earl of Clarendon, looking upon him as a stout and steady Protector of the Church of England; and rejoic'd as much that the Duke of Buckingham was receiv'd into the King's Favour, and into the Reputation of prime Minister, esteeming him their great Patron. They themselves give this Account. "In the Year 1667. the Lord Chancellour Hide was impeach'd and discard'd: And it seem'd a remarkable Providence of God, that he who had been the grand Instrument of State in the foregoing Transactions, and had dealt so severely with the Nonconformists, should at length, by his own Friends, be cast out and banish'd, while those whom he had persecut'd were the most moderate in his Cause, and many for him. The Duke of Buckingham succeed'd him as chief Favourite: He was a Man for Liberty. Under him the Nonconformists in London were commiv'd at, and People went openly to their Meetings, without fear. This encourag'd the Country Ministers, who did the like in most Parts of England, and Crowds of the most religiously-inclined People were their Auditors. It must be added to the Foot of this Account, that it could be no Credit to the Dissenting Party to have had the Earl of Clarendon their Opposer, and the Duke of Buckingham their Promoter; the first opposing them upon no worse Principle, than a Zeal to the establish'd Church, as the most effectual Bulwark against Popery; and the other appearing in their Interest upon no better Account, than a strong Affection to the universal Liberties of Opinion and of Practice.

But the House of Commons, who run down the Earl of Clarendon, had still a Majority of the same Judgment with his Lordship, "That Popery had its Encouragement and Growth under the Cover of indulging the Protestant Dissenters: And therefore tho' his Majesty had graciously oblig'd them in his Speech of Febr. 10. by recommending to the two Houses, that they would seriously think of some Course to beget a better Union and Composure in the Minds of his Protestant Subjects; yet the Commons were so sensible that this Royal Motion made the Nonconformists too presuming in their Liberty, and the Papists too insolent in their Hopes and Expectations: and therefore their House, upon solemn Debate and Resolution, made and presented a Humble Petition to his Majesty, "That he would issue out his Proclamation for enforcing the Laws against Conventicles; and that Care might be taken for Preservation of the Peace of the Kingdom against unlawful Assemblies of Papists and Nonconformists. And accordingly on March 10. his Majesty (who was under Expectance of a liberal Supply from the Commons) was pleas'd to issue out his Proclamation, declaring, "That upon Consideration of the late humble Petition of his Loyal Subjects the Commons in Parliament assembled, and upon Information that divers Persons, in several Parts of this Realm, abusing the Clemency which had been used towards Persons not conforming to the Worship and Government establish'd in the Church of England (even whilst it was under Consideration to find out a way for the better Union of his Protestant Subjects) have of late frequently and openly, in great Numbers, and to the great Disturbance of the Peace, held unlawful Assemblies and Conventicles; therefore his Majesty had been pleas'd in Council to declare, that he will by no means permit such notorious Contempts of himself and his Laws to go unpunish'd; but by Advice of his Privy Council does order this his Proclamation to be issued out, requiring, charging, and commanding all Lord-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Justices of Oyer and Terminer, Justices of Assize and Goal-Delivery, Justices of Peace, Mayors, Bayliffs, and all other his Majesty's Officers whatsoever, that they be circumspect and vigilant each of them in their several Charges and Jurisdictions, to enforce and put in Execution on all the Laws now in force against unlawful Conventicles: strictly charging and commanding his said Magistrates and Officers, that they, and every of them in their several Places, do take care for the Preservation of the Peace of his Kingdom, against unlawful Assemblies of Papists and Nonconformists.

The French King was so afraid of the Consequence of the Triple League, and the Peace between the two Crowns of Spain and Portugal, that he immediately enter'd upon a Treaty at Aix la Chapelle, employing in that Affair his greatest Minister Monsieur Colbert, and the King of England sending thither his Ambassadour Extraordinary Sir William Temple. By their Negotiation a Peace was there concluded and ratified between France and Spain, the Ministers of the King of England and of the States-General of the United Provinces attending the French King at Paris on May 18. and there exchanging the Instruments of Ratification.

On May 9. his Majesty was pleas'd to be present in the Lord's House; where the Commons attending him, the Speaker presented him these following publick Acts: 1. "An Act for raising three hundred and ten thousand Pounds by an Imposition on Wines and other Liquors. 2. An additional Act against the Importation of foreign Cattel. 3. An Act for proceeding to Judgment on Writs of Error brought in the Exchequer. 4. An Act for giving Liberty to Buy and Export Leather and Skins Tanned or Dressed. 5. An Act for the better Payment of Monies received for the Use of the Crown. 6. An Act for the Increase and Preservation of Timber within the Forest of Dean. 7. An Act to regulate the Trade of Silk-throwing. Which, with several private Bills, his Majesty was graciously pleas'd to pass; and the Parliament afterwards adjourn'd till the 11th of August next ensuing: and then again, by his Majesty's Direction, adjourn'd themselves to the 1st of March: But the King being in Peace and Plenty, did by Proclamation, dated Dec. 18. Prorogue the Parliament upon and from the said 1st Day of March until the 19th Day of October next following.

After this general Peace of Europe, the King, to maintain the friendly Correspondence, sent away Sir William Godolphin, lately knighted by him, to reside as his Ambassadour in the Court of Spain; and Sir Edward Spragge as Envoy to the Constable of Castile upon his Entry on the Government of the Spanish Netherlands; and Sir William Temple as his Ambassadour Extraordinary in Holland; and Sir Daniel Harvey as Ambassadour to Constantinople; Sir John Trevor as Envoy Extraordinary to France; the Earl of Carlisle Ambassadour to the Crown of Sweden; and received Montieur Colbert as Ambassadour from his most Christian Majesty, who made his publick Entry into London Aug. 17. as did likewise, on September 17. Signiour Pietro Mocenigo, Ambassadour from the State of Venice.

1668. The King conferred the Honour of Knighthood on John Vaughan, who being solemnly sworn Sergeant at Law in the Court of Chancery on Friday May 22. was next Day admitted Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common-Pleas. On Friday Morning June 12. died of a short Apoplectical Distemper Charles Lord Viscount Fitz-Harding of the Privy-Council, and Treasurer of his Majesty's Household, which Office his Majesty was pleased to confer upon Sir Thomas Clifford formerly Comptroller of his Majesty's House, and that of Comptroller upon Francis Lord Newport, who on July 1. was sworn of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council. On Sept. 19. the Duke of Monmouth in Hyde-Park was plac'd by his Majesty in the Command of Captain of his Life-Guard of Horse, void by the Resignation of the Lord Gerard of Brandon. Sir John Trevor who had return'd from his Employment as Envoy Extraordinary to the most Christian King on June 18. and had given his Majesty a satisfactory Account of his Negotiation in that Court, was on Sept. 29. sworn one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State upon the Resignation of Sir William Morrice.

Our Fleet at Sea.

It having been a fatal Error in the Administration not to have had a Fleet at Sea in time of War the last Summer; it was now amended by another extreme, the keeping out our Fleet in a time of Peace with all our Neighbours. This Fleet under Command of Sir Thomas Allen, was visited by his Majesty and his Royal Highness in the Downs on June 23. and was thence order'd to sail Westward, and having safely shew'd their Grandeur in the Chanel, Sir Thomas upon express Orders on Aug. 20. sail'd by Plymouth towards the Mediterranean, and at the end of September came before Algiers; and threatening the Town made them offer a Release of all the Captive English, and renew their former Peace with us, upon good additional Articles to this effect, 1. That all their Captives should be commended to let all Engl. Vessels pass without Damage or Molestation, upon their shewing English Colours. If in any Vessel the English were equal to the Strangers, they should then be free; if the Strangers exceeded the English then lawful Prize; yet, if they could shew an English Pass, to be let go. 2. That none of their little Frigots with Oars shall stop any Vessels laden with Provisions or Ammunition for Tangier. 3. That they shall not deliver any of their little Frigots with Oars to any of the Salley Men to make use of. 4. That if any of their little Vessels intended for Tangier, they should take a Pass from the English Consul at Argier.

Algiers brought to Submission.

State of Religion.

As to Religion, the Church and State were equally in Peace and Quiet, and the Nonconformists finding no hopes of a legal Toleration were the better disposed to desire a Comprehension, and to accept any reasonable Terms of being brought into one Communion. They themselves have thus represented their Inclinations and Attempts this Year. " In January 1668. Mr. Baxter received a Letter from Dr. Alanton, intimating that he was told by Sir John Barber, that the Lord Keeper Bridgman desired to confer with them two about a Comprehension and Toleration. Hereupon he came to London, and they two waited on the Lord Keeper, who told them, that he had sent for them to think of a way of their Restauration: To which end, he had some Proposals to offer to them, which were for a Comprehension for the Presbyterians, and an Indulgence for the Independents and the rest. They ask'd him, whether it was his Pleasure, that they should offer him their Opinion of the Means, or only receive what he offer'd to them? He replied, that he had something to offer, but they might also make their own Proposals. Mr. Baxter told him, he thought they might be able to offer him such Terms (without injuring any one) as might take in both Presbyterians and Independents, and all sound Christians into the publick establish'd Ministry. He answer'd, that that was a thing that he would not have, and so it was agreed to go first upon the Comprehension. A few Days after he sent his Proposals. After this they met with Dr. Wilkins and Mr. Burton to confer about the matter. The thing they most differ'd about was Re-ordination. At length by Conference with Sir Mathew Hale that Point was thus adjusted, that there should be an Admission into the Ministry of the Church of England, of those who had been Ordained before, according to this Form of Words, Take thou legal Authority to preach the Word of God, and administer the Holy Sacraments in any Congregation of England, where thou shalt be lawfully appointed thereunto. It was agreed the Ceremonies should be left indifferent, and the Liturgy alter'd; and that there should be an Indulgence of such as could not be Comprehended; the Names of the Teachers and all the Members of their respective Congregations being Register'd: And a Bill was accordingly drawn up by Judge Hale to be presented to the Parliament. But they no sooner saw than the High-Church Party made such an Interest, as that upon putting it to the Vote, it was carry'd that no Man should bring an Act of this Nature into the House; and so they prevented all Talk or Motion of such a thing: And the Lord Keeper who set it on Foot, grew as indifferent about it as any one, when he saw which way the Stream was strongest.

This Year began with the Reception of the Prince of Tuscany, who in the Portland Frigate from Corunna after being driven into Kingsale in Ireland, and again into the Isle of Silly, arrived at Plymouth on Mar. 22. and being here honourably received by Sir John Skelton the Governour, he left the Town on the 27th and lay the next Night at Exeter, being there complemented and attended by the Mayor and his Brethren. On April 1. he came to Salisbury, where he was waited on by the Earl of Pembroke, with the Mayor and Aldermen in their Habits; the next Day he was nobly entertain'd by the Earl at his House in Wilton; and proceeding on his Road, he was met and Complimented in his Majesty's Name at Brentford, by the Lord Viscount Mondeville in one of his Majesty's Coaches, and coming to London April 5. Incognito, he was at his arrival attended by Sir William Killigrew with a Complement from her Majesty, by the Earl of Peterborough from his Royal Highness, and from her Royal Highness by Sir William Powel the Master of her Horse. At the end of the Month he went along with the King and the Duke of York and Prince Rupert to Newmarket, and having diverted himself with the Recreations of that Place, he went to Cambridge on May 1. and was received with all Respect imaginable by the University and Town, being attended at his Lodgings, and Complemented in the Name of the University by the two Divinity Professors, accompanied by all the young Noblemen then Students there, and by the Mayor and Aldermen from the Town; which done, his Highness being pleased to go abroad, the Vice-Chancellor with the Doctors and both the Proctors, stood ready in their Habits of Formality to receive him at the publick Schools, all the Scholars being ranged on each side of the way; the publick Orator entertain'd him with a Speech at the Gate, from whence his Highness was conducted into the Regent-House, where was held a Congregation for creating in all Degrees and Faculties on this occasion, by the particular Command of his Majesty, where a second Speech was made to him by the same Orator. In the Afternoon he was pleased to be present at a Philosophy Act appointed for that purpose, and performed to the great Satisfaction of the Prince and the whole Auditory. The Prince went away to Northampton, and being entertain'd at Dinner on Monday May 3. he came very late that Night to Oxford, and refusing the Lodgings offer'd him by the Vice-Chancellor in Christ-Church, went to be more private in the Angel-Inn; where the next Morning he was attended by the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors ceived in Convocation; the Vice-Chancellor with some Doctors afterwards waiting on him the same Morning to shew him most of the chief Colleges, where he was received by the respective Societies and Complemented with Speeches. In the Afternoon the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors went again to his Lodgings, and conducted him thence to the Convocation, his Highness being pleased to walk all the way on Foot, thro' the Ranks of Scholars placed on each side from his Lodgings to the Schools. The Masters of Arts being set in the Convocation-House attended there his arrival, upon which the Convocation began, the Prince being first seated in a Chair of State provided for that occasion on the right hand of the Vice-Chancellor, then the publick Orator Dr. South, made him an Oration, which ended, and several Academical Affairs dispatch'd, to satis-fie his Highness of the manner of acting in those Assemblies; his Physician (a Doctor of Bononia) was incorporated and admitted to the same Degree.

 Thence the Prince was conducted to the New-Theatre, and so to the publick Library, where he had a view of the choicest Manuscripts, Coins and other Rarities of that Place; and hence to the several Schools, in most of which the Professors and Lecturers were reading in their several Faculties, and Dis-putations held in the others: His Highness was pleased particularly to take a Seat in that of Geometry, and to hear a learned Lecture read by Dr. Wallis, and having heard some Disputations in the School of Tongues, and in that of Natural Philosophy, he was entertain'd in the Musick School with Vocal and Instrumental Musick, and at seven in the Evening was re-conducted to his Lodgings by the Vice-Chancellor and some of the Doctors, who attended him again the next Morning, and took their leave upon his departing that Day for Windsor. On May 11. he was carried by his Majesty into Hyde-Park, to take a view of the three Troops of his Majesty's Horse-Guards, and seven of the Regiment of Guards Commanded by the Earl of Oxford, with fourteen Companies of the Foot Guards of his Majesty's Regiment, and of the Generals Regiment of Guards, all drawn up in excellent Order and Equipage. On Monday May 31. his Majesty and Royal Highness were pleased to do the Prince the Honour to sup with him at St. Alban's House in St. James's-Fields, and were entertain'd by him with great Magnificence.
 The next Day he took his leave of the Court, and departed for Holland much satisfied with his Reception here, and the Honours he had received.

Opening of the Theatre at Oxford.

At the beginning of July Prince George of Denmark, after a short Tour in France, came over to see the English Court, and on Wednesday July 21. was by the Lord Chamberlain conducted to his Majesty, and in the Afternoon was introduc'd to the Queen;
 and after an honourable Reception return'd again for Denmark.

On Friday July 9. the University of Oxford being assembled in a full Body, went to take possession of the new Theatre, the Magnificent Benefaction of his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, where after the reading of his Graces Grant by the Register of the University, Dr. South the publick Orator made an excellent Speech upon the Occasion: In the Afternoon, being again assembled and placed in the Theatre, after the Musick were pronounc'd several Pa-negyricks, the first in Prose, then one in Pindarick Verse, after that an Oration, then a Dialogue in Poetry; which having taken up a considerable time, the Auditory was diverted with excellent Musick, Vocal and Instrumental; which ended, they were again entertain'd with another Oration, follow'd by two Speeches in Poetry, and afterwards by a Discourse in favour of Learning, then a short Speech from the Musick Gallery, ushering in two Odes, which were excellently sung, after which follow'd another Speech, which concluded the Solemnity of that Day.

On Wednesday Aug. 4. was held a Convocation by the University in the usual Place, in which upon a Resignation of the Chancellourship, which was sent by his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury to the Vice-Chancellor, the University according to Statute proceeded to a new Election, and unanimously made choice of his Grace the Duke of Ormond to succeed in that Honourable Charge. This Resignation of the Archbishop was made upon a Resolution of his retiring from publick Business, and a Satisfaction to himself that he had served the University with as much Affection and greater Munificence than any of his Predecessors. He earnestly recommended the Duke of Ormond to be his Successor, having a great and just Opinion of the Duke's Integrity and Honour; and to shew the higher Esteem of him, he did this at a Juncture, when the Duke was out of Favour at Court; having been called out of Ireland, and leaving his Son the Lord Offory to Command in his absence, was soon succeeded by the Lord Roberts, but left a Reputation and an Interest in that Kingdom exceeding great;
 and upon the first News of the Change, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of Dublin, the Provost of the College, the Dean of Christ-Church, and most of the Clergy attended the Lord Offory, to make a solemn Acknowledgement of the many Benefits which the City had receiv'd from the Government of his Father and himself, and the Protection and Favours which the Church had enjoy'd as well by their good Examples as by the plentiful Provision made by them for the Clergy.

Mr. Montague was sent Ambassadour from his Majesty of Great Britain to the French King, and made his publick Entry into Paris April 25. and with great State and Ceremony had his Audience the next Day. Sir Peter Wich was sent Envoy to the Court of Muscovy, and arrived at Riga on May 1. having been upon the way civilly Treated and Complemented by the Magistrates of Dantzick, and afterwards entertain'd at Coningbergh in Prussia by his Electoral Highness of Brandenburgh, and honourably treated thro' the Territories of the Duke of Cowland. Sir Thomas Higgons had gone Envoy Extraordinary to his Highness the Elector of Saxony, and had carried to him the Order of the Garter, returning in the beginning of June, and reporting that he had been treated with extraordinary Kindness and Bounty.
 Sir William Godolphin was sent with the like Character to the Court of Portugal, and arriving at Lisbon on May 18. had his pulick Audience from the Prince and Princess, to which he was conducted in the Prince's Coach by Don Lucas de Portugal. The Lord Howard being appointed by his Majesty to go in an Ambassy to the Emperor of Morocco, imbark'd himself with a very splendid Train at Plimouth, in a Squadron under the Command of Sir Thomas Allen.
 The Lord Viscount Faulconbridge being dispatch'd on an Ambassy Extraordinary to the Republick of Venice, and several Princes of Italy, departed from London on Jan. 18.

On July 16. died the Right Honourable the Earl of Berkshire of a lingering Distemper, occasion'd some Months ago by an accidental Fall; on the twentieth in the Evening his Body was honourably attended to his Interment in Westminster-Abbey. He was near the 90th Year of his Age, and the eldest Knight of the Right Honourable Order of the Garter. The Queen-Mother Henrietta Maria, who in June 1665.
 had again cross'd the Seas to reside in her Native Country, departed this Life on Aug. 10. N.S. about four in the Morning, at her House at Colombe four Leagues from Paris, in the 60th Year of her Age.
 Her Body was Embalm'd and expos'd some time in an Apartment within the Castle of Colombe with great Ceremonies; her Heart was in a Vessel of Silver inscrib'd with her Name and Title carried in a Mourning Coach to the Monastery of Chalio, at 1669. tended by the Lord Montague her Almoner and a long Retinue: Her Body was convey'd to St. Denys and receiv'd at the Door of the Church by the Religious with Tapers in their Hands, where the grand Almoner made a Discourse upon the Subject, which was answer'd by the Prior; then the Body was plac'd in a Chapel behind the Quire, and afterward interr'd with great Solemnity. She was no more Popular in the Reign of her Son, than she had been in that of her Royal Husband, and had the common Imputation of bringing no less Mischiefs on the one Reign than she had Miseries on the other. On Wednesday Sept. 1. Sir Edmond Nicholas one of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, a Person of great Abilities and Integrity, by which he had faithfully serv'd his Majesty and his Royal Father, in the Employment of Secretary of State, dy'd at his House in Horsley in the County of Surry, after a long Sickness, in the 77 or near the 78th Year of his Age. The Duke of Albemarle had fallen this Summer into a long and dangerous Distemper, but in the beginning of July he thought himself perfectly recover'd and restor'd to his former Health by the Assistance of a Quack. one William Sermon of Bristol, whose Pills had that Success as to bring him perfectly to his Sleep and Appetite, and wholly to abate all the Symptoms of his Disease, so that on July 12. as being perfectly cur'd, he dismiss'd his Physicians from their farther Attendance; and next Day Mr. Sermon was presented to his Majesty in St. James's-Park, where he had the Honour to be admitted to kiss his Majesty's Hand, and to receive his Thanks for the good Service of that excellent Cure perform'd upon his Grace. But toward Winter the Duke fell into a Relapse, and died at the Cockpit by Whitehall on Jan. 2. in the sixty second Year of his Age. His Garter being brought to the King, was by his immediate Command carried back to the Earl of Torrington then by his Father's Death Duke of Albemarle; with a kind Assurance that he should succeed in the place of Gentleman of his Bed-Chamber and Lord Lieutenant of the County of Devon; and as the last Mark of his Majesty's Gratitude to the immortal Memory of the Deceased, his Majesty would himself take care for the Funeral, to be celebrated with a Solemnity, such as may become the glorious Things he did in the Service of the Crown, and the eminent Sense and Value his Majesty will ever retain of them. Accordingly after the Body had lain in State some time in Somerset-House, a publick Funeral was magnificently celebrated in a solemn Procession from thence to Westminster-Abbey on April 20. 1670. accompanied by a long Train of Persons of Quality, with all the Triumphs of Honour becoming so great a General, and was buried on the North side of King Henry VII.'s Chapel, with an Eloquent Sermon preach'd and publish'd by Sab Lord Bishop of Salisbury. As he had been singularly happy in being the chief Instrument of the King's Return, he was no less happy in the Sense the King ever continu'd to express of so great an Obligation: It shew'd him to be a Man of great Sincerity and true Judgment, that he did not seem to over value his own Services, but kept himself all along in the Esteem of the Court and the Affections of the People. His Wife the Dutchess died in the same House the twenty third Day of the same Month, and was privately interr'd in the same Chapel.

Meeting of Parliament. On October 19. the two Houses of Parliament according to their last Prorogation met at Westminster, where his Majesty in a gracious Speech acquainted them with his Joy to see them at that time, and the Hopes he had of a happy meeting, which he promis'd to himself from the great Experience he had of their Affection and Loyalty, of which he doubted not the continuance; briefly minding them of his Debts, which thro' pressing, he was unwilling to call for their Assistance till this time; acquainting them, that what they last gave was wholly apply'd to the Navy, and to the extraordinary Fleet for which it was intended; desiring they would now take his Debts effectually into their Consideration; afterwards hinting to them a Proposal of great Importance concerning the Uniting of England and Scotland, which requiring some length, his Majesty left it and some other things to his Lord Keeper to open them more fully; which his Lordship accordingly did in a larger Speech. After which, the Commons return'd to their House and Adjourn'd till the Thursday following, and the House of Lords Adjourn'd till Monday.

On November 6. both Houses in pursuance of a Vote of the third instant attended his Majesty in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, where the Lord Chief Justice Vaughan, supplying the room of the Lord Keeper then indispos'd, in the name of both Houses return'd his Majesty their Thanks for his Care of the Publick, in issuing out his Proclamation for suppressing Conventicles; desiring his Majesty to continue the same Care for the future: To which his Majesty return'd a gracious Answer to the satisfaction of both Houses. On December 11. the Black Rod was sent from the House of Peers to that of the Commons, to tell them, that the Lords Authorized by Commission from his Majesty, desired the Attendance of that Honourable House immediately in the House of Peers, who accordingly went thither with their Speaker, to whom his Majesty's said Commission being read, the Parliament was Prorog'd till Feb. 14. next ensuing. On Thursday December 23. his Majesty in Council order'd a Proclamation to declare his full Purpose and Resolution, that the Parliament should meet and sit on the said Feb. 14. and therefore to require the Attendance of all the Peers and Commons precisely on that Day, his Majesty expecting a ready Conformity to his Royal Will and Pleasure. And accordingly on Monday February 14. His Majesty went to Westminster in a Coach, preceded by his Trumpets and Kettle-Drums at the Head of his new Guards, and followed by his Horse-Guards, and in his Robes took his Seat in the House of Lords, where he was attended by the House of Commons with their Speaker, to whom he made a gracious Speech, which was enlarged by another from the Lord Keeper. Then the House of Commons return'd to their own House, and voted his Majesty's Speech to be taken into Consideration the Thursday following. Upon which there arose an unhappy Difference between the two Houses; but publick Information was given from Whitehall February 22. that this Day the two Houses of Parliament did, at his Majesty's gracious Recommendation, come to an happy Agreement in the Matter in Difference between them, to the great Joy and Content of all that wish well to the Prosperity of his Majesty's Government, and the Publick Quiet of this his Kingdom.

The Parliament in Scotland met the same Day with that of England, October 19. and his Majesty wrote this Letter to them.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

WE do often reflect, with Thankfulness and Joy, upon the Goodness of Almighty God, for restoring us to our Kingdoms, and them to their former Liberty and Peace: And we acknowledge it a farther Instance of God's Goodness, that as he hath fill'd our Heart with Kindness towards our Subjects of that our antient Kingdom, and with a constant Zeal to promote what we judge conducible to their Welfare; so he hath blest us with Returns from them of Love, Loyalty, and ready Compliance with our Pleasure on all Occasions, most suitable thereunto: of which our late Parliament hath given signal Proofs, as well as our other good Subjects. And this gives us Confidence, that the earnest Desire we have to render this Island more happy than ever it was in times past, by settling amongst all our good Subjects within the same a mutual Affection that may

After which, the Commons return'd to their House and Adjourn'd till the Thursday following, and the House of Lords Adjourn'd till Monday.

Thanks of the two Houses for suppressing Conventicles.

1669. 2^d Car. II. " may endure to all Posterity, shall meet with a free " Concurrence from you our Parliament, whom we " have call'd together chiefly for this End.

" The bringing of these two Kingdoms of Scot- " land and England to as close and strict an Union
" as is possible, is the Means that we propose for " the effectuating thereof: which as it is the high" est and noblest Design we can have, for witness" ing our Royal Affection to them both; so the " Accomplishment of it will raise our Satisfaction " almost as high as our Wishes. For by the Union " of the Hearts and Hands of our People, not only " our Throne shall be strengthened, and they have " Peace and Love settled among them for ever; but " we shall have the Glory of Accomplishing what " our Royal Grandfather King James, of ever blef-" sed Memory, attempted, as the greatest thing he " could devise, and wherein he, who was a compe" tent Judge, placed the Happiness of the Crown " and Kingdoms, and wherein he meant to have " gloried as the chiefest Action of his Life.

" We have fully instructed our Commissioner
" with our Intentions as to this Subject, and concern" ing such other Matters as seem to us to be " useful for the constant Peace and Welfare of the " Church and State in that our Kingdom. You are " to give him full Credit, and he will acquaint us
" with all Matters; and what is farther necessary " for us to do, will be speedily performed. So we " bid you heartily Farewel.

At the opening of the said Parliament, his Grace the Earl of Lauderdale, his Majesty's High Commissioner, made this Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

E. of Lauderdale's speech. " BY the Authority of the King, and his special " Command, you are here assembled in his " high Court of Parliament. You have heard his " Royal Intentions under his own Hand, with the " chief Reasons of his Calling you together. You " have heard his most gracious Expressions of his " Kindness to his Subjects in this his antient King" dom, and his Confidence of you their Representa" tives. And I shall, as shortly as I can, acquaint " you with what I have farther in Command from " my Master to say in his Name at the opening of " this his Parliament.

" And first I am to assure you of his Majesty's " constant and unalterable Zeal for maintaining " and defending the true Reformed Protestant Reli" gion in this his Kingdom, for which he will con" stantly lay out his whole Power and Authority;
" as also for discouraging and punishing all Atheism
" and Profanities, and all that is contrary to true " Religion and Godliness.

" I am farther particularly commanded to assure " you, that with no less Zeal and Constancy he " will maintain and defend the antient Government
" by Archbishops and Bishops, as now it is happily " settled, as a sure Fence for the true Reformed " Protestant Religion. A Government most suit" able to Monarchy; and well may I call it anti-" ent: for, whoever will look into Antiquity, shall " find Episcopal Government hath continued in the " whole Catholick Church, both East and West,
" even from the most Primitive and Apostolick " Times. I shall not insist on the sad Calamities " and Confusions which the violent and rebellious " Endeavours to overturn this Government produ" ced in this Kingdom. His Majesty's gracious " Act of Pardon and Oblivion forbids the ripping " up those Sores which his own Royal Hand hath " cured; and long may they be buried in Oblivion.
" Yet sure I am, the Reflexions on those dismal " Days ought to raise no less Zeal in the Parlia" ment, and in all good Subjects, for the maintain" ing of that Government, as now it is happily " settled: For in his Majesty's Name, and by his " special Command I do assure you, he will employ 1669. 2^d Car. II. " his utmost Power in the Maintenance of that Go" vernment, and will protect the Persons of my " Lords the Archbishops and Bishops, and of the " Loyal, Orthodox, and Peaceable Clergy, in the " Exercise of their Functions. He will not endure " those numerous and unlawful Conventicles which " tend to Sedition and Schism, which have been too " frequent in some few Shires of this Kingdom.

" Good Laws have been made, and in Prosecution " of those Laws, the Lords of his Majesty's Privy " Council have shewn their Care for suppressing " those seditious Assemblies: Yea, and of late his " Majesty has graciously indulged the planting of " some who were esteemed Peaceable Men, in va" cant Churches (tho' they came not up to the " Rules establish'd.) It will be expected, that they " walk worthy of so great a Favour: But if, after " this Removal of the very Pretence of unlawful " Conventicles, any factious People shall, in con" tempt of his Majesty's Laws, yea and of his In" dulgence also, seditiously assemble themselves un" der pretence of Religious Worship, his Majest'y " doth require his Parliament, and all in Authority
" under him, vigorously to suppress such Meetings,
" and to bring the pretended Preachers, and the " Ringleaders of such unlawful Assemblies, to con" dign and exemplary Punishment.

" In the next place, I am commanded to let you " know, that I am sufficiently instructed to give " his Majesty's Royal Assent to such Laws as shall " be prepared in this Parliament, for the constant " Peace and Welfare of this Church, and of this " Kingdom in all its Relations: But the chief Oc" casion of calling this Parliament, is the produc-
" ting that great and glorious Design of bringing " his Kingdoms of Scotland and England to a strict" er and nearer Union. This Design was begun by " his Royal Grandfather of blessed Memory, who " went so far on towards this great Work, that in " the first Year of his Reign over Great Britain,
" King James named Commissioners for this King" dom, who by Act of Parliament were authorized " to treat and consult with Commissioners for the " Kingdom of England concerning such an Union:
" And in pursuance of their Treaty, Acts were made " for the repealing of hostile Laws, and the utter " Abolition of all memory of Hostility between the " two Nations: And in the seventh Year of his " Reign, it was by the Judges of all the Courts of " Westminster-Hall in England, solemnly adjudged
" in the Case of the Postnati, that those who after " the Descent of the Crown of England to K. James
" were born in Scotland, were no Aliens in England,
" and consequently were capable not only of Land,
" but of all other Immunities, as if they had been " born in England: So much was done in K. James's " time. And the Occasions of his Majesty's Reso" lutions to prosecute the great Work, were these:
" Complaints having been made to his Majesty,
" that since the 25th Day of March in the 12th Year
" of his Reign, new Duties were imposed in Eng- " land upon divers Commodities of the Growth, Pro" duction, and Manufacture of Scotland, and Incon" veniences laid upon the Subjects of Scotland; it " pleased the King to appoint divers Meetings upon " this matter, tho' without Success: whereupon " the late Parliament in this Kingdom imposed in " their third Session Ann. 1662. great Duties upon " the Commodities of the Growth, Production, or " Manufacture of England, which by his Majesty's " Command were suspended, and have not been ex" acted, tho' the Duties in England still continue;
" and upon his Majesty's Recommendation to the " Parliament of England, an Act was lately made " for settling Freedom and Intercourse of Trade be" tween the two Kingdoms: Thereupon Commis" sioners were nominated and appointed by his Ma" jesty for both Kingdoms to treat upon that Affair,
" who had many Meetings, but produced no Effect,
" unless it were a Conviction of the Difficulty, if 1669. 21 Car. II. " not Impossibility, of settling it in any other way, than by a nearer and more complete Union of the two Kingdoms.

" His Majesty is fully perswaded, that nothing can tend more to the Good and Security of both Nations than such an Union: And finding that in his Royal Grandfather's time so great an Advance was made towards this Union, and that the continuance under the same Obedience for near seventy Years having begotten the same common Friends and common Enemies to both Nations, and taken off a great part of those Difficulties which at the first (notwithstanding the Union in Obedience to one Sovereign) stood in the way; his Majesty well hopes, that what is yet wanting to the perfecting of it, may be now accomplish'd. And therefore, in his Majesty's Name, I do most heartily recommend this great Work unto you: and I doubt not but you will speedily send such an humble Answer to his Majesty's most gracious Letter, as may witness how well-grounded that Confidence is which his Majesty hath expressed of you.

" This Day the Parliament of England meets, and the King will, both by himself and his Lord-Keeper, make the like Proposals (as to the Union) unto both Houses: And I am confident that Loyal Parliament, who have all along given such ample Testimonies of their Duty and Affection to his Majesty, will upon this Occasion make a suitable Return to his Proposals. What is farther to be proposed upon this Matter, shall be offer'd at your next Day's Meeting: And the King doubts not, but that after the Meeting of Commissioners for both Kingdoms, these things will be tender'd to your Consideration, in order to the Union, as shall tend to the Honour of his Majesty, and the common Good of all his Subjects. These things I was commanded, before I came away from his Majesty, to acquaint you with; and I have since, upon another Occasion, received an Order in Writing, bearing Date the 7th of this Month, by which I am again commanded amply to declare his Majesty's unchangeable Resolution to maintain Episcopal Government in the Church. So having begun and ended with this Declaration, I hope both the groundless Jealousies on the one hand, and the vain and idle Hopes on the other, shall be at an end.

After some Consideration the Parliament of Scotland returned this Answer to his Majesty's gracious Letter.

Most Sacred Sovereign,

Answer of the Scots Parliament to the King's Letter.

" THE Goodness of God in restoring your Majesty to your Government, and thereby this your antient Kingdom to its former Liberty and Peace; hath been, and will ever, with all humble Duty and Thankfulness, be acknowledged as the greatest Blessing we are capable of in this World. And the many singular and renewed Testimonies this Kingdom hath since met with, of your Fatherly Care, Kindness, and Zeal to promote its Welfare and Happiness in all its Concerns, have so engaged the Hearts and Affections of your Subjects, that we can with Confidence assure your Majesty of a cheerful Concurrence from this Kingdom in every thing that may tend to your Majesty's Honour, or the Good of your Subjects.

" We do, with the like Duty and Thankfulness, acknowledge your Majesty's Grace and Goodness in your Desires to render this Island more happy than ever it was in former times, by settling among your good Subjects within the same, such a mutual Affection as may endure to all Posterity. And since the bringing of your two Kingdoms of Scotland and England to as close and strict an Union as is possible, is the Mean your Majesty proposes, 1669. 21 Car. II. " for effectuating thereof we shall be ready to give our hearty Concurrence therein; and in order therunto, are willing that Commissioners be appointed for this Kingdom, to treat with such as shall be employ'd for the Kingdom of England, upon the Grounds and Conditions of this Union: reserving always to the Parliament, to whom the Resolution of these Commissioners are to be returned, the Consideration thereof, and the Allow-ing or Disallowing of the same, as they shall judge fit. And in confidence of your Majesty's most excellent Judgment, and great Affection in all things relating to the Happiness of your People, whereof this Kingdom hath already had such signal Proofs, we do freely and heartily offer to your Majesty the Nomination of the Persons to treat for this Kingdom, with the appointing of their Number, Quorum, Time, and Place of their Meeting: And upon signification of your Majesty's Pleasure therein, we shall give such Commissions and Orders for promoting of the Treaty, as (reserving the full Determination of all to the Parliament, as aforesaid) shall witness our cheerful Compliance with your Majesty's Desires.

" The Earl of Lauderdale, whom your Majesty, to the great Satisfaction of your People, and Interest of your Service, has been pleas'd to authorize as your Commissioner, hath in your Majesty's Name renewed to us the Assurances of your Majesty's Care and Respect, to the Good of this your antient Kingdom; for which we do humbly return unto your Majesty the Offer of our Lives and Fortunes for the Advancement of your Majesty's Honour and Greatness, and Maintenance of your Royal Authority and Government: And in every thing shall be proposed by him, we shall not only give Credit as to your Commissioner, but also such cheerful and ready Obedience, as may evidence to the World the Loyalty of our Hearts. And in Testimony hereof, these Presents are by Warrant, and in the Name of your Parliament, Signed by,

Most Sacred Sovereign,

Edinburgh,
Octob. 22.
1669.

Your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble Subject and Servant,

ROTHES, Cancell.

In presentia Dominorum PARLIAMENTI.

We present these Letters and Speech to the Reader, to shew what Inclinations and what Attempts have been for a Union between the two Kingdoms; and how the former Motions of that kind have been heavily carried on, and abruptly ended. During this Session of the Scots Parliament, they made An Act asserting his Majesty's Supremacy over all Persons and in all Causes Ecclesiastical, to a higher and more effectual degree than had ever been before legally declared. And they made another Act for the Benefit of Trade by the Naturalization of Strangers within the Kingdom of Scotland; providing, that all Strangers of the Protestant Religion, who should think fit to bring their Estates into the said Kingdom, or should come to set up new Works and Manufactures therein, should be received and treated as Native-born Subjects to all Intents and Purposes. The King farther declaring, that upon Application made to him by such Strangers, he would grant them the free and publick Use of their Religion in their own Language, and the Liberty of having Churches of their own. But in the mean time, as to the Union, nothing in Parliament was done, and very little mention'd of the matter. It is observable, that tho' the Design tended most to the Interest of Scotland, and the Wishes and Desires of it seem'd to come from thence; yet the Objections and Interruptions were chiefly from the same Quarter, and were owing to the Farther Proceedings of the Scots Parliam.

1669. the Jealousies of suffering as the weaker side, to the 21 Car. II. Love of Independance, and the Affectation of a separate Interest, and the Remembrance of being an antient Kingdom within itself: which Principles must needs indispose them to the Proposal or Reception of any effectual Terms of Union; though indeed under all these Disadvantages, they were in great measure united by Oliver Cromwel.

State of Religion. The Nonconformists had their open Meetings more full and frequent, and their Interest and Figure growing more considerable, by reason of the King's apparent Inclinations of Indulgence to them; and by the particular Countenance and Protection of some of the chief Ministers of State, who agreed in the Patronage of them, tho' on a different Principle; some out of Humanity and Moderation, but other-from a worse Motive of gaining the more Liberty to Papists, and weakning the Communion of the Estab-lish'd Church. Under these Advantages the Nonconformists assum'd a Liberty that became very offensive to those who were by Conscience in the Communion of the Establisht Church, and had a respect for the legal Constitution of the Kingdom.
 For by their own Account, " Mr. Baxter and other Teachers now openly boasted of the Act against Conventicles being no longer in Force; of their Meetings being not now contrary to Law; of no Act in being that could convict them of keeping Conventicles; of the Oxford Act only supposing Persons already convicted, but not enabling any to convict them; of the Oxford Oath no way concerning their Teachers, and that it ought not to be put upon them. And to make themselves a more formidable Body against the Church, the two chief Parties, the Presbyterians and Independents, were now projecting a Union with one another, as the Fact and Method are thus deliver'd in their own way. " At this time (1669) Mr. Baxter was projecting an Agreement with the Independents for the strengthening of the Common Interest: Dr.
Owen, in his Catechism, had made two considerable Concessions; viz. That the People have not the Power of the Keys; and, That they give not the Power of the Keys, or their Office Power to the Pastors.
 These Concessions he thought very improvable, and therefore he propos'd to him, that they two should see how far they could go towards an Accommodation, before the Matter was communicated to others. The Method he offer'd was this:
 That they should first fix the Essentials of Religion and Communion, which are the Terms that all Christians agree in; and then endeavour to find out the Means of bringing both Sides to consent to Communion upon those Terms. He thought the most likely Method would be, the drawing up a Writing containing all the Points of Discipline, great and small, which the two Parties were really agreed in, which would make the few things they differ'd in seem so small, as not to be sufficient to hinder Communion. He was for each of them to draw up a Draught, and then consider the Matter together: but the Dr. highly approving the Motion, desired him to undertake it. Whereupon he drew up a great many Theses, as the Matter of their common Concord. He complain'd they were too many, and might be abridg'd: Whereupon he quickly carried him another Draught, of so many of those things which both Presbyterians and Independents are agreed in, as are necessary to their practical Concord and Communion with respect to the things wherein they are or seem disagreed. The Dr.'s Objections were principally four: That the Particulars insisted on were too many for the first Attempt; that the Socinians would agree to make the Creed, as expounded in the first four Councils, the Test of Orthodoxy; that some Expressions suited to prevent future Divisions and Separations, would seem to reflect on former Actings; and, that the insisting on the Power of the Magistrate, especi-Nonconformists indulged.

Union propos'd between Presbyter and Independ.

ally as under Civil Coercion and Punishment, was not necessary in the first Attempt. 1669. 21 Car. II.

Under this Disposition of all the Dissenters jointly to oppose the Church of England, they found to despise, and indeed to defie the Laws against them.
 When Mr. Baxter was brought before the Justices of Peace, and told by them, that he was convict of keeping Conventicles contrary to the Law, and to tender'd him the Oxford Oath; he answer'd boldly, That he took not his Meeting to be contrary to Law and that the Oxford Oath did not concern him; nor could be apprehend they were empower'd by the Act to put it upon him. And when for his Offence and Contempr he was committed to Goal for six Months, many at Court mov'd for him; the Earl of Ormy, Earl of Almchester, Lord Arlington, and Duke of Buckingham, intimated to the King, that his Imprisonment was not for his Service: And Sir John Barber came to him in Prison, to let him know, that the King in Discourse had signified to him, That he was not willing to be seen to relax the Law, but that he would not be offend'd if he saw his Remedy at Law. And accordingly, his Hobbes Corpus was demanded at the Common Pleas, and given d: The Judges declar'd the Statutus invalid, and he was discharged; " having received in Prison 20 s. and 7 Pieces from Sir John Pennock, 10 s. from the Com-trols of Exeter, and 5 l. of Alderman Beard; " which defray'd his Law and Prison Charges.

The whole Party were indeed united in their pling upon the Laws and Constitution, but it justifi-ably rais'd not only the Indignation of the Church-Men, but the Jealousie of all who were honestly concern'd for the Government, and the legal Administration of it. And therefore the better to discover their Numbers and Places of publick Meeting, the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury sent his circular Letter, dated from Lambeth June 8. 1669. requiring the Bp. of London and his other Suffragans, to take a particular Account of them within their respective Dioceses. And the Return of this Enquiry made such a due Impression on the better part of the Ministry, that on Friday July 16. " Upon several Informations which had been given in to his Majesty from several Parts of the Kingdom, that those who separate themselves from the establish'd Worship, do meet in greater Numbers than formerly, to such a degree as may endanger the Publick Peace, by which his Majesty could nor but take notice how far his known and still avowed easiness to indulge tender Consciences was abused thereby; his Majesty was pleas'd, by the Advice of his Privy Council, to order his Proclamation to be issued out, strictly charging and commanding all his Justices of the Peace, within the Limits of their several Jurisdictions, where they shall find such Meetings to be held; that they put the Laws in execution for Suppression thereof, and particularly proceed against the Preachers, according to the Statute made in the 17th of his Majesty's Reign, intitl'd, An Act for restraining Nonconformists from inhabiting in Corporations. This Proceeding of the King in Council met with such a general Approbation from the Nobility and Gentry, that at the next Meeting of the Parliament, both Houses, in a solemn manner, on Novemb. 6. return'd his Majesty their Thanks for his Care of the Publick, in issuing out his Proclamation for suppressing Conventicles; and humbly desired his Majesty to continue the same Care for the future.

His Majesty was pleas'd this Year to confer two Royal signal Marks of Favour upon the two Episcopal Sees of Exeter and Sarum. For upon the Vacancy of the See of the Deanery of Saint Burien in Cornwall, the Dioc-es of Exeter and Sarum were by Royal Authority annex'd and united for ever to the Bishoprick of Exeter, for the better support of that See miserably impoverish'd at the Reformation. And in a Chapter of the most noble Order of the Garter held at Whitehall

Proclamation for suppressing Conventicles the See of Exeter and Sarum

1669. Whitchhall on Nov. 19. the Sovereign then declared, that the Reason of calling this Chapter was to consider of the Pretensions of Dr. Seth Ward Bishop of Salisbury, exhibited in a Petition concerning the Title and Claim of himself and his Successors unto the Office of Chancellour of the most Noble Order of the Garter (when the same should become void) the Bishop grounding the Equity of his Claim upon a Charter first granted by King Edward the Fourth, in the fifteenth Year of his Reign, unto Richard Beauchamp Bishop of Salisbury and his Successors for ever; which Charter hath been since confirm'd under the great Seal of England by other Kings and Queens, and particularly by King Charles the First of ever blessed Memory: Hereupon the Bishop being called in, and commanded to produce his Proofs to make good that his Pretension, accordingly the Bishop humbly offer'd an authentick Copy of the Original Charter of the said King Edward the Fourth, renewed and confirmed by the said King Charles the First, in the fourth Year of his Reign; the which being read and truly consider'd together with the Objections to the contrary, particularly that the Possession and Execution of the said Office of Chancellour, had been for above an hundred Years committed unto Lay-Men; notwithstanding which, the Sovereign and Companions being fully satisfied with the justness of the Claim of the said Bishop, grounded upon the aforesaid Charters, and likewise considering, that the returning of the said Office to the first Institution would be for the Honour and Dignity of the said most Noble Order; the Sovereign thereupon with the unanimous consent of the most Noble Companions then present, did Declare and Ordain, that the Bishop of Warum, and his Successors for ever, shall have and execute the Office of Chancellour of the said most Noble Order, and receive and enjoy all Rights, Privileges and Advantages thereunto belonging, immediately upon the first vacancy of the said Office.

Dr. Peter Gunning made Exp. of Chichester. March 6. The Ceremony of Consecration of the Right Reverend and Learned Dr. Peter Gunning Bishop of Chichester, was performed in the Chapel of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, with the usual Solemnities, in presence of both the Archbishops, most of the Bishops now in Town, and many Persons of Honour and Quality.

The Parliament having prepar'd their Bills and dispatch'd all other Business, on Monday April. 11. in the Afternoon, his Majesty was pleas'd to be present in the House of Peers, where the two Houses being met, the King gave his Royal Assent to these publick Acts.

1. An Act for granting his Majesty an Imposition upon all Wines and Vinegar imported, between June 24. 1670. and June 24. 1678.

2. An Act for taking away the Benefit of Clergy from such as steal Cloth from the Racks, and from such as shall steal or embezel his Majesty's Ammunition and Stores.

3. An Act for Improvement of Tillage, and the Breed of Cattle.

4. An Act for ascertaining the Measures of Corn and Salt.

5. An Act for the Repairing the Haven and Peers of Great Yarmouth.

6. An Additional Act for the better Repairing of Highways and Bridges.

7. An Act for advancing the Sale of Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents.

8. An Act to suppress and prevent Seditious Conventions.

9. An Act for settling the Imposition on Brandy.

10. An Act for Authorizing several Commissioners of the Realm of England, to treat with Commissioners of Scotland for the Peace of both Kingdoms.

11. An Additional Act for Rebuilding of the City of London, Uniting of Parishes, and Rebuilding of the Cathedral and Parochial Churches within the said City. 1666. 21 Car. II.

12. An Act to enable the King's Majesty to make Leases, Grants and Copies of Offices, Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, Parcel of his Highnesses Duchy of Cornwall, or annex'd to the same.

13. An Act for Sale of part of the Estate of Sir John Pettiman, for satisfaction of a Debt due to the King's Majesty.

After the passing these and 25 other private Acts, his Majesty signified his Pleasure, that the two Houses should Adjourn till October 24. next; which was accordingly done.

The Act of treating for a Union between the two Kingdoms, was by concert follow'd in Scotland, with an Act of that Parliament for appointing their Commissioners to meet and act in pursuance of that great Affair: But after many Conferences and seeming Resolutions of Agreement in the main things, they broke off in mutual Jealousies and a general Dissatisfaction. I have heard one of the Scots Commissioners themselves confess'd it was their own Fault in being over-wise and nice in the smaller terms of Accommodation.

The Dutchess of Orleans the King's Sister was preparing for a Voyage to England, in appearance for a Visit of Love and Respect to her Brothers, in design for a Message from the French Court, to break the Triple League, and to draw in the King of England to assist France against the Dutch. His Majesty in a kind expectation of her sent the Advice the Guernsey, and several Yatches to receive her Royal Highness at Dunkirk, and hasten'd himself to Dover on Sunday May 15. accompanied by the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, the Duke of Monmouth and many other Persons of Honour and Quality. The Dutchess landed the next Morning and was received and entertain'd by his Majesty with all possible Expressions of Kindness. She was attended by the Mareschal De Plessis Praslin, and his Brother the Bishop of Tourney, Madam De Plessis the Mareschal's Son's Lady, the Countess of Grammont, and a beautiful Servant Madam Carmel, whom she left behind her, an Object of the King's Affection and the Nations Hatred, the enamouring and intriguing Dutchess of Portsmouth.

The French King seem'd impatient in the Expectance of his Sisters Return, as if she were to bring him News of very great Importance; and therefore he came to Dunkirk and stay'd there some Days for her Arrival: The King of England sending over my Lord Buckhurst, and his Royal Highness Mr. Timme to complement his most Christian Majesty in that Port, which ought rather to have been still in English hands. She embark'd from Dover on Thursday June 2. and landed at Calais the same Evening. But her stay in England having been longer than Monsieur her Husband allow'd or expected, it rais'd a Jealousie, or at least a Discontent in him; and it was plainly owing to his unkind Reception of her, that in her perfection of Strength and Health and Age, she was hurried out of the World within few Days after her Return. Our Court in great Amazement durst not betray a suspicion of her indirect way of dying, but gave this soft Account of it, June 22. This Day arriv'd an Express from Mr. Montague his Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, with the sad News of the Death of Madam his Majesty's only Sister, to the infinite Grief and Affliction of their Majesty's and Royal Highnesses, as well for the greatness of this Loss as for the astonishing suddenness of it. She died at St. Clou about four of the Clock on Monday Morning of a sudden and violent Dislemper, which had seiz'd her at five of the Clock the Evening before, and was by the Physicians taken for a kind of Bilious Cholick.

His Majesty receiv'd this Year a more happy Visit from his Nephew the Prince of Orange, who had lately at eighteen Years of Age been chosen First Noble of Zealand, and began now to shew himself very forward, Union of the Kingdoms a Project ineffectual.

Her sudden Death

Prince of Orange visits the King

1670. forward, and to deserve the Character of being a most 22 Ca. II. extreme hopeful Prince: And to speak more plainly (in Sir William Temple's own Words) something much better than he expected, a young Man of more Parts than ordinary, and of the better sort, that is, not lying in that kind of Wit which was neither of Use to ones self nor any body else, but in good plain Sense, which shows Application if he had Business that deserved it, and with extreme good and agreeable Humour and Dispositions, and thus far of his way without any Vice; besides, being sleepy always by ten a Clock at Night, and loving Hunting as much as he hated Swearing, and preferring Cock-alle before any Wine.

About the beginning of June he had been introduced into the Council of State, and that with all the pleasing Circumstances of being ineffectually opposed, and of prevailing by the Affections of the People. At this Juncture he resolv'd upon a Journey into England, but before he set out, he was very earnest with the English Ambassador to have his Opinion, whether he was likely to procure any Satisfaction in his Pretensions there; saying, that all his best Friends in Holland were of Opinion, that in case that should wholly fail him, his Journey would prove of great prejudice to his Affairs at home, by letting his Friends see how little he was considered by his Majesty, whose Countenance would be a great support to him in the course of his Fortunes. These Pretensions of his were supposed to be some Money owing from England upon the account of his Mother's Fortune; for the Ambassador's Answer to him on this Subject was, That he was wholly ignorant of all his Majesty's Affairs, besides what related to that Country, and particularly of the present State of his Revenue, or how much the late Supplies had contributed towards the ease of it. Upon which the Prince seem'd very desirous that the Am-bassadour (Sir William Temple) should touch on it to one of the chief Ministers in England, so as to have his Thoughts upon it before he went. This Motion was supposed to have proceeded chiefly from the Princess Dowager, who declared her Opinion positively some Weeks before to the Ambassador upon that matter to the same purpose, and for some time persisted in it. This private Affair might be one Motive and the more profest Reason of his Journey to England; but no doubt he had some more publick Thoughts and Cares upon him, relating to his own Honour and Hereditary Claims, and the Interest of his Country, and the common Good of Europe, which were all now upon a very Critical Turn.

Recep-
 21. But whatever were the main Hopes and Designs of his Journey, it was discourag'd and protracted from time to time: yet with a Spirit not easily diverted from any Resolution, he embark'd at the Brill on October 27. upon one of his Majesty's Yatches that waited there for him, and arriv'd at Margate on October 29. He immediately took post for Canterbury, and lay that Night at Rochester, and went forward next Morning to Gravesend, where he was attended by Sir Charles Cottrel Master of the Ceremonies, with his Majesty's Barges, and so conducted to Whitehall, where landing, he was received at the Stairs foot by the Lord Chamberlain, and conducted to the Presence of both their Majesty's, who received him with all possible demonstrations of Affection and Joy, as did likewise their Royal Highnesses, to whom he was in like manner conducted, and thence to the Apartment prepared for him at the Cockpit. On Nov. 10. the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs and Aldermen of London came and Complemented his Highness upon his arrival in England, as foreboding his being the future Restorer and Preserver of their Rights and Liberties. On Nov. 26. being at Newmarket he visited Cambridge, where he was honou-rably received by the whole Body of the University, entertain'd in Congregation with Speeches, and treated at Dinner by Dr. Fleetwood Provost of King's-College. On December 6. he was treated with extraordinary Magnificence by the Lord Mayor and City at Draper's-Hall. December 18. he went to Windsor, 1670.

 and from thence next Day to Oxford, where he was 22 Ca. II. received at the East-Gate by the Mayor and Aldermen, and at St. Maries was attended by the Vice-Chancellour and the whole Body of the University, and at the great Gate of Christ-Church was received and complemented by the Dean, Canons and whole Society, and by them conducted to his Apartment in that College, where his Highness and his Train were nobly treated by the Dean the generous Dr.
 Fell. The next Morning his Highness went to view the several Colleges, and found the Heads with their respective Societies standing at the Gates in a readiness to receive him. After Noon he visited the Schools, the Library and Theatre, in which last place a Convocation was held, where his Highness was Complemented in a Speech by the Oratour Dr.
 South, and did the University the Honour of accepting a Degree (as did several other Honourable Persons of his Train) and of an Invitation from the Vice-Chancellour to his College of St. John's, where he was entertain'd with an excellent and liberal Dinner. On Monday February 15. the Prince parted from Whitehall early, in order to his Return for Holland, infinitely sensible of the great Tenderness and Affection express'd to him by their Majesty's during the time he had been in England, and not less satisfied with the universal Esteem and Respects of the Court and People here. His Highness din'd at Rochester, and thence having view'd the Ships that lie in the River, he embark'd about five in the Evening on board his Majesty's Yatch at Sheerness, being accompanied by the Earl of Ossery, whom his Majesty had particularly appointed to attend his Highness in his Passage over. He came to the Hague privately on Saturday Evening, in an ordinary Stage-Coach, attended by one or two Servants, to avoid all publick Ceremony; all which could not hinder the People, who had known of his Arrival, from flocking to see him pass, and were not wanting to express by loud Acclamations their Joy for his Highness's safe Return.

The King by his Sister's Importunity and other Sollicitations was now unhappily disposed to a nearer Alliance and Correspondence with the French King, who had seconded the Motions supposed to be whi-per'd from the Dutchess of Orleans, by his Ambassador in Ordinary Monsieur Colbert, and by another express Agent the Marquis De Bellfonds; and to soften things, had descended from his former stiffness, and had deliver'd up to Sir Charles Hecker the English Portion of St. Christophers, yet destroy'd all the Plantations, and carried away all that was portable, and left the Country in a worse Condition than if it had never been inhabited. By this Intrigue of new Friendship, the French King was enabled to keep the Emperour and the Duke of Lorraine from entering (as before inclin'd) into the Triple League; and to engage the Archbishop of Coloigne and the Bishop of Munster (two Princes of the Empire) against the Dutch; and to prepare a Fleet more formidable than the Kingdom of France had ever before pretended to shew: wherein he was assisted by English Shipwrights and English Timber, to the Reproach of our Court, and the great damage of our Dominion and Trade at Sea.

1670. received by the King at Hampton-Court with all possible Demonstrations of Joy and Affection. He had an Apartment fitted up for him in the Privy Gallery at Whitehall; he had his Gentlemen and Pages to attend him, with other Equipage, Train, and Pension, suitable to his Birth and Royal Relation. The same Year he was created Duke of Orkney in Scotland, and the 25th of Febr. Duke of Monmouth. He then took his Seat in the House of Peers, and in April 1663. he was install'd Knight of the Garter, with the usual Solemnities, at Windſor. In 1665. he was entred a Member of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, having been before incorporated a Master of Arts in both Universities: In this same Year he was made Master of the Horse, and soon after Married Anne Daughter and Heir to Francis Earl of Buccleugh in Scotland, generally esteem'd the greatest Fortune and the finest Woman in the three Kingdoms. His Majesty gave him several other Places of Honour and Profit, as General of his Land-Forces, Captain of his Life-guards of Horse, Lord Lieutenant of the East-Riding of Yorkſhire, Governour of the Town and Citadel of Kingſton upon Hull, Chief Justice in Eyre on the South-side of Trent, and in Right of his Lady, Duke of Buccleugh, and Lord Great Chamberlain of Scotland: And, what was above all other Titles, he grew every Day more and more a Favourite of the King and of the People.

John Lord Berkley was appointed by the King to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; and arriving at Dublin on April 21. entred that Day upon the Possession of his Government, the Lord Roberts delivering up the Sword to him, with a short Speech, in Council. On Tuesday Apr. 26. the University of Dublin attended his Excellency, introduced by the Lord Primate, where Dr Ward made him an excellent Oration in Latin; to which his Excellency made his Return in English, letting them know the Kindness he had for Learning and Learned Men; concluding with this Counsel to them, that they would apply their Minds and Studies to the most useful Parts of Learning, such as did most conduce to the Benefit of Mankind, to which he promised them all due Encouragement.

The Earl of Effex was sent Ambaſſadour from his Majesty of Great Britain to the King of Denmark, and made his solemn Entry into Copenhagen May 14. Henry Earl of Ogle, the only Son of his Grace the Duke of Newcaſtle, was sworn a Privy Counsellor on June 15. The Duke of Buckingham was sent with private Instructions to the Fr. King, and had Audience from him at St. Germain's in the Beginning of August, where his Majesty entertain'd him with a Review of his Army drawn out of the Camp at St. Schyſſien, with which he presently after took Possession of Lorraine. Sir William Temple return'd from his Embassy in Holland, and was graciously received by his Majesty on Sept. 20.

His Majesty, by entering into new Counsels and a stricter Correspondence with the French King, became the more jealous of the Discontents of his own People: And it was on this account, that on June 10. his Majesty order'd a Proclamation to be issued out, commanding all Officers and Soldiers serving in any of the Armies of the late Usurped Powers, not having a constant Habitation, to depart out of the Cities of London and Westminster, on or before the 16th of June, and not to return again, or come within 20 Miles, till after the 10th Day of December next, and in the mean time to carry no Sword, Pistol, or other Arms.

Monday Octob. 24. the two Houses of Parliament, according to their Adjournment, re-assembled at Westminster, where his Majesty made a short gracious Speech to the two Houses, leaving the Lord Keeper to open to them more at large the Particulars, which were, "The great Care his Majesty had taken of them and of the Kingdom; "The List Reces's, and that besides the Triumphant he had made many advantageous Alliances for Security and Profit of Trade, with the Swede, 1670. Dane, Spaniard, and Duke of Savoy: But since 22 Ca. II. the Dutch and French made such vast Naval Preparations, it was necessary, for the Safety and Honour of the Nation, that the King should at least keep equal pace with them, which could not be done without great Supplies, which must be speedily granted; for the King intended to put an End to this Session before Chriſtmas. This done, the Commons, with their Speaker, returned to their House, and the same Morning Adjourned, as did also the House of Lords, till Thursday. And notwithstanding his Majesty's declar'd Intention, they continued to sit till Monday March 6. when his Majesty gave his Royal Assent to several Bills presented to him; among which, the publick ones were these that follow: 1. "An Act for regulating the Making of Kidderminster Stuffs. 2. An Act to prevent the malicious Burning of Houses, Stacks of Corn, and Hay, and killing and maiming of Cattel. 3. An Act to prevent malicious Maiming and Wounding. 4. An Act for re-vesting the Power of granting Wine-Licenses in his Majesty's Heirs and Successors, and for settling a Revenue on his Royal Highness in lieu thereof. 5. An Act for granting a Subsidy to his Majesty for Supply of his extraordinary Occasions. 6. An Act for Continuance of a former Act, entitled, An Act to prevent Delays in extending Statutes, Judgments, and Recognizances. 7. An Act for Continuance of a former Act, to prevent Arrests of Judgments, and superceding Executions. 8. An Act for an Additional Excise on Beer, Ale, and other Liquors.

In the same Month of December this Year, there were two barbarous Assaults made; one upon the Duke of Ormond, and the other upon Sir John Coventry; which gave express Occasion to the above-mentioned Act for preventing malicious Maiming and Wounding, and therefore commonly called Coventry's Act. The Relations of these Facts were thus given by Authority: "On Tuesday the 6th of this instant December, between the Hours of Six and Seven in the Evening, a barbarous and inhumane Attempt was made upon the Person and Life of his Grace James Duke of Ormond, who was set upon in the Streets, as he was going in his Coach, between St. James's and Clarendon-House, by six Persons armed and mounted on Horses, who forced him out of his Coach, and then caused him to be set on Horse-back behind one of their Company, with intent to have carried him to some obscure Place out of Town, where they might with more Privacy have executed their villainous and bloody Conspiracy, until at last, the said Duke endeavouring to rescue himself, by disarming and dismounting him that rode before him, was very much wounded in that Conflict, and lies languishing under those Wounds at his Lodgings in Clarendon-House. His Majesty set forth a Proclamation, promising a Reward of one thousand Pounds to any Person who should discover any one of those six Persons, or any of their Aiders or Abettors. It seems the Persons with great Probability suspected, were Richard Hallowell alias Holloway, a Tobacco-Cutter in Frying-pan Alley in Petticoat-Lane without Bishopsgate; Thomas Allen, alias Ally, alias Ayliffe, a pretended Chirurgeon or Doctor of Physick lodging near Aldgate; Thomas Hunt, and one Hurst: but the chief of them, a Leader of the rest of the Crew, was Blood, a notorious Traitor, out-law'd in Ireland, who with his own Hand pull'd his Grace out of the Coach, and with the help of Ralph Alexander mounted him behind his eldest Son, Blood himself following with a Blunderbuss to keep off the People; but his Grace's Porter seeing what had happen'd, ran after his Master, and help'd to disengage him, and after great Opposition to carry him safe to his own House. Blood's Pretence was, that he intended no ill to his Grace's Person, but only to keep him in

 On Decemb. 21. a violent and inhumane Attempt was made upon the Person of Sir John Coventry, Knight of the Honourable Order of the Bath, being a Member of the Commons House of Parliament, and then attending the Parliament, and upon the Person of his Servant William Wylkes, by a considerable number of armed Men, both on Foot and Horseback, whereby the said Sir John Coventry and his Servant then lost several Goods, and the said Sir John Coventry received divers Wounds, some of which were given him in such barbarous manner, that some of the Offenders held him whilst others wounded him. The Fact, by Bills of Indictment, was found to be committed by Sir Thomas Sandys Knight, Charles Orbian Esq; Simon Parry and Miles Reeves, who were fled from Justice, not daring to abide a legal Trial.

State of Religion.
 Act to suppress Conventicles.

Dissenters much grieved at this Act.

Their Complaints of it.

The Act now made to prevent and suppress seditious Conventicles, was (as the Preamble set forth) for Providing farther and more speedy Remedies against the growing and dangerous Practices of seditious Sectaries and other disloyal Persons, who under pretence of tender Consciences, have or may at their Meetings contrive Insurrections, as late Experience hath shewn. And therefore it is Ordained, That if any Person of sixteen Years or upwards shall be present at any Assembly, Conventicle, or Meeting, under colour or pretence of any Exercise of Religion, in other manner than according to the Liturgy and Practice of the Church of England, where five Persons or more shall be assembled besides the Family, and be thereof convicted by Confession of the Party, or the Oath of two Witnesses, shall pay five Shillings for the first Offence, and ten Shillings for the second: And every Person taking upon him to Teach or Preach in such Meeting, shall forfeit for the first Offence twenty Pounds, and for the second Offence forty Pounds; and if the Preacher cannot be found, or be unable to pay, then the Penalty to be levied by Warrant upon the Goods and Chattels of any who were present. And every Person wittingly and willingly suffering any Conventicle in his or her House, to forfeit the Sum of twenty Pounds. For the better Execution of the Act, Justices and Constables were impower'd to break open Doors upon Refusal of Admission: And Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, and commission'd Officers of the Militia, were, on Certificate made by any Justice, to disperse the said Conventicles. The Act, and all Clauses in it, to be construed most largely and beneficially for the suppressing of Conventicles, and for the Justification and Encouragement of all Persons to be employ'd in the Execution thereof. There was a concluding Clause to provide, That neither this Act, nor any thing therein contained, should extend to invalidate or void his Majesty's Supremacy in Ecclesiastical Affairs.
 This new Act was thought by the Dissenters a mighty Grievance; and it seem'd the greater to them, because they depended on the King's Disposition or Indulgence, and a Court Interest that was running into a general Toleration of Papists, and, for the sake of Them, of all Protestant Dissenters. They complain therefore of the New Hardships put upon the poor Nonconformists, and give their own History of this Year in these Words: "The Act against Conventicles was renew'd, and made more severe than ever: Several new Clauses were put in; as, that the Fault of the Mittimus should not disable it; that all doubtful Clauses in the Act should be interpreted as 1670. would most favour the Suppression of Conventicles; and that they that fled, or remov'd their Dwelling into another Country, should be pursued by Execution, &c. 22 Ca. II.

 Dr. Manton, tho' he had great Friends and mighty Promises of Favour, was sent Prisoner to the Gatehouse for Preaching the Gospel in his own House in the Parish where he had formerly been Minister, and for not taking the Oxford Oath, and yet coming within five Miles of a Corporation: and he continued there six Months; and all that time the Meetings in London were disturb'd by Bands of Soldiers, to the Terror of many and the Death of some. About this time my Lord Lauderdale going into Scotland, signify'd to Mr. Baxter a Purpose there was of taking off the Oath of Canonical Obedience, and all Impositions of Conformity there, save only that it should be necessary to sit in Presbyteries and Synods with the Bishops and Moderators; and told him, he had the King's Consent to offer him what Place in Scotland he would choose, either a Church, or a College in the University, or a Bishoprick. From accepting which Motion he excus'd himself, from his Weakness and Indisposition, and the Circumstances of his Family. After that the Earl of Lauderdale was in Scotland, Sir Robert Murray, a great Confident of his, sent Mr. Baxter the Frame of a Body of Church-Discipline for Scotland, and desir'd his Animadversions. The Scheme was handsomely contriv'd, and favour'd of much Moderation; but the Power of Synods was contrived to be in the King: Mr. Baxter made his Remarks as he was desired.

We shall do them this Justice all along, to give their own Story in their own Words. But tho' the Wisdom of the Nation had very good Reasons to make a more effectual Law against Conventicles, yet 'tis certain the Dissenters had no great Reason to complain of the rigorous execution of it: It was a needful Restraint and Awe, rather than an actual Storm upon them. Nor did all the Sufferers of that Party seem to suffer for Conscience-sake, if we believe this Relation given by Authority. Winchester, Novemb. 1. Two Persons, a Man and his Wife, both Nonconformists, and great Pretenders to Godliness, being upon some Misdemeanours committed to the House of Correction in this City, the Woman was several times observed to encourage her Husband to do what (she said) the Lord had put into his Heart, and not to be faint-hearted, of which the Keeper suspected not her Meaning, till entering the Room to give them Correction, of which he pardoned the Man upon his Submission, and gave but four Stripes to the Woman, tho' by her Hastiness and ill Behaviour she had much provok'd him; he was, as he was going out of the Room, suddenly stabb'd by the Man into the left Breast with a Knife: which Wound, 'tis feared, may prove mortal. The Prisoners are so little sensible of the Heinousness of the Fact, that they have expressed themselves to be sorry that they had not dispatch'd the Keeper and his Wife together; and seem to fear the Knife has not done what they desired.

That the People by suppressing of Conventicles might not be deprived of equal Opportunities to worship God in a solemn and lawful manner; it was order'd by the King and Council, that all such Places of Meeting within the Cities of London and Westminster should be turned into stated Tabernacles and be regularly supplied by the Church-Divines: And therefore on June 15. publick Notice was given, "That the Places under-named, of late made use of for Conventicles and unlawful Assemblies, are now by his Majesty's particular Command in Council appoin'd to be used every Lord's-day for celebrating Divine Worship and Preaching the Word of God, by approved Orthodox Ministers, thereto to be appointed by the Right Reverend Father in God the Lord Bishop of London, to be-

Dangers of Popery. The Lords and Commons in Parliament gave a sufficient Proof that their Care in suppressing Conventicles was a necessary Means to discourage Popery, and to prevent the Hopes and Designs of that growing Faction: And therefore the two Houses join'd in a humble Address to the King, representing their Fears and Apprehensions of the growth of the Popish Religion, and their Desires to have the Laws impartially executed on all Popish Reculants, and especially on the Priests and Jesuits. Upon which his Majesty could not forbear to issue out his Royal Proclamation of the 23d of March, declaring, " That whereas the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, have by their humble Petition represented to his Majesty their Fears and Apprehensions of the Growth and Encrease of the Popish Religion in these his Majesty's Dominions, together with the Causes thereof, and also such Remedies as they conceive may be proper to prevent such growing Mischiefs. Which Petition of theirs his Majesty having seriously consider'd, and with much Contentment and Satisfaction, accepting and approving the great Care of the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, for the Preservation of the true Religion establish'd in this Kingdom; to which his Majesty declares, as he hath always adhered against all Temptations whatsoever, so he will still employ his utmost Care and Zeal in the Maintenance and Defence of it. And therefore strictly charges and commands all Jesuits and Romish Priests, that before the first of May they depart out of England upon pain of having the Penalties of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm inflict'd upon them. And for the better discovery of all others who are Popish Reculants, or justly suspected to be so, his Majesty commands, that all the Judges, Barons of the Exchequer, Justices of Peace, &c. do not only observe his Majesty's Will and Pleasure therein before express'd, but also forthwith put all other the Laws in due Execution against all Popish Reculants, and such as are suspected to be so, in order to their speedy Conviction, and due Process upon such Convictions. And because there may be some Priests imprison'd in this Realm, yet unknown to his Majesty, all Sheriffs, Bayliffs and Keepers of Prisons are within twenty Days after publication of this Proclamation to advertise some of the Lords of the Privy Council of their Names, and by whom and for what Cause they were committed, to the end Order may be given for their Transportation. 1670. 22 Ca. II.

On June 19. Dr. Creighton Bishop of Bath and Wells was solemnly Consecrated at Lambeth with the usual Ceremonies, at which assisted the Bishop of London in the place of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury not then fully recover'd from his late Distemper, with the Bishops of Winchester and Ely, where the Sermon was preach'd on that occasion by Dr. Hill Chaplain to his Grace the Duke of Ormond; after which, the Bishops, several of the Nobility and many Persons of Quality were entertained at a plentiful Dinner.

On Sunday March 12. the new Church in Shadwel, formerly in the Parish of Stepney, and now made Parochial by Act of Parliament, and plentifully Endowed by the Dean of St. Pauls and — Neal, Esq; was with the usual Solemnity Consecrated by the Right Reverend Father in God John Lord Bishop of Rochester, commissioned thereunto by Humphrey Lord Bishop of London, as being in his Diocese. Most of the Gentry of those Quarters assisting at the Ceremony, which being ended, the said Bishop of Rochester made an excellent and most learned Sermon upon that Occasion, to the great Satisfaction and Applause of all that were present.

This Year begins in Mourning for the Death of Anne Dutchess of York, the eldest Daughter of Edward Earl of Clarendon late Lord Chancellor of England: After a growing Corpulency that cast her into a long Indisposition of Health, she died in the 34th Year of her Age at the Palace of St. James on Friday March 31. between two and three in the Afternoon, and on Wednesday April 5. was interr'd a large Vault on the South side of King Henry VII.'s Chapel; her Body being accompanied from the Painted Chamber in the Palace at Westminster (whither it was privately brought from St. James's) by his Highness Prince Rupert, who appear'd as Chief Mourner, and by most of the Nobility, who follow'd in Order; the Kings and Officers of Arms giving their Attendance; their Majesty's and Royal Highnesses Servants, and several Gentlemen and Persons of Quality preceding the Corps to the Place of Interment, with the Solemnities usually practis'd on the like Solemnities. She left Issue by James Duke of York one Son Edgar Duke of Cambridge, who after a long Weakness from his very Birth, died at Richmond on Thursday June 8. and two incomparable Daughters, the Princess Mary and the Princess Anne, both preserv'd for a most singular successive Blessing to this Church and Nation, and one other younger Daughter Catherine, who at about ten Months old died at Whitehall on Wednesday December 6. within this same Year.

The two Houses on their last Day of Sitting April 22. waited in a Body upon his Majesty in the Banqueting-House at Whitehal, with their humble Address, " That his Majesty would be graciously pleas'd by his own Example to encourage the constant wearing of the Manufactures of his own Kingdom and Dominions, and discountenance the Wear of any Manufactures made in Foreign Countries. His Majesty very graciously accepted their humble Motion, and was pleas'd to declare, that he would comply with their Desires; that he had in his own Person as little us'd them as any, and for the future would discountenance those that should. In the Afternoon of the same Day, his Majesty with the usual Solemnities being present in the House of Peers, and the House of Commons with their Speaker there attending, was pleas'd to give his Royal Assent to several Bills then presented to him, fourteen private Acts and eighteen publick, of which last were, 1. An Act to prevent the delivery up of Merchants Ships, and for the Encrease of good and serviceable Shipping. 2. An Act for exporting of Beer, Ale and Munn. 3. An Act for laying Inpositi-

May 9. a bold and incredible Attempt was made to steal the Crown out of the Tower of London in this manner: About seven in the Morning four Men came to Mr. Edwards Keeper of the Jewel House in the Tower, and desired to see the Regal Crown remaining in his Custody; he carried them into the Room where it was kept, and shewed it to them as to innocent and undesigning Strangers; but they to carry on their villainous Intention, clap'd a Gag of a strange Form into the old Man's Mouth, who making what Noise and Resistance he could, they stabb'd him a deep wound in the Belly with a Still-letto, adding several other dangerous Wounds in the Head with a small Beetle, which they had brought for the purpose of beating together and flattening the Crown, to make it the more easily Portable; which having together with the Ball put into Bags provided by them for that use, they fairly walk'd out, leaving the old Man groveling on the Ground gagged and pinioned. Thus they passed by all the Sentinels, till, in the mean time, the Son-in-Law of Mr. Edwards casually passing by, and hearing the Door shut and some bustle, went in to look what the matter might be, where he found his old Father in the miserable Condition they had left him; whereupon running out in all haste, and crying to stop the Authors of that horrid Villainy, the Persons began to mend their Pace, and to make a speedier Escape, which the last Sentinel perceiving bid them stand; but instead of standing to give an Account of themselves, one of them fired a Pistol at the Sentinel, and he his Musket at them; which gave the Alarm so, as with the pursuit of Mr. Edwards's Son-in-Law, two of the Malefactors were immediately seized; but two more with another that held their Horses without the Tower-Gate escaped: With the two that were taken were found the Crown and Ball, only some few Stones missing, which had been loosen'd with the beating of the Crown together with the Mallet. Those two were immediately carried to Whitehall, and one of them proved to be Bloud apparell'd in the Habit of a Clergyman to cover all suspicion, a notorious Traitor and Incentiary, who had been out-law'd for the Rebellion in Ireland eight Years ago; the other was one Parrot a Dyer in Thames-street. Within two Hours after a third was apprehended, as he was escaping on Horseback, and he proved to be Thomas Hunt, mention'd in his Majesty's Proclamation for the discovering of the Persons who had lately committed that horrid Attempt upon his Grace the Duke of Ormond, but by whatever Name he went he was indeed Son of the said Bloud, who with great impudency confess'd, that they two were with seven others in that Action. They were all three sent close Prisoners to the Tower.

On Sunday May 28. being the Eve of the Celebration of St. George's Feast, appointed to be kept this Year on the Anniversary of his Majesty's Birth and ever happy Restoration, the King as Sovereign of the Order of the Garter accompanied by the Duke of York, Prince Rupert and several other Companions, all in their Habits proceeded in the Afternoon to the Chapel of St. George in Windsor with great Solemnity, where before the Divine Service began, the Earl of Carlisle introduc'd between his Royal Highness and Prince Rupert, was Installed as Proxy of the King of Sweden; and the Earl of Winchelsea between the Dukes of Ormond and Buckingham as Proxy for the Elector of Saxony, both which Princes had been invested with the full Habit of the Order in the Year 1669. and after them the Duke of Albemarle, introduc'd between the Earls of Sandwich and Oxford was likewise invested and set in his Stall. The next Day the Feast was celebrated with extraordinary Splendor and Magnificence; and the Day following the Sovereign proceeding to the Chapel, after he had taken his Stall, the Companions before they attended to theirs, offer'd in Order the Achievements of Arms, viz. the Banners, Swords and Crests of seven deceased Knights, being William Earl of Salisbury, Thomas Earl of Berks, Algernon Earl of Northumberland, Thomas Earl of Southampton, George Duke of Albemarle, Mountague Earl of Lindsey, and Edward Earl of Manchester.

This Edward Earl of Manchester Lord Chamberlain of his Majesty's Household, and Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, died at Whitehall on Friday May 5. about twelve a Clock at Night, in the 69th Year of his Age, much to the Regret of his Majesty and the Grief of the whole Court. His Majesty was pleas'd to make choice of the Right Honourable Henry Earl of St. Albans, to succeed in the Office of Lord Chamberlain, and was pleas'd to deliver him the Staff on May 13. and immediately his Lordship enter'd upon the execution of that Honourable Charge; and the Dignity of Chancellor of the University of Cambridge was soon after by Election conferr'd upon his Grace the Duke of Buckingham. This indeed was a Year of reigning Mortality among the Great Men: On Tuesday May 9. died at his House in Town Sir John Keyling Knight, Lord Chief Justice of his Majesty's Court of King's Bench, after a long weakness and decay of Strength, much regreted for his great Integrity and Worth: And his Majesty was pleas'd to confer that important Place upon the Lord Chief Baron Hales, who after having taken the usual Oaths before the Right Honourable the Lord Keeper, took his Seat on that Bench Thursday May 18. leaving his Seat in the Exchequer to be filled with his Majesty's choice of Sir Edward Turner, Knight, Solicitor General, who on Tuesday May 23. in obedience to his Majesty's Writ, commanding him to take his Degree of Serjeant at Law, he appeared at the Chancery Bar, and according to custom took the usual Oath before the Right Honourable the Lord Keeper, and then perform'd the due Ceremonies before the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, after which he was called by the Lord Keeper to the Exchequer Bar, and being there sworn Lord Chief Baron of that Court, he took his 1671. Place on the Bench; while his Majesty was pleas'd 23 Cal II to make choice of Francis North, Esq; Son to the Lord North, to succeed in the Trust of Solicitor General, who having receiv'd the Honour of Knighthood was sworn into the Place on Tuesday May 23.

His Grace William Duke of Somerset died Dec. 26. in the twentieth Year of his Age, after five Days illness of the Small Pox, to the great Affliction of that Noble Family, leaving his Uncle the Lord John Seymour Heir of his Honour and Estate. Sir Thomas Ingram Chancellor of the County Palatine and Dutchy of Lincolneshire died soon after Christmas at his House in Thistleworth; and his Majesty deliver'd the Seals of that Office on Febr. 14. to Sir Robert Carr, Knight and Baronet, as a gracious Mark of the Esteem his Majesty had for his Worth and Loyalty; and he was the same Day admitted of the Privy Council, and took his Place at the Board. On Thursday Febr. 22. the Right Honourable Thomas Lord Leigh died at his House at Stonleigh in Warwickshire in the 77th Year of his Age, leaving Heir to his Estate and Honour his Grandchild Thomas Son to his eldest Son Sir Thomas Leigh deceased.

French Intrigues.

All Counsellors, Ladies and Relations drew away the King to promote the Grandeur of France and the Advance of Popery; and to incite the Court to these foul Measures, great Sums of Money were sent over from the French King to buy in the English Ministry and their Master himself. The Plot of France was no less than to dissolve the Triple Alliance, to make a new War between England and Holland, to procure Liberty and Relaxation of Laws to the Roman Catholicks, and (to prevent interruption in these Designs) to keep the Parliament from sitting.
And all these things were fatally accomplish'd.

Ambassies abroad.

To break the Triple Alliance Henry Coventry, Esq; was sent Ambassadour Extraordinary from his Majesty to the King of Sweden, and embark'd at Greenwich in one of his Majesty's Yachts in the beginning of September, and did his Business so effectually, that at our first declaring War against the Dutch, the Swedish King stood Neuter, and soon after join'd with us and the French King against them. And there seems to be truth in what a late Writer observes, This Success Mr. Coventry had, that for this Business, which put all Christendom into a Flame, he was by the King made Principal Secretary of State, and it may be presented with his fine Rangers place in Enfield-Chale too; and that perhaps with twice more by the French King: Whereas Sir William Temple who was the principal Instrument in the Peace at Nimeguen, lost two thousand two hundred Pounds by it, and his only Recompence was to be Secretary of State in Mr. Coventry's Place, if Sir William would give him 10000l. for it. Other Ambassies were order'd to expedite the great Design, or to cover over the Intentions of it,

Roger Coke
Esq;

Sir Robert Southwell went Envoy Extraordinary to the Count de Monterey Governour for his Catholick Majesty of the Spanish Netherlands, and began his Journey to Brussels October 20. the Earl of Sunderland went Ambassadour Extraordinary to the Crown of Spain, setting out for Dover on Nov. 22. intending to pass from thence to Calais, and so to proceed by Land, as if he had Instructions to receive upon the Road from the Court of France. And Sir George Downing was appointed his Majesty's Ambassadour to the States General of the United Provinces, and embark'd at Greenwich for his Transportation about the beginning of December; but he did the Business there with so little Art, that within a Day after his Return on Feb. 7. he was privately examined by some of the Lords of the Council, and an Account thereof being given to his Majesty, he was by his Majesty's Warrant sent Prisoner to the Tower, for not having obey'd the Orders sent to him. For fear a Parliament should inquire into the Intrigues to issue his Royal Proclamation on Sept. 22. for the farther Proroguing of the Parliament from April 16. next ensuing, till Octo. 30. following, which should be in the Year 1672. Some good Subjects would have thought, that the King could never enter into a War with Holland without Advice of his Parliament, or at least that he could never support himself in any War without their Aid and Assistance. But to salve this matter, a fatal Expedient was found out, that was said to be the suggestion of my Lord Ashley to Sir Thomas Clifford, or at least was the joint Project of these Ministers who then govern'd all, viz.

rogue'd.

Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington and Landerdale, the Initial Letters of whose Names made up their proper Title of CABAL. This Expedient was to shut up the Exchequer, wherein the Bankers who had furnish'd the King with mighty Sums of Money at very extorsive Interest, had lodg'd between thirteen and fourteen hundred thousand Pounds of other Subjects Money. To put some Colour on so unjust a Practice, his Majesty being present in Council upon Tuesday January 2. was pleas'd to declare, “ That seeing all the Princes and States his Neigh“ bours, were making great Preparations for War, “ both by Sea and Land; his Majesty for the safe“ ty of his Government and People, look'd upon “ himself as oblig'd to make such Preparations as “ might be proportionable for the Protection both “ of the one and the other; and to that end had al“ ready given Orders, for the fitting and preparing “ a very considerable Fleet, to be ready against the “ Spring. That by this inevitable necessity, his “ Majesty considering the great Charges that must “ attend such Preparations, and after his serious “ Debates and best Considerations, not finding any “ possibility to defray such unusual Expences, by the “ usual ways and means of borrowing Monies, by “ reason his Revenues were so anticipated and en“ gaged, he was necessitated (contrary to his own “ Inclinations) upon these Emergencies, and for “ the publick safety at the present, to cause a stop “ to be made of the payment of any Monies, now “ being, or to be brought into his Exchequer, for “ the space of one whole Year, ending the last Day “ of December next, upon any Person or Persons what“ soever, by vertue of any Warrant, Securities or “ Orders, whether Register'd or not Register'd there“ in, and payable within that time. And after some “ Promises of repayment, and that no Person should “ be defrauded of any thing that was justly due to “ him, his Majesty was further graciously pleas'd “ to declare, that nothing could have urg'd his Ma“ jesty to an Act of this Nature but such a Conjun-“ cture of Affairs, when all the neighbouring Prin“ ces and States were making such threatening Prepa“ rations, that his Government could not be safe, “ without appearing in the same posture.

Shutting up of the Exchequer.

We are told that the French King, having got the King of England into this Net, used him very ill, by openly declaring that to break with the Dutch, was none of his own Quarrel, and that he only engaged in it out of respect to his Person; and therefore before any War was declar'd, the King of England must first break the Peace by some Attempt at Sea.

The French
K. draws the Engl. into a War with Holland.

Accordingly Sir Robert Holmes was order'd to lye off of Portsmouth, to meet the Dutch Smyrna and and Streights Fleet, and find a Pretence to intercept them. An Account of this dishonourable Action was thus given by Authority from Whitehall, “ That “ on Wednesday March 13. five of his Majesty's Fri-“ gors cruising by the Ile of Wight, met with the “ Dutch Fleet of Smyrna Men and others, of about “ fifty Sail, convoy'd by six Men of War, and of “ their Merchant-Men twenty at least carried be“ tween twenty and forty Guns apiece, when our “ Frigors came near them, we shot to make them “ strike and lower their Top-sails, which the Dutch “ refusing to do, our Frigors shot thro' and thro' “ them; and though they then lower'd their Top-“ sails, yet they refused to strike, upon which the “ Fight began; this happen'd about three of the “ Clock that Afternoon and continued until Night, “ at

“ at which time three more of our Frigats came in. Thursday, the next Morning, the Fight begun again, and continued all that Day; in the Evening were taken five of their richest Merchantmen, and Captain John Holmes in the Glocester boarded their Rear-Admiral, and took her, but she was so shatter'd and torn, that she sunk within a few hours in his possession. This Squadron was commanded by Sir Robert Holmes in the Saint Michael, the Earl of Offory was Vice-Admiral in the Resolution, and Sir Fretcheville Hollis Rear-Admiral in the Cambridge, Captain Legg commanded the Fairfax, Captain Elliot the York, Captain Towlis the Diamond, and Captain Watson the Success, who all behaved themselves with great Gallantry.

We are told that the Dutch, alarm'd at the Attempt upon their Smarna Fleet, and being in no condition to resist both Kings, sent Deputies to both, to know upon what Terms they would agree to Peace. Those sent to our King were denied Audience, and kept at Hampton-Court till it were known what the French King's Pleasure was: but those sent to the French King had Answer, That what the King had was his own, and what he should conquer should be his without an Equivalent; and declared, the States might deal with England as they pleased, and come off as cheap as they could, because by their Treaty they were not bound to procure them any Advantages.

A Declaration of War was resolv'd upon; but it required some Art to represent sufficient Reasons for it. To furnish the Government with some fair Pretensions at least, the Committee for the East-India Company was summon'd to shew Cause, whether the Dutch had not broke in upon their Trade, or committed any Violence abroad, for which publick Satisfaction ought to be demanded of them. They answer'd, and gave it under their hands, that since the Treaty at Breda the Dutch had sufficiently observed the Articles of Trade; and they knew no Cause, on that account, of breaking with them. However, the Ministry was resolv'd to find Causes, or make them: And therefore on the 17th of March was published his Majesty's Declaration of War against the States General of the United Provinces, containing the Motives and Reasons inducing his Majesty thereunto; of which, the first was, “ The pretended Insults of the Dutch upon the English in their Trade in the East and West Indies, and particularly the detaining our English Planters in Surinam after it was restored into their hands. A second was, “ The making bold with the King's Royal Person by abusive Pictures and false Historical Medals and Pillars. A third was, Their invading the Right of the Flag, and refusing Satisfaction. It concluded with a Paragraph that was thought a Jest to all wise People; a Promise to maintain the Triple League, even by this express Violation of it: The Words were, And whereas we are engaged by a Treaty to support the Peace made at Aix la Chapelle, we do finally declare, That notwithstanding the Prosecution of this War, we will maintain the true Intent and Scope of the said Treaty; and that in all the Alliances which we have or shall make in the Progress of this War, we have and will take care to preserve the Ends thereof inviolable, unless provoked to the contrary. To the Reasons of this Declaration the Dutch answer'd, That as to Trade, they had made no unjust Inroads upon any the English Factories or Plantations: And as to the English Planters in Surinam, they themselves were not willing to forsake their Effects and Subsistence, and therefore stay'd behind upon their own choice. As to the Pictures and Medals, they said they knew of none, except one Medal, which might be liable to any ill Construction; but as soon as they knew of it, they caused the Stamp to be broken. As to the Flag, the States disown'd the Refusal of it, and offer'd to make any reasonable Satisfaction.

Answer the Dutch.

The States of Holland seeing this terrible Storm falling on them, had recourse to the young Prince of Orange, and seem'd to depend upon him, as born for their Defence and Protection: and therefore they presented him, being now 22 Years of Age, with the Charge of their Armies, and Admiral of the United Provinces. The States did this the more willingly upon a Prospect of softning the English Court, and talked of sending an Extraordinary Ambassador thither to buy Good-will, saying, That the Prince's Promotion, and Satisfaction upon the Flag, would certainly appease them; wherein, it seems, they were encouraged by their own Ambassador then at London. The Prince having accepted of these Commands, went to the Army, that lay not far from Nienkop, where he kept his Post against the united Forces of the French, and constrained them to retire with Loss and Dishonour. But the Frontier Towns and Garrisons in Holland falling every day into the Hands of the French, the People would not be satisfied without the Advancement of the Prince of Orange to the Office of Stadt Holder, which had been oppos'd and resolv'd against by the States and the Ministry.

This Affection of the People appeared first in Dort, where the People rose in Multitudes and Arms, and would not be pacified till the Magistrates had sent for the Prince from the Army, and declared him Stadt Holder, with the same Power, Dignity, and Authority, which his Ancestors had formerly enjoyed. This Example, by the Importunities of the People, was soon followed by all the Cities of Holland, and Zeland, and West Friesland. And because it was chiefly oppos'd by the Pensionary De Wit, and his Brother Cornelius Bailiff of Putten, they were torn in pieces by the Rabble at the Hague.

When the Prince was thus advanced, the French made their Applications to him, with a Proposal of making him Prince Sovereign of those Provinces, under the Protection of England and France. But tho' the Temptation at that time was very inviting, he had the Honour to despise it, and answer, that he would not betray the Trust reposed in him, nor ever sell the Liberty of his Country which his Ancestors had so long defended. Yet the Game he play'd was then thought so desperate, that one of his greatest Confidants expostulated the matter with him, and ask'd him, How he pretended to live after Holland was lost? And whether he had thought so far? He answer'd, He was resolv'd to live upon his Lands in Germany, and that he had rather spend his life in Hunting there, than sell his Country or his Liberty to France at any price.

The Prince refuses the Bribes of the French.

As to Church Affairs; On the Death of Dr. Skinner, Walter Lord Bishop of Oxford was on June 13. at St. Mary Swoy, in the Presence of all the Bishops in Town, with the usual Solemnity, translated to the See of Worcester; and did Homage to his Majesty in the usual Forms on June 18. And on June 27. Dr. Nathaniel Crew, Son to the Lord Crew and Clerk of the Closter to his Majesty, Bishop elect of Oxford; and Dr. Thomas Wood, late Dean of Litchfield, Bishop elect of Coventry and Litchfield, received their Confirmation at St. Mary's Swoy; and on Sunday July 2. were solemnly consecrated in the Chapel at Lambeth by his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishops of London, Ely, Lincoln, Worcester, and Rochester; with a Sermon preach'd by Mr. Tompkins one of his Grace's Chaplains. On Sunday Oct. 1. Dr. Henry Bridgman Dean of Chester, was, in the Quire of that Cathedral Church, consecrated Bishop of Sodor and Muni, by the Lord Bishop of Chester, as Substitute of his Grace the Archbishop of York, assisted by the Bishops of Bangor, St. Asaph, and Clongbar, in the Presence of many Persons of great Quality, who were afterwards very nobly entertained by the new Bishop at his own House. On February 12. upon the Vacancy of the Bithopricks of Durham upon the Death of Dr. John Cosin Lord Bp and Count Palatine, who departed this Life upon the 15th of January last, in the 77th Year of his Age, and left a most ample 1671. Testimony to the World of his great Piety and Charity; his Majesty was pleas'd, in order to the Administration of Justice in Civil Affairs within that County Palatine, to constitute Sir Gilbert Gerard Kt. and Baronet to be High Sheriff of the same, as likewise to appoint Sir Francis Goodrick, Temporal Chancellor of the said County, to be Keeper of the Great Seal of the said Bishoprick and County Palatine: and then kept the See vacant, assigning over the great Revenues to no very honourable purpose. Apr. 19. 1672. the Funeral of Bishop Cosins proceeded in great State from the House of Sir Gilbert Gerard in the Pall-Mall near St. James's through the Strand to the Temple, and through Chancery-Lane and Grays-Inn-Lane out of Town, in order to an Interriment at Bishops-Aukland near Durham, which Palace he had, in his Life-time, with exemplary Piety and Munificence repaired, having added a fair and noble Chappel, and there chose the Place of his Sepulture. On Sunday Dec. 17. the new Church called now Christ-Church near Paris Garden in Southwark, built by Mr. John Mynshel late Inhabitant there (who beside other large charitable Bequests, had likewise plentifully endowed the same) and made Parochial by Act of Parliament, was consecrated by the Right Reverend Father in God the Bishop of Winchester, Diocesan, with the usual Solemnity; and an excellent and learned Sermon preach'd by Dr. Littleton.

State of Religion. Ecclesiastical Prelates.

Testi-

Complaints of the Dissenters.

The Dissenters thus report their Sufferings in this Year. "The Diocese of Salisbury was most fiercely driven on to Conformity by Dr. Setb Ward their Bishop: Many Hundreds did he persecute with great Industry; and among the rest, that learned, humble, holy Gentleman, Mr. Thomas Grove, an ancient Parliament Man, of as great Sincerity and Integrity as most in the Land: He stood it out a while in a Law-Suit, but was overthrown, and forc'd to forsake his Country, with multitudes of others. During the Mayoralty of Sir Sammel Sterling, many Jury-men in London were Fin'd and Imprison'd by the Judge for not finding certain Quakers guilty of violating the Act against Conventicles: They appeal'd and sought Remedy: The Judges remain'd about a Year in suspense, and then by the Lord Chief Justice Vaughan deliver'd their Resolution against the Judge, for the Subjects Freedom from such sort of Fines. He dilated upon it in a Speech of two or three hours, which was received with great Joy and Applause by the People, and the Judges thereupon cried up as the Pillars of Law and Liberty.

Their
presented

The Dissenters should not have complain'd of Persecution, without confessing the true Reasons of it. The Laws had impos'd moderate Penalties upon them; the two Houses were express for the Execution of those Laws; the Bishops and Clergy might be sincerely zealous in it: but the King and the Ministry were for stopping the legal Proceedings against them, and were in the Secret of Dispensing with the Laws Ecclesiastical and Civil for the sake of indulging the Papists and the Nonconformists. This encourag'd the Dissenters to defie the Laws, to which they would most of them have submitted if they had found a steady and impartial Execution of them. And this again provok'd the honest Justices and Magistrates to bear the more hard upon them, when they saw them so bold in despising and evading the Justice of the Nation.

Even by their own Confession.

This Reason the Men of Separation have indeed themselves confess, tho' not so fully as they ought to have done. Their Words are these: "The Parliament having made the Laws against Nonconformist's Preaching and private Religious Meetings so severe as hath been represented, the King, altho' he consented to those Laws, became the Patron of their Liberty. Not by any legal Abatements, but by his Connivance as to the execution; the Magistrates, for the most part, doing what they perceived to be his Will. The Ministers were encourag'd by Sir John Banber and others, to make their Addresses to the King, to profess their Loyalty, and acknowledge his Clemency: and they did so. The King told them, That tho' such Acts were made, he was against Persecution, and hop'd e're long to stand on his own Legs, and then they should see how much he was against it. By this means they gain'd Peace and Quiet in their Meetings in the City: And in all Sir Richard Ford's Mayoralty (tho' he was suppos'd one of their greatest and most knowing Adversaries) they remained undisturb'd.

Another Author, who was enough tender of the Dissenting Parties, does observe, "That the Vizard-

Roger Cook-
Esq.

Mask under which the Popish Party covered their Hypocrisie, was for the King, against the Judgment of the two Houses, to dispense with Penal Laws against Dissenters from the Church of England, so to conjoin the Protestant Dissenter's Interest with the Popish: And this not only appear'd by Practice, but by Design in Coleman's Letters to Fathers Ferrier and la Chaise, the French King's Confessors. And therefore, as before the first Dutch War the King issued out his Declaration of Indulgence for Dispensing with the Penal Laws in Ecclesiastical Affairs, in the Interval of the sitting of the Parliament; so did he before this second War. — And before this Declaration of Indulgence in England, the King on Febr. 26. issued out his Proclamation in Ireland for Granting general Licence to all Papists to live in Corporations and exercise any Trade therein, and enjoy the same Privileges as other Subjects ought to do. There seems to be this farther Policy in the timing this Indulgence, That the Church-Party in general were so Loyal in their Affections to the King, that they were not forward to suspect the Intrigues of the Court, and therefore fell in with the Measures of assisting the French and ruining the Dutch, with an implicit Faith it was the Wisdom of the Ministry so to do. But the Dissenters, in the several Parties of them, had no such profound Veneration for the Government, but were rather jealous of the Administration of it; and therefore at this Juncture were the more naturally dispos'd to murmur at the Politicks of the Court in espousing the Cause of France against our Protestant Neighbours in Holland, and shew'd their Fears and Jealousies very much (and indeed very justly) on this occasion. So that it was the more necessary to stop the Mouths of these Men by an Indulgence, and divert them from the Prospects of Popery and Arbitrary Power, which lay so open before them. And excepting this one political Reason of giving Content and Quiet, there was no other Cause of Indulging, but that of giving Liberty to Papists, and of gaining a new Precedent for an Arbitrary Dispensing Power, without which Popery could never prevail in these Kingdoms. The wiser Dissenters were themselves sensible, that this Favour was not purely granted for their sake; as they acknowledge in these Words: The beginning of the Dutch War made the Court think it necessary to grant an Indulgence to the Dissenters, that so there might be Peace at home while there was War abroad: and upon this occasion they had Liberty given them, tho' much to the Dissatisfaction of those who had had a hand in framing all the severe Laws against them. — This Indulgence was applauded by some among the Nonconformists, while others fear'd the Consequences: for they well knew, that the Toleration was not chiefly for their sakes, but for the Papists, and that they should hold it no longer than their Interest would allow it them: and withall, they feared it would continue the Divisions, which were much better heal'd by a Comprehension. However, they concluded on a cautious and moderate Thanksgiving for the King's Clemency and their own Liberty, and were introduc'd by my Lord Arlington. Mr. Baxter was not very forward to take the Advantage of 1671. of this Indulgence: He was desirous of Liberty in 23 Car. II. another way; and was fearful what this Method would issue in. — And they relate it as a very ob-servable thing, That no Man was more zealous in opposing this Declaration in the House, than Alderman Love, a City Member and a noted Dissenter; who declar'd, he had much rather still go without their desired Liberty, than have it in a way that would prove so detrimental to the Nation. — But without farther Reflections, we present the Reader with a Copy of the said Declaration.

His Majesty's Declaration to all his loving Subjects March 15. 1671. Published by the Advice of his Privy Council.

The King's Declaration of Indulgence.
 OUR Care and Endeavours for the Preservation of the Rights and Interests of the Church, have been sufficiently manifested to the World by the whole Courte of our Government since our happy Restoration, and by the many and frequent ways of Coercion that we have used for reducing all erring or dissenting Persons, and for composing the unhappy Differences in Matters of Religion, which we found among our Subjects upon our Return; but it being evident, by the sad Experience of twelve Years, that there is very little Fruit of all those forceable Courses, we think ourself obliged to make use of that Supreme Power in Ecclesiastical Matters which is not only inherent in us, but hath been declared and recognized to be so by several Statutes and Acts of Parliament: And therefore we do now accordingly issue this our Declaration, as well for the quieting the Minds of our good Subjects in these Points, for inviting Strangers in this Conjunction to come and live under us, and for the better Encouragement of all to a chearful following of their Trade and Callings, from whence we hope, by the Blessing of God, to have many good and happy Advantages to our Government; as also for preventing, for the future, the Danger that might otherwise arise from private Meetings and seditious Conventicles.

And, in the first place, we declare our expresse Resolution, Meaning, and Intention to be, That the Church of England be preserved and remain entire in its Doctrine, Discipline, and Government, as now it stands established by Law; and that this be taken to be, as it is, the Basis, Rule, and Standard of the general and publick Worship of God, and that the orthodox conformable Clergy do receive and enjoy the Revenues belonging thereunto; and that no Person, tho' of a different Opinion and Perswasion, shall be exempt from paying his Tythes, or other Dues whatsoever.
 And farther we declare, That no Person shall be capable of holding any Benefice, Living, or Ecclesiastical Dignity or Preferment of any kind in this our Kingdom of England, who is not exactly conformable.

We do, in the next place, declare our Will and Pleasure to be, That the Execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws in Matters Ecclesiastical, against whatsoever sort of Nonconformists or Recusants, be immediately suspended; and they are hereby suspended. And all Judges, Judges of Assize, and Goal-Delivery, Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, Mayors, Bailiffs, and other Officers whatsoever, whether Ecclesiastical or Civil, are to take notice of it, and pay due Obedience there-unto.

And that there may be no Pretence for any of our Subjects to continue their illegal Meetings and Conventicles, We do declare, That we shall from time to time allow a sufficient number of Places, as they shall be desired, in all Parts of this our Kingdom, for the Use of such as do not conform to the Church of England, to meet and assemble in, in order to their publick Worship and Devotion; which Places shall be open and free to all Persons. 1671.

 23 Car. II.
 But to prevent such Disorders and Inconveniences as may happen by this our Indulgence, if not duly regulated, and that they may be the better protected by the Civil Magistrate; our express Will and Pleasure is, That none of our Subjects do presume to meet in any place until such place be allowed, and the Teacher of that Congregation be approved by us.

And lest any should apprehend that this Restriction should make our said Allowance and Approbation difficult to be obtained, we do farther declare, That this our Indulgence as to the Allowance of the publick Places of Worship, and Approbation of the Preachers, shall extend to all sorts of Nonconformists and Recusants, except the Recusants of the Roman Catholick Religion, to whom we shall in no wise allow publick Places of Worship, but only indulge them in their share in the common Exemption from the Execution of the Penal Laws, and the Exercise of their Worship in their private Houses only.

And if, after this our Clemency and Indulgence, any of our Subjects shall presume to abuse this Liberty, and shall preach seditiously, or to the Derogation of the Doctrine, Discipline, or Government of the Establish'd Church, or shall meet in Places not allowed by us; we do hereby give them Warning, and declare, we will proceed against them with all imaginable Severity: And we will let them see we can be as severe to punish such Offenders, when so justly provoked, as we are indulgent to truly tender Consciences.

Given at our Court at Whitehall this 15th Day of March, in the Four and twentieth Year of our Reign.

And now begins in earnest the second Dutch War. 1672.
 According to his Majesty's Proclamation, Wednesday the 27th of March was observed in the Cities of Second London and Westminster as a solemn Fast for the Blessing of God upon his Majesty's Naval Forces: And it was indeed a Day of sorrow and Humiliation to all honest and discerning Persons. The next Day the War was proclaimed in a solemn manner by the Heralds, at four several places, Temple-Bar, the End of Chancery-Lane, the End of Woodstreet in Cheapside, and the Royal Exchange. The People were encouraged to Shouts and Acclamations, and the Lord Mayor invited the Heralds and the Guards to a plentiful Dinner, that the World might imagine this War to be undertaken at the Desire and to the Satisfaction of the City. On the 7th of April the King of France, seeming to follow an Example that he had really given, publish'd his Declaration of War against the States General, containing, That the Dissatisfaction his Majesty has in the Carriage of the States General of the United Provinces of the Low-Countries towards him for some Years past, being come to that point, that his Majesty cannot longer, without Diminution of his own Glory, dissemble the Indignation raised in him, by a Treatment so unsuitable to the great Obligations which his Majesty and the Kings his Predecessors have so liberally heaped upon them; his Majesty had resolved to declare War against the said States; forbidding therefore all his Subjects to hold any Correspondence with them on pain of Death, &c.

Under the general Dissatisfaction of his Subjects, his Majesty hop'd to make himself the more popular by taking into his Council these four Persons of good Reputation among the People; Henry Marquis of Worcester, Lord President of the Council of Wales; Arthur Earl of Essex, whom his Majesty declared he was sending into Ireland as Lord-Lieutenant of that Kingdom; Thomas Viscount Falconberg, Captain of his Majesty's Band of Pensioners, and George Viscount Halifax; who being admitted on the 17th of April, took the usual Oaths and their Places at the Board, Honours and Pre-ferments.

1672. Board. But the Cabinet Council were distinguish'd 24 Ca. II. with more peculiar Favours; for on April 20. his Majesty was pleas'd to create the Right Honourable John Earl of Lauderdale, principal Secretary of State of Scotland; Duke of Lauderdale in the Kingdom of Scotland; Henry Lord Arlington his Majesty's principal Secretary Earl of Arlington and Viscount Tetford; Anthony Lord Ashly Earl of Shaftsbury and Baron Cooper of Paulet; and Sir Thomas Clifford Treasurer of his Majesty's Household Baron Clifford of Chudleigh. And the Duke of Lauderdale was made Knight of the Garter on Thursday April 18. as likewise the Earl of Arlington in another Chapter of that Order held on June 15. And another able Minister was now rais'd up, Sir Tho. Osborne Baronet, was admitted of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council on May 3. And on May 29. Henry Marquis of Worcester, the Earl of St. Albans, and the Earl of Bedford were install'd Knights of the Garter in a Chapter held at Whitehall. On Sept. 30. Thomas Earl of Offoy was invest'd with the same Honour of the George and Garter.

The King dispenses with some Laws.

As his Majesty began the War with a dispensation of the Laws, relating to Religion, by virtue (as he claim'd) of his supreme Power in matters Ecclesiastical, so he now proceeded to dispence with another Law in a matter purely Civil. For on May 10. his Majesty was pleas'd in Council to Order and Declare, that the Act of Parliament made in the twelfth Year of his Majesty's Reign, For the Encouraging and Encouraging of Shipping and Navigation, be totally suspended and dispens'd with, as likewise another Act made in the 13th Year of his Majesty's Reign, entitul'd, An Act for the Encouragement of Trade: His Majesty declaring, that the Suspension of those Laws shall continue during his own Royal Will and Pleasure; and that when his Majesty shall think fit to determine this Dispensation, he will by Proclamation give six Months notice thereof. Tho' the dispensing in these matters, under the necessities of a War, was perhaps to the common Good, yet the doing of it by Royal Will and Pleasure, without Advice and Consent of Parliament was a very ill Example, and might grow into other more pernicious Acts of Arbitrary Power.

Expedition of the French Fleet join'd by the English.

The King of France sent out a Squadron of his Ships under the Count D'Estrees Vice-Admiral of France, who arriving at St. Hellens on May 3. the King and his great Officers went immediately to Portsmouth to pay Complements to him, and the English Fleet sail'd from the Downs and join'd with them. The Duke of York as Admiral was Commander of the Red, Monsieur D'Estrees of the White, and the Lord Sandwich of the Blue. The Dutch were as early abroad, and were seen off of Dover standing for Calais on Thursday May 9. and chas'd the Gloucester and other Frigots into the River as far as Sbeerness on May 13. On Sunday May 19. the English and French Fleet got their first fight of the Dutch about eight Leagues E. S. E. of the Gunfleet, and put themselves in a readiness for Engagement the next Morning, but being again separated and hinder'd by hazy Weather, the English stood into Sould-Bay and lay there at Anchor till May 28, when the Dutch fell in with them and surpriz'd them. The Day before there had been great Jollity and Feasting in the English Fleet; in the midst of which my Lord of Sandwich was observ'd to say, That as the Wind stood the Fleet rode in danger of being surpriz'd by the Dutch, and therefore thought it adviseable to weigh Anchor and get out to Sea. The Duke of York Lord High Admiral slighted the Advice, and retorted upon the Earl, that he spake this out of Fear, which Reflection his Lordship is thought to have so far resent'd, as the next Day out of Indignation to have sacrific'd his Life, which he might have otherwise preserv'd. The Dutch began the Engagement with the Blue Squadron, and the Royal James, Commanded by the Earl of Sandwich, was the first Ship that fir'd, and after great Execution was at last burnt by a Dutch Fight at Sould-Bay.

Fireship, and the Noble Earl perish'd in her with many brave Gentlemen, Captain Haddock getting off with a wound in his Thigh. The Duke was becalm'd and could not draw into a Line of Battle, and yet receiv'd much Damage; the French had most Sea-room, and might have weather'd the Dutch and disingag'd the English, but they fir'd at a distance, and most of their shot fell short, yet their Vice-Admiral was kill'd. The Fight continued till nine at Night, when Sir Joseph Jordan getting the Weather-gage of the Dutch, they stood-away, and the Duke sailing after them got the appearance of a Victory. On our side were kill'd the Noble Earl of Sandwich, Mr. Digby Capt. of the Henry, Sir Fretcheville Holles Capt. of the Cambridge, Sir John Fox Captain of the Prince, Capt. Pearce of the St. George, Capt. Waterworth of the Anne, Capt. Hannam of the Triumph, Capt. Tennes of the Alice and Francis Fireship, Monsieur De La Rabiniere Rear-Admiral of the French; and of our Volunteers the Lord Maidstone, Mr. Mountague, Mr. Richard Nicholls and Mr. Roger Vaughan, both of his Royal Highnesses Bed-Chamber, Mr. Trevanion his Gentleman-Usher, Sir Philip Cantwright, Sir Charles Harbord, Capt. Bromley, Capt. Bennet, Mr. Cotterel, Capt. Burgh, Capt. Barry, Mr. Napier, Brother to a Scotch Lord of that Name, Mr. Bowles, and very many wounded. The Body of the Earl of Sandwich was discover'd floating on the Sea by one of his Majesty's Katches, and was taken up and brought into Harwich, where it was receiv'd and embalm'd by the Governour Sir Charles Littleton, who sending notice of it to Whitehall, his Majesty declar'd That out of his Princely regard to the great Deservings of the said Earl and his unexampled Performances in this last Act of his Life, he resolv'd to have his Body brought up to London, there at his Charge to receive the Rites of Funeral due to his great Quality and Merits.

While the French were content to have no Victory at Sea, they advanced their Conquest by Land in a very rapid manner. The French King in Person past the Mayese, and putting to flight the Dutch Troops there posted to oppose him, he took Orsoy, Rhinbungh and Doffery, all which surrender'd upon his first Approach before them. Wexel was deliver'd to the Prince of Conde upon the first opening the Trenches, and advancing he took many other Towns, which put the States into such a Terror that they remov'd from the Hague to Amsterdam for their better security, opening the Sluces and putting the Country round under Water, to the Damage of eighteen Millions of Guilders: For by June 28. the French had advanc'd within four Leagues of Rotterdam, and about the same distance from Amsterdam, with a Royal Army of at least 118000 Foot and 26000 Horse, compos'd of the best Troops that had been ever seen together, Commanded by two of the greatest Generals of the Age, the Prince of Conde and the Marechal Turenne, who being encourag'd by the King in Person, like an impetuous Torrent carried all before them.

These rapid Victories put the Dutch into a dreadful Consternation, and the States General as well as De Wits must have been sacrific'd to the Fury of the People, if they had not concluded on July 1. that the perpetual Edict, by which they oblig'd themselves never to admit of a Stadt-Holder, should cease and be of none effect, and had consented to restoring the Prince of Orange to that Hereditary Honour. And the People of England were so much dispos'd to Murmurs and Complaints upon the successful Progress of the French, that his Majesty was oblig'd to issue his Proclamation for suppressing that unlawful and undutiful kind of Discourse, by a most strict and exemplary Punishment of all Persons who should be found spreaders of false News, or promoters of any malicious Slanders and Calumnies in any Coffee-House or other publick or private Meeting. And under this juncture of Affairs the King was necessitated to publish a Declaration even in Favour of the Dutch, That notwithstanding

The Dutch in a dreadful consternation

The English in great discontent

1672. withstanding the War, if any of the Low-Country Subjects, either out of Affection to his Majesty or his Government, or because of the Oppression they met with at home from their Governours, should come into his Kingdoms, they should be by his Majesty protected in their Persons and Estates, his Majesty continuing in the same gracious Inclination towards all such of the Subjects of the said Low-Countries as shall desire to deliver themselves from the Calamity and Distress into which the ill Counsels of some prevailing Persons in the Government of those Countries had justly drawn them.

Under these frightful Apprehensions the States-General sent over their Deputies to the King of England to represent the common Dangers of Europe, and the Ruin of their own Country, and the necessity of putting a stop to the violent Progress of the French Armes. On Thursday June 20. his Majesty sent four of the Lords of his Privy Council, viz. the Duke of Bucks, the Earl of Arlington, the Earl of Shaftsbury, and the Lord Clifford to those Deputies of the States-General of the United Provinces at Hampton-Court, to know what Proposals they had to offer to his Majesty. They reply'd, they had no Power or Instructions to make any offer, but to hear what his Majesty would demand. Upon which his Majesty appointed the Duke of Bucks, the Earl of Arlington, and the Lord Halifax to be his Ambassadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiaries, to treat jointly with such as should be appointed by the most Christian King, with any Deputies or Commissioners from the said States. Who for this purpose sail'd from the Buoy in the Nore on June 23. and landing at Mafelund-stuce, were received with great Joy and Satisfaction by the People, out of hopes they came to conclude a Peace, and were met near the Hague by a multitude of Men, Women and Children, who join'd in their Acclamations all along as they pass'd, of God bless the King of England, God bless the Prince of Orange, and the Devil take the States. These Ambassadors are said to have sent an Account of their Mediation to the King of France, who made a very imperious Answer, That the King of England might treat as he pleas'd, but that what he himself had got by his Arms was his own, and that what he should get he would not restore without an Equivalent. Upon which our Ambassadors are said to have a great Indignation, and to have promised the States and the Prince of Orange, that they would engage to their utmost to bring the French King to be satisfied with Mistrich, and of keeping Garrisons upon the Rhine, belonging to the Electors of Brandenburg and Cologne. And under this appearance of Amity the Duke of Bucks proceeded to wait on the French King at Utrecht, where they are said to have changed their Minds, and within four Days after to have sent Word to the Prince of Orange, that the States must give Satisfaction to both Kings jointly, and that neither would treat separately. So that on July 21. the Plenipotentiaries return'd to Whitehall with this Account given to the Publick, That all their Excellencies could effect for the present was, to compose a Promissory Act between the two Kings, not to Treat or Conclude without Participation and Inclusion of each others Pretences. The Intrigue of this Ambassy is best discover'd by these Queries made upon it by Mr. Secretary Trevor.

I. Whether they were sent to promote the French Conquests? If not, why, by making the Peace impossible, as far as in them lay, would they force the Dutch to submit to the French Dominion?
II. Whether they did not know that the French Demands alone had been rejected by the States, and that the granting of them would make it impossible for the Dutch to give the King any Satisfaction?
III. Whether having received, from the Prince and States, all imaginable Assurances of their Designs to return to the King's Amity, and to purchase it at any Rate they could, they could faithfully neglect these, and enter into a new Engagement so prejudicial to England?

IV. How far those who were join'd in Commission did concur in their Judgment; and whether these Considerations, with many others, were not represented to them, and urged by some who desired to serve the King faithfully?

V. Whether or no it was for that Reason they oppos'd so fiercely my Lord Viscount Halifax's (who came a Day or two after them) Appearing and acting jointly with them, tho' in the same Commission with them, in as ample a manner as themselves?

VI. Who were those who (after my Lord Halifax could be kept out no longer) went privately to the French Camp under Pretences, and had Negotiations of their own on Foot?

VII. Whether they had Order to call the French King King of France, and to name him before their Master, as well in the French Demands as of his Majesty's, in all their Agreements which they sent to the Prince of Orange?

VIII. Whether they had Instructions to stand in Behalf of the French, upon the publick Exercise of the Roman Catholick Religion in the United Provinces, the Churches to be divided to the Roman Priests to be maintained out of the Publick Revenues? And to bind the King's Hands, so that the French King may be sure of his Bargain, these Plenipotentiaries (two of them) agreed with the French, that the King should not treat nor conclude a Peace with the Dutch without them: But the French King shall find no more Security herein, than the Dutch and Spaniard did in the King's joining in the Triple League.

The Right Honourable Sir John Trevor, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and of his Honourable Privy Council, died on Tuesday May 28. about ten of the Clock at Night, after six Days Distemper of a Fever, in the forty seventh Year of his Age, and on Friday Night following was honourably interr'd at St. Bartholomew's in Smithfield. Into whose Place Henry Coventry, Esq; late Ambassador at the Court of Sweden, was sworn one of the principal Secretaries of State in July 3. and was at the same time, together with Sir Robert Long Knight and Baronet, admitted into the Privy Council. The Earl of Essex having been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the room of the Lord Berkeley, began his Journey toward that Kingdom on July 22. with a very noble Equipage, and arriving at Dublin had on Aug. 5. the Sword of State deliver'd to him by the Lord Berkeley, who the next Day imbark'd for England. The great Change in Officers of State was thus reported by Authority. "November 17. his Majesty reflecting upon the Age and continual Indisposition of Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Keeper of the great Seal of England, hath thought fit to admit of his Resignation thereof, with all Demonstration on his Majesty's part, of his Kindness and Esteem of the said Lord Keeper's Merit toward him. And his Majesty willing to gratify the uninterrupted good Services of the Earl of Shaftsbury, Chancellour of his Exchequer, and one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, was pleas'd this Day to give unto him the keeping of the said Great Seal, with the Title of Lord Chancellour of England. Nov. 20. his Majesty was pleas'd to appoint Sir John Duncumb Knight, one of the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, to be Chancellour and Under-Treasurer of his Exchequer, upon the Resignation of those Offices by the Earl of Shaftsbury Lord Chancellour of England. Nov. 30. his Majesty valuing the many eminent Services of the Right Honourable Thomas Lord Clifford, Treasurer of his Majesty's Household, and one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and more particularly the great Abilities and Experience in the Affairs of his Majesty's Treasury, was pleas'd on Thursday 28. instant to advance him to the Place of Lord High Treasurer of England, remaining void since the Death of the late Earl of Southampton, and accordingly his Lordship 1672. 24 Ca. II. ship having that Morning received the Staff, was accompanied by the great Officers, and other principal Personages of the Court, to Westminster-Hall; where, in the Court of Chancery, the usual Oaths were administred to him by the Lord High Chancellour of England. The Place of Treasurer of the Household was at the same time conferred by his Majesty on the Right Honourable the Lord Newport, and that of Comptroller, formerly possessed by his Lordship, given to the Right Honourable the Lord Maynard, as a Mark of the Esteem his Majesty is pleas'd to retain of his constant Loyalty and Affection to his Majesty and the Crown. Jan. 6. his Majesty was pleas'd to create the Marquis of Blanquefort, younger Brother to the Duke of Duras, a Baron of England, by the Title of Lord Duras, Baron of Holdenby in the County of Northampton, to encourage his eminent Virtue and Merit in his Service: And his Royal Highness, to render this Grace of his Majesty the more complete, hath bestow'd the Honour of Holdenby upon him the Lord Duras, he having been actually these ten Years past in his Royal Highness's Service; in his first Entrance to which, he was Naturaliz'd in this Kingdom, and hath particularly signaliz'd himself in the many and memorable Occasions at Sea, in which his Royal Highness hath expos'd himself during this present and the former War, in which he was ever a near Attendant on his Royal Highness's Person. Jan. 25. Upon the Death of his Grace the Duke of Richmond (who died in his Embassy at Sweden) one of the Knights of the most noble Order of the Garter, his Majesty was pleas'd to summon a Chapter of the said Order in the Red Room (at Whitehall) where the Sovereign and nine Companions being present, the Right Honourable the Earl of Southampton was unanimously elected Companion of that most noble Order. Jan. 29. The Corps of the Right Honourable the Earl of Derby was interred at Ormesburch in Lancashire, the ancient Burying-place of that Noble Family, which was accompanied with very great Numbers of Persons of the best Quality in that and the adjacent Counties, who voluntarily came in to pay their last Respects to the Noble Lord deceased: Both Gentry and Commonalty expressed a great sense of the Loss of so loyal a Subject to his Majesty, so true a Son of the Church, and so worthy a Patriot of his Country; but yet received much Satisfaction in his Son the now Earl, whose Parts, Temper, and Behaviour, have given them great hopes that he will in nothing that is good and honorable be inferior to any of his most renowned Ancestors. And his Majesty and Royal Highness have been pleas'd to take so much notice of his own Qualifications, as well as the Merits of his Family, that they have conferred on him those Places of Trust which his Father had. — Friday Mar. 7. the Right Honourable James Earl of Northampton was admitted of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council; and after the usual Oaths administred to him, took his Place at the Board accordingly.

The Duke of Monmouth was now sent abroad to distinguish himself by Arms and some Experience in them. The K. of England, by his Agreement with Lewis XIV. was to send six thousand Men into his Service by Land. These Forces being English and Scots, were Commanded by the Duke of Monmouth, who arriv'd in the French Camp near Charleroy at the latter end of April. A Detachment of twenty thousand Men, and a Train of Artillery, under the Viscount de Turenne, were sent towards Maeffricht; and the next day the French King followed with the Body of the Army, accompanied by the Dukes of Orleans and Alonmouth. The Count de Lorge invest'd the Place with three thousand Horse: but the King calling a great Council of War, at which the Duke of Monmouth assist'd, 'twas there resolv'd, to turn the intended Siege of Maeffricht into a Blockade. So twenty thousand Men were left before it for that purpose, and the rest of the Army march'd to the Rhine. The Duke was at the Taking of Orfoy, Rhinberg, Wezel, Emmerick, Doesburg, Zutphen, and was in the French King's Camp near Utrecht when that City sent her Keys to the Conquerour. On the 5th of July, the Duke, with the English Noblemen and Gentlemen Volunteers in the French Army, went to view the Town, and were honourably entertained by the Magistrates. The 11th of July the Army broke up, and march'd back to Flanders; and the Campaign being over, the King return'd to Saint Germans, and the Duke to England. On his Arrival at London, he was received with universal Joy; for, tho' the People dislik'd the War, yet they were pleas'd to hear how much the Duke was a Hero in it. On the 25th of Aug. his Dutcheffs was deliver'd of a Son, christned Charles, who died in 1679. In November the Duke went again to France, on News that the Prince of Orange was set down before Charleroy: but the Prince leaving that Siege to attack Bon, Flanders was quiet the rest of the Winter. The Duke land'd at Calais, and went thence to Dourlens, where his Regiment quarter'd. In his way thither, the Duke of Elbeuf, Governour of Montreuil, receiv'd him in an extraordinary manner. At Beville the Militia were drawn up, and the Mayor complemented him at the Gates. Near Dourlens the Governour met him with his Coaches, attended with forty Horse; waited upon him into the Town, entertain'd him splendidly for five days, and received the Word from him every Night. Here the Duke took a Review of his Regiment, which he found in good Order, and well disciplin'd. Thence he went to Paris, and so to St. Germans, where he was received by the King with particular Honours. He made no long Stay at the French Court; but finding there was no likelihood of any sudden Action, he return'd to England, and remain'd there till the opening of the Campaign.

Sept. 17. his Majesty in Council order'd a Proclamation to set forth, That whereas he had lately Prorogued the Parliament from the 16th day of Apr. last unto the 30th of October next ensuing; for divers weighty Reasons he did again Prorogue the said Parliament from the said 30th of October until the 4th day of February next ensuing. In the mean time his Majesty was to raise Men, and provide Money, by his own Interest and Authority. On Dec. 4. he was pleas'd in Council to declare, That he found it necessary, during the present War, to raise more Souldiers, and to form them into Regiments, and dispose of them in several Quarters, until there should be occasion for their Service against the Enemy: and therefore order'd a Proclamation, to forbid any Rudeness or Misdemeanour in their respective Quarters. And that the Fund of his Exchequer might not be deficient for this occasion, on Dec. 11. he order'd a Declaration to be publish'd for a farther Stop to the Payment of any former Debts, confessing that he had before Declar'd the Stop of Payments should not continue beyond the last day of this instant December. But notwithstanding his Majesty hath not been wanting on his Part to comply with all honourable ways and means that might operate such happy Effects, yet the continuance of those inevitable Necessities which first infer'd his Majesty contrary to his own Inclinations to cause a stop to be made of Payment of Monies. compels him at this present to continue the same stop of Payments of any Monies now being or to be brought into his Exchequer, untill the first day of May next ensuing — Doubting not but that all his loving Subjects have such Trust and Confidence in his Justice, that it will take away all Apprehensions of their being in the least defrauded of any thing that is justly due to them.

On Tuesday Feb. 4. the two Houses of Parliament, Meeting according to his Majesty's Prorogation, met at Westminster; where his Majesty having commanded the House of Commons to attend him in the Lords House,

 24 Car. II. Command, acquaint them, that by the late Advanc-ment of Sir Edward Turner Kt. to the Place of Lord Chief Baron of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, the Place of Speaker of that Houfe was now void; and that therefore it was his Majesty's Pleasure they should forthwith return to their Houfe, and choofe a Speaker, with Directions to prefent him the next day at Three in the Afternoon to his Majesty, for his Allowance and Approbation: which the Houfe of Commons accordingly did, having unanimously made Choice of Sir Job Charlton Kt. to fupply that Place. On Feb. 5. his Majesty was pleas'd to return to the Houfe of Lords, where the Commons attended and prefented their new Speaker, whom his Majesty was pleas'd to accept and allow of. Then his Majesty made a Speech to the two Houfes, acquainting them, That he had entred into an expenfive War, and wanted Money to fupport it, and to pay his Debts; which he left to their fpecial care: and telling them farther, That he had granted an Indulgence, and was resolv'd to ftand to it. The Lord Chancellour Shaftsbury was to make a farther Declaration of his Majesty's Mind, which he did in a large Speech, wherein he was very bitter againft the Dutch, reprefenting them as our Rivals, and sworn Enemies in Honour and Trade, and applying to Holland, De- lenda est Carthago; farther adding, That the States of the United Provinces were in a mortal Oppofition to us both by Intereft and Inclination; and magnified our Happinefs in a League with France, as the greateft Advantage that could happen to England. It muft be own'd, that this was a falfe and a scandalous Speech, and was foon condemn'd by the Speaker himfelf, who prefently found the fatal Influence of joining with France, and the wife Necessity of espoufing the Defence of Holland, and took Refuge at laft in that Country as the fureft Place of Protection for his Liberty and Life.

 Houfe, notwithstanding the great and preffing Af-by Letter make his humble Suit to his Majesty, that he might be eafed of the Burden he was not able longer to fustain: Whereupon his Majesty fig-Permission to them to choofe a new Speaker (they having the fame Morning received a Letter from the Speaker, to have Leave to retire into the Country) and immediately the Houfe did unanimously make Choice of Edward Seymour Efq. much to his Ma-

 Abilities to difcharge that Place. And accordingly, the Houfe of Commons, having prefented him to his Majesty in the Houfe of Lords for his Majesty's Approbation, his Majesty was pleas'd very gracidid accept and approve the great Care of the Lords Spi-

But the Proclamations of this kind having been formerly things of courfe, the two Houfes were not fatisfied, but on the next day prefented to his Majesty another Adrefs, humbly representing the beft Means, in their Opinion, for the fatisfying and compo-fing the Minds of his Subjects. And the King feeing them now in earneft, began to recede from his Difpenfation of Indulgence, and his declared Refolution of keeping to it; and very graciously affured them, that He freely and readily agreed to what they had propos'd, and would take care to fee it performed accordingly. And on the Morrow after this Affurance given, his Majesty renew'd it in a more folemn manner by a gracious Speech to both Houfes, which was published on March 15. and was as follows.

Another
Adrefs.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Y^Efterday you prefented me an Adrefs, as the beft means for the fatisfying and compofing the Minds of my Subjects, to which I freely and readily agreed, and fhall take care to fee it perform'd accordingly.
 I hope on the other fide, you Gentlemen of the Houfe of Commons will do your part; for I muft put you in mind, it is near five Weeks fince I demanded a Supply, and what you then voted unanimoufly, did both give Life to my Affairs at home and difhearten my Enemies abroad; but the feeming delay it hath met withal fince, hath made them take new Courage, and they are now preparing for this next Summer a greater Fleet (as they fay) than ever they had yet; fo that if the Supply be not very fpeedily difpatch'd it will be altogether ineffectual, and the Safety, Honour and Intereft of England muft of neceffity be ex-

" Ruin upon us all.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" If there be any Scruple yet remaining with you,
" concerning the dispensing with Penal Laws, I " here faithfully promise you, that what hath been " done in that particular, shall not for the future be " drawn either into Consequence or Example.

" And as I daily expect from you a Bill for my

" and pass any other you shall offer me, that may

" just Grievances.

Proceedings of the Commons. This Speech so far sweetned the Commons, that they proceeded in the Supply and dispatch of the other Bills before them; and yet in the Money Bill they would not expressly own the Dutch War, nor seem to maintain it, but worded it only to supply the King's extraordinary Occasions. And before they parted with the Bill they tack'd a Proviso to it, That no Papist should be capable of holding any publick Employment. It must be observ'd, that while the Commons shew'd so much resentment at the King's Indulgence to Protestant Dissenters, they excepted more against the way of doing it than against the thing it self, if done in a legal manner: For on Feb. 14. the Commons Resolv'd Nemine Contradicente, That a Bill be brought in for the case of his Majesty's Subjects, who are Dissenters in matters of Religion from the Church of England. And the Bill having passed that House, was carried to the Lords and thrown out by them.

Law in Scotland.

In Scotland the Duke of Lauderdale Lord High Commissioner, got the King's dispensing Power to be established by Law: For in this second Parliament held by him at Edinburgh this Summer, he procured an Act, declaring That by vertue of the King's Supremacy, the ordering the Government of the Church does properly belong to his Majesty and Successors, as an Inherent Right of the Crown, and that he may Enact and Emit such Constitutions, Acts and Orders concerning Church Administrations, Persons, Meetings and Matters, as he in his Royal Wisdom shall think fit, &c. any Law Act or Custom to the contrary notwithstanding. And while Indulgence was a part of the Politicks of the English Court, he took away all hopes of it in Scotland, for with a standing Army, living upon free-Quarter, he made all sorts of People depose upon Oath, their knowledge of the Persons of Dissenters, not Popish meetings, in the Exercise of their Worship, upon Penalty of Fining, Imprisonment, Banishment and Transportation, and to be sold for Slaves; Imprisoning all out-ted Ministers, who shall preach out of their Families, till they give Security of 5000 Marks Scot not to do the same again; every Hearer being a Tenant to pay 25 l. Scot and Cotter 12, Tones Quoties, they shall offend; and that it shall be Death for any to preach in Fields or Houses, where any are without Doors, and 500 Marks Reward for any to secure such Dead or Alive; and gave Orders that every Man for himself, and all under him, should give Bond not to go to Field Meetings, and to Inform against, Pursue and Deliver up all outed Ministers to Judgment.

Bravery of the Prince of Orange.

The Prince of Orange being now Stadtholder of Holland, was in effect the only Protector of the Liberties of Europe, and the only opposer of the excessive Powers of France. It was a general Report that deserves Credit, when the Duke of Buckingham with the Lords Arlington and Hallifax was sent upon an Ambassy this Summer to the French King at Utrecht, his Grace had a long Discourse with the Prince about the bad posture of the Affairs of his Country, and us'd many Arguments to him in vain for his accepting the Sovereignty of it under the Protection of England and France, he told him at last, he wonder'd what he could propose to himself in such a desperate Case, since according to the Humour he persister'd in, he must unavoidably see the final Ruin of it. To which the Prince reply'd, That what his Grace said concerning their dan- gerous Condition was indeed true; but yet, that he had one way still left not to see it completed, which was to lie in the last Dike; by which he meant the fighting of it out to the last. Under this intrepid Resolution he attack'd Woerden, and beat off the Duke of Luxemburgh from two several Attempts of relieving the Town, but having lost Colonel Zulestein, who refusing Quarter was slain, he was forc'd to rise from that Siege, and to march for Rosendale, the place appointed for the General Rendezvous. A certain Colonel by the way had the Curiosity to ask him, What great Design he had at that time against the French? He put another Question to him by way of Reply, Whether he would discover his Designs to any Person in the World that should be so impertinently inquisitive to ask him? And the Colonel answering him in the Negative: Then, said the Prince, my Tongue is also endow'd from Heaven with the same Grace.

1672.
24 Ca. II.

From Rosendale (with an Army of 24000 Horse and Foot) he march'd directly towards the Country of Liege, and made the Count De Duras retire with his Army to Wassemburgh, and decline a Battle which the Prince provok'd him to; after this the Prince by a strong Detachment took in the strong Castle of Walkeren, and then invested Charleroy, but finding a formal Siege impracticable, made himself Master of Binck, and retiring thro' Brabant, dispersed his Army into Winter Quarters. And when Luxemburgh with an Army of 14000 Horse and Foot march'd over the Ice to invade the Province of Holland, about the end of December, the Prince hasted to Alfen, and by his presence upon a sudden Thaw, made the French glad to retire with considerable Loss.

As to the State of Religion, it has already appeared, that the dangers of Popery were visible to all who had their Eyes open. And it did not a little contribute to the common Fears and Jealousie, that the Dutches of York, who had been bred and had long lived a firm and zealous Member of the Church of England, was in the time of her Weakness and Sickness importun'd and overpower'd to declare herself a Roman Catholick; and she had some time before betray'd her Inclinations, had left this Copy of a Paper written by her some few Months before her Death.

State of Religion.

" IT is so reasonable to expect, that a Person al" ways bred up in the Church of England, and
" as well instructed in the Doctrine of it (as the best " Divines and her Capacity could make her) should " be liable to many Censures for leaving that, and " making herself a Member of the Roman Catholick
" Church, to which I confess I was one of the great" est Enemies it ever had; That I rather chose to " satisfy my Friends by reading this Paper, than to " have the trouble to answer all the Questions that " may daily be asked me. And first, I do protest " in the presence of Almighty God, that no Person,
" Man or Woman, directly nor indirectly, ever said
" any thing to me since I came into England, or " us'd the least endeavour to make me change my " Religion; It is a blessing I wholly owe to Almight" ty God, and I hope the hearing of a Prayer I " daily made him, ever since I was in France and " Flanders; where, seeing much of the Devotion of " the Catholicks, (tho' I had very little myself)
" I made it my continual request to Almighty God,
" that if I were not, I might before I died, be in " the true Religion. I did not in the least doubt " but that I was so, and never had any scruple till " November last, when reading a Book called The " History of the Reformation, by Dr. Heylin, which I " had heard very much commended, and have been " told, if ever I had any doubt of my Religion that " would settle me: Instead of which, I found it the " description of the horridest Sacrileges in the World,
" and could find no reason why we left the Church, " but for three the most abominable ones that were " ever heard of among Christians. First, Henry VIII.
" renounces the Pope's Authority, because he would " not

Secondly, Edward VI. was a Child and govern'd by his Uncle, who made his Estate out of Church Lands; and then Qu. Elizabeth, who being no lawful Heiress to the Crown, could have no way to keep it but by renouncing a Church that could never suffer so unlawful a thing to be done by one of her Children. I confess, I cannot think the Holy Ghost could ever be in such Councils; And it is very strange, that if the Bishops had no design, but (as they say) the restoring us to the Doctrine of the primitive Church, they could never think upon it till Henry VIII. made the breach upon so unlawful a pretence. These scruples being rais'd, I began to consider of the difference between the Catholicks and us, and examin'd them as well as I could by Holy Scripture, which, tho' I do not pretend to be able to understand, yet there are some things I found so easy, that I cannot but wonder I had been so long without finding them out: As the real Presence in the Blessed Sacrament, the Infallibility of the Church, Confession and Praying for the Dead. After this, I spoke severally to two of the Bishops we have in England, who both told me there were many things in the Romish Church which (it were very much to be wish'd) we had kept; as Confession, which was no doubt commanded by God: That praying for the Dead was one of the ancient things in Christianity: That for their parts, they did it daily, tho' they would not own it. And afterwards pressing one of them very much upon the other Points, he told me, That if he had been bred a Catholick he would not change his Religion; but that being of another Church (wherein he was sure were all things necessary to Salvation) he thought it very ill to give that scandal, as to leave that Church wherein he received his Baptism. All these Discourses did but add more to the desire I had to be a Catholick, and gave me the most terrible Agonies in the World within myself; for all this, fearing to be rash in a matter of that weight, I did all I could to satisfy myself, made it my daily Prayer to God, to settle me in the Right, and so went on Christmas-day to receive in the King's Chapel: After which, I was more troubled than ever, and could never be at quiet, till I had told my Design to a Catholick, who brought a Priest to me, and that was the first I ever did converse with upon my Word. The more I spoke to him the more I was confirm'd in my Design: And as it is impossible for me to doubt the Words of our Blessed Saviour, who says, The Holy Sacrament is his Body and Blood, so cannot believe that he who is the Author of all Truth, and has promised to be with his Church to the end of the World, would permit them to give that Holy Mytery to the Laity but in one kind, if it were not lawful so to do.

" I am not able, or if I were, would I enter into Disputes with any Body: I only in short, say this for the changing of my Religion, which I take God to witness I would never have done, if I had thought it possible to save my Soul otherwise. I think I need not say, it is any Interest in this World leads me to it: It will be plain enough to every body, that I must lose all the Friends and Credit I have here by it; and have very well weigh'd which I could best part with, my share in this World or the next: I thank God I found no difficulty in the Choice.

" My only Prayer is, That the Poor Catholicks of this Nation may not suffer for my being of their Religion; that God would but give me Patience to bear them, and then send me any Afflictions in this World, so I may enjoy a blessed Eternity hereafter.

1672. 24 Ca. II. This Paper seems to be written with as much partiality and prejudice as a new Convert could be taught to have. To say that the real Presence in the Blessed Sacrament (that is in her Sense Transubstantiation) and Infallibility of the Church, were things so easy, that she could not but wonder she had been so long without finding them out, does argue to have been easily disposed to any Faith. What she says of the Bishops was from a failure of Memory at least, for they themselves surviving did solemnly deny the Words. Her change of Religion must be imputed to the Zeal of his Royal Highness, who tho' he did not yet openly profess that Religion, yet he was unhappily perverted to it in the Court of France: Where upon the Artifices of his Royal Mother and her Confessor Mr. Mountague, his Brother King Charles wrote this memorable Letter to him, of which the original found among the Papers of Dr. Berwick a Physician is now in the Hands of a very faithful Person, who has attested this to be a very true Copy of it.

Cologne Nov. 10. 1654.

Dear Brother,

" I Have receiv'd yours without a date, in which you mention that Mr. Mountague has endeavoured to pervert you in your Religion. I do not doubt but you remember very well the Commands I left with you at my going away concerning that Point, and am confident, you will observe them; yet the Letters that come from Paris say, that it is the Queens purpose to do all she can to change your Religion, which if you hearken to her, or any body else in that matter, you must never think to see England or me again; and whatsoever Mischiefe shall fall on me, or my Affairs from this time, I must lay all upon you, as being the only cause of it, therefore consider well what it is not only to be the cause of ruining a Brother that loves you so well, but also of your King and Country, do not let them persuade you either by force or fair promises, for the first they neither dare nor will use, and for the second, as soon as they have perverted you, they will have their End, and will care no more for you.

" I am also inform'd, that there is a Purpose to put you in the Jesuits College, which I command you upon the same Grounds never to consent unto, and whenever any body shall go to dispute with you in Religion, do not answer them at all; for though you have the Reason on your side, yet they being prepar'd, will have the Advantage of any body that is not upon the same Security that they are. If you do not consider what I say to you, remember the last Words of your dead Father, which were to be constant to your Religion, and never to be shaken in it; which if you do not observe, this shall be the last time you will ever hear from

Dear Brother,

Your most affectionate Brother

Charles R.

The Readers of this Letter will hardly forbear to make this one Remark upon it, that James Duke of York by his revolt to Popery, forfeited the Blessing of his Father; incur'd the Curse denounc'd by his Grandfather; rejected the most importunate Advices of his Brother; and went his own way to Misfortunes and Ruin. But whatever unhappy influence he had upon his Consort, it was a singular Blessing of Providence, that the two Princesses his Daughters were not corrupted by any Familiar Advice or Example; but were strictly bred up in the Protestant Religion, and were both married to Protestant Princes, and became both the greatest Instruments of securing and adorning the Reformation. And 1672. And this Justice must be done to the Father of the 24 Ca. II. Dutchess, the Earl of Clarendon, to observe, that he very much lamented this perversion of his Daughter; and wrote to the Duke and Dutchess two Expostulatory Letters on this occasion, with hearty concern for the Sin and the Scandal of it.

To return, the Nonconformists thus represent their own Opinion of the Parliament obliging the King to recal his Declaration of Indulgence. "In February the Parliament met, and voted down the King's Declaration as illegal; and the King promis'd it should not be brought into President. And thereupon they consulted of a Bill for the ease of Protestant Dissenters, and many Members profess'd their Resolution to carry it on; but when they had granted the Tax desired, they turn'd it off and left it undone; taking away from the poor Dissenters the shelter of the King's Declaration, and so leaving them to the Storm of the severe Laws that were in force against them, which by some Country Justices were rigorously put in Execution, tho' the most forbore. The Abridger of this Account has added this farther Observation. On Feb. 14.
 the Commons resolv'd Nemine Contradicente that a Bill be brought in for the Ease of his Majesty's Subjects who are Dissenters in matters of Religion from the Church of England. And a Bill pass'd the House accordingly, but was stopp'd in the House of Lords. But the Motion of the Lower House in this Affair was therefore the more remarkable, because it was the same House of Commons, who ten Years before so warmly voted the contrary. A good Argument they were now convinc'd of a greater danger of Popery than they could before be perswaded to believe. Whatever this Reflection is, the Truth was only thus: The Commons in this Parliament were by long Experience more and more sensible, that the Papists were for their own Pleasure and Advantage playing and striking the Church-men and Dissenters one against another. At one time the Patrons of Indulgence to break the establish'd Communion, and for their own sakes to let in a universal Toleration; at another time the Pushers on of Severity and Persecution, to exasperate the Nonconformists against the Laws and the Church, and make them fly toward Popery and a dispensing Power for Refuge and Protection. And therefore the Commons upon a view of these double Designs were oblig'd to take their different Measures, for the same good Ends of the Peace and Union of the Protestant Interest. When they saw Indulgence and Toleration set up by arbitrary means for ill purposes, they acted by the strictest Rules of Honour and Conscience to press the Uniformity by Law establish'd. And while they saw that a rigorous Prosecution of Dissenters might serve the Hopes and Desires of Rome as effectually as a Royal Indulgence: they would have provided against the one as well as against the other; and by granting a legal and limited Ease to them, would have settled a mutual Forbearance for the foundation of a mutual Love; and at least have so far reconcil'd the Members of the Church and the Dissenters from it, that they should have been always ready to unite against the common Enemy of the Reformation.

As to the Parliaments apprehending the Advancement of Popery, the same Author thus represents the matter.

"The Parliament at length grew into great Jeal-ousies of the prevalence of Popery. An Army (pretended to be design'd for Service against the Dutch) lay encamp'd at Black-Heath, many of the Commanders were Papists. It was the general Apprehension, that having no hopes to get the Parliament to set up their Religion by Law, it was their intention to put down Parliaments and reduce the Government to the French Model, and Religion to their State by a standing Army. All that lov'd their Country had dismal Expectations, the Parliament made an Act that no Man should be in any Office of Trust, who would not take the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance and receive the Sacrament according to the Order of the Church of England. Hereupon the Duke of York, who was General of the Army, and the Lord Treasurer Clifford, laid down all their Places.

 This Test Act was entitul'd, An Act for preventing Dangers which may happen from Popish Recusants, and it did require, "That all Persons bearing any Office or Place of Trust or Profit should take the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance in publick and open Court, and should also receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the usage of the Church of England, in some Parish-Church, upon some Lord's-Day immediately after Divine Service and Sermon, and deliver a Certificate of having so received the Sacrament under the Hands of the respective Minister and Churchwarden, proved by two credible Witnesses upon Oath, and put upon Record in Court, and that all Persons taking the said Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance should likewise make and subscribe this Declaration following: I A. B. do declare, that I do believe there is not any Transubstantiation in the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, or in the Elements of Bread and Wine, at, or after the Consecration thereof, by any Person whatsoever. Which Act and Test therein prescrib'd were a great Security to the Protestant Religion; and therefore the Repeal and Abrogation of them were the great Design and Labour of the next Popish Reign.

Under these united Dangers of Popery and Fanaticism, it was the great Wisdom of the Archbishop and Bishops to prevail with the King to require and command, the more diligent use of publick Catechising in the Church, and to suppress all Schools set up by disaffected People, not conforming to the use of the Church Catechism: As appears by this Circular Letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury sent to every Suffragan by the Dean of the Province, the Ld Bp of London, in Form and manner following:

My Lords,

I Have receiv'd a Letter from his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, a Copy whereof I am requir'd to transmit to your Lordship, by which you will understand the Duty which his Majesty requires of your Lordship.

The Letter is as followeth.

"The King's most Excellent Majesty being truly sensible that the growing increase of the prevailing Sects and Disorders among us, proceed chiefly from the general neglect of instructing the younger sort of Persons, or their erroneous Instructions in the Grounds and Principles of true Religion, is therefore pleas'd to command me, that in his Name I require your Lordship, and by you, the rest of my Brethren, the Bishops of this Province, that by yourself and Officers, you will at all reasonable times reinforce the Execution of such Laws and Constitutions, as enable us to enjoyn the Use and Exercise of our Church Catechism; and that by the most effectual Remedies that may be, such as without License either publickly or privately teach School within your Lordships or their Jurisdiction be forthwith proceeded against, according to such Rules as are prescrib'd unto us for their Restraint; and to the end that this Mischief may be prevented for the future, he moreover strictly chargeth us, that none be admitted to that Office without such Subscription, Oaths and Declaration as are exactly requisite. But in the mean time I desire that your Lordship and they will with the first conveniency let me know, how we are already defective in these Particulars, that I may be able to give such Satisfaction as hereafter will be necessary. I bid your Ldship heartily farewell.

London-House,
Feb. 8. 1673.

Humfr. London.

1673. The Parliament were now ready to conclude their Business and their Session. On Wednes. Mar. 26. the Commons presented an Address to the King for the more effectual Restraining and Punishing of Popish Recusants, and for the better Security of the Protest.
Relig. And on Mon. 29. after Noon, his Majesty was present in the House of Lords, and the Commons attending, the Speaker presented several Bills, to which his Majesty was pleased to give his Royal Assent. The publick Acts were these that follow:

1. "An Act for raising the Sum of Twelve hun"dred thirty eight thousand seven hundred and fit"ty Pounds, for Supply of his Majesty's extraor"dinary Occasions.
2. "An Act for the King's Majesty's most gra"cious, general, and free Pardon.
3. "An Act for continuing a former Act con"cerning Coinage.
4. "An Act for enabling his Maj. to make Leases
"of his Lands belonging to his Dutchy of Cornwal.
5. "An Act for preventing Dangers which may "happen from Popish Recusants.
6. "An Act for reviving the Judicature for the "Determination of Differences touching Houses "burn'd down and demolished by reason of the late
"Fire which happen'd in London, and for rebuild"ing the Navy-Office.
7. "An Act for taking off Aliens Duties upon "Commodities of the Growth and Manufactures
"of this Nation.
8. "An Act for Encouraging the Greenland and "Eastland Trades, and for the better securing the "Plantation Trades.
9. "An Act for Repeal of a Clause in a former "Act to prohibit Salesmen from selling fat Cattel.
10. "An Act to enable the County Palatine of "Durham to send Knights and Burgesies to serve "in Parliament.

After which the Parliament adjourned till the 20th of October next ensuing. On the Day before their Rising, the Lords, upon reading the Petitions of James Percy, setting forth his Claim to the Title of Earl of Northumberland, &c. and his refusing to make appear any Probability towards the said Claim, notwithstanding he had a Months time given him before, and caused above forty Witnesses to be sworn at the Bar; and their Lordships having fully heard the elder Countess of Northumberland's Counsel, who chargeth the said James Percy to be an Impostor: it was Resolved, that both the Petitions of the said James Percy for his Claim, &c. should be dismissed the House; and they were dismissed accordingly.
And by a succeeding Vote it was resolved, that the Consideration of what farther Proceedings should be had against the said James Percy, concerning the said Imposture, should be taken up the next Morning. This Percy was a Trunk-Maker who came out of Ireland, and brought Evidence with him of his being descended from the antient noble Family of that Name. When rejected by the Lords, he carried on some Pretensions at Common Law; but being an Impostor, or at least a Beggar, he could have no Success. At the end of this Session, the new Speaker, Edward Seymour Esquire, was thought to have deserved so well of the King and his Court, that on Apr. 9. he was sworn and admitted one of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, and took his Place at the Board accordingly.

At the beginning of April, those Lords of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council who were appointed a Committee for the Redemption of Captives from Algiers and Sallee, publish'd a List of all those Persons who had been Redeemed from Captivity by the Monies collected by vertue of his Majesty's Letters Patents dated in August 1670. and gave notice, that the whole Collection paid into the Chamber of London amounted unto Twenty thousand and five hundred Pounds; out of which Sum, Fifteen thousand one hundred and seventy Pounds had been already issued out for the Redemption of Two hundred forty seven Persons; and the Remainder was impressed and actually employing towards the carrying on the said Redemption with all the Expedition that may be.

This Summer was full of Action at Sea: The Dutch, with their usual Diligence, were first abroad, and intended some Advantage by their early Expedition. For on April 30. O. S. Admiral De Ruyter sailed from the Maeße with forty two Ships of War, to the Mouth of the Thames, in hopes, by sinking some Vessels, to block up the River, and hinder the Canary, Bourdeaux, and New-Castle Fleets getting in; but they had happen'd to go up the River two Days before, and had given up Fifteen hundred Men to the Navy Royal. De Ruyter hearing this, returned to Schonevelt, where he was joined by Admiral Tromp with the Amsterdam Squadron; in the Command whereof, he succeeded the Baron Van Ghent, kill'd in the last Summer's Engagement. By May 12. the English Fleet was ready; and Prince Rupert, as Admiral, went on Board the Royal-Charles at Dungenes: and on May 16. the French Squadron, commanded by the Count D'Estree, came up and joined our Navy off of Rye. The king and the Duke went down to see the Fleet, and left them on May 19. ready to sail with the first fair Wind: Before his coming away, his Majesty made the Earl of Offory Rear-Admiral of the Blue Squadron. The first Engagement began near Schonevelt on May 28. Prince Rupert commanded our main Body, Sir Edward Spragge the Blue Squadron, and the Count D'Estree the White. The French were mingled with the English, to prevent their running-away, as they were said to have done in the Fight at Solebay the last Year. The English and French made about a hundred and ten Sail; the Dutch near a hundred. When De Ruyter saw the Confederates appear, he weigh'd Anchor to meet them. Tromp and Sir Edward Spragge began the Fight, which on every side was continued with great Fury till the dark Night divided them. The Dutch lost Vice-Admiral Schram, and Rear-Admiral Ulugh; our Captain Legg took one Dutch Man of War, but Captain Backer who lost it did bravely retake it:
The Deventer, another Dutch Ship of sixty Guns, was disabled; and striking on the Sand in her Return home, all the Men were drown'd except thirty.

The Dutch affirm they lost only this Ship, and that not by the Enemy; whereas the Confederates lost twelve, sunk or burnt, of which the most were French, the Fripou, the Thunderer, and several of their Firehips, which they knew not how to use.
It is certain that both Sides were well beaten, and therefore both Sides claim'd the Victory. De Ruyter, in his Letter to the Prince of Orange of June 8. says, We judge absolutely, that thus far the Victory (God be praised) is on the side of this State and your Highness.
And Prince Rupert writes thus to the Lord Arlington,
I thought it best for us to cease the Pursuit, and drop Anchor where I now am. On the English side were kill'd Capt. Fowls, Capt. Werden, and Capt. Finch; Colonel Hamilton, had his Leg shot off: The Captains Legg, Holmes, Wetwang, and Story, signaliz'd themselves in this Battel, which drove back the English to their Coasts, and the Dutch to Schonevelt. The greatest Argument of the Victory inclining to the Dutch, was their setting out early again, and sailing to the English Coasts, where they challenged and attacked the English and French Fleet. On June 4.
Tromp and Spragge were the first again that engaged:
The Fight lasted six hours without much Loss on either side; so that both again pretended to the Victory, and both indeed deserved it. De Ruyter wrote to the States thus; The next day we saw the Enemies were

1673. were gone, and doubt not but they made to the Thames: we satisfied our selves with pursuing them half-way, and then return'd to our former Station. And Prince Rupert thus to my Lord Arlington: About Midnight the Dutch Fleet tacked — At Two in the Morning we tacked also, and stood after them; at Six seeing no likelihood of reaching them before they would get within their Sands, we thought it to no purpose to pursue them any farther: so we tacked again, and stood for our own Coast. All we can say more of the Enemy is, That they went off in great Disorder, leaving us ignorant of what Loss they have sustained. By the latter end of July the English and French, having repaired their Ships, return'd to the Coasts of Zelund; and De Ruyter left his Port of Schonevelt, to meet the Enemy. A third Engagement began on Monday Aug. 11. Count D'Estree led the Confederates White Squadron, Prince Rupert the main Line, and Sir Edward Spragge the Blue Squadron. The French, as was usual for them to do in this War, fled, and stay'd out of the Reach of the Cannon. Tromp and Spragge fought with their wonted Bravery: Tromp forc'd Sir Edward Spragge twice out of his Ship, and Spragge compell'd Admiral Tromp once to change his. Bankert of the Zealand Squadron met with very little Resistance from D'Estree in the White; so he join'd with De Ruyter, who was engag'd with Prince Rupert, and very much distress'd him. Vice-Admiral de Liefds and Smeers were kill'd of the Dutch; and Sir Edward Spragge drown'd, a Cannon striking his Boat and sinking it, as he was going out of his second Ship into the third. De Ruyter writes, The Fight lasted till Night, and then the Enemy made away to their Coasts, leaving us, God be thank'd, Masters of the Place of Battle.

A Third Engagement.

The English had shipp'd 6000 Men, commanded by Marechal de Schonbergh, for a Descent upon the Coasts of Holland; but their not being able to attempt any thing at Land, was an Argument that they were not superiour at Sea.

Tabago taken from the Dutch.

The Island of Tabago was, at the beginning of this Year, taken from the Dutch by the English, under the Command of Sir Tobias Bridges, with a Booty of 400 Prisoners, and as many Negroes.

And St. Helena lost and regain'd.

The Dutch, in Reprisal, had seized upon our Isle of St. Helena, which would have proved a great Obstruction to our East-India Trade, had it not been soon after regained by Capt. Mundy, with a more fatal Loss to the Dutch of three very considerable East-India Ships: for which acceptable Service, the Capt. at his Return in August, was Knighted by his Majesty.

Honours and Promotions.

As to Civil Offices and Honours, the Lord Clifford, being a profess'd Papist, finding himself disabled by the Test, resign'd into his Majesty's Hands his Staff as Lord High Treasurer of England, on June 19. which his Majesty, by the Recommendation of the Duke of Buckingham, was pleas'd to deliver the same Day to Sir Thomas Osborne Knight and Baronet, and lately created Lord Viscount Osborne of Dunblain in Scotland. Soon after, on the Death of Sir Robert Long, Knight and Baronet, Auditor of his Majesty's Exchequer, that profitable Place was given to Sir Robert Howard, who left his Office of Secretary to the Lord High Treasurer of England to Charles Bertue Esquire, Brother to the Earl of Lindsey. But the greatest Change at Court was by the Disgrace of the Lord Chancellor Shaftsbury, who had lately set himself at the Head of the discontented Party, and earnestly oppos'd all those Measures which were thought to be tending to the Growth of Popery, or to the Exercise of Arbitrary Power. When Serjeant Thurland took his Oath before him, as one of the Barons of the Exchequer, he gave him this bold Advice: Let me recommend to you so to manage the King's Justice and the Revenues, as the King may have most Profit, and the Subject least Vexation. Raking for old Debts, the Number of Informations, Projects upon Concealments, I cou'd not find (in the eleven Years Experience I had in this Court) ever to advantage the Crown; but such Proceedings have, for the most part, deliver'd up the King's good Subjects into the hands of the worst of Men, Clerks of the Court, Custom-house Officers, and Excise-men. For daring thus to limit the King's Revenue and his Power, and for taking other Liberties of speaking freely against the Popish Interest at Court, he became very uneasie to the Duke of York, who prevail'd with his Brother to remove him. It was by this Procurement of his Royal Highness, that the King sent for the Earl to Whitehall on Sunday Nov. 9. and demanded the Seals of him, which he resign'd with great Cheerfulness, and putting on his Sword, he return'd home as unconcern'd as if he had brought the Mace back with him. The same Day he was visit'd by Prince Rupert, and most of the Peers and Persons of Quality about Town, who acknowledg'd that the Nation was oblig'd to him for the just Discharge of the Trust that had been reposed in him, and return'd him their Thanks. The Papists were so angry with him, that they began to prosecute him, not only into Disgrace but into Ruin; for they examined the Court Rolls to meet with something on which to ground an Accusation in Law against him: And picking out some Pretensions, they presented a Paper to the King's Council, containing Matters for a Charge of Corruption and other Misdemeanours; but, to their great Mortification, the Council reported, that nothing could be drawn out of that Paper for any legal Information. And indeed this Justice must be done to his Lordship's Memory, that he executed this great Office with singular Integrity and Honour.

The Great seal was immediately given to Sir Hennege Finch Knight and Baronet, his Majesty's Attorney General, with the Title of Lord Keeper. He was Nephew to Sir John Finch, Lord Keeper in the Reign of K. Charles I. and had the Parts and Elocution of his Uncle.

As to Proceedings in Parliament, on Monday Oct. 20. the two Houses met, according to their last Adjournment, and were Prorog'd by Commission to Monday the 27th instant. The Commons seem'd very uneasie in their Fears of Popery, and a Popish Faction at Court, and presented to his Majesty two bold Addresses against the Match which had been this Summer Treated and Concluded, by his Majesty's Consent, between James Duke of York and Mary Princess of Modena: But, contrary to their Opinion and Importunity, the King told them it was too late to prevent it. And the Liberty they took of interposing in this Affair, was so unacceptable to the Court, that on Tuesday Nov. 4. his Majesty was pleas'd to Prorogue the Parliament till the 7th of January next. In the mean time, to make some shew of satisfying the Commons of England in suppressing the Fears of Popery, his Majesty was pleas'd on Novemb. 14. to call before him in Council the Lords Chief Justices, and the Lord Chief Baron, and to command them to consider of the most effectual means of putting the Laws in Execution for preventing the Growth of Popery, and speedily to Report the same to his Majesty: And at the same time his Majesty was pleas'd to order, "That no Person who is a Roman Catholick, or is reputed to be of the Roman Catholick Religion, do presume, after the 18th Day of this instant Novemb. to come into his Majesty's Royal Presence, or to his Palace, or to the Place where his Court shall be. And accordingly, the Lord Steward and Lord Chamberlain of his Majesty's Household, were order'd to cause this his Majesty's Pleasure to be effectually put in Execution. And on Decemb. 10. was pleas'd farther to declare in Council, "That no Popish Recusant, or reputed so to be, should presume to come into St. James's House, or into the Park adjoining. On Wednesday Jan. 7. the two Houses, in pursuance to their late Prorogation, met at Westminster; whither his Majesty, attended by many of the Peers, went by Water; and being come into the House of Lords, and there seated in due Solemnity, the House of Commons was called up, and his Majesty made a short Speech to the two Houses:

Proceedings in Parliament.

Addresses against the Match of the Duke of York.

The King's Labours to quiet the Fears of Popery.

Parliament meet.

1673. Houfes: After which the new Lord Keeper made a large Deduction of the Dutch Averfenefs to Peace, their uncivil Demeanour to the King's Plenipotentiaries at Cologn, and how indirectly they dealt with the King in all the Overtures of Peace; and therefore a neceffary Supply, proportionable to the Greatnefs of the King's Affairs, was not only demanded, but care to be taken for Payment of the Bankers Debt, otherwife multitudes of the King's loyal Subjects would be undone. But both Houfes began to fhew their Difcontent at the Continuance of a War with Holland, and at a Progreff of the French Arms, and at the Prevalence of Popifh Counfels. Firft therefore the Lords prefented an Adrefs, befecching his Majefty, " That he would be graciously pleas'd to ifue out his Royal Proclamation, requiring all Papifts and reputed Papifts, within five Miles of London, Wefminfter, or Southmark, not being Houholders, nor attending any Peer of this Realm as a menial Servant, to repair to their refpective Dwellings, or to depart ten Miles from the Cities and Borough aforefaid, and not to return during this Seflion of Parliament: And likewife, That his Majefty would be pleas'd to give Order to the Quarter-Seflions, that they give in a faithful Account of what Houholders are within the Cities or Borough aforefaid, and five Miles thereof, who are of that Profeflion; and, that the Quarter-Seflions do adjourn themfelves from time to time for that purpofe. And accordingly his Majefty did by Proclamation, dated Jan. 14. declare, " That he had ferioufly confider'd the Adrefs of his moft dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in this prefent Parliament affembled, and did accept it with much Contentment and Satisfaction: And as he had always manifefted his Zeal for the Prefervation of the true Religion eftablifhed in this Kingdom, and to hinder the Growth and Increase of the Popifh Religion; fo he was now ready, upon this Occafion, to prevent all Fears and Dangers that might arife by the Concourse of Perfons of that Profeflion in or near his Cities of London or Wefminfter, &c.

The Commons on Oct. 31. had voted, That confidering the prefent Condition of the Nation, they will not take into farther Confideration any Aids or Charges upon the Subject, except it fhall appear that the Obftinacy of the Dutch fhall render it neceffary, nor before this Kingdom be effectually fecured from Popery and Popifh Counfels, and other Grievances be duly redreffed. And they now joined with the Lords in another Adrefs to his Majefty to exprefs themfelves paffionately fenfible of the calamitous Condition of this Kingdom, not only by reafon of the War wherein it is at prefent involved, but many other intestine Differences and Divifions amongst us, which are chiefly occafioned by the undermining Contrivances of Popifh Recufants, whofe Numbers and Insolencies are greatly of late increas'd, and whofe refliefs Practices threaten a Subverfion both of Church and State. And indeed the Commons were now fo weary of the War with Holland, and fo apprehenfive of the Powers and Intrigues of France, and of the Delays in the Treaty now depending at Cologn, that they did in effect declare for a fpeedy Peace, and encourage the States of Holland to a fecret Correspondence with them on that occafion. And indeed it was this univerfal Inclination of the Parliament and People of England that induced the King to defer the French, and to make the United Provinces once more his Friends and Allies. And therefore on Jan. 24. his Majefty came to the Houfe of Lords, and fent for the Houfe of Commons, and communicated to both Houfes a Letter together with Propofitions for Peace, which he had received from the States-General of the United Provinces, by the Hands of the Spanifh Ambaffador: And on Jan. 27. the Commons, upon perufing the Propofals made by the States-General of the United Provinces, which the King had laid before them, agreed, That his Majefty be humbly defired to proceed in a Treaty with the faid States, in order to a fpeedy Peace. This Treaty was happily managed by Sir William Temple, and was concluded to the great Satisfaction of both Nations. It confifted of five Articles: By the firft the States agreed to the Right of the Flag to be paid to all the King's Ships: The fecond was for fettling Trade in the East-Indies: The third related to the Colony of Surinam: By the fourth, Both Sides were obliged to reftore all Places taken from each other during this War: By the fifth, the States bound themfelves to pay our King Eight hundred thoufand Patacoons. Thefe Articles were fign'd on Monday Feb. 9. at Whitehall by the Lords his Majefty's Commiffioners, and by the Marquis Del Preffino Extraordinary Ambaffadour of Spain, on the part of the States-General of the United Provinces, by vertue of the Power he had received from them. And on Wednesday Morning Feb. 11. his Majefty being come into the Houfe of Lords, and fending for the Commons, was pleas'd to acquaint them, " That he had made an honourable and (as he hop'd) a lafting Peace with the States-General of the United Provinces: which was entertained with an univerfal Satisfaction in both Houfes. This great Work being happily accomplifhed, his Majefty was pleas'd on Febr. 24. to Prorogue the Parliament till the 10th of November next. And to make good the Royal Promife given to the two Houfes of fuppreffing Popery, his Majefty gave Order in Council March 6. that the Lord Keeper do fignifie his Majefty's Pleafure to the Judges, that in their feveral Circuits they caufe the Laws againft Popifh Recufants to be put in execution; and that they accordingly give the faid Laws in charge for their fpeedy Conviction.

This Peace was chiefly owing to the victorious Progreff of the Prince of Orange, who with an Army of 25000 Men had fat down before Narden, and took it in fight of the Duke of Luxemburgh's Army, and fo put a fudden Stop to the French Career and Conquefts in thofe Parts: For, leaving his Pofts there well guarded, he march'd to the reft of his Army, took Bonn, and open'd a Passage for the German Forces to come over the Rhine into Flanders; upon which the French abandon'd all their Conquefts upon Holland in lefs time than they had made them, and began to wifh the War at an end, tho' they made fhew to the contrary. The Dutch were overjoy'd at this great and unexpected Turn of Affairs, and did juftly impute it chiefly to the great Wifdom and Conduct of the Prince of Orange; and therefore a greater Honour was done to him than to any of his illuftrious Anceftors: For now the States General not only confirm'd the Charge of Stadt Holder of the Provinces of Holland and West-Friesland in the Perfon of his Highnefs during Life, but fettled it likewife upon the Heirs Male of his Body born in lawful Wedlock, by a folemn Decree made Feb. 22. And on the fame Day the States of Zealand conferr'd the fame Dignity upon the Prince, and made him alfo chief hereditary Nobleman of that Province.

As to the State of Religion, The Fears and Jealoufies of Popery expreffed by the Parliament, and the Affurances given by his Majefty for quieting thofe Fears, have been already deliver'd. As to the Diffenters, they themfelves report their Hopes of Accommodation in this manner. They fay, that in the laft Seflion this Year, the Earl of Overy defird Mr. Baxter to draw up Terms of Union between the Conformifts and the Nonconformifts, in order to their joint vigorous oppofing Popery: And he told him, that Sir Thomas Osborne the new Lord Treasurer, Bifhop Merly of Winchefter, and feveral other great Men, were mightily for it; upon which he fent him Propofals for that purpofe, the chief of which were thefe.

That till the Nonconformists could be better provided for by Vacancies, they should have Liberty to be Schoolmasters, or Assistants to Incumbents, or to preach Lectures in their Churches, either such Lectures as were already endow'd with Maintenance, or such as the People should be willing to maintain: And that in the mean time their Meeting Places that were convenient should be continu'd in use as Chapels. That Liberty be allow'd for Neighbours joining together in praying to God and Praising him, and repeating Sermons, in their private Houses without Molestation. That for the Liturgy, &c. none be oblig'd to read the Apocryphal Lessons: That it be enough if an Incumbent once in a Quarter or half Year, read the greatest part of the Service for that time; and that it be at other times done by his Curate or Assistant. That Lecturers be not oblig'd to read the Service, or at most that it be enough if once in half a Year, they read the greatest part of what is appointed for that time. That Parents have liberty to dedicate their own Children to God in Baptism, without being oblig'd to find Godfathers and Godmothers. That the use of the Sign of the Cross be left to the Ministers Inclination and Discretion. That Ministers be not forc'd to baptize a Child whose Parents are deny'd the Communion of the Church, unless some serious Christian undertake for its Education, according to the Christian Covenant. That none be forc'd to receive the Sacrament, while unfit or averse. That Ministers be not forc'd to deliver the Sacrament to any unbaptiz'd Persons, or to such as won't own their Baptismal Covenant, and publicly profess their Adherence to it; or to such as are guilty of scandalous Immoralities, till they have profess'd Repentance. That Ministers be not forc'd to publish an Excommunication or Absolution against their Consciences, upon the Decree of a Lay-Chancellor, &c. or harass'd by attending their Courts to bring Witnesses against those, to whom they have refused the Sacrament upon the aforesaid Reasons. That it be left to the discretion of Ministers, whom they will absolve in Sicknes, and to whom they will give the Sacrament, and over whom they at their Interment will use these few Words, which import the Justification and Salvation of the Deceased: And that the Sick and Dying have the Liberty of choosing what Ministers they will to attend and assist them, without Restraint. That no Ministers be forc'd to deny the Sacrament, to such as think it unlawful to take it kneeling. That the use of the Surplice be left indifferent: And that People who live under an ignorant or scandalous Minister, have Liberty to join with those with whom they can better profit, in any neighbouring Church of the same Diocese, paying the Incumbent his Dues. That no Ordain'd Ministers be put upon renouncing their Ordination but upon proof of their fitness for the Ministry, receive by Word, or a written Instrument, a legal Authority to Exercise their Ministry in any Congregation in his Majesty's Dominions, where they shall be lawfully called. That no Excommunicate Person as such be imprison'd or ruin'd. And that after all Christian Lenity be us'd to all conscientious Dissenters; and that the Tolerable be tolerated under Laws of Peace and Safety.

Upon the whole he added, "That if the Sacraments were but left free to be administer'd and receiv'd by none but Volunteers: And Liberty granted to Ministers to preach in those Churches where the Common Prayer was read by others; and the Subscriptions contain'd nothing that a Conscientious Man might need to scruple; he thought it might take in all, even the Independents as well as Presbyterians. Mr. Baxter gave the Earl of Orery these Proposals, and he after some time return'd them with Bishop Morley's Strictures or Animadversions, which fully discover'd that all his Professions for Abatement and Concord were deceitful, and that he intended no such thing, for he would not make the least Abatement in any thing of Moment.

"A little after, some great Men of the House of Commons drew up a Bill for Accommodation, to take off Oaths, Subscriptions and Declarations, except the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and Subscriptions to the Doctrine of the Church of England, according to the 13th of Elizabeth but shewing it to the Bishop of Winchester, he caus'd them to forbear, and broke the Design. And in the mean time, that it might not seem to be for nothing that he oft pretended to be of so peaceable a Disposition, he further'd an Act only to take off Assent and Consent, and the Renunciation of the Covenant. But when other Bishops were against even this shew of Abatement he told them openly in the House; that had it been but to abate them a Ceremony, he would not have spoken in it. But he knew that they were bound to the same things still, by other Clauses or Obligations if these were repeal'd.

The King was thought to have been so much offended with the Proceedings of the Parliament in their last Session, that it was generally believ'd he had no mind to meet them again, tho' they had been so long endear'd to him, by so many agreeable Acts and continual Supplies. Hence the popular Rumour was, that his Majesty intended to dissolve the Parliament: But the King apprehending that a Report of this Nature might irritate some of the leading Members, and be otherwise prejudicial to his Affairs, he publish'd a Proclamation given at Whitehall May 2. declaring, "That whereas of late many Persons ill-affected to the Government have assumed to themselves a Liberty in their ordinary Discourses, to censure and defame the Proceedings of State, whereby they endeavour to create and nourish in the Minds of his Majesty's good Subjects, an evil Opinion of things they understand not, and further to promote their seditious Ends, they do daily invent false News, and spread the same abroad amongst the People, to the great Scandal of his Majesty's Government: Whereof his Majesty taking notice, and in particular of that very false Report of an Intention to dissolve this present Parliament, which hath not been under deliberation, his Majesty seeing no cause to change his Resolutions taken touching their meeting. And therefore his Majesty would look upon the Spreaders of that Report as Persons seditiously inclin'd and ill-affected to his Service, and was resolv'd to suppress that unlawful and undutiful kind of Discourse by a most strict and exemplary Punishment of all such Offenders as shall hereafter be discover'd. But however, his Majesty might think fit to continue this Name of a long Parliament, he did not seem inclinable to suffer them this Year to sit and Remonstrate against Popery, and therefore on September 22. his Majesty was pleas'd to cause a Proclamation to be publish'd for the farther Proroguing the Parliament, from Nov. 10. next to the 13th of April ensuing. Yet in the mean time to seem to answer the Addresses of their last meeting, his Majesty was pleas'd to shew a publick Care for suppressing Popery, and convicting Romish Priests and Jesuits, who were daily more numerous and more insolent in the City and Country. Therefore on June 10. his Majesty in Council at Hampton-Court, did order his Royal Proclamation to be publish'd to satisfy his People, that having been inform'd that many Priests and Jesuits, in contempt of former Orders and Proclamations, did continue and harbour “ themselves in the City of London and Suburbs thereof, and other parts of the Kingdom, to the manifest contempt of his Majesty's Royal Authority and the Laws and Religion established, and notwithstanding his Majesty's Commands to have the Laws against them given in Charge in all Counties, yet none of late had been Apprehended or Discover'd; his Majesty thereupon, of his pious Care for the preservation of the Protestant Religion, and for the prevention of the Endeavours of such Priests and Jesuits who seduce his Subjects from the same, hath resolv'd that so many of the said Priests as can be found shall be speedily transported. And that such Discoveries might be the better encouraged, his Majesty had given Order to the Lord High Treasurer of England to cause speedy payment to be made of the sum of five Pounds for every Priest or Jesuit so discover'd.

Popish Plot.

There was certainly great Reason for the popular Jealousies of Popery: For the Plot that had been more or less been carried on for several Years to support, if not restore the Romish Religion in England, began now to shew it self in a more open manner, as appears by several Letters written by Mr. Coleman, the Duke of Tork's Secretary, to several Foreign Correspondents; the first that came to view was this, directed to the French King's Confessor, dated June 29. 1674.

Coleman's Letters.

“ I Am commanded to tell you, that his Royal Highness my Master, is very sensible of the Friendship of his most Christian Majesty, which he will endeavour to cultivate very carefully, and to give him all possible Assurances of it, to take away all Jealousies that his Enemies would raise to the contrary.

“ That his Royal Highness has done nothing in any manner whatsoever, nor in any place, against the Interest of his most Christian Majesty, but hath render'd him all the good Offices he hath been capable of.

“ That as for recalling the Parliament, and touching my Lord A. . . . his Highness is altogether of the Opinion of his Majesty, that neither one nor other is useful, but quite contrary, very dangerous as well for England as France, and that his most Christian Majesty is in great danger of losing the Neutrality of England at the next Session (if the Parliament meet) as he lost its Alliance by the Peace of Holland at the last; because the Lower-House and their Friends (as the furious Protestants, and the Malecontents in the House of Lords) have a Design to lessen his Royal Highness, and root out the Catholick Religion, and they think they cannot make use of any other fitter means to attain their End, than to raise the Dutch, and to perplex his most Christian Majesty as much as lies in their Power.

“ That his Highness doubts not but it is absolutely necessary for the Interest of his most Christian Majesty and his Royal Highness, to use all Endeavours to hinder the meeting of the Parliament by perswading his Britannick Majesty, that his Greatness, his Honour and his Quiet, are no less concerned therein than theirs; so that if his most Christian Majesty would write freely his Thoughts thereupon to his Britannick Majesty, to forewarn him of the Danger he apprehends from thence, and would withal think fit to make him the same generous Offers of his Purse, to perswade him to dissolve the present Parliament, as he hath done to his Highness for the Election of another, perhaps he would succeed therein by the Assistance we would give him here.

26 Car. II.

“ As for another Parliament, it would be eafie enough to get such an one as we wish for, the Constitutions of our Parliaments being of such a nature, that as there is nothing to be hop'd for by the King from an old one, so there is nothing to be feared from a new one, because such an one at their first meeting must needs assist his Majesty so far as to enable him to acknowledge his Obligations both to his most Christian Majesty and to all the World, &c.

And by this other Letter from Mr. Coleman to the French King's Confessor without Date, but noted by him to have been written by him in Answer to a Letter of Sept. 25. 1674.

“ HIS Royal Highness has received the Letter that you sent him by Sir William Throckmorton, which he has answer'd to you himself; and besides he hath commanded me to testify to you the great Esteem he hath for the Friendship of his most Christian Majesty, and for yours, and to assure you that he will not fail to cultivate it with all his Power; and that preferring the sincere Faith of a Christian, and the Word of a Man of Honour, before all Subtilties and even all the Advantages of the World, he gives you them both as a Pledge of the ardent Desire he has to continue always a strict Alliance with his most Christian Majesty and to entertain also an intimate Correspondence with you.

“ For the first Point of your Letter, his Royal Highness has commanded me to tell you, that he will govern himself according to your Advice, and treat of nothing concerning the Catholick Religion with Monsieur Rouviigny, nor with any other Person than yourself, but that he will communicate to you all things he shall find necessary for the good of the Catholicks, and shall be very well pleased to receive Advices from you thereupon.

“ For the rest, his Royal Highness does a little wonder that he hears nothing from Monsieur Rouviigny touching the second Point of your Letter, since you have written so positively, that he had Order to confirm and procure Execution of what his most Christian Majesty propos'd to him the second of June last by your Mediation, and you by that of Sir William Throckmorton's. He (his Royal Highness) has omitted, till this time, to acquaint you with the small Success that he has had, as expecting daily that Monsieur Rouviigny would impart to him the Commission of which you made mention to him in your Letter; but having heard nothing yet of that matter, and being oblig'd to go out of Town for fifteen Days or three Weeks, he thinks fit to send you back Sir William Throckmorton, to acquaint you with the Progress of this Business, and to pray you to inform yourself of what has been able to hinder it.

“ His most Christian Majesty made a very generous offer to his Royal Highness of the assistance of his Purse, to enable him to defend them both from the Evils that threatned them, and by good luck his Royal Highness has labour'd with so much diligence and success, that the Dangers which they apprehended are a little put off; but one thing more is necessary for the perfect securing their Affairs, and without making one step more, all that he has already done will signify nothing. For that the assistance of his most Christian Majesty is no less necessary at present than heretofore, to subdue intirely those, who being exasperated against his most Christian Majesty, as much as against his Royal Highness, only because he is so un“ alterably addicted to the Interest of his most “ Christian Majesty, will exercise their Malice “ and their Rage with more Brutality than ever, “ if they find occasion for it hereafter.

“ If you can therefore, by your Credit, obtain “ from his most Christian Majesty the Accom“ plishment of the Offer of his Purse for raising “ the Reputation of his Royal Highness in the “ Opinion of his Britannick Majesty, and for put“ ting him in condition to resist the sharpest Bat“ teries of the Adversaries of his most Christian “ Majesty and Royal Highness; to wit, the Pos“ sibility they pretend to get Money from the “ Parliament, and the Impossibility of having any “ elsewhere, by which they often keep the “ Mind of his Britannick Majesty in suspense, “ and wherein they place the Hope they have “ to conquer him at last.

“ There will nothing more remain to be fear“ ed by his most Christian Majesty, or his Royal “ Highness, but his Royal Highness will be able “ to dissolve the Parliament with ease; and af“ terwards, in recompence of the said Assistance, “ will perform on his part all that his most Chri“ stian Majesty shall ask of him, and will pro“ ceed with Sincerity upon the Word of a Prince “ (that no Man can reproach him with the Vio“ lation of) for the Interest of his most Ch. Maj.

In a third Letter of Mr. Coleman to the Pope's Interuncio, dated Septemb. 4. 1674, he tells him, “ That the Duke's principal Design is, to use the “ Pope's Interposition, and by that means to estab“ lish himself in the Possession of his Estate “ through the Assistance of France and Spain, and “ to turn all their Cares for the Ease of the Pope's “ Friends, and particularly for the Catholicks of “ the Church against their great Enemies; and “ assures him he will find, that the Pope never “ had an Occasion so favourable as at this hour, “ to enrich those of his Family, and to augment “ the Number of his Friends; and if he lets it “ slip, he will never find the like: So that if ever “ they propose to make use of the Treasure of the “ Church, it is now they ought to do it, for they “ can demand nothing that the Duke will not be “ capable to do for the Pope's Friends. And in “ another Letter of Octob. 23. 1674, Mr. Coleman to “ the Interuncio begins thus: “ You agree with “ me, that Money is the only means of bringing “ the King into the Duke's Interest, and of dis-“ engaging him from the Parliament; and you “ must also agree with me, that nothing can “ more promote the Interest of the Catholick “ Party, which is the principal Object of the “ Duke's Care and Affection, and of the Hatred “ of the Parliament, and which must hope or “ fear, according as the one or the other of them “ increase in Power. These Letters alone, with“ out any other concurring Evidence, are more than “ sufficient to prove, that the Roman Catholicks in “ England were full of Hopes and Expectations un“ der the Influence and Protection of the Duke of “ York, and under the Prospect of his Succession to “ the Crown: not to say that they knew the King “ would fall into the same Measures so far as was “ consistent with his present Peace and Quiet.

Honours and Preferments.

As to Offices, and Honours conferr'd this Year; On April 23. in a Chapter of the most noble Order of the Garter, the Earl of Albany was elected a Companion, and was accordingly introduced and invested with the George and Garter amidst the usual Ceremonies, and was install'd at Windsoer on May 28. And on May 30. the Attlievements of Count Mercin, Knight of the Order, lately deceas'd, were offer'd up in the accus'tom'd manner. Robert Earl of Sunderland was, by his Majesty's Favour, admitted into the Privy Council; and having taken the usual Oaths, took his Place at the Board on May 27. And the Earl of Peterborough was sworn into the same Honour of a Privy Counsellor, at Hampton Court, on Jul. 1.

The Duke of Buckingham, who had been a personal Favourite of the King, began now again to decline in the good Opinion of his Majesty. He had by his own Interest made two Lord Treasurers, but was not to be left able to make a third.
Being Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, his Majesty, by his Letters to the University, declared that Place vacant; and on July 15. the Senate of the University, in a full Assembly, unanimously elected his Grace the Duke of Monmouth to succeed him, who was install'd at Worcester-House in London Sept. 3. the Vice Chancellor Dr. Spencer making an eloquent Speech in English, and Dr. Yeman the University Orator in Latin, upon that Occasion: and when the Ceremony was over, the new Chancellor treated the whole Company, being near 300 Persons, with extra ordinary Magnificence. Sir Leoline Jenkins and Sir Joseph Williamson Knights, his Majesty's Ambassa-dours Extraordinary and Plenipotentiaries for the Treaty at Cologne, arriv'd at Whitehall May 10.
and were very graciously received by his Majesty.
And for a Reward of this Service, Sir Joseph Williamson, having been one of the Clerks of the Privy Council, was now made Principal Secretary of State, and Privy Counsellor, having the Oaths administr'd unto him on Sept. 11. by the Advancement of the Earl of Arlington, who, upon the Resignation of the Earl of St. Albans, receiv'd the Staff of Lord Chamberlain of his Majesty's Houhold, with this publick Reason given, That it was in Recompence of his long and faithful Service, and particularly for his having performed the Office of Principal Secretary of State for the space of twelve Years, to his Majesty's great Satisfaction. The place of one of the Clerks in Council being so vacated by the Preferment of Sir Joseph Williamson, his Majesty was pleas'd to confer it Sept. 16. upon Thibit Lloyd Esq. The Earl of Stratford was sworn of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council on Dec. 3. His Majesty being nobly entertain'd at Guild Hall on Octob. 29. when Sir Robert Viner was sworn Lord Mayor, did most graciously con-descend to the Acceptance of the Freedom of that City, in the Chamberlain's Office, from the Hands of Sir Thomas Player: Upon which the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council unanimously agreed to testify their deepest Sense of so unparalleld a Favour and Honour done to the City, beyond the Example of all his Progenitors. And cordingly the Lord Mayor, attended by his Brethren and the Commons, waited on his Majesty Dec. 18. in the Banqueting-house; where, on his Knees, he presented the King with the Copy of the said Freedom, curiously written on Vellum, and adorned with Gilding after the best manner, in a large square Box of massy Gold; the Seal of the said Freedom hanging at it, inclosed in another Box of Gold, set all over with large Diamonds to a considerable Value: which his Majesty was pleas'd graciously to accept, with many Expressions of great Kindness to the City. At the beginning of Hilary Term, Sir Francis North, his Majesty's Attorney General, being, in consideration of his faithful Services, designed by his Majesty to succeed Sir John Vaughan late Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common-Pleas, appeared in the high Court of Chancery, and was sworn Serjeant: After he had performed all the Formalities belonging to that Degree, the Lord Keeper of the Great Seal came into the Court of Common Pleas, and declar'd the King's Pleasure to him in an eloquent Speech: Sir Francis North standing in the middle of the Bar of the said Court, made his Acknowledgments of the King's 1674. great Favour, and return'd his humble Thanks to his Majesty, and was immediately conducted from thence between the two ancientest Serjeants into the said Court, where the Lord Keeper delivered unto him his Patent of the said Office: And after he had taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and the Oath of chief Justice of that Court, the Lord Keeper put on his square Cap, and he took his Seat of Chief Justice, and afterwards entertained the Lord Keeper, and divers of the Nobility, and all the Judges and Serjeants, at Dinner at Serjeants-Inn in Chancery-Lane. On Feb. 10. his Majesty was graciously pleas'd, in consideration of the eminent Loyalty and good Services of Glascock Esq; to cause him to be sworn one of the Masters of Request, in the room of Fervis Hollis Esq; deceased.

Abroad the great Action was the Battle of Senneff, between the French under the Command of the Prince of Conde, and the Confederates led by the Prince of Orange. — The Confederate Army being on their March toward Limbo, the French fell upon their Rear, which soon came to a furious Engagement. Sir William Temple, in his Memoirs, has thus described it: "As the Numbers on both sides were not much different when the Fight began, so were those esteemed that fell in this Battle, and to amount to about six or seven thousand on each side; but of the French many more Officers and Gentlemen than were usual in proportion to the common Soldiers. When the Night parted the Armies, the French retired back to their former Quarters; and next Morning the Confederates marched to that which they designed when they broke up the Day before. The Allies claimed the Victory, because they were left upon the Field; and the French, upon the greater Number of Prisoners and Standards they carried away: but whoever had the Honour, they both felt the Loss. There was a Letter intercepted from the Prince of Conde to the French King; wherein he gave him an Account, that upon a general Review of his Army, he found himself but in a sorry condition, as having lost the Flower of his Infantry, and the best part of his Horse, and therefore did not think himself strong enough to hazard a second Engagement. And as this generous Prince was very ingenious in the Acknowledgment of his Loss, he was no less just to his great Adversary the Prince of Orange, by giving him the Character, that He had acted like an old Captain in all, but only venturing himself too much like a young Man. But more full yet was that of General Zouch's Letter to the States; wherein, amongst others, he used these Expressions: "I have endeavour'd to discharge my Duty in attending his Highness the Prince of Orange during the bloody and famous Battle between the Confederate Army and that of the most Christian King, the happy Issue of which has proved so much to the Glory of the Prince of Orange, who shewed upon that Occasion the Prudence of an aged Captain, the Courage of a Cesar, and the undaunted Bravery of a Marius. All which, my Lords, I speak without Flattery, which is contrary to my Nature."

While the Peace between England and Holland was in Agitation, the English Ambassador Sir William Temple acquainted the Prince of Orange with the King's personal Kindness and Esteem for him, and with his Majesty's Resolution to observe and cultivate a Friendship with the States, and his Desires to see a General Peace restor'd to Christendom, wherein his Majesty intended to act wholly in concert with his Highness, whose Opinion, as to the Thing and Conditions most necessary, Sir William desir'd to understand as soon and as fully as he could. The Prince answer'd the Ambassador with the Expressions of Duty and Kindness to his Majesty, and desires a new Union between the two Nations, which he thought alone could make his Majesty happy at home and abroad: But as to a Peace, his Highness seem'd averse to it, unless it could be made with good Advantage to the Spaniard, a firm Security to the States, and upon the lasting Ballance of Europe. The Ambassador enter'd upon one thing more with him, which was upon occasion of the many discontented Persons in England, at the Course of the last Ministry and War, who were suspected to have trinkled at least with Holland, about the raising of Seditions, and perhaps Insurrections in England, if the War had continued; and to that end told his Highness what the King suspected of some of his Subjects, without naming any, and how much service it would be to his Majesty to know them more certainly, and how kind it would be to discover them: But the Prince was stanch, and said, He was sure the King would not press him upon a thing so much against all Honour, as to betray Men that profess'd to be his Friends.

Sir William having transmitted an Account to England of all this, had no Orders nor Returns upon it: But about the beginning of Decemb. the Earl of Arlington was sent over into Holland with some Instructions to adjust all Matters with his Highness. His Lordship being arrived at the Hague, told Sir William Temple, that he was come over to set some Things right between the King and the Prince that he doubt'd were amiss, and to settle a perfect Kindness and Confidence between them for the future. The Prince did not seem inclinable to the Overtures made by the Lord Arlington, and only said, that the Fortune of the Parties might change in another Campaign, which none but his Majesty could prevent by inducing France to comply with such Terms as he thought just and safe for the rest of Christendom. And we are told, "That the Prince shew'd himself dissatisfied at the Arrogance and Insolence wherewith Arlington had enter'd upon all his Expostulations with him; and that not only in the Subject of his Discourse, as if he pretended to deal with a Child that he could by his Wit make to believe what he pleas'd; but in the Manner of it, as if he had taken himself for the Prince of Orange, and him for Lord Arlington; That all he said was so Artificial, and he gave such false Colours to things, every body knew that he, who was a plain Man, could not bear it; and was never so weary of any Conversation in his Life: And, in short, he did not seem well satisfied with the King's Intentions upon that Errand, tho' he said he was sure his Majesty never intended he should act in the manner he had, if he remember'd he was his Nephew, tho' nothing else."

As to the nearer Concerns of Religion, the State of Religion, who had Apprehension and Judgment (when applied) equal to the greatest of his Predecessors, did clearly perceive it to be the Sense of his Council, and the Voice of his People, that he should support the Establish'd Church, with a strict Hand upon the Papists, and with a moderate Restraint of the Dissenters, chiefly because their Division gave Advantage to the other Enemy. On this Principle of Wisdom his Majesty command'd his own Inclination, and during the long recesses of Parliament, to quiet the Minds of his Subjects, he published this Declaration for enforcing a late Order made in Council.

per method for attaining and preserving the Peace and Safety both of Church and State. As therefore we find it necessary, that the Laws should be put in execution with more Care and Diligence than of late they have been, so also we think it expedient, that the Orders we have already given for that purpose, should be made publick in such a manner that all Men may find themselves oblig'd to take notice of the same, and to give a due Obedience thereunto. For which Reason we have thought fit to declare, and do hereby publish and declare our Royal Will and Pleasure, that our Order made in Council on Wednesday the third Day of this instant February, and since printed and published, be exactly observed by all and every Person and Persons to whom it shall or may appertain: And more particularly we Require and Command, that the Convictions of Popish Reculants be every where Encourag'd, Quick'n'd and made Effectual; and that all Convictions as soon as they shall be perfected, be forthwith certified into the Exchequer, and that speedy Process do issue upon all such Convictions as are or shall be Certified; and that care be taken, that no Persons of Quality who shall be suspected to be Popish Reculants, be omitted to be presented; and that no delay be used, nor any practice suffered, which may hinder or obstruct the completing of such Convictions as are now preparing. And we do strictly Charge and Command, that no Mans be said in any part of this Kingdom, the Chapels of our dearest Consort the Queen, and the Chapels of Foreign Ministers only excepted. And to prevent all extraordinary Resort to those Chapels, by such who are not menial Servants to the Queen, or to Foreign Ministers, we declare that every such Offender shall incur the Forfeiture of one hundred Marks, provided by the Statute made in the twenty third Year of Queen Elizabeth, whereof one Third part shall be given to the Informer for his farther Reward and Encouragement. And we require all Officers and Ministers of Justice, to cause diligent Search to be made in all other places where they shall hear or suspect that Mans is said, and to cause all Offenders in this kind to be apprehended and proceeded with according to Law. And we forewarn all our Subjects, that they presume not to send any Person to be Educated abroad in any Popish College or Seminary; and we command all Parents or Guardians of any Person or Persons, now remaining in any such College or Seminary, that they cause the same Person or Persons speedily to return home, as they will answer the contrary at their peril. Moreover, we require all Persons born within any of our Dominions, and out of Prison, who have taken Orders by any Authority derived from the Church or See of Rome (except Mr. John Hudleston) to depart the Kingdom before the twenty fifth Day of March next, according to the Tenor of our late Proclamation; and also to depart the Court within the fourteen Days appointed by our late Order in Council. And we forbid all Papists, or reputed Papists, to come into our Palace at Whitehall or St. James's, or into any other place where our Court shall be, contrary to our late Prohibition upon pain of Imprisonment in the Tower, if he be a Peer of the Realm, or in some other Prison if he be of lesser Quality. And lastly, we appoint, that care be taken for the suppression of Conventicles, hereby declaring, that all our Licences were long since recalled, and that no Conventicle hath any Authority, Allowance or En-26 Car. II. couragement from us. And our Pleasure is, that these our Commands be published and proclaimed in the usual manner.

Given at our Court at Whitehall this twelfth Day of February, in the twenty seventh Year of our Reign.

This Declaration refer'd to an Order in Council made on the third of February, wherein the King upon advising with several of his Bishops, agreed upon six Orders and Resolutions then taken for the more effectual Conviction of Popish Reculants and the Suppression of Conventicles; of which the last was this. And his Majesty doth farther Order and Appoint, that effectual Care be taken for the suppression of Conventicles: And whereas divers pretend Licences from his Majesty, and would support themselves by that pretence, his Majesty declares, that all his Licences were long since recalled; and that no Conventicle hath any Authority, Allowance or Encouragement from his Majesty. The Nonconformists on this occasion thus partially expressed themselves. His Majesty called the Bishops up to London to give him Advice what was to be done for the securing of Religion, &c. and they after divers Consultations with the Ministers of State, advised him to recal his Licences, and put the Laws against the Nonconformists in execution. And this was done by a Declaration and Proclamation, declaring the Licences long since void, and requiring the Execution of the Laws against Papists and Conventicles. No sooner was the Proclamation published, but special Informers were set on work to promote the Execution. A little before the Licences were recalled, Mr. Baxter openly declar'd in his Pulpit, that it was not in opposition to the publick Churches that he kept up a Meeting, but to help the People in their Necessity, who were many more than the Parish Church could hold. Hereupon it was confidently reported that he was conforming----. Another Session of Parliament approaching, Bishop Morley and Bishop Ward were in appearance very sensible of the Danger of Popery, and therefore very forward for Abatements and taking in the Nonconformists, and mov'd it to many. At length Dr. Tillotson and Dr. Stillingfleet desired a meeting with Dr. Manton, Dr. Bates, Mr. Pool and Mr. Baxter, in order to consider of an Accommodation, and said they had the Encouragement of several Lords both Spiritual and Temporal. Mr. Baxter at first met the two Doctors alone: And they consider'd and canvass'd various Draughts; and at length fix'd on one in which they agreed. This being communicated to the Nonconformists was agreeable; but when they communicated it to the Bishops, there was an end of the Treaty, a great many things could not be obtain'd; upon which Dr. Tillotson wrote Mr. Baxter word, That as Circumstances stood, such an Act could not pass in either House without the Concurrence of a considerable part of the Bishops, and his Majesty's Countenance, which at the present he saw little reason to expect. The Terms agreed on were much of the same nature with those abovemention'd, as proposed to my Lord Orey, with very little Variation.

His Majesty was graciously pleas'd to Translate Dr. Nathaniel Crew Bishop of Oxford, and Clerk of the Closet, to the See of Durham, which had been too long kept vacant, and the Revenues of it had been too ill employ'd: And his Majesty made choice of the Honourable Dr. Henry Compton, Brother to the Right Honourable the Earl of Northampton 1674. Northampton, to succeed in the Bishoprick of Oxford. He was Consecrated on Sunday Dec. 6. in the Chapel of Lambeth, by his Grace the Archbishop of Cant. assisted by several other Bishops, in the presence of many of the chiefest Nobility, and other Persons of Quality, who were afterwards entertain'd at a noble Dinner.

1675. Parliament meet. On Tuesday April 12. the two Houses of Parliament pursuant to his Majesty's late Prorogation met at Westminster. His Majesty being come into the House of Lords, and with the usual Solemnity seated in his Throne, and arriv'd in his Royal Robes with the Crown upon his Head, was pleas'd to send for the House of Commons up, who accordingly attended his Majesty at the Bar of the Lords House, his Majesty made a very gracious Speech to the two Houses on the Subject of their meeting. And the Lord Keeper having farther most eloquently and fully declar'd his Majesty's Mind on that occasion, the Commons went back to their House and resolv'd, that the humble and hearty Thanks of the House should be return'd to his Majesty for his gracious Promises and Assurances express'd in his Speech, &c. The Lords having likewise Resolv'd, that the humble Thanks of their House should be return'd to his Majesty for his gracious Speech. And this Day accordingly his Majesty receiv'd the Thanks of the two Houses, of the Lords by a select Committee of their House; and of the Commons in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, where they this Afternoon attended his Majesty in Body.

At the opening of this Session, my Lord Keeper told the Houses. No influence of the Stars, no Configurations of the Heavens are to be fear'd, so long as these two Houses stand in good disposition to each other, and both in a happy Conjunction with their Lord and Sovereign, but they ought not Quiescere, nor res parvas magnis motibus agere. But several unhappy Occasions offer'd of Difference, and a general Discontent: For first an Address was presented to the King against his great Minister the Duke of Lauderdale, who is charg'd to have declar'd his Inclinations to arbitrary Councils to the Terror of his Majesty's good Subjects; and therefore they desired his Majesty would be pleas'd to remove the said Duke from all his Employments, and from his Majesty's Presence and Counsels for ever, as a Person obnoxious and dangerous to the Government. But the King excus'd it by sending them notice, that the Words of which the Duke was accus'd in the Address, if spoken at all were spoken before the last Act of general Pardon.

The House of Commons had been thought fullen in their two last Sessions, and had proceeded contrary to the Humour and Design of the Court, and therefore to purge them, or refine them, a Bill was brought into the House of Lords intituled, An Act to prevent the Danger that may arise from Persons disaffected to the Government: Wherein was to be impos'd an Oath or Test of Abhorrence by all who enjoy'd any Beneficial Offices Ecclesiastical, Civil or Military, and by all Privy Counsellors, Justices of Peace and Members of Parliament. It was at first propos'd to be in the same Form with that Oath requir'd from the dissenting Clergy, by the Oxford five Miles Act. And my Lord Keeper was pleas'd to say, That it was a moderate security to the Church and Crown, which no honest Man could refuse, and whoever did would give great Suspicion of dangerous and Anti-Monarchical Principles. It was carried on vehemently by the Court Party, and as vehemently oppos'd by the Earl of Shaftsbury, and those Peers who were reputed to be more in the Interest of their Country, who look'd upon it as a Project to divide the Protestants and to strengthen the Popish Party. It was debated in Paragraphs for seven-teen Days together, and shewn by the Country Lords to be in the several parts of it either vain and superfluous, or inconsistent with itself, or opposite to the present Constitution of this Kingdom. The History of the Dissenters makes bold to give this Account of it. "When the Parliament met, there was great heat in the House of Lords, upon the bringing in an Act to impose such an Oath on Lords, Commons and Magistrates, as was impos'd by the Oxford Act upon Ministers. The Sum of it was, that none Commission'd by the King, may be by Arms resisted, and that they would never endeavour any alteration of the Government of Church or State. The great speakers for it were the Lord Treasurer and the Lord Keeper, with Bishop Morley and Bishop Ward. The great speakers against it were the Earl of Shaftsbury, the Lord Hollis, the Lord Hullifax, the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Salisbury: who jointly with the Marquis of Winchester, and the Earls of Bristol, Barkshire and Alesbury enter'd their Protections against it. They pleaded that this Oath would be destructive to the Privileges of their House, which was to Vote freely, and not to be pre-oblig'd by an Oath to the Prelates. After a great many Debates, tho' the Test was carried by a Majority, yet it was so alter'd as made it incapable of serving the Purposes of those who at first were most zealous for it, it was not to their Gust, for they reduc'd it to these Words of a Declaration and an Oath.

I A. B. do declare, that it is not Lawful on any pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King, and I do abhor the Traiterous Position of taking Arms, by his Authority against his Person, or against those that are Commission'd by him according to Law, in time of Rebellion and War, in acting in pursuance of such Commission. I A. B. do swear that I will not endeavour an Alteration of the Protestant Religion now established by Law in the Church of England, nor will I endeavour any alteration in the Government of this Kingdom in Church or State, as it is by Law establish'd.

And when it pass'd, the Lords got in this Proviso, That it should be no hindrance to their free Speaking and Voting in the Parliament.

It seems probable that these Debates would have proceeded to greater Heats and Animosities, if they had not been interrupted by another Difference arising between the two Houses, in a case of Judicature and Privileges, occasion'd by Dr. Sherley's bringing an Appeal in the House of Lords, from a Decree in Chancery, against Sir John Fagg a Member of the House of Commons, the Dispute was carried to such a height that Serjeant Pemberton, Serjeant Peck, Sir John Churchill and Mr. Porter being concern'd as Council in this Cause were taken up in Westminster-Hall by the Speaker's Warrant, and committed to the Tower for Breach of Privilege. The Managements in this Affair growing still more vehement, his Majesty seem'd to be glad of this occasion for Proroguing the Parliament; and therefore on Wednesday June 9. his Majesty came to the House of Lords, and being arriv'd in his Royal Robes with the Crown upon his Head, and seated in his Throne attended with the usual Solemnity, was pleas'd to send for the House of Commons up, who accordingly attended his Majesty at the Bar of the Lords House, his Majesty was pleas'd to pass several private Bills, and to make a most gracious Speech to the two Houses on the Subject of their Prorogation; which done the Lord Keeper by his Majesty's Command Prorogued the Parliament till October 13. next.

27 Car. II.The King averse to a War with France.

In the Interval of this Recess, the Debates of the Abhorring Oath were made publick; which so offended the Court, that an Order was given for the burning of them. And the King seem'd to be much displeas'd at those who were called the Country-Party, because their Judgment and Intention was, to bring his Majesty into a nearer Alliance with the States of Holland, and into an open War with France: Upon which his Majesty is said to have told Sir William Temple (newly commanded out of Holland) That some warm Leaders in both Houses had a mind to engage him in a War against France; which they should not do, because he was sure they would make use of it to the ruin of his Ministers.

On October 13. the two Houses of Parliament met again: His Majesty being come into the H. of Lords, was pleas'd to send for the House of Commons, and to make this gracious Speech to the two Houses on the Subject of their Meeting.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

K.'s Speech.

I Meet you now with a more than usual Concern for the Event of this Session; and I know it is but what may reasonably be expected from that Care I owe to the Preservation of the Government. The Causes of the last Prorogation, as I for my part do not desire to remember, so I hope no Man else will, unless it be to learn from thence, how to avoid the like Occasions for the future. And I pray consider how fatal the Consequences may be, and how little Benefit is like to redound to the People by it. However, if any thing of that kind shall arise, I desire you would defer those Debates till you have brought such publick Bills to Perfection as may conduce to the Good and Safety of the Kingdom: And particularly, I recommend to you, whatever may tend to the Security of the Protestant Religion, as it is now established in the Church of England.

I must likewise desire your Assistance in some Supplies, as well to take off the Anticipations which are upon my Revenue, as for the building of Ships: and tho' the War has been the great Cause of these Anticipations, yet I find, by a late Account I have taken of my Expences, that I have not been altogether so good an Husband as I might have been, and as I resolve to be for the future; altho' at the same time I have had the Satisfaction to find, that I have been far from such an Extravagancy in my own Expence, as some would have the World believe. I am not ignorant that there are many who would prevent the Kindness of my Parliament to me at this time; but I as well know, that your Affections have never failed me: and you may remember, it is now above three Years since I have asked you any thing for my own Use. The rest I refer to my Lord Keeper.

Then the Lord Keeper made a Speech; which, for the Importance of it, deserves to be here given at large.

My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses of the House of Commons,

Lord Keeper's
Speech.

THE Causes of this present Assembly, and the Reasons which have mov'd his Majesty to command your Attendance upon him at this time, are of the highest Importance. The King resolves to enter into Terms of strictest Correspondence and Endearment with his Parliament; to take your Counsel in his most weighty Affairs; to impart all his Cares to you; to acquaint you with all his Wants and Necessities; to offer you all that can yet be wanting to make you enjoy your selves; to establish a right Understanding between himself and his three Estates, and between the Estates themselves; to redress all your just Complaints, and to put all his Subjects at ease as far as in him lies, and can consist with the Honour and the Safety of the Government.

And having made all these Advances towards you, he doubts not but you will behave yourselves like those that deserve to be called the King's Friends, and that you will put him at Ease too.

There is no Cause why any Fears of Religion or Liberty should divert you.

For, his Majesty hath so often recommended to you the Considerations of Religion, so very often desir'd you to assist him in his Care and Protection of it, that the Defender of the Faith is become the Advocate for it too, and hath left all those without Excuse who still remain under any kind of Doubts or Fears.

Again, the Care of your Civil Rights and Liberties hath been so much his Majesty's, that the more you reflect upon these Concerns, the more you will find your selves obliged to acknowledge his Majesty's Tenderness of you, and Indulgence to you.

Search your own Annals, the Annals of those Times you account most happy, you will scarce find one Year without an Example of something more severe, and more extraordinary than a whole Reign hath yet produced.

Peruse the Histories of Foreign Nations, and you shall find, Statues and Altars too have been erected to the Memories of those Princes whose best Virtues never arriv'd to half that Moderation which we live to see and to enjoy.

No King did ever meet a Parliament with juster Cause of Confidence in their Affections.

And therefore his Majesty will not suffer himself to doubt, but relies firmly upon it, that you will never forsake him when he is under any kind of Difficulties. He doth assure himself that you will now think fit to provide for his Honour and your own Safety, by helping him to pay some part of his Debts, and to make his Navy as great and as considerable as it ought to be.

For, the Greatness of a King is the Greatness and the Safety of his People. The Springs and Rivers which pay Tribute to the Ocean, do not lessen but preserve themselves by that Contribution.

It is impossible that those Affections which Piety and Allegiance first planted, which Persecution could not abate, which the gracious Influences of his Majesty's happy Government have hitherto encreased, should now appear to wither and decay.

But then the best Indication of the Heart is the Hand. And because it is of infinite moment to the King's Affairs that there should be a cheerful Concurrence to his Supply; therefore let Hand and Heart both join together in the Oblation, for that will make it a Sacrifice well-pleasing indeed.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The Happiness of this present Age, and the Fate and Fortune of the next too, is very much in your Hands at this time: All that you would desire to Settle and Improve, All that you would wish to Secure and Transmit to your Posterities, may now be accomplished.

“ Would

“ Would you raise the due Estimation and Re-“ vidence of the Church of England to its just “ Height? Would you provide for the Safety and “ Establishment of it?
 “ Do there want any Laws to secure the Peace “ and Quiet of the State?
 “ Would you at once enrich and adorn this “ Kingdom, by providing for the Extent and Im“ provement of Trade, by introducing new and “ useful Manufactures, and by encouraging those “ we have already?
 “ Would you prevent all Frauds and Perjuries, “ all Delays and Abuses in the Administration of “ Justice?
 “ Would you preserve a famous City from be“ ing depopulated by the Suburbs? Would you “ restrain the Excess of those new Buildings “ which begin to swarm with Inhabitants un“ known?
 “ All your Petitions of this kind will be grate“ ful to the King, and you may with ease effect “ all this and much more which your great Wis-“ doms will suggest to you. A little Time will “ serve many excellent Laws, and to give you “ the Honour of being the Repairers of all our “ Breaches, so as that Time be wholly employ'd “ upon the Publick, and not taken up by such “ Considerations as are less meritorious.
 “ If therefore there be any without doors that “ labour to disunite your Counsels, or to render “ them ineffectual; if they can hope that the Oc“ casions for this may arise from some Differen“ ces within yourselves, or hope by those Disfi“ nences to disguise their own Disaffections to “ your good Proceedings: 'Tis in your Power to “ defeat those Hopes, to pull off this Disguise, “ and to secure a happy Conclusion of this Meet“ ing, by studying to preserve a good Correspon“ dence, and by a careful avoiding of all such “ Questions as are apt to engender Strife.
 “ And if ever there were a time, when the “ Gravity and the Counsel, the Wisdom and the “ good Temper of a Parliament were necessary “ to support that Government which only can “ support these Assemblies; certainly this is the “ Hour.
 You see with what Zeal the King hath recom“ mended to you a good Agreement between your“ selves, and that he doth it with all the Care and “ Compassion, all the Earnestness and Importu“ nity, fit for so great a Prince to express, who “ would be very sorry that any such Misfortune “ as your Disagreement should either deprive “ him of your Advice and Assistance, or his Peo“ ple of those good Laws which he is ready to “ grant you.
 “ There is no other way our Enemies can think “ of, by which 'tis possible for this Sessions to “ miscarry; for Fears and Jealousies cannot en“ ter here, Calumnies and Slanders will find no “ place amongst wise and good Men.
 “ They that use these Arts abroad will quickly “ be discredited, when the World shall see the “ generous Effects of your Confidence. Men will “ despair of attempting any Disturbance in the “ State, when they see every Step that tends that “ way serves only to give you fresh Occasions to “ testify your Loyalty and your Zeal.
 “ You have all the Reason in the World to “ make Men see this; for you have the same Mo“ narchy to assert, the same Church to defend, “ the same Interests of Nobility and Gentry to “ maintain, the same excellent King to contend “ for, and the same Enemies to contend against.

And now, my Lords and Gentlemen,

“ Since the whole Session of Parliament is, in “ the Judgment and Construction of our Law,

“ but as one Day; Let us all endeavour that the “ Morning of it, the first Entrance upon it, may “ be with such fair and such auspicious Circum“ stances, as may give the whole Kingdom an “ Assurance of a bright and chearful Day.
 “ Let no ill Humours gather into Clouds to “ darken or obscure it; for this Day is a critical “ Day, and more depends upon that Judgment “ of our Affairs which will be made by it, than “ can easily be imagin'd.
 “ It imports us therefore to take care, that no “ part of this Time be lost. Let every precious “ Minute of this Day be spent in receiving such “ Acts of Grace and Goodness as are ready to flow “ from the King, and in making such Retributi-“ ons for them as may become the grateful Hearts “ of the best of Subjects to the best of Kings.
 “ So shall this Day become a Day of Disap“ pointment and Discomfort to our Enemies; “ but to us and all good Men a glorious Day, a “ Day of Triumph and Deliverance; a memora“ ble and a joyful Day to this present and to all “ future Generations.

The Commons, in this Session, had many good Bills before them for the Security of Property and of Religion; viz. The Habeas Corpus Bill. A Bill against sending Men Prisoners beyond Sea. Against raising Money without Consent in Parliament. Against Papists sitting in either House. For more speedy Convincing of Papists. And for Recalling his Majesty's Subjects out of the French Service. But before they could come to any Resolutions, the late Contro-versie was reassum'd concerning the Lords Jurisdiction in Appeals from Chancery: On which occasion the Commons voted, that whosoever shall Solicit or Prosecute any Appeal against any Commoner of England from any Court of Equity before the House of Lords, shall be deemed and taken a betrayer of the Rights and Liberties of the Commons of England, and shall be proceeded against accordingly. And in their other Debates, the Majority seem'd to be much disposed to a War with France, and a nearer Union with Spain and Holland: Upon which the King took this Occasion to Prorogue them to another time. And therefore on Monday Nov. 22. his Majesty came to the House of Lords; and being with the usual Solemnity seated on his Throne, he was pleas'd to send for the House of Commons, who attending at the Bar, his Majesty was graciously pleas'd to give his Royal Assent to three Acts: viz. 1. An Act for the better and more easy Rebuilding the Town of Northampton. 2. An Act for the better enabling Mary Countess Dowager of Warwick to perform the last Will and Testament of her deceased Husband Charles late Earl of War-wich. 3. An Act for vesting Lands of Alexander Davies Gent. deceased in Trustees for the Payment of his Debts.

It must be observ'd, That tho' his Majesty was not willing to engage in a War with France, yet he thought it just and honourable to satisfy the Dutch, that he would be at least a Neuter, and not assist the French King against them. And therefore he did by Proclamation, dated May 19. strictly command the immediate Return of all his Majesty's Subjects who had gone into the Service of the French King as Soldiers since the late Treaty of Peace with the States General of the United Provinces, and prohibiting all other his Subjects whatsoever, for the time to come, from going beyond the Seas to serve as Soldiers under the said French King, or in his Wars.

The King will be King to be Neuter.

At the beginning of this Year his Highness the Prince of Newburgh was pleas'd to pay a Visit to England; and coming over in one of his Majesty's Yachts, appointed to transport him from Calais, he arriv'd at Greenwich on Thursday May 13. and immediately came to Town incognito, with a Train

Prince of Court.

 27 Car. II. Persons of Quality, on the 15th he was introduced at Court to salute their Magistrates, and afterward their Royal Highnesses, by whom he was received with very particular Demonstrations of Kindness and Esteem, for the sake of the Duke his Father. On Tuesday June 1. his Highness came to Oxford, and being there received in a very respectful manner was created Doctor of Laws, and was very much pleased with the Civilities and the Curiousities of that Place.

Honour and Felicities.

The Collation of Offices and Honours in this Year was not very considerable. On March 31. his Majesty was graciously pleased in consideration of the good and faithful Services of Thomas Percy Esq; to cause him to be sworn one of the Masters of Requests, in the room of Sir Thomas Beverly deceased. On June 23. his Majesty was pleased in consideration of the eminent Loyalty and Sufferings of Giles Strangways, Esq; to cause him to be sworn of his most Honourable Privy Council, and accordingly he took his Place at the Board. On October 15. his Grace the Duke of Albemarle was sworn of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council. On December 19. his Majesty as a particular Mark of his Grace and Favour to the Right Honourable Henage Lord Finch, Baron of Darenty, was pleased to change his Title of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, into that of Lord High Chancellour of England. On Jan. 19. his Majesty considering the very good Services of Richard Bulstrode, Esq; as his Agent with the Governour of the Spanish Netherlands, has been pleased to appoint him his Resident in that Court; and as a farther Mark of his Favour, this Day to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon him. On January 22. his Majesty was pleased to cause the Right Reverend Father in God Henry Lord Bishop of London, to be sworn one of the Lords of his Privy Council, and accordingly his Lordship took his Place at the Board.

Actions at Sea.

There was a good Action perform'd this Winter by Sir John Anborough Admiral of his Majesty's Fleet in the Mediterranean, who being sent chiefly to scour those Seas from publick Pirates, burnt in the Port of Tripoly four Men of War belonging to the Corfairs, as he himself gave this Account in a Letter dated Jan. 20. near Malta, and is as follows. "These are to let you know, that on the fourteenth instant in the Night I burnt four of the Tripoline Ships of War of considerable Force, viz. The white crown'd Eagle with 50 Guns, the Looking-Glass with 20, the Swickia with 24, and the French Petach with 20 as they lay under the Castle and Walls of Tripoly, being all that were in Port. It was done by a Surprise by our Boats, commanded in chief by my Lieutenant Cloudsley Shovel; he took the Enemies Guard Boat, and in it one Turk and one Moor, the rest having been kill'd. I bless God I did not lose one Man in the Action; I am now off of Malta, and am standing over again for Tripoly, and doubt not, but by the help of God to destroy more of those Corfairs. I have with me the Henrietta, Portsmouth and two Fireships, which I met with here. This I write in haste, but by the next will give you an Account at large. The Success of this Action was, that on the 5th of March following Sir John Anborough concluded a Peace with the Government of Tripoly, in 23 Articles, much to the Honour of his Majesty, and to the Advantage of our Kingdom in Trade and Navigation.

Prince of Orange not easily brought into a general Peace.

The Prince of Orange was made sensible that the great Design of my Lord Arlington's Negotiation with him was first to draw him into such measures of Peace as France then so much desir'd, and secondly into the discovery of Persons in England, who had made Advances to the Prince or States of raising Commotions there during the War. Thirdly, into secret Measures with King Charles of assisting him against any Rebels at home or Enemies abroad. And lastly, into the Hopes or Designs of a Match with the Duke of York's eldest Daughter. But it is said the Prince would not at all enter upon the first, was obstinate in the second, and treated the third Point with a wonder of thinking, That the King of England could be so ill belov'd, or so imprudent as to need such Assistance. And upon mention made of the last by the Earl of Offory, he took no farther hold of it than by saying, his Fortunes were not in a Condition for him to think of a Wife.

 27 Car. II.

However, by the Advice of the Pensionary and Count Waldeck, he drew up this Scheme of a general Peace, That a Match should be made between the King of Spain and the Duke of Orleans's eldest Daughter; that France should give her in Dowry the late conquer'd places in Flanders. That King Charles the second should make this Match, and upon these Terms. That he should have 200000 l. for his good Offices in it. By this means a Peace would be made with safety to Spain and Holland, by securing again the Frontiers of Flanders with Honour to France, who parted with the Conquer'd Towns only as a Dowry to a Daughter of France, without any blemish to the Prince's Honour, Faith to his Alliances, and with Honour and Profit to the King of England.

The English Ambassadour wrote two Letters to the King upon this Subject, but had no hopes given him that a Peace could be effected on such Terms; but a little before the meeting of the Parliament in April the King in a Letter to Sir William Temple at the Hague took notice of some Advices given him, that the Prince intended to go over for England against the approaching Sessions, and commanded him to hinder it, as if the King believ'd that the Prince had form'd a Popular Design by such a journey. The Ambassadour inform'd the Prince of it, yet pretended not to have had it from his Majesty, but only that such a thing had been whisper'd to him. The Prince answer'd, The Lord Arlington had indeed talk'd of a Journey after the Peace should be concluded, in the mean time he hop'd the King would not suspect him Guilty of any disrespectful Thought; he was his Majesty's Servant, and if he could do him no Service he would at least do him no Hurt: But if the King would be otherwise possess'd he could not help it, he had desired the Ambassadour to assure him there had been no ground for such a Report. And yet about the same time the Prince receiv'd a Letter from my Lord Arlington, of which his Highness complain'd in a great Heat to Sir William Temple, and said, It was impertinent, and that he therein mention'd the foresaid imaginary Resolution of his going over for England as a thing certain, and intended by him for raising Heats in the Parliament and Commotions in the Kingdom, and added it was like to prove but ill Friendship between him and the King, if it was to be made with blows. And the Earl putting him in mind, that there were some old Wounds among them that would still bleed if there were not care taken of them. The Prince said, he knew well enough what was meant by that Expression, for Arlington had told Monsieur Read in England, when he went over upon the first Motions of the last Peace, that the King could make the Prince to be served in the same manner as De Witt was, if he would set himself about it: Hereupon he fell into great Rage against Arlington, calling this proceeding Malicious and Insolent, and said, he would write to him what he deserved, but never have any thing more to do with any of the King's Ministers, he would write to the King himself, and desired the Ambaf

Conference between the Prince and English Ministers.

1675. Ambassadour to convey his Letters so that they might come to no other Hand.

27 Car. II. Campaign a-broad. The French this Summer began their Campaign with the Siege of Limburgh, with one part of their Army, while the French King with the rest lay incamped in a Post most convenient to oppose any Attempt of relieving it. The Prince of Orange was upon his March for that purpose; but the place after a short and weak Resistance was taken before he could approach it. After this Surrendry of Limburgh the French King encamp'd near Tillemont, and ravag'd all the Country near Louvain, Brussels and Malines, and he had a mighty desire to make himself Master of the first of these Places; but the Prince and the Duke of Vil-li-Hermosa watch'd him all along so narrowly that he durst not undertake it, so that about the end of July growing weary of a dull Campaign, the King left the Command of the Army to the Prince of Conde and return'd to Versailles. The French having now received a severe Blow by the Death of the great Marechal Turenne upon the Rhine, the Prince of Conde was sent thither to Command the Army, and the Duke of Luxemburg took his Post in Flanders, but with Orders not to hazard a Battel, but only to observe the Prince of Orange's Motions, and to cover any Town that was like to be endanger'd, which he performed so well, that no farther Action pass'd this Summer besides the Prince's taking and raising of Binch, and that his Highness had this farther Advantage of the Duke, that he hinder'd him from ravaging the Territories of Treves, and disturbing the Confederates in the Siege of that place, which was at last surrender'd to them. The Prince at this time being put in mind of the Apprehensions the King and States might have of the Greatness of the House of Austria, if their Success continued, he said, There was no need of that till they should go beyond the Peace of the Pyrenees, when ever that should happen, he should be as much a French-Man as he was now a Spaniard, but not before. Then he closed the Discourse in desiring, that whatever Plan his Majesty thought fit to propose for a Peace, he would do it at the Congress at Nimeguen, the place appointed for the Treaty, for the Number and Variety of Pretensions and Interests were grown so great, by all the Parties then engaged in the War, that it could not be in any other place, that he believed they would be reasonable, and in case France would be so too the Peace might be made; if not, perhaps another Campaign might bring them to Reason. Upon this juncture his Majesty sent over the Lord John Berkley his Ambassadour extraordinary to Paris, who arriving there December 6. after an Audience of the French King, was to begin his Journey for Nimeguen, the place appointed for the general Treaty, whither Sir William Temple Ambassadour at the Hague was to repair, together with Sir Leoline Jenkins Judge of his Majesty's High Court of Admiralty, who took leave of his Majesty in order to his departure December 12.

Popular Discontents. The People of England were so impatient for a Peace, and so jealous of the Growth of Popery and the French Power, that they took the Liberty of reflecting on the King and his Ministry to such a high Degree, that it was thought fit to put down all Coffee-Houses by Proclamation, order'd in Council December 29. "Because in such Houses and by occasion of the meeting of disaffected Persons in them, divers false, malicious and scandalous Reports were devis'd and spread a-broad, to the Defamation of his Majesty's Government, and to the disturbance of the Quiet and Peace of the Realm. And on Jan. 7. another Proclamation was publish'd for discovering and punishing "Malicious and Disaffected Persons who did daily devise and publish as well

"by writing as printing sundry false, infamous and scandalous Libels, endeavouring thereby not only to Traduce and Reproach the Ecclesiastical and Temporal Government of this Kingdom, and the publick Ministers of the same, but also to stir up and dispose the Minds of his Majesty's Subjects to Sedition and Rebellion. But upon Petition of the Merchants and Retailers of Coffee and Tea, a permission was granted to keep open their Coffee-Houses to June 24. next, provided that every Keeper of such House should use his utmost Endeavour to prevent and hinder all scandalous Papers, Books or Libels, concerning the Government or the publick Ministers thereof, from being brought into his House, or to be there read, perus'd or divulged; and to prevent and hinder all and every Person or Persons from declaring, uttering and divulging in his said House all manner of false or scandalous Reports of the Government, or any the Ministers thereof.

As to Religion it is very manifest, that the Papists had a mighty Influence on publick Affairs, and were afraid of nothing but an English Parliament, and flatter'd themselves that they had gained over Members enough to carry on the Interest and Designs of the Duke of Tork and that Party. Mr. Coleman in a Letter to the Internuncio dated at Windsor Aug. 30. 1675. does applaud the "Clear and evident Mark of the Pope's affection towards the Catholics of England, and then say, "That the Duke hath almost surmounted all the Difficulties which have oppos'd his Establishment. The Face of his Affairs are well changed, for we now passionately wish to see the coming on of the Parliament which we so much feared before: And while it was held doubtful whether it ought to meet or no, we employ'd all our Power to bring it on; which point we have gain'd but within these few Days. And for my part, I no ways doubt but that we shall receive as much good by it as we apprehended ill, provided that the Duke fail not in the Execution of the good Resolutions which he hath taken. And by many other Papers and Letters dated this Year, it does abundantly appear that a vigorous Design was carried on to extirpate the Northern Heresie. And even during the second Session of Parliament, the Papists in London were so insolent that they set upon Monsieur Luzancy a late Convert from Popery, and offer'd extream Indignity and Violence to him, with so great Scandal that on Nov. 10. his Majesty in Council order'd a Proclamation to be published, for the Discovery and Apprehension of a French Jesuit, styling himself Monsieur St. Germain, and his Accomplices, in the late Violence offer'd to Monsieur Luzancy alias Chaflet, declaring, "That whereas it had appeared to his Majesty upon Oath, that the said Monsieur Luzancy being lately converted from the Romish to the Protestant Religion establish'd in the Church of England; and having in a late Sermon by him preach'd and publish'd express'd the Causes and Reasons of his Conversion, the said Monsieur St. Germain, with other Persons unknown, did in a most presumptuous and insolent manner repair to the Lodging of the said Monsieur Luzancy, and did there by Threats and Terrors of Assassinating the said Monsieur Luzancy, or of carrying him away by Force into parts beyond the Seas, induce and compel the said Monsieur Luzancy to transcribe and sign a pretended Retraction of what he had so preach'd and published; his Majesty being highly sensible of this transcendent boldness, and to prevent the like insolent Attempts, and all other Violencies that may be offer'd

Under these just Apprehensions of Popery, raised by the Countenance and Protection of the Duke of York, it was the greater Comfort and Joy to observe that his Royal Highness could have no Influence upon the young Princesses his Daughters. The Lady Mary and the Lady Anne were strictly bred up in the Principles of the Church of England, and were on Jan. 23. solemnly confirmed in his Majesty's Chapel at Whitehall by the Bishop, who was Dean of the said Chapel.

Ecclesiastical
Preferments.

The Bishoprick of Worcester being void by the Death of the late Reverend Father in God Dr. Blindford, and his Majesty having been pleas'd to confer the same on the Reverend Dr. James Fleetwood Provoſt of King's College in Cambridge, on Sunday the 29th of August his Lordship Elect was consecrated in St. Peter's Church in Broad-Street London, by the Right Reverend Father in God John Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, his Grace of Canterbury's Commissioner for that purpose, being assisted by the Bishops of Ely, Chicheſter and Lincoln. And after the performance of the Solemnity, their Lordships, with many of the Nobility, and other Persons of Quality, were entertain'd at a very noble Dinner at Draper's-Hall. His Majesty was pleas'd upon the Death of Dr. Herschman to translate the Right Reverend Father in God Dr. Compton late Bishop of Oxford, and Dean of his Majesty's Chapel to the See of London, and to promote the Reverend Dr. Fell Dean of Christ-Church to the Bishoprick of Oxon; who having been accordingly elected Bishop of that See, was on Feb. 6. consecrated by the Right Reverend Father in God the Bishop of Wincheſter, his Grace of Canterbury's Commissioner for that purpose, in his Lordship's Chapel at Chelſey, being assisted by the Bishops of London, Rocheſter, Ely, Chicheſter and Worceſter; and after the performance of the Solemnity, their Lordships, with many of the Nobility and other Persons of Quality, were entertain'd at a noble Dinner.

Case of the Officers.

The Dissenters had now some Advantage of improving in popular Reputation, by being generally averſe to the Measures conducing to Popery and the Grandeur of France, and by falling in with those Patriots in both Houses who seem'd most zealous in the Love and Service of their Country. And yet their own History has little to boast of but the Prosecution of some of their Teachers, and a Story of Judgments upon some of the Informers: To which they add, that about this time (meaning Summer 1675.) twelve or thirteen of the Bishops dining with that eminent Citizen Sir Nathaniel Hern, then Sheriff of London, and discoursing with him about putting the Laws against the Dissenters in Execution; he told them, that they could not Trade with their Neighbours one Day, and send them to Goal the next. In the next Session of Parliament the Duke of Buckingham made a Notable Speech against Persecution, and desir'd the Consent of the Lords that he might bring in a Bill for the Ease of his Majesty's Protestant Subjects, in matters of Religion; but while he was Preparing it, the Parliament was Prorog'd.

The King having unwillingly made a Peace with Holland, and being in a Neutrality with other Princes, had nothing to do but to keep the Peace at home, and to secure a free Trade Abroad. But the Dutch suspected, that he secretly gave assistance to the French; and the French Court pretended that some English Ships were retained in the Service of Holland. Hence upon Complaints made to His Majesty by the Ministers of several Princes now in Amity with his Majesty, that divers of his Subjects had lately taken Commissions from some Princes and States now in Amity with his Majesty to serve at Sea against others, who are likewise His Majesty's Allies; His Majesty for the Preservation and Continuance of Friendship and Amity between him and his Respective Allies, did by Royal Proclamation given at Whitehall 17 May, Strictly Prohibit and Forbid all his Subjects whatsoever to take any Commission at Sea from any Foreign Prince or State, against any other Foreign Prince or State now in Amity with his Majesty, or to serve as Mariners or Seamen in any Ship or Vessel which shall be employed against any Prince or State now in Amity with His Majesty during the War. And upon farther Complaints from Abroad, that Acts of Hostility at Sea were suffered to be Committed under the Protection of English Coasts and Ports; his Majesty was pleas'd to cause another Royal Proclamation to be published June 2. by which his Majesty declared, That finding the Security of Navigation and Commerce to and from his Majesty's Ports (in this time of War) hath been very much disturbed, and that even the Reverence due to his Ports hath been violated, his Will and Pleasure is, that these following Rules and Ordinances be observed.

I. That within his Majesty's Ports, Havens and Crooks, and the Precincts thereof, no Hostilities shall be committed by any of the Parties whatsoever, but that all Ships during their being in the said Ports, &c. shall be under his Majesty's special Protection; that the Ships and Goods of all Aggressors or Offenders herein shall be ipso facto Confiscate, notwithstanding any Commission of War they may have.

II. That all his Majesty's Officers and Subjects do as far as in them lies, prohibit the roving of Men of War so near his Majesty's Ports or Coasts, as may give apprehension to the Merchant-Men that their Passage is unsafe, or may hinder the Commerce of his Subjects. That all his Majesty's Officers do succour and rescue all Merchant-Men and others, as shall be attack'd upon his Majesty's Coasts, and to apprehend and seize the Offenders, in order to bring them to condign Punishment. — With five other Rules and Orders to enforce the like general Intention of Neutrality and equal Protection.

In the mean time, while his Majesty did so generously protect the French Shipping, our own Vessels could not be protected from the Injustice and Infolence of the French Privateers, who swarmed in the Chanel, and pick'd up many of our Merchantmen, and (as if in open War) made Prizes of them. And upon Complaint of this Grievance in the French Court, the Method of Redress was a greater Oppression only: For Sir Ellis Leighton Secretary to the Lord Berkley, Am-

 bassadour in the Court of France, being appointed to solicit in that Court the Restitution of English Ships, and their Ladings, taken by French Privateers, did behave himself corruptly in that Negotiation, by bare-faced contracting for, and receiving Bribes in the Prosecution of the Merchants Affairs, and sometimes making corrupt Agreements with the French Privateers to desist from and relinquish all further Solicitation of the Interests of his Majesty's Subjects, and to the great Detriment and Loss of the Merchants concerned; as was made appear to his Majesty in Council: for which Offence he was committed to the Custody of one of the Messengers of his Majesty's Chamber, in order to be carried Prisoner to the Tower of London, that he might be prosecuted and brought to condign Punishment: but being conscious of his own Guilt, he made his Escape from the Messenger, and fled from Justice.

Petition of the Committee for Trade.

Under these Indignities and Losses, the Lords of the Committee of Trade, by repeated Petitions from the Merchants and Sea-men, found themselves obliged to present unto his Majesty in Council at Whitehall, Aug. 4. a Report touching the Injuries which his Subjects did sustain by the French Capers; with a List of such English Ships as had been seized by the French Privateers since December 1673. to the number of fifty three; concluding thus, Wherefore considering that the Root of all this Disorder arises from the Violence and Rapine of the French Capers, who ought to be looked on as Disturbers of the Publick Quiet, and Enemies to the good Friendship between the two Crowns; We are humbly of opinion, that your Majesty has just occasion, from the Injuries past, and those which are now depending, and which do every day increase, to make a very serious Representation of all unto his most Christian Majesty; and not only press for some better Method of Repairing the Grievances mentioned, but earnestly to insist on the calling in of all Privateers: Or else your Majesty must do Right, and give Defence to your Subjects, from all the Insolencies which they so frequently meet. Signed Finch C. Anglesey, Bath, Bridgwater, Craven, H. Coventry, J. Ernle, G. Cartret, Robert Southwell.

His Answer.

To which this Answer in Council was given:
HIS Majesty taking into his serious Consideration the daily Complaints of his Subjects, and having a great Sense and Repentment of their ill Usage, hath thought fit to approve the said Report, and is therefore graciously pleased to order, as it is hereby ordered accordingly; That the Right Honourable Mr. Secretary Coventry do immediately transmit to his Majesty's Ambassadour at Paris a Copy thereof, that so the evil and the unhappy state of these things may be made known in that Court, and the Remedies pressed for in his Majesty's Name which are proposed by the said Report. And Master Secretary is also to attend the French Ambassadour here with the same Representation, and to expostulate upon all these Hardships, and the little Remedy given to his Majesty's Subjects, either on the Merits of their Causes, or the Recommendations of them by his Majesty: that so his Excellency being made sensible of his Majesty's Displeasure herein, and the reasonable Discontent of his Subjects, there may be by his Care such lively Impressions hereof fixed with the King his Master, and the Ministers of France, as may redress the Evils that are complained of, and obtain the just Remedies which are proposed.

The People long for a sitting Parliament.

Yet no other Satisfaction could be obtained than by doing Justice to ourselves by a Reprisal on several of their Privateers; and this only Method did by no means repair the Losses of private Men; it seem'd only a sort of Vindication of the publick Honour. These Insolencies of the French had however this good effect, that they made the People of England more and more impatient for a sitting Parliament, as hoping and believing that this intufferable Grievance would be then effectually redress'd by a Reparation of their Damages, or at least by an open War. And the long Interval of Seditious began so much to open the Eyes and the Mouths of the City and Country, that on Decemb. 23. his Majesty thought fit to quiet his loving Subjects by the Prospect of a sitting Parliament, and by Proclamation to declare, that having been pleas'd to continue this present Parliament by Prerogation until the 15th day of February now next coming, he had a full Purpose and Resolution that the Parliament should be then holden: and he was desirous, for divers weighty Considerations, to have them a full Assembly of the Members of both Houses.

1676. 28 Car. II. 1676. 28 Car. II.
 Accordingly, on Thursday Feb. 15. the two Houses of Parliament met at Westminster; and his Majesty being solemnly seated in his Throne, sent for the House of Commons, who attended his Majesty at the Bar of the Lord's House: His Majesty made a most gracious Speech to the two Houses on the Subject of their Meeting; which done, the Lord Chancellor farther most eloquently declared his Majesty's Mind to them on this Occasion. Upon which the Commons returned to their own House, and enter'd upon the Debate of several Matters. The general Disposition of the House was to a War with France, or to stricter Alliances at least for preventing the Progress of the French Conquests made in Flanders and on the Rhine. And therefore soon after their Meeting they address'd the King, setting forth, "That his People were much disquieted with the manifest Danger arising to these Kingdoms, by the Growth and Power of the French King, by his Acquisitions in the Spanish Netherlands, in the Preservation whereof, they humbly conceive, the Interest of his Majesty and the Safety of his People are highly concern'd, and therefore beseech the King to take it into his Care, and strengthen himself with stricter Alliances. To which the King answer'd, "That he was of the same Opinion with both Houses, and that he will use all means for the Preservation of Flanders, that can consist with the Peace and Safety of the Kingdom.

The Meeting of it.
 Proceedings of the two Houses.

But that which most interrupted the Proceedings in both Houses, was an important Question, Whether they were any longer a legal Body? and, Whether their long Prerogation were not, in its true effect, a Dissolution of them? This Contest was highest in the House of Lords, where the Duke of Buckingham stood up first, and argu'd with great appearance of Reason, and with greater Wit. That according to the Law and Constitution of Parliaments, an unprecedented Prerogation was null, and consequently the Parliament was in truth Dissolved; offering to maintain it to the Face of all the Judges, and desiring (as is usual in such cases) that they might give their Opinion in it: But this Motion relish'd so ill with the Lords that were in the Ministry, that one of them moved that the Duke, for that Speech, might be called to the Bar. The Earl of Shaftsbury oppos'd this Motion, as improper and extravagant; and did with Courage, and Sharpness of Application, second and enforce the Duke of Buckingham's Argument: and the Earl of Salisbury and the Id. Wharton fell in boldly on the same side: But the majority were so warm upon them, that they were all sent Prisoners to the Tower for Contempt of the Authority and Being of the present Parliament, and were to remain there during his Majesty's and the House's Pleasure. The same Matter was debated in the House of Commons, and there

Lords sent to the Tower.

1676. too the Majority resolv'd not to be dissolved ; yet they committed none of their Members for arguing the contrary. It was indeed no wonder that both Houses should agree in their own Preservation and Continuance : for the great Lords in the Ministry could not bear to think of parting with a Parliament which they had been at a prodigious Expence to keep in a giving Humour ; and they had indeed managed them so well, that they had given the King more Money than ever had been granted in a Parliamentary way to all the Kings of England from William the Norman to the Union of the two Kingdoms : And the major part of the Commons had as good reason to desire to keep their Places in the House, that by Offices or Pensions were so beneficial to them, and which indeed had cost them a dear Purchase ; for upon the Death of any of the old Members, few or none had been chosen to succeed them without a prodigious Expence ; which must have been as great a Folly in them as it was a Shame to the Nation, if they had not known how by their Votes and Engagements to reimburse themselves. The Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Salisbury, and the Lord Wharton, petition'd the King, and were discharg'd ; but the Lord Shaftsbury was kept thirteen Months in Prison ; and for not complying with a formal Recantation of his Speech, all his Petitions were rejected : when finding it in vain to apply longer to his Majesty, he had recourse to the King's Bench, whither he was brought by a Habeas Corpus on the 27th of January next ensuing, where Mr. Williams, Mr. Wallop, and Mr. Smith, his Council, argued that the Court ought to relieve him ; and the Earl spoke himself with great Reason and Eloquence for the Liberty of the Subject and his own Discharge : yet the Judges deny'd him Redress, one of them declaring before the Cause was heard, That the Court could not help him ; and being absent when it came to a Hearing, deputed Judge Jones to speak for him, that the Bench might be unanimous. So the Earl was remanded to Prison, and staid there till another Session of Parliament, when his Application to an inferior Court was voted a Breach of Privilege by the Lords, for which the Earl was to answer his Contempt at the Bar of the House. On the 22d of February he was accordingly brought to the Bar, where he offer'd to acknowledge his asserting the Dissolution of the Parliament to be an unadvised Action, and to beg their Lordship's Pardon for his Offence in bringing his Habeas Corpus. The Lord Treasurer produced a Paper which one Blaney had deliver'd him, pretending to give Information of some Words spoken by the Lord Shaftsbury in the Court of King's Bench : yet Blaney being call'd into the House, could not affirm that what was written in that Paper was really spoken by the Earl : Upon which the Lord Treasurer dropp'd the Matter, and the House proceeded to a Resolution, That the Lord Shaftsbury should make his Submission and Acknowledgment in a Form prescribed by that House. And accordingly a Declaration was prepared much to the same effect with what the Earl himself had before offer'd. The Lord Chancellor read the Words to him, and the Lord Shaftsbury kneeling repeated them at the Bar, and then withdrew. So the House order'd the Lords with White Staffs to acquaint his Majesty, that they had receiv'd Satisfaction from the Earl of Shaftsbury in the Matter of the Habeas Corpus, and the other Contempt, and prayed him to discharge the Earl from his Confinement ; which was done.

Honours and Preferments.

In Places and Honours there was no considerable Alteration. On April 26. the Lord Bishop of Durham was sworn one of the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council. The Honour of Knighthood was conferr'd (as had been of late usual) on the two Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, Sir John Peak and Sir Thomas Stamp. And on October 28. their Majesties accompanied by their Royal Highnesses, and the Lady Mary and the Lady Ann, and attended by many of the principal Nobility and other Persons of Quality, were pleased to accept of an humble Invitation from the City, and to Honour the new Lord Mayor, Sir Thomas Davis, with their Presence, first at the Show in Cheapside, and afterwards in the Guild-Hall at Dinner, where the Entertainment was great and magnificent in all kinds, very much to the Satisfaction of their Majesties and the whole Court. On February 21. Sir Thomas Doleman, Knight, was sworn one of the Clerks of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council in the room of Sir Edward Walker, Esq.

The Treaty of Nimeguen went on very slowly ; Progress of the Treaty of Nimeguen. Sir William Temple and Sir Leoline Jenkins, the two English Mediators, arrived at the Place in July, but they found there only two of the Parties concern'd, viz. the French and Dutch Plenipotentiaries. The former of which were exceeding eager to set the Negotiation on foot, and betray'd their Design of procuring a separate Peace if possible with Holland : for which they had made their Application both to the Prince of Orange and to Pensionary Fagel, though with little hopes of Success. The other Allies took as many occasions as they could of delaying the dispatch of their Ministers to the Congress, that they might see the Effect of this Campaign, that they might then be the better able to take their Measures for the Conditions of a general Peace. Hence, about the end of September, the French Ambassadors gave the Mediators notice that their Master having made so many Advances towards a Peace, but having been to ill seconded by the Proceedings of the Confederates, and observing their slowness in coming to the Treaty, he was resolv'd to recal his Ambassadors, unless the Allies should send their respective Ministers to the place of Treaty within the space of one Month ; tho' after all, the Count Kinkski, the second Person in the Imperial Embassy, whether through real Indisposition, or under pretence thereof is uncertain, staid at Cologne till the New-Year began, and neither of his Collegues came in many Months after, without one of which, to wit, the Bishop of Gurck, the first in Commillion, Count Kinkski had no power to agree on any thing farther than Preliminaries.

In the mean time the Campaign began with sufficient Glory to the French, for before the middle of April the Marschal Crequi invested the Town of Conde with 16000 Men. This hasten'd the Prince of Orange's March from Rosendale to join the Spanish General, the Duke De Villa-Hermosa, which he did at Cambray on April 26. but the French King and his Brother the Duke of Orleans with a Reinforcement of 10000 Men came before Conde, and order'd the Town to be so furiously batter'd and storm'd on every side, that the Garrison was forc'd to surrender at discretion, tho' the Prince of Orange was march'd as far as Granville in order to relieve them. After this the French sat down before Bonchain, a small strong Town between Cambray and Valenciennes, and keeping the Communication between those two places, which in a short time was likewise surrender'd to them ; and then the French King, who had made a shew of commanding his Army in Person, in the beginning of June return'd to Paris, leaving the Command of his Army in the Netherlands to the famous Marschal Schonberg.

The Prince of Orange having invested Maestricht Siegf. of Maestricht. resolv'd about the end of July to lay a formal Siege 1676. Siege to it, it being the only Town of the Dutch Provinces remaining in the French Hands, and fortified by them with all the Advantages of Art and Expence, having a Garison of 8000 chosen Men under a daring Commander Monsieur Calvo: This Siege was carried on with great Bravery and many desperate Assaults. About the middle of August, as the Prince of Orange exposing himself upon all occasions received a Musket shot in his Arm, at which, perceiving that those who were about him were daunted, he immediately pull'd off his Hat with that Arm that was hurt, and waved it about his Head, to shew the Wound was but in the Flesh and the Bone safe; at which they all revived, and the Prince went on without interruption in all the Paces of the Siege; but there were two principal Reasons why the Prince could not master the Place; for first, the River was grown so shallow that he was forc'd to stay some Days for his heavy Artillery from Ruremond for want of Water; then the Forces which he expected from the Bishop of Munster and Princes of Lunenburgh, never came to his Assistance; to which if we add, that a cruel Sicknes fell into his Army which weaken'd it more than all the Assaults they had made upon the Town; it's no wonder it could not be carried, for this not only gave Monsieur Schomberg an opportunity to besiege and take Aire, but encouragement to march even thro' the Heart of the Spanish Low-Countries, to the Relief of Maestricht: Upon whose Approach it was agreed in a Council of War, that the Siege should be rais'd, with which the Campaign ended in the Dutch and Spanish Provinces.

The Campaign being over, all Parties began to turn their Thoughts toward the Motions of the Treaty of Peace, and the Prince of Orange not at all satisfied with the dilatory Conduct of the Emperor and German Princes and the King of Spain, was by Pensionary Fagel advis'd of the Necessity of making a separate Peace, if no other could be obtain'd. Sir William Temple had several Conferences with the Prince upon this Subject, and told him one Day, that Pensionary Fagel in a Discourse with him, was of opinion that nothing else could be done but to make a separate Peace, and that he knew not a Man in Holland who was not of his Mind. The Prince here interrupting him said, "Yes, I am sure I know one, and that is myself, and I'll hinder it as long as I can: but if any thing should happen to me, I know it would be done in two Days. Then the Ambassadour ask'd him, whether he was of the Pensionary's Mind as to what he thought likely to happen the next Campaign? He said, "the Appearances were ill, but that Campaigns did not always end as they began, that Accidents might happen which no Man could foresee, and that if they came to one fair Battel, none could answer for the Event; that the King of England might make the Peace if he pleas'd before it began; but if we were so indifferent as to let that Season pass, for his part, he was oblig'd to go on and take his Fortune: That he had that very Morning seen a poor old Man tugging alone in a little Boat with his Oars against the Eddy of a Shrine upon a Canal, that when with the last Efforts he was just got up to the place intended, the force of the Eddy carried him quite back again, and thus three or four times while the Prince saw him; and concluded that this old Man's business and his were too like one another, and that we ought however to do just as the old Man did, without knowing what would succeed, any more than what did in the poor Man's Case.

As to the Affairs of Religion, the Archbishop of Canterbury by direction from the Court, took care to be inform'd of the Strength and Number of Friends and Enemies of the Church of England, by ordering an Inquiry to be made in every Diocess of the Number of Church Communicants, Popish Recusants and Protestant Dissenters in every Parish. And Returns were generally made from every Diocess, by Account taken about the time of the Easter Visitation.

The dangers of Popery were indeed more visible and more scandalous every Day; and tho' the intermissions of a sitting Parliament gave Impunity and Connivance to the Priests and Jesuits, yet Complaints were publickly made to the King and Council, who particularly in October were informed of the bold and open repair made to several Places, and especially to her Majesty's Chapel at Somerset-House, and the Houses of Foreign Ambassadors, Agents and other publick Ministers, for the hearing of Mass, and other Worship and Service of the Romish Church, and that the said Ambassadors, Agents and Ministers do permit and suffer, both daily Masses to be said and other Worship and Service to be performed in their Houses in a publick manner, by English, Scottish and Irish Priests, and also Sermons in English, to be preached in their said Houses and Chapels, which the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom do expressly forbid the King's Subjects to frequent or do. Hence in Council held October 2. an Order was published, declaring, "That his Majesty had taken the said Complaint into serious Consideration, and being sensible thereof as a matter highly tending to the Violation of the Laws of the Realm, and the Scandal of Religion and Government, and Breach of good Order, and in his Princely Wisdom weighing the dangerous Consequence thereof, was resolv'd to take strict Order for the stopping this Evil before it spread any farther, his Majesty therefore by the Advice of his Council, forbids any of his said Subjects hereafter to offend in the like kind at their utmost perils, and likewise Orders that his principal Secretaries of State should repair to the Foreign Ministers to make known unto them his Majesty's Pleasure, and to expect their Compliance that they would not permit Masses or other Service to be said by any of the said Priests, or Sermons to be preached in English in their Houses or Chapels, things never heard of or attempted by any precedent Ambassadors or Agents here. His Majesty thinking fit that notice should be first given to the said publick Ministers (the rather to testify his Respects unto them) before the stricter Course his Majesty hath Resolv'd be taken with his own Subjects, by a vigorous Prosecution and Infliction of Penalties and Punishments for the preventing and repressing the like hereafter.

His Majesty was pleas'd to translate Dr. Anthony Sparrow Bishop of Exeter to the See of Norwich, and to make choice of the Reverend Dr. Thomas Lamplugh Dean of Rochester, to succeed in the Bishoprick of Exeter, who on Sunday November 12. was solemnly Consecrated in the Chapel of Lambeth by the Right Reverend Henry Lord Bishop of London, his Grace's Commissioner for that purpose, assisted by several other Bishops, in the presence of many of the chiefest of the Nobility and other Persons of Quality, who were afterwards entertained at a noble Dinner.

The Dissenters by favour of the Court had indulgence and Kindness shewn to them, after some little Offers at a legal Prosecution of them; as their own History thus relates. "Mr. Baxter having been kept a whole Year from preaching

But Mr. Wadsworth dying, he preach'd to his Flock in Southwark many Months in peace, no Justice being willing to disturb them; and when Dr. Lloyd succeeded Dr. Lampson in St. Martin's Parish, he offer'd him his Chapel in Oswinden-Street for publick Worship, and he accepted it. This latter part of the Relation, as to the offer of a Chapel, is known to be very false.

The Parliament were now sitting, and to encourage the King to a reasonable Breach with France, they gave him an effectual Aid for the speedy Building of thirty Ships of War; and had before them many other Bills for the Honour and Safety of the Nation. His Majesty seem'd to be afraid of their sitting too long, and making too bold with the great depending Affair of Peace and War, which his Majesty at this Juncture above all other had reason to reserve to his own Will and Pleasure. And therefore on Monday April 15. his Majesty came suddenly in the Evening into the House of Lords, and being seated in his Throne with usual Solemnity, he sent for the House of Commons, and gave his Royal Assent to several Bills presented to him. The publick Acts were as follow:

As follows.

1. An Act for raising the Sum of Five hundred eighty four thousand nine hundred seventy eight Pounds two Shillings and two Pence Halfpenny, for the speedy building thirty Ships of War.
2. An Act for an Additional Excise upon Beer, Ale and other Liquors for three Years.
3. An Act for the better Observation of the Lord's Day commonly called Sunday.
4. An Act for prevention of Frauds and Perjuries.
5. An Act for taking of Affidavits in the County, and to be made use of in the Courts of King's-Bench, Common-Plas and Exchequer.
6. An Act for confirming and perpetuating Appropriations made by Ecclesiastical Persons to Impropriate Vicarages and Curacies.
7. An Act for taking away the Writ De Heretico Comburendo.
8. An Act for Naturalizing of Children of his Majesty's English Subjects born in Foreign Countries during the late Troubles.
9. An Act for erecting a Judicature to determine Differences touching Houses Burnt and Demanded by the late dreadful Fire in Southwark.
10. An Act for the better Repairing and Maintaining the Peer of Great Inmouth.

After which, the Lord Chancellor, by his Majesty's Command, acquainted the two Houses, that his Majesty gave them leave to Adjourn till the 25th of May next: And accordingly the two Houses Adjourn'd till that time.

The House of Commons were so alarmed at the Progress of the French Arms in Flanders, that they presented an Address to his Majesty on the 25th of May, humbly desiring, that he would be pleas'd to enter into an Offensive and Defensive League with the States-General of the United Provinces, and make such other Alliances with other Confederates, as his Majesty should think fit against the Growth and Power of the French King, for the Preservation of the Spanish Netherlands. Upon Delivery of this Address, the King grew very angry, and signified his Pleasure to the Commons, that they should attend him on Monday Morning in the Banqueting-house at Whitehall; where his Majesty was pleas'd to shew his Repentment in this following Speech:

Gentlemen,

Could I have been silent, I would rather have chosen to be so, than to call to mind things so unfit for you to meddle with as are contained in some parts of your last Address, wherein you have intrenched upon so undoubted a Right of the Crown, that I am confident it will appear in no Age (when the Sword was not drawn) that the Prerogative of making Peace and War hath been so dangerously invaded.

The King expresses his ardent

You do not content your selves with desiring me to enter into such Leagues as may be for the Safety of the Kingdom, but you tell me what sort of Leagues they must be, and with whom, and (as your Address is worded) it is more liable to be understood to be by your Leave than at your Request, that I should make such other Alliances as I please with other of the Confederates.

Should I suffer this fundamental Power of making Peace and War to be so far invaded tho' but once, as to have the Manner and Circumstances of Leagues prescribed to me by Parliament; it's plain that no Prince or State would any longer believe that the Sovereignty of England rests in the Crown; nor could I think my self to signify any more to Foreign Princes than the empty Sound of a King: Wherefore you may rest assured, that no Condition shall make me depart from, or lessen so essential a part of the Monarchy: And I am willing to believe so well of this House of Commons, that I am confident these ill Consequences are not intended by you.

These are, in short, the Reasons why I can by no means approve of your Address: And yet tho' you have declined to grant me that Supply which is so necessary to the Ends of it, I do again declare to you, That as I have done all that lay in my Power since your last Meeting, so I will still apply myself, by all the means I can, to let the World see my Care both for the Security and Satisfaction of my People, altho' it may not be with those Advantages to them which by your Assurances I might have procured. And his Majesty was farther pleas'd to declare his Pleasure to them, that the House should be Adjourn'd till the 16th of July next; telling them, he would give them Notice by his Proclamation when his Majesty intended they should sit again; which his Majesty was pleas'd to say should not be till the Winter, unless there were some extraordinary Occasion of calling them sooner. A late Historian has thus express'd himself on this Occasion: "The King, to shew his farther Indignation to the Commons, and to take French Counsels for Reparation of their dangerous Invasion of his Prerogative, signified to the Commons that they should adjourn till the 16th of July following; which was so absolutely obeyed by the Speaker, then Mr. but now Sir E. S. that without the Consent of the House, or so much as putting the Question, he Adjourn'd them to the 16th of July, tho' Sir John Finch 1677. 29 Car. II. Finch was Impeached, for the same thing, of High Treason in Parliament in 1640. So that if the Parliament were not Dissolved by the last Prorogation, another Question may now arise whether it was not so by their Separation, without either Prorogation or Adjournment.

The legal Being of the Parliam. question'd without Doors. Among the Proceedings in this Session, it should be farther observed, that a Question was made without doors (as had been formerly within) whether the Parliament were not truly and legally Dissolved. But to restrain and terrifie People from any such Freedom of Discourse, an Order was made in the House of Lords, That the Serjeant at Arms attending that House should take into his Custody Aaron Smith, and bring him to the Bar of the said House, there to Answer for speaking certain dangerous and seditious Words against the Being of this present Parliament. And Mr. Smith prudently absconding, they presented their humble Desires to his Majesty, That he would by his Royal Proclamation strictly charge and command, that the utmost and most effectual Endeavours should be used for apprehending the Person of the said Aaron Smith, and bring him before the said House of Peers (if the Parliament should be sitting at the time of his Apprehension) or in case the Parliament should not be then sitting, before one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, to the intent the said Aaron Smith might be secured, in order to his Appearance before the said House of Peers, to answer for his said Offence. To which his Majesty comply'd by a Proclamation given at Whitehall on June 1.

K. commands the Houses to adjourn. On Monday July 16. the two Houses of Parliament, pursuant to their last Adjournment, met at Westminster, and, according to his Majesty's Pleasure signify'd to them, did immediately adjourn again till the 3d of December next. This Pleasure of his Majesty was signify'd in the House of Commons by Mr. Secretary Coventry; and in great Submission to it, Mr. Speaker is said again to have pronounced the Adjournment by his own Authority. On Octob. 26. the King publish'd a Proclamation, That he had by Advice of his Privy Council, upon weighty Considerations, resolv'd upon a farther Adjournment of his two Houses of Parliament; and therefore declares his Royal Intention, that his House of Peers may adjourn themselves, and also his House of Commons may adjourn themselves, on the third Day of December (being the Day prefixed for their Assembling) untill the fourth Day of April next ensuing. But however, at the time of Meeting, on Monday December the third, the two Houses received a Message from his Majesty, that his Majesty having given notice by his Proclamation, that he intended the Houses should be adjourn'd till the fourth of April; had now, for weighty Considerations, thought fit to meet both Houses sooner: And therefore his Pleasure was, That they should be adjourn'd to the fifteenth of January next. And accordingly the two Houses were so adjourn'd, Mr. Secretary Coventry delivering the Message in the House of Commons, and the Speaker again executing of it, in a profound Deference to his Majesty's Pleasure. Upon which, the foremention'd Historian has left this Remark: "Thus did the Speaker make a threefold Invasion upon the Privilege of the House, for the House's once presuming to invade his Majesty's Prerogative of making War and Peace. After this last Recess of the two Houses, his Majesty by Proclamation dated Dec. 7. declared himself desirous, in respect of several important Matters intended to be debated and considered, to have on the said fifteenth Day of January a full Assembly of the Members of both Houses of Parliament: and therefore, with the Advice of his 1677. 29 Car. II. Privy Council, thinks fit to require and command the Lords and Commons to give their Attendance at Westminster on the said Day, in a ready Conformity to his Royal Will and Pleasure.

Happy Match of the Prince of Orange with the Lady Mary. In the mean time came on the happy Match between William Prince of Orange and the Lady Mary eldest Daughter of James Duke of York. The first Motion of this Design was made by the Prince to Sir William Temple at the beginning of the Spring 1676; when being ready to take the Field, he told the English Ambassadour that he had a mind to have some Discourse with him in private, and appointed him a Time to meet in his Garden at Hounslair-dike, where the Prince told Sir William, "That he might easily believe, being the only Son left of his Family, he was often pressed by his Friends to think of Marrying, and had Persons propos'd to him as their several Humours led them; that for his own part, he knew it was a thing to be done at one time or another, but that he hitherto excused the thoughts of it, otherwise than in general, till the War was ended; that besides his own Friends, the Deputies of the States began to press him more earnestly every Day, and the more as they saw the War like to continue; and perhaps they had more Reason to do it than any others: That he had at last promised them he would more seriously and particularly think of it, and so he had, and resolv'd he would Marry; but that the Choice of a Person he thought more difficult: That he found himself inclin'd to no Proposals that had been made him from France or Germany, nor indeed to any thing that had been mention'd upon that Occasion by any of his Friends, but that of England: That before he concluded to make any Paces that way, he was resolv'd to have the Ambassadour's Opinion upon two Points; but yet would not ask it, unless he promised to answer him as a Friend, or at least an indifferent Person, and not as the King's Ambassadour. When he told him he should be obey'd, he proceeded, and said, "That he would confess to him, that during the late War, neither the States, nor himself in particular, were without Application made to them from several Persons, and considerable ones too in England, who would fain engaged them to Head the Discontents that were rais'd by the Conduct of the Court in that whole War, which he knew was begun and carried on quite contrary to the Humour of the Nation, and might perhaps have proved very dangerous to the Crown, if it had not ended as it did: That all those Persons who pretended to be much his Friends were extremely against any Thought of his Marrying in England; and their Reasons were, That he would lose by that, all the Esteem and Interest he had there, and be believ'd to have run wholly into the Dispositions and Designs of the Court, which were generally thought so different from those of the Nation, especially upon the Point of Religion: That his Friends there did not believe the Government could be long without some great Disturbance, unless they changed their Measures, which was not esteem'd very likely to be done. In the next place, he must be satisfi'd with the Person and Disposition of the young Lady; for though the World might perhaps imagine, that a Prince need not be concern'd in those Particulars, yet so far as he knew himself, he must declare, That no Circumstances of Fortune or Interest would engage him, without an agreeable Person of good Humour and Disposition: That he might per-1677. 29 Car. II. "haps be a Man not very easie for a Wife to live with; he was sure he could not be easie to such Wives as were generally in the Courts of the present Age: That if he should meet with One that would give him Trouble at home, it was what he should not be able to bear, for he was likely to have enough abroad: He must have a Wife easie and agreeable, which he thought chiefly depended upon a natural Disposition and good Education. And therefore if the Ambassadour knew any thing in particular of the Lady Mary, in those Points, he desired to tell him freely.

The Ambassadour answer'd his Highness, That he was very glad to find he was resolv'd to marry, as being what he owed his Family and his Friends; that he was much more pleas'd, that his Inclinations led him to endeavour a Match in England, which would be much for his Interest and Honour: But as to the Character of the Lady Mary he could say little to it, only he had often heard his Wife and Sister speak with all the Advantage imaginable, of what they could discern in a Princess so young, and more from what they had been told by the Governours, with whom they had a particular Friendship. The Result of this Discourse was, that the Prince wrote both to the King and the Duke to beg their Favour to him in it, and their Leave that he might go over into England at the end of the Campaign. The Prince was long diverted from this Inclination by his Fatigues in the Camp, and by the perplexity of the Affairs of Europe, and especially by the Suspence of the Treaty at Nimwegen. The French were early in the Field this Year, and took Falenciennes, and Cambray, and St. Omer. The Prince of Orange, about the end of July, made an Attempt upon Charleroy; but fail'd in his intended Surprize of that Place: And now at last perceiving that there could be no Stop put to the Fury of the French Arms, but by Calling in the Assistance of England, he reassum'd his Thoughts of Marriage, and sent over Montieur Bentinck (now Earl of Portland) into England to solicit that Affair, and to make way for the Prince's Journey thither. And so good Encouragement was given for his kind Reception, that on Tuesday the ninth Day of October, about Ten in the Morning, his Highness arriv'd at Harmich, accompany'd by a great many Persons of the chiefest Quality in Holland. Here his Majesty's Couches met him, and carry'd him immediately to New-market, where he arriv'd at about Seven in the Evening, and was receiv'd by his Majesty and his Royal Highness with all the Marks of Affection and Esteem. They invited him often into Discourses of Business, which they wonder'd to see him avoid, and industriously divert: So that the King commanded Temple to find the Reason of it; upon which the Prince frankly told him, He was resolv'd to see the young Princess before he enter'd upon any other Affair of Peace or War. The King laughed at this piece of Nicety, but said he would humour the Prince in it, and said he would go some Days sooner than he intended from New-market. And accordingly on October the 13th the King and whole Court return'd to Whitehall. The Prince, upon sight of the Lady, was so well pleas'd with her Person and Temper, that he immediately made his Application to the King and Duke for their Consent: By whom he was well received, and they allow'd of it, but with this Condition, That the Terms of the Peace abroad might be first adjust'd between them. The Prince excus'd himself, and said, He must end this first Business before he began the other. The King and the Duke were both positive in their Opinion, and the Prince as firm in his Resolution, saying at last, that his Allies, who are like to have hard Terms of Peace as things then stood, would be apt to believe that he had made this Match at their cost; and that for his part, he never could sell his Honour for a Wife. The Lord Treasurer, and those in the secret Ministry, did verily believe, that the whole Business would break off upon this Punctilio: And Sir William Temple happening to go to his Highness after Supper, found him in the worst Humour he had ever seen him, complaining, that He repented he had ever come into England, and resolv'd he would stay but two Days longer, and then would be gone, if the King persisted in his Resolution of treating about the Peace before the Marriage was consummate: But that before he went, the King must choose how they should live together from thenceforward: He was sure it must be either as the greatest Friends, or as the greatest Enemies: desiring Sir William to let his Majesty know so much the next Morning, and give him an Account of what he should say upon it. In pursuance of this, Sir William Temple, early in the Morning, acquainted the King with all that the Prince had said the Night before, and the ill Consequences of a Breach between them, considering the ill Humour of many of his Subjects upon our late Measures with France, and the Invitations made the Prince by several of them, during the late War. The King gave great Attendance to what was said, and answer'd, Well, I never was yet deceiv'd in judging of a Man's Honesty by his Looks (of which he gave some Examples;) and if I am not mislaken in the Prince's Face, he is the honestest Man in the World, and I will trust him, and he shall have his Wife; and you shall go immediately and tell my Brother so, and that it's a thing I am resolv'd on. Sir William having accordingly acquainted the Duke with it, he seem'd at first a little surpriz'd; but when the other had done, he said, The King shall be obey'd; and I should be glad all his Subjects learn'd of me to obey him: I do tell him my Opinion freely upon any thing; but when that is done, and I know his Pleasure upon it, I obey him. From the Duke he went to the Prince, and told him the whole Transaction; which, at first, his Highness would hardly believe; but then embrac'd him, and said, He had made him a very happy Man, and that very unexpectedly.

On October the 24th, in the Morning, his Majesty was pleas'd to declare to the Lords of his Privy Council (who he had caus'd to meet extraordinarily for that purpose) that he had concluded a Marriage between her Highness the Lady Mary and his Highness the Prince of Orange. Upon which their Lordships, about Three in the Afternoon, went in a Body to make their Compliments first to the Lady, and afterwards to the Prince. The News of which being spread in the Town, was followed at Night with Bonfires, Ringing of Bells, and all other Demonstrations of Joy. On Sunday November the 4th, being the Birth-day of the Prince, the Marriage was privately celebrated at St. James's, about Eleven at Night, by the Bishop of London, in the Presence of his Majesty (who gave the Bride) their Royal Highnesses, and some of the chiefest Nobility.

Within a few Days after this auspicious Wedding, the King, the Duke and the Prince, with none others admitted but the Lord Treasurer and Sir William Temple fell into Debates upon the Terms of a Peace, and after much disputing did agree upon this Scheme, that all should be restored by France to the Empire and Emperor, that had

1677. had been taken in the War, the Dutchy of Lo-

France and Holland; and to Spain the Towns of Aeth, Charleroy, Oudenard, Courtray, Tournay, Conde, Valenciennes, St. Gislain and Binch; that the Prince should endeavour to procure the Consent of Spain, and the King that of France; for which end he should send some Person over immediately with the Proposal, who should be instructed to enter into no Reasonings upon it, but demand a positive Answer in two Days, and after that Term immediately return. My Lord Duras, a Creature of the Duke's, was at last the Person pitch'd upon and sent over: But he, after the delivery of his Message, was prevailed with to stay longer than his time; and after all, came away without any positive Answer, and so the Business was left to be drawn out into many Messages from England, and prevaricating Returns from France, which at last dwindled into nothing. The Prince after his Return to Holland, prest the King by Letters not to recede from his late Engagements to him, of entering into the War with all the Confederates, in case of no direct and immediate Answer from France, upon the Terms of a Peace proposed to that Court. But his Majesty rather contented himself to send Mr. Thyme over into Holland with a Draught of an Alliance to be made with the Dutch, in order to force France and Spain into a compliance with the Propositions agreed on; and to consign the same into the hands of Hyde then at the Hague, which was done, and the Treaty sign'd on the sixteenth of January, tho' not without great Difficulties and much Disatisfaction on the part of the Prince of Orange, who was brought into it by the private Consent of the Spanish Minister there, in behalf of his Master, so that the War could not break out but upon France, in case of their refusal.

Meeting of the Parl.

Under these new Measures the King was disposed to meet his Parliament sooner than he had before declared his intention of doing. On January 15. the two Houses met at Westminster, pursuant to their last Adjournment, and received this Message from his Majesty, That his Majesty had Matters of very great Importance to Communicate to both Houses, in order to the Satisfaction of their late Addresses for the preservation of Flanders. But it so happening, that Matters are not yet so ripe as within a few Days they will be, therefore his Majesty's Pleasure was, that they should be immediately ad-journ'd till Monday the twenty eighth of this instant January. On that Day his Majesty came into the House of Lords, and sending for the Commons, made this most gracious Speech to them on the occasion of their meeting.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's Speech.

WHEN we parted last I told you, that before we met again I would do that which should be to your Satisfaction; I have accordingly made such Alliances with Holland as are for the preservation of Flanders, and which cannot fail of that End, unless prevented either by the want of due Assurances to support those Alliances, or by the small regard the Spaniards themselves must have to their own Preservation.

The first of these I cannot suspect, by Reason of your repeated Engagements to maintain them, and I know you are so wise as to consider, that a War, which must be the necessary Consequence of them, ought neither to be prosecuted by halves, nor to want such Assurances of Perseverance as may give me Encouragement to pursue it; besides, it will not be less necessary, to let our Enemies have such a prospect of our Resolutions, as may let them see certainly that we shall not be weary of our Arms, till Christendom be restored to such a Peace as shall not be in the Power of any Prince alone to disturb.

1677.
25 Car. II.

I do acknowledge to you, that I have used all the means possible, by a Mediation, to have procured an honourable and safe Peace for Christendom; knowing how preferable such a Peace would have been to any War, and especially to this Kingdom, which must necessarily own the vast Benefits it has received by Peace, whilst its Neighbours only have yet smarted by the War. But finding it no longer to be hop'd for by fair Means, it shall not be my Fault if that be not obtain'd by Force, which cannot be had any other ways.

For this reason I have recal'd my Troops from France, and have consider'd that altho' the Dutch shall do their parts, we cannot have less on ours than ninety Sail of Capital Ships constantly maintained, nor less than thirty or forty thousand Landmen (with their Dependencies) to be employ'd upon our Fleets and elsewhere.
And because there shall be no fear of Mis-employing what you shall give to these uses, I am contented that such Money be appropriated to those Ends as strictly as you can desire. I have given Testimony enough of my Care in that kind by the Progress I have made in building the new Ships, wherein, for the making them more useful, I have directed such larger Dimensions as will cost me above one hundred thousand Pounds more than the Acts allows. I have gone as far as I could in repairing the old Fleet, and in buying of necessary Stores for the Navy and Ordnance; and in this and other Provisions, for better securing both my Foreign Plantations and the Islands nearer home, I have expended a great deal more than the two hundred thousand Pounds you enabled me to borrow upon the Excise, altho' I have not found such a Credit as I expected upon that Security. I have born the charge both of a Rebellion in Virginia, and a new War with Algiers: I stand engaged to the Prince of Orange for my Nieces Portion, and I shall not be able to maintain my constant necessary Establishments, unless the new Impost upon Wines &c. be continued to me, which would otherwise turn only to their Profit to whom we least intend it.

I hope

" I hope theſe things will need little Recommendation to you, when you confider your Promiſes in ſome, and the neceſ-ſity of the reſt; and to let you ſee that I have not only employ'd my Time and Treafure for your ſafety, but done all I could to remove all ſorts of Jealouſies. I have marry'd my Niece to the Prince of Orange, by which I hope I have given full Aſſurances that I ſhall never ſuffer his In-ought to be to preferve them.

a plentiful Supply ſuitable to ſuch great occasions, whereon depends not only the Honour but (for ought I know) the Being of an English Nation, which will not be ſaved by mending Faults afterwards, but may be prevented by avoiding the chief Fault of doing weakly and by halves, what can only be hop'd from a vigorous and take.

" Theſe Conſiderations are of the greateſt Importance that ever concern'd this Kingdom, and therefore I would have you en-vert you from bringing them to good Re-ſolutions.

The Commons returned to their own Houſe, and on January 31. addreſs'd the King with Thanks for marrying his Niece to the Prince of Orange, and beſought him to make no Treaty of Peace with France, whereby the French King ſhould be left in Poſſeſſion of any greater Power or Dominion than was left him by the Pyrenean Treaty. This again mightily offended the King, who look'd upon it as too bold an Invaſion of his Prerogative: but however, the Commons would give no Money without an expreſs Condition of applying it to a maintenance of a War with France; and being exceedingly more alarmed by the Succeſs of the French in taking of Ghent and beſieging Ipres, they fell into a Reſolution of Addreſſing the King, that he would forth- with enter into an actual War with France. Upon which, this Meſſage from his Majeſty was read in the Houſe by one of the Secretaries of State.

However, his Majeſty to ſecure the Money Bill, came into the Houſe of Lords on Wednesday March 20. and being ſeated on his Throne with the Commons attending, he was pleaſed to give

State of Religion.

Profaneness of the Times reform'd, by an Act for the better Observation of the Lord's-Day.

As to the State of Religion, the Prophaneness of the Times was in some measure reform'd, by a wholesome and seasonable Law for the better Observation and keeping Holy the Lord's-Day, commonly call'd Sunday; whereby it was Enacted, "That all the Laws already in force, concerning the Observation of the Lord's-Day, and repairing to the Church thereon, should be carefully put in Execution. And it was further Enacted, "That no Drover, Horse-courser, Waggoner, Butcher, Higgler, their or either of their Servants, shall Travel or come into their Inn or Lodging upon the Lord's-Day, upon pain of forfeiting Twenty Shillings for every Offence: And that no Person shall Use, Employ or Travel upon the Lord's-Day with any Boat, Wherry, Lighter, or Barge, Except it be upon Extraordinary Occasion, to be allowed by some Justice of the Peace, under the Penalty of Five Shillings for every Offence. It was likewise Provided, "That if any Person Travelling upon the Lord's-Day shall be then Robb'd, no Hundred, or the Inhabitants thereof, shall be charged with, or answerable for any Robbery so committed; but the Person or Persons so robbed, shall be barred from bringing any Action for the said Robbery. And lastly, "That no Person, upon the Lord's-Day shall serve or execute any Writ, Process, Warrant, Order, Judgment, or Decree, (Except in Cases of Treason, Felony, or breach of Peace,) but that the Service of every such Writ, &c. shall be void to all Intents and Purposes whatsoever; and the Person so serving or executing of the same, shall be as liable to the Suit of the Party grieved, and to answer Damages, as if he had done the same without any Writ, &c.

An Act for Relief of the poorer Clergy.

There was a good Benefit intended to the poorer Clergy, by an Act for Confirming and Perpetuating Augmentations made by Ecclesiastical Persons to small Vicarages and Curacies, referring to His Majesty's Letters, bearing Date the First Day of June, in the Twelfth Year of His Majesty's Reign, requiring Arch-Bishops, Bishops, Deans and Chapters, and other Ecclesiastical Persons, to take Care for the Improvement of poor Vicarages and Curacies, where the Indowment thereof was found too small to afford a competent Maintenance to those who serve the Cure, upon their Renewing of Leases of Rectories, or Tythes Improprate, by making Reservations beyond the ancient Rent, to the intent the same might become payable to the same Vicars or Curates in Augmentation of their Endowments. But in regard that such Reservations were not made to the Vicars or Curates; or if they were, no convenient Remedy could be had by such Vicars or Curates for the Recovery thereof, and they were not at the time thereof capable of taking any Interest to their own use, whereby the said Provisions will depend upon the good Pleasure of the Successors, and may in time be disappointed. Therefore it was Enacted, That all Augmentations made since the said First Day of June, or hereafter to be made for the Use or Benefit of any Vicar or Curate, by any Ecclesiastical Corporation or Person, by way of Reservation out of any Rectory Improprate, or Portion of Tythes, shall continue during the Estate upon which they are reserved, and afterwards for ever. And that the said Vicars and Curates shall have Remedy for the same either by Distress or Action of Debt, provided the Augmentation do not exceed one moiety of the clear Yearly Value of the Rectory Improprate. And to the end the said Vicars and Curates might the better make appear the Certainty of the said Augmentations, it was Provided, That every Arch-Bishop, Bishop, Dean and Chapter, should cause every Lease or Grant whereon any such Augmentation was made, to be fairly entred in a Book of Parchment, to be kept by their respective Register for that purpose, and a true Copy of the said Entry examin'd and attested, should be taken for a Record and Evidence at Law. And if any Question should arise, there should be such favourable Constructions and such farther Remedy as in Case of Charitable Uses. And any future Lease, without express continuance of the said Augmentation, shall be utterly void.

Under the Apprehensions of Popery, it was thought to be some wisdom of Prevention, to make an Act for taking away the Writ de Hæretico Comburendo, whereby it was Enacted, That the Writ commonly call'd Breve de Hæretico Comburendo, with all Process and Proceedings thereupon, in order to the executing such Writ, or following or depending thereupon, and all Punishment by Death, in pursuance of any Ecclesiastical Censures, be from henceforth utterly taken away and abolished.

Comburendo.

The Dangers of Popery, and the Advances of the Popish Interest at Court, were freely represented by Mr. Andrew Marvel, in a Tract Intituled An Account of the Growth of Popery, &c. This Book was so offensive to the Ministry, that at the end of this Year His Majesty caused an Order to be publish'd, in these words, Whereas there have been lately Printed and Publish'd several seditious and scandalous Libels against the Proceedings of both Houses of Parliament, and other His Majesty's Courts of Justice, to the Dishonour of His Majesty's Government, and the Hazard of the Publick Peace: These are to give Notice, That what Person soever shall Discover unto one of the Secretaries of State, the Printer, Publisher, Author, or Hander to the Press of any of the said Libels, so that full Evidence may be made thereof to a Jury, without mentioning the Informer, especially one Libel intituled, An Account of the Growth of Popery, &c. And another call'd A Seasonable Argument to all the Grand-Juries, &c. the Discoverer shall be Rewarded as follows: He shall have Fifty Pounds for such Discovery, as aforesaid, of the Printer, or the Publisher of it from the Press; and for the Hander of it to the Press, One Hundred Pounds, &c.

Marv's Account
of the Growth
of Popery;

Dr. William Lucy, Lord Bishop of St. David's, Died on the 4th of October, and was Buried in the Collegiate-Church of Brecknock, with a Black Marble Monument, and a Latin Inscription in Golden Letters; to whom succeeded Dr. William Thomas. The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, had for some Years retir'd from the Court, and from a Concern in all State-Affairs, and lived for the most part in a Retirement at Croydon, where he Died on Friday, November 9th, and his Body was privately Interred in the Parochial-Church, near to the Tomb of Arch-Bishop Whitgift, according to his own special Direction. Soon after, a stately Monument was erected over his Grave, by his Nephew and Heir Sir Joseph Sheldon, late Lord-Mayor of London, with a large and elegant Inscription on it. The King was under some Difficulty to find a proper Successor; but at last, by the Recommendation of his Brother the Duke of York, he resolv'd upon Dr. William Sancroft, Dean of St. Paul's, as a Person of great Prudence and Moderation, and gave his Conge d'Eslire and Letter Missive for him, on January the 7th, who was accordingly Consecrated in the Abbey-Church of St. Peter at Westminster, on Sunday, January the 27th; at which Ceremony were present, and afterward were very nobly Entertained, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, Lord Privy-Seal, Duke of Monmouth, and many other of the Principal Nobility.

The Convocation Met occasionally with this and every other Session of Parliament: But since the Revival of the Liturgy, and the Settlement of the Church by the Act of Uniformity, they had enter'd upon no manner of Business; nor had they thought it proper to attempt any by their own Authority, or to desire any Royal Commission for it; only those Members who were near the Town, did, in pursuance of the Arch-Bishop's

However, to keep up the Dignity, and at least the Being of a Convocation, whenever any Prolocutor died, or was promoted, the Lower House, by the Arch-Bishop's Direction, chose a Successor: So now, Dr. Sancroft, Prolocutor, being confirmed in the See of Canterbury on January the 24th, Dr. Stillingfleet, who succeeded him in the Deanery of St. Paul's, was likewise chosen Prolocutor, and confirmed on the 14th of March.

The Re-building of the Cathedral of St. Paul in London went on but very slowly; and therefore, to excite and encourage Benefactors, A Brief Account of all Receipts and Expences in the Work of St. Paul's Church, was in September printed and published, for the Satisfaction of such Persons as have contributed to the same, or shall hereafter promote so Honorable a Building.

Frances's punishment.

On January the 3d, the Earl of Pembroke was committed by His Majesty's Command, to the Tower, for Blasphemy, Abuse of the Celebration of the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, and other his Misdemeanors (altogether unfit to be named) towards the Lord North's Chaplain, and Others: But on the 30th of January he was released from his Imprisonment, upon the Hearing of his Case in the House of Lords, who upon the same Declared and Adjudged, That the single Testimony (although upon Oath) of a Commoner, was not sufficient Evidence against a Peer denying the Fact upon his Honour. His Lordship soon after fell under the Accusation of Murder, for which he some time absconded; but on Tuesday, April the 2d, 1678. he surrendered himself, at Turnham-Green, to Sir Edward Carteret Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod, who the same Evening convey'd him to the Tower of London, in order to his being brought to a Tryal before the House of Peers, and on Thursday following he was brought thither by Sir John Robinson Lieutenant of the Tower, and after Eight Hours spent in the Formalities of the Tryal, his Lordship was by the Votes of the major-part of the Peers there present declared Not Guilty of Murder, but Guilty of Manslaughter, and had the benefit of his Peerage allowed him for the same by the Lord High-Chancellor (who was High-Steward pro hac Vice) pursuant to the Privilege granted to the Nobility in this behalf for their first Offence, made in the First Year of the Reign of King Edward VI.

1678.

Approach to a War with France.

The King began this Year 1678, with some Testimony of his being willing to gratifie his Parliament, and his People, by putting a stop to the Victories and Violencies of the French King, and therefore he caused his Proclamation to be publish'd, for Recalling and Prohibiting Seamen who were his Natural-born Subjects, from serving of Foreign Princes; it being made appear, that the French Ships were in great part Mann'd by English Mariners. And on March 30th, as if on the Prospect of a sudden War, His Majesty issued his Proclamation for a General Fast to be observed on Wednesday April the 10th, within London and Westminster, and on Wednesday April the 24th, throughout the rest of the Kingdom, for the Imploring a Blessing from Almighty God upon His Majesty, and all His Dominions, and for the averting of those Judgments which our manifold Sins and Provocations have most justly deserved.

The Parliament more inclin'd than the King to such a War.

The Parliament were much more forward than the King to enter into a Necessary War with France, for the Restoring of the Spanish Netherlands, and for Restoring the Balance of Europe, and shew'd their Zeal for it, in some Votes and Resolutions that made the King uneasie; and therefore, on Monday May 13th, his Majesty came to the House of Lords, and after giving his Royal Assent to several Private Acts, he was pleas'd to Command the Lord Chancellor to Prorogue the Parliament till Thursday the 23d of this Month, and accordingly the Parliament was Prorogued to that time; and then Meeting again at Westminster, his Majesty came in his Robes, and the Commons attending, his Majesty made a Gracious Speech to the Two Houses on the Subject of their Meeting; which done, the Lord Chancellor more fully declared his Majesty's Mind to them on this Occasion. They Met on Monday May 27th; the Commons being impatient of all further delay in Declaring War against France, came to this Resolution, That the Army lately raised, and now in being, was a great Charge and Burden to the Nation: That if His Majesty thought fit to enter into a War against the French King, this House is always ready to assist him in it; but if otherwise, they will proceed to the Consideration of providing for the speedy Disbanding of the Army. These Proceedings made the King more and more uneasie; and at last, on Monday, July 15th, his Majesty brought this Session to an End, after the giving his Royal Assent to the Publick Acts following, as well as to Twelve Private.

Resolutions of the Commons for a War.

1. "An Act for Granting a Supply to His Majesty, of Six hundred nineteen thousand three hundred eighty eight Pounds, Eleven Shillings, and Nine Pence, for Disbanding the Army, and other Uses therein mentioned. Acts Pas. 1678.
2. "An Act for Granting an Additional Duty to His Majesty, upon Wines, for Three Years.
3. "An Act to Enable Creditors to Recover their Debts of the Executors and Administrators of Executors, in their own wrong.
4. "An Act for Burying in Woollen.
5. "An Act for Admeasurement of Keels and Boats carrying Coals.
6. "An Act for Reviving a former Act, entitled, An Act for avoiding Unnecessary Suits and Delays, and for Continuance of one other Act, entitled, An Act for the better Settling of Intestates Estates.
7. "An Act for the further Relief and Discharge of poor distressed Prisoners for Debt.
8. "An Act for Repealing certain Words in a Clause in a former Act, entitled, An Act for Enlarging and Repairing of Common High-ways.
9. "An Act for Preservation of Fishing in the River of Severne.

After which, the Lord Chancellor, by His Majesty's Command, acquainted the Two Houses, That His Majesty had thought fit, in the present Conjuncture of Affairs, to Prorogue them to the First of August next, and so to keep them in Call by short Prorogations, His Majesty not knowing how soon he might have need of their further Service and Assistance: But that His Majesty's Intention was, they should not Meet till towards Winter, unless there were Occasion for their Assembling sooner, of which He would give them timely Notice by his Proclamation, and accordingly the Parliament was Prorogued till the First Day of August next.

Parliament Prorogued.

On Thursday the 1st of August the Two Houses Met at Westminster, and were, by Commission, further Prorogued till the 29th Instant, with a Declaration, "That it was His Majesty's Pleasure, they should at that time not only Meet, but should continue to Sit, for the Dispatch of divers weighty Affairs." And accordingly a Proclamation was publish'd, to require the Attendance of the respective Members, in a Full Assembly, on the said 29th of August. But for all this Assurance, His Majesty published another Proclamation, Declaring, That having now taken into his Consideration, That the State of Affairs Abroad was much changed since his last Proclamation, He had now therefore thought fit, with the Advice

1678. of his Privy-Council, to signify his Royal Pleasure, That the Two Houses of Parliament shall upon the said 29th of August, be further Prorogued to the First Day of October next; And that they shall then continue to Sit for the Dispatch of divers weighty Matters which shall be then Propos'd and Debated.

Prince, as a Testimony of Victory, the Field where the Battle was fought, the greatest Part of the wounded, several Tents and some Baggage, with a great Quantity of Powder and other Warlike Ammunition; One of the French Officers was heard to say after the Battle, That he esteem'd this the only Heroick Action that had been done in the whole Course or Progress of the War. Next Morning the Prince received Advice from the States of the Separate Peace between them and the French Signed at Nimeguen. The News whereof he immediately sent to the Duke of Luxemburgh, who with a great Compliment desir'd an Interview with him, which being agreed to, They met in the Field at the Head of their Chief Officers, where all Things pass'd with great Civility and Gallantry on both Sides, the French crowding about a Young Prince, that had made so much Noise in the World, and but the Day before had given Conduct and Vigour to such a desperate Action. Yet many Reflections were made upon it by the Prince's Friends as well as Enemies; some saying, that he knew the Peace was Signed before the Fight began; (but if this was really so, it signify'd nothing, since he was not obliged to take Notice of it till he had Advice from the States) and that it was too great a Venture both to himself and the States, and too great a Sacrifice to his own Honour, since it could be to no other Advantage: Others laid the Blame upon the Marquiss of Grana, who, they say, had intercepted and concealed the States Packet to the Prince, which came into the Camp the Day before the Battle was fought, but after it was resolv'd on; and that he had hopes by such a Breach of the Peace even after it was Signed, that the Progress of it would be defeated; whether this were real Fact or no, could never be made appear, but so much was true, that the Prince could not have ended the War with greater Glory nor with greater Spight, to see such a mighty Occasion wrested out of his Hand, by the sudden and unexpected Signing of the Peace, which he had assur'd himself the States would not have consented to without the Spaniards; yet upon the certain News of it, he drew back his Army, returned to the Hague, and left the States to pursue their own Paces in order to the finishing of the Treaty between France and Spain, wherein the Dutch Ambassadors at Nimeguen employ'd themselves with great Zeal and Diligence, and no longer like Parties and Confederates but as Mediators, while the English Plenipotentiary who continued still there in that Figure, declined the Function, as being a Matter wherein he found the Court of England would not take any Part, nor allow themselves to have had any in the Peace between France and Holland.

1678. News of the Peace.

Reflections on the Personal Bravery of the Prince.

Pursuance of the Treaty at Nimeguen.

En lish Court now inclin'd to a War.

Memorial to the States of Holland.

Treaty of Nimeguen. managed with great Artifice by the French, and with too much Remifsness and Negligence by most of the Confederates. The King of France about the Beginning of April made a Publick Declaration of the Terms upon which alone He was resolv'd to make a General Peace: But it being dishonourable and unsafe for the several Confederates to accept of them; and the Dutch finding the Councils of England to be uncertain, and being weary of a War that lost their Trade, and drain'd their Treasure, they re-assum'd their Inclinations to a Separate Peace. Under this Disposition the King sent over Sir William Temple once more to Holland, who consulting with the Prince of Orange, and the Chief Burgo-Masters concluded a Treaty in Six Days, whereby France was Obliged within Fourteen Days after the Date of it, to declare, That they would evacuate the Spanish Towns, or in Case of their Refusal, Holland was engag'd to go on with the War, and England immediately to declare against France, in Conjunction with Holland and the rest of the Confederates.

Dutch inclin'd to a Separate Peace.

Siege of Mons. In the mean time the City of Mons, one of the best Frontiers remaining to Flanders, was strongly blocked up by the French Army under Command of the Duke of Luxemburgh, who was so confident of the good Posture he was in, that he sent Word to the Marechal D'Estrades, one of the French Plenipotentiaries at Nimeguen, He was so pos'd, That if he had but 10000 Men, and the Prince of Orange 40000, yet he was sure he could not be forced, much less while He took his Army to be much stronger than That of the Prince. But

however the Prince resolv'd to break through all Disadvantages whatever, and on Sunday, August 17. decamp'd from Soignes, Marched towards Roches, and from thence Resolv'd to Advance to the Enemy, whose Right Wing was post'd at the Abby of St. Dennis, and the Left at Mamey St. Pierre, with such Advantage of Situation, that they thought themselves inaccessible; for besides the Woods, there was only a Precipice led to them, and that by narrow Paths. About 12. the Cannon began to play upon St. Dennis, and soon after the Confederate Dragoons behav'd themselves so gallantly that they drove the French from their Fastness; and made themselves Masters of the Cloyster; while Adjutant General Collier advanc'd towards the Abby, and passing his Battalions in a Defile through the narrow Passages, and sliding down the Precipices with an invincible Resolution, and after a Vigorous Resistance, made the French retire within their Lines. The Duke of Monmouth arriv'd in the Confederate Camp about Noon, and Din'd with the Prince in the open Field; they were both present at the desperate Attack upon the Abby after Dinner, animating the Soldiers very much by their Presence and Example. From hence they both wheeled off to Chateau, which was Attack'd by the Spaniards in the Right Wing under the Duke De Villa Hermosa, assist'd by some English and Scotch Regiments, commanded by the Brave Earl of Ossery, who indeed did Wonders. Here the Prince of Orange advanced so far that he was in great Danger of being lost, had not Monsieur Overkirk come in seasonably to his Relief, and killed a French Captain that was just ready to let a Pistol fly at him. At last, by Favour of the Night, the Duke of Luxemburgh made his Retreat without any Noise, withdrew towards Mons, and cover'd himself with a Wood on one Side, and a River on the other, leaving to the 1678. "extreamly Surprized at that manner of Proceedure, there being no Security given for the evacuating the Towns in Flanders, nor for providing a sufficient Barrier on this Side of the Empire, and therefore He had sent over this Ambassador in his Name and on his Part, to assure them, That if the Lords, the States, will refuse to ratify that which was Signed by their Ambassadors at Nimeguen; His Majesty, Three Days after such a Declaration shall be notified to him, will Declare Actual War against France and carry it on in all Points according to the Articles and Obligations of his late Treaty with the States.

Great danger of the Prince of Orange.

Prince of Orange surpriz'd at the change of Measures in the English Court.

Other Separate Peaces.

Discovery of the Popish Plot.

Narrative of Titus Oats.

Persons Exam'd.

Coleman's Letters the greatest Evidence.

When the Prince of Orange was made acquainted with this Proceedure of England, by Mr. Hyde, who went on Purpose to Housterdike to do it, he was no sooner withdrawn, but the Prince lift up his Hands two or three Times, and said to Sir William Temple, then present, *Was ever any thing so hot and so cold as this Court of yours? Will the King that is so often at Sea ever learn the World that I shall never forget, since my last Passage, when in a great Storm, the Captain was crying out to the Man at the Helm all Night, Steddy, Steddy, Steddy? If this Dispatch had come Twenty Days ago, it would have changed the Face of all Things in Christendom, and the War might have been carried on till France had yielded to the Treaty of the Pyrennces, and left the World in quiet for the rest of their Lives; but it is my Opinion as it comes now, it will have no Effect at all, at least it's my Opinion, tho' I would not say so to Mr. Hyde: And indeed the Event proved answerable to the Prince's Judgment. For the French at Nimeguen managed their Affairs with so much Art and Application, That another Separate Peace with the Spaniards was first concluded and ratified, and before the End of January, another Peace with the Emperor, and Princes of the Empire, to the Exclusion of none, but the Brave Duke of Lorrain. And all this without the Intervention of Sir William Temple and Sir Isaac Fenkins the English Mediators, because the Imperial Plenipotentiaries would not allow them the Precedency of Signing.*

We come now to a great Crisis in Politicks, The Discovery of the Popish Plot, first made by Titus Oats, who had been Educated and Admitted into Orders in the Church of England and employed upon a Cure in Kent, but afterwards (seemingly at least) was reconciled to the Church of Rome, and going over to St. Omers, was enter'd into the English College there; and being thence sent into Spain, he ingratiated himself with the Jesuits and Priests in those Parts, and so by Degrees came to the Knowledge of what he now inform'd the King and Council of, A Plot carried on by the Jesuits and other Roman Catholics against His Majesty's Life, the Protestant Religion, and the Government of this Kingdom. It seem'd to make no great Impression on the King; But the Privy Council sat twice a Day, from Saturday the 28th of September for a Week and more, and several Persons were Examind and Committed by them, viz. Sir George Wakeman, Mr. Coleman, Mr. Laughorne, Thomas Whitehead, John Gauan, Anthony Turner, William Ireland, William Marshall, William Ramsfey, James Corker, Thomas Pickering, of which Number the last Eight were Jesuits and Priests, with divers others. Mr. Oats for a Confirmation of his Testimony, refer'd himself to Letters and Papers, which he said were in the Custody of Mr. Coleman, then Secretary to the Dutchess of Tork, who before his House was searcht had Time enough to convey away all the Papers of the Two last Years, with his Book of Entries of them. However, those Letters that were found, and afterwards published, did enough convince the World of the dangerous and desperate Intrigues of the Popish Party. An Ingenious Writer has left this Remark upon it, 1678. "That there was at that Time a Popish Plot, and that there always had been one since the Reformation, to support, if not restore the Romish Religion in England, scarce any body calls in question. How far the near Prospect of a Popish Successor ripen'd the Hopes, and gave new Vigour to the Designs of that Party, and what Methods they were then upon, to bring those Designs about, Coleman's Letters alone, without any other concurring Evidence, are more than sufficient to put the Matter out of doubt. But what Superstructures might have been afterwards built upon an unquestionable Foundation, and how far some of the Witnesses of that Plot might come to darken Truth by subsequent Additions of their own must be deferr'd till the Great Account, to be made before a Higher Tribunal: And till then, a great Part of the Popish Plot, as it was then sworn to, will in all Human Probability lie among the darkest Scenes of our English History.

Welwood's Memoirs.

But the most unhappy Demonstration of the Truth of this Conspiracy, was given by the Death of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey, a Justice of Peace for Middlesex, before whom the Depositions of Mr. Oats had been taken, and who had appear'd very zealous for the Discovery and Prosecution of the Plot. For which Reason He was extreamly hated by the Papists, and so much threatned with their Revenge upon him, that he himself was apprehensive of his own Danger, as Mr. Mals gave this Information to the House of Commons, About Five or Six Days before Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey was missing from his House, I met him in St. James's Park, and in Discourse, told him that I understood he examined Mr. Oats about a Plot that was much discours'd of, and desired to have such an Account from him as might be fit to be communicated: Whereupon he gave me some short Relation, agreeing for the most part with what was the common Discourse of the Town.— But I must not talk much (said he) for I lie under ill Circumstances: Some great men blame me for not having done my Duty, and I am threatned by others, and very great ones too, for having done too much. He then press'd to leave me, and without saying much more we parted. And farther Mr. Robinson gave this Account to the House of Commons,

Death of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey.

Suspitions and Testimonies of this Murder.

That he met Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey at the Sessions at Westminster on Tuesday and Wednesday before he was missing; and that he asked him whether he had any hand in taking the Informations touching the Plot; and that he made him Answer, That he had taken them, though very unwillingly: and desiring of him that he might see them, he told him he could not, for that he had left them with my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs; And that Dining with him on Wednesday, and discoursing concerning the Plot, and the Examinations touching the same, Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey said these Words: I have taken them, and I know not what will be the Consequence of them, but I believe I shall be the first Martyr: According to these Presages, He was found missing from his House on October the 14th and some Days after his Dead Body was found in the Fields cast into a Ditch, and as it appear'd by concurring Evidence, walking by Somerset-House he had been thrust in at the Water-Gate, thence hurried to a private Chamber, there barbarously Assassinated and his Body afterwards exposed in such manner as that the World might imagine he had killed himself. The Discovery of this Murder was first made by Mr. William Bedloe, and afterwards confirm'd by the Confession of Mr. Miles Prance, and the Execution of the Actors in it, Green, Berry, and Hill, who yet at their Death deny'd it.

The Parliament Met on October the 21st. when his Majesty could not forbear mentioning this Matter, Meeting of the Parliament.

1678. Matter, which had rais'd such an universal Amazement and Abhorrence in the Nation, and therefore his Majesty thus deliver'd himself to the Two Houses.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Have thought the Time very long since We parted last, and would not have deferred your Meeting by so many Prorogations if I could well have met you sooner.

The Part which I have had this Summer in the Preservation of Our Neighbours, and the Well-securing what was left of Flanders, is sufficiently known, and acknowledged by all that are abroad.

And though for this Cause I have been obliged to keep up my Troops, without which our Neighbours had absolutely despaired, yet both the Honour and the Interest of the Nation have been so far improved by it, that I am confident no Man here would repine at it, or think the Money rais'd for their disbanding to have been ill employed in their Continuance; and I do assure you, I am so much more out of Purse for that Service, that I expect you should supply it. How far it may be necessary (considering the Present State of Christendom) to reduce the Land and Sea-Forces, or to what Degree, is worthy of all our Serious Considerations.

I now intend to acquaint you (as I shall always do with any thing that concerns Me) That I have been informed of a Design against my Persons by the Jesuites, of which I shall forbear any Opinion, lest I may seem to say too much or too little; but I will leave the Matter to the Law, and in the mean time will take as much Care as I can to prevent all manner of Practices by that sort of Men, and of others too, who have been tampering in a high Degree by Foreigners, and contriving how to introduce Popery amongst us.

I shall Conclude with recommending to you my other Concerns.

I have been under great Disappointments by the Defect of the Poll-Bill.

My Revenue is under great Anticipations, and at best, was never equal to the constant and necessary Expence of the Government whereof I intend to have the whole State laid before you, and require you to look into it, and consider of it with that Duty and Affection which I am sure I shall ever find from you.

The rest I leave to the Lord-Chancellor.

The First Business of the Two Houses was to Agree in an Address to His Majesty, "That Information had been given of an horrible Design against his Sacred Life, and being very sensible of the fatal Consequence of such an Attempt, and of the Dangers of the Subversion of the Protestant Religion and Government of this Realm, They humbly beseech His Majesty, That a Solemn Day of Fasting and Humiliation may be appointed to Implore the Mercy and Protection of Almighty God to His Majesty's Royal Person, and in Him to all His Loyal Subjects, and to pray that God will bring to light more and more all secret Machinations against His Majesty and the whole Kingdom".

Which was accordingly done by Proclamation, dated 25th of October, requiring that Wednesday the 13th of November should be kept for a General Fast. Soon after, Both Houses again Agreed in another Address, "That having taken into their Serious Consideration the Bloody and Traiterous Designs of Popish Recufants against His Majesty's Sacred Person and Government, and the Protestant Religion, They do for Prevention thereof most humbly beseech His Ma-1678. jefty to issue forth his Royal Proclamation, commanding all Persons being Popish Recufants, or so reputed, to depart from the Cities of London and Westminster, and all other Places within Ten Miles of the same, on or before the 7th Day of November next ensuing, under Pain of His Majesty's highest Displeasure, and of the severest Execution of the Laws against them". To which His Majesty comply'd, and gave out a Proclamation to that Effect, dated October 30.

And because this Plot was by some Persons artificially suppress'd, and even by some others insolently Ridicul'd. Therefore on Thursday, October the 31st. The Commons Resolved Nemine Contradicente, "That upon the Evidence that has already appeared to this House, this House is of Opinion, that there is and hath been a Damnable and Hellish Plot, contrived and carried on by Popish Recufants, for assassinating and murdering the King, for subverting the Government, and rooting out and destroying the Protestant Religion.

Ordered, "That this Vote be communicated to the Lords at a Conference, and that the Lords be desired to join with this House in providing Remedies for Preservation of His Majesty's Person and Government, and the Protestant Religion"; And in a Conference between the Two Houses on this Subject, November the 1st. this Report was made, "The Lords have considered the Vote of the House of Commons communicated to them at the Conference, and have most readily and unanimously concurred with them in it Nemine Contradicente; and their Lordships are very glad to see that Zeal which the Commons have shewed upon this Occasion, and do fully concur with them, That the most speedy and serious Considerations of Both Houses are necessary for Prevention of the imminent Dangers; in order whereunto, their Lordships have resolved to Sit de Die in Diem, Forenoon and Afternoon, and desire that the House of Commons would do so, &c.

One Great Danger was the Number of Papists, and even of new Converts to Popery, retained in his Majesty's Guards, and therefore to take away this Apprehension of the Parliament, on November the 2d. his Majesty was pleas'd to Declare in Council, "That whatsoever shall make Discovery of any Officer or Soldier of his Majesty's Horse or Foot-Guards, who, having formerly taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and the Test, Enjoined by a Late Act of Parliament, For preventing Dangers which may happen from Popish Recufants, hath since been perverted to the Romish Religion, or hear Mass, such Discoverer, upon Information thereof given to his Grace the Duke of Monmouth, Lord General of his Majesty's Forces, shall have a Reward of Twenty Pounds for every Officer or Soldier so discovered as aforesaid. And to the End his Majesty's Pleasure herein may be fully known, His Majesty doth Command that this Order be forthwith Printed and Published.

A Second Danger was from the Interest of Popish Members of Parliament, but especially in the House of Peers, and therefore the Commons prepared a Bill, which with some Difficulty was Agreed to by the Lords, and with some Reluctancy passed by his Majesty into an Act, For the more effectual Preserving the King's Person and Government, by disabling Papists from Sitting in either House of Parliament.

But that which most threatned the Security of the Protestant Religion, was the Prospect of a Popish Successor, and therefore the Leading Members in Both Houses began to form the Design of a Bill of Exclusion, as the only Means to extinguish the

The Commons began gently on this Occasion, and on November the 4th let a Debate arise in their House, for an Address to be presented to his Majesty, That his Royal Highness may withdraw himself from his Majesty's Person and Councils. But then they Adjourned this Debate till Friday, November the 8th, and then again Adjourned it over till Tuesday following. The King understood their Meaning; and being extremely Tender of his Brother, on Saturday, November the 9th, he came to the House of Lords, and made this Gracious Speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech, in favour of the Duke. I Am so very sensible of the great and extraordinary Care you have already taken, and still continue to shew for the Safety and Preservation of my Person, in these Times of Danger, that I could not satisfy myself, without coming hither on purpose, to give you All my most hearty Thanks for it.

Nor do I think it enough to give you my Thanks only, but I hold myself obliged to let you see withal, that I do as much study your Preservation too, as I can possibly; and that I am as ready to join with you in all the Ways and Means that may Establish a firm Security of the Protestant Religion, as your own Hearts can wish.

And this not only during my Time, (of which, I am sure, you have no fear) but in future Ages, even to the End of the World.

And therefore I am come to assure you, That whatsoever reasonable Bills you shall present to be Passed into Laws, to make you safe in the Reign of any Successor, (so as they tend not to Impeach the Right of Succession, nor the Descent of the Crown in the true Line, and so as they restrain not My Power, nor the just Rights of any Protestant Successor) shall find from me a ready Concurrence.

And I desire you withal, to think of some more effectual Means for the Conviction of Popish Recusants, and to expedite your Counsels as fast as you can, that the World may see Our Unanimity, and that I may have the Opportunity of shewing you how ready I am to do any thing that may give Comfort and Satisfaction to such Dutiful and Loyal Subjects.

The House of Commons went after Dinner to the Banqueting-House of Whitehall, and by their Speaker return'd his Majesty their humble and hearty Thanks, for his most Gracious Speech this Day made to Both Houses of Parliament. To which his Majesty was pleas'd to give this Answer, Gentlemen, It shall always be my study to preserve the Protestant Religion, and to advance and support the Interest of my People.

The Commons dissatisfied. Make several Addresses. But still the Commons were hearty and zealous in the Prosecution of the Plot, and would not be diverted by any fine Words; and therefore, on November the 12th, they Resolved, "That there being an Accusation of High-Treason against Sir William Godolphin, his Majesty's Ambassador in Spain, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to desire his Majesty to call home Sir William Godolphin to Answer the Accusation." To which his Majesty was pleas'd to Answer, That he had already Order'd his Letters of Revocation; and that he had a Person in his Eye, who he designed should succeed him in that Service. And on the same Day the Commons presented another Address to his Majesty, desiring, "That a Special Commission may be issued forth, for tendering the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy to all the Servants of his Majesty and his 1678. Royal Highness, and to all other Persons (except her Majesty's Portugal Servants) residing within his Majesty's Houses of Whitehall, St. James's, and Somerset-House, and all other his Majesty's Houses; and that there may likewise Special Commissions be issued forth, for tendering the said Oaths to all Persons residing within the Two Serjeants-Inns, all the Inns of Court, and Inns of Chancery." To which his Majesty returned an Answer in Writing, That as to all his Majesty's own Servants, all the Servants of his Royal Highness, all other Persons residing in Whitehall, St. James's, Somerset-House, or in any other of his Majesty's Palaces or Houses, except the Menial Servants of the Queen and Dutchess; as also all Persons within either of the Serjeants-Inns, or any of the Inns of Court, or Chancery, his Majesty willingly grants it: But as to the Queen's Menial Servants, who are so very considerable in their Number, and within the Articles of Marriage, his Majesty does not think it fit. And his Majesty cannot but take notice, That in a late Address from the House of Peers, the Menial Servants of the Queen and Dutchess are excepted; and his Majesty hopes this House will proceed with the same Moderation as to that Particular. Given at the Court at Whitehall, the 14th Day of November, 1678. King's Answer.

But the Commons, in another Address, did humbly Advise his Majesty, and did renew their Desires, That the Persons excepted in his Majesty's Message, may be comprehended in the same Commission: For which they do in all Duty lay before his Majesty the Reasons following: "1. For the Quietting the Minds of your Majesty's good Protestant Subjects, who have a more than ordinary Care and Solitude for the Safety of your Majesty's Person, by reason of the Notorious Conspiracy of the Popish Party at this time, even against the Life of your Sacred Majesty. 2. By your Majesty's Proclamation, set forth upon the Address of Both Houses, for Banishing Popish Recusants Ten Miles from London, there is no such Restriction. 2. The Discouragement it would be to this Kingdom, to see so great a Neglect; and the Occasions that Papists would take to say from thence, That all our Fears are groundless.

4. It is too great a Countenance to the dangerous Factions, which are already come to that height, that it renders all manner of Discouragement on that side necessary. 5. It is against the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; which, as they are preserved and maintain'd by Your Majesty's Authority, so We assure our selves, You will not suffer them to be thus violated in your own Family and Royal Presence, and upon the Account of Popish Recusants.

On Novemb. 18th, the House being informed that there were several Commissions granted to Popish Recusants, and Warrants also that they should be Mustered, notwithstanding they have not taken the Oaths, and subscribed the Declaration, according to the Act of Parliament, and that they were signed by Mr. Secretary Williamson; they immediately sent him to the Tower. This much offended the King, who next Day sent for the House of Commons to attend him in the Banqueting-House, and told them, Tho' they Committed his Servant, without acquainting him; yet he intends to deal more freely with them, and acquaint them with his Intention to Release his Secretary. Upon which immediately, the same Day, the Commons drew up an Address to his Majesty, to present to him these Reasons of their Proceedings in the Commitment of Sir Joseph Williamson as a Member of their House: "1. That divers Commissions were Granted to Popish Officers, and Counter-signed by the said Sir Joseph Williamson, and delivered

To this His Majesty return'd Answer in Writing, deliver'd to the House by Mr. Secretary Coventry, Nov. 23d.

CHARLES REX.

King's Answer. HIS Majesty having received an Address the 19th Instant from this House, is pleas'd to return this Answer:

That he Released Mr. Secretary Williamson before your Address came, as he told you in the Banquetting-House he would do.

As to the Reasons of Granting those Commissions, his Majesty acquainted you at large with them, in his Speech, when you last attended him.

But in Answer to your present Address, his Majesty promises to Recall all his Commissions whatsoever, given to Papists, or reputed Papists, either in England or Ireland, immediately; and for his remoter Dominions, they shall likewise be Recalled with all the expedition the Safety of those Places will permit.

The King betray'd himself to be very weary of these Proceedings, and was in haste to get a Bill for Money, and so to Dismiss the too busious Houses: And therefore on Monday Novemb. 25th, his Majesty was pleas'd to make this Speech to both Houses:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's
 Speech. I Told you in the beginning of this Session, how much I had been oblig'd to keep up my Forces in Flanders: That without it, our Neighbours had absolutely despair'd; and by this means, whatever has been sav'd of Flanders, is acknowledged to be wholly due to my Interposition: And I shew'd you withal, that I had been forc'd to employ that Money which had been rais'd for Disbanding those Troops, in the Continuance of them together; and not only so, but that I had been much more out of Purse for that Service; a Service by which the Honour and Interest of the Nation hath been so far improv'd, that as I am confident no Man would repine at it, so I did not doubt but you would all be willing to supply it.

I have now undergone this Expence so long, that I find it absolutely impossible to support the Charge any longer, and did therefore think of putting an end to that Charge, by recalling my Troops with all possible speed, who are already expos'd to the utmost extremity of Want and Misery, being without any prospect of further Pay or Subsistence.

But whilst I was about to do this, I have been importun'd by the Spanish Ministers to continue them a little longer, until the Ratifications of the Peace be exchanged: without which, all that hath been hitherto sav'd in Flanders, will inevitably fall into the hands of their Enemies.

And now, between their Importunity to keep up those Troops, and my own Inability to Pay them any longer, I find myself in great Difficulties what to resolve. If you do not think that the Publick Safety may require the Continuance, I do wish as heartily as any Man, that, for the Publick Ease, they may be speedily Disbanded, and Paid off.

I have thought fit thus to lay the Matter before you; and having acquitted myself to all the World, by asking your Advice and Assistance; I desire it may be Speedy, and without any manner of Delay.

The House of Commons had before them a Bill for Raising the Militia; which, with Amendments, was Ingrossed immediately after the King's Speech: Which Passing the Lords, was Rejected by the King, for this Reason, sent in a Message to the Commons by Mr. Secretary Coventry, Decemb. 4.

The King rejects the Bill for the Milita.

CHARLES REX.

HIS Majesty, to prevent all Misunderstandings that may arise, from his not Passing the late Bill of the Militia, is pleas'd to Declare, That he will readily Assent to any Bill of that kind, which shall be rendred to him, for the Publick Security of the Kingdom by the Militia, so as the whole Power of Calling, Continuing, or not Continuing of them together during the Time limited, be left to his Majesty, to do therein as he shall find most expedient for the Publick Safety.

A Message to the Commons.

The Commons apprehended another Danger from the English Army in Flanders, which, upon the late Juncture of a Separate Peace, had nothing to do, but to be ready to be employ'd in some ill Service; and therefore on Wednesday Nov. 27. it was Resolved, Nemine Contradicente, That it is necessary, for the Safety of his Majesty's Person, and preserving the Peace of the Government, that all the Forces which have been rais'd since the 29th of Septemb. 1677. and all others that since that time have been brought over from beyond Seas from Foreign Service, be forthwith Disbanded: And Resolved it to be the humble Opinion and Desire of this House, That the Forces which are now in Flanders may be immediately called over, in order to their Disbanding. And they presented an Address for this Purpose to his Majesty, and made an Entry of his Majesty's Answer, as a Refusal to comply with their Desire.
 But his Majesty soon after was pleas'd to Declare,
 That he never gave any Order for such Answer; but that his Intention was only in relation to the Forces that were in Flanders, and the Circumstances as to those Forces were alter'd since that time; and that his Majesty had already given Orders for calling them over, in order to their Disbanding. And so his Majesty fell easily into this Design, because it depended on a Bill for granting a Supply to his Majesty, by a Land Tax, for Disbanding the said Forces.

 ing the

The King

The Intrigues of the Ministry with the Court of France, was another Danger which rais'd the Jealousie of the Commons: This appeared more-especially by a Message from the King, on December 19th, deliver'd to the House of Commons, That his Majesty having received Information, That his

 of France,

1678. his late Ambassador in France, Mr. Mountague, a Member of That House had held several private Conferences with the Pope's Nuncio there, without any Directions or Instructions from his Majesty, His Majesty to the End that he might know the Truth of that Matter, had given Orders for the Seizing Mr. Mountague's Papers. Upon which Mr. Mountague in his own Defence acquainted the House, "That he had in his Custody several Papers which he conceived might tend very much to the Safety of his Majesty's Person and the Preservation of the Kingdom." And accordingly a Box of Writings was sent for and opened in the House, and Two Letters were produced and read in the House, Subscribed Danby, in the first of which, Dated London, 17. January, 1677. were these Expressions. My Lord, Yesterday Monsieur Rouigny came to me with Monsieur Barriillon, (having given me his Father's Letters the Day before) and discoursed much upon the Confidence his King hath of the Firmness of Ours to Him, of the good Opinion his Master hath of me, and of his King's Resolution to condescend to any thing that is not infamous to him, for the Satisfaction of our King, how certainly our King may depend upon all sorts of Assurances and Supplies from his Master, in case the Friendship be preserved.—The main of their Drift was to engage me to prevail with the King to prevail with the Prince of Orange.—The King must come to some Declaration of his Mind to the Parliament when it meets: That which makes the Hopes of Peace yet less probable is, that the Duke grows every Day less inclin'd to it, and has created a greater Indifferency in the King, than I could have imagined, which being added to the French King's Resolution not to part with Tournay, &c, I confess, make me despair of any Accommodation: Nevertheless, I am assured that One Principal Cause of the Adjournment for Thirteen Days, has been to see if any Expedient for the Peace could have been found in that Time, and the Effect of the Adjournment hath hitherto been, that no body will now believe other than that the Peace is already concluded betwixt Us and France, In another Letter, Subscribed Danby, and dated London, March 25th, 1678. is among other Things what follows, In Case the Conditions of the Peace shall be Accepted, the King expects to have Six Millions of Livres Yearly for Three Years from the Time that this Agreement shall be Signed betwixt his Majesty and the King of France, because it will be Two or Three Years before he can hope to find his Parliament in an Honour to give him Supplies after the having made any Peace with France, and the Ambassador here has agreed to that Sum, but not for so long a Time; if you find the Peace will not be accepted, you are not to mention the Money at all, and all possible Care must be taken to have this whole Negotiation, as private as is possible, for Fear of giving Offence at home, where for the most part, we hear it Ten Days after any thing that is communicated to the French Ministers: Upon reading these Letters, it was immediately Resolved, That there was sufficient Matter of Impeachment against Thomas Earl of Danby, Lord High-Treasurer of England, and Articles of Impeachment were drawn up, and Agreed to on December 21st. "First, That he hath Traiterously Inroached to himself Regal Power by Treating in Matters of Peace and War with Foreign Princes and Ambassadors, and giving Instructions to his Majesty's Ambassadors abroad, without communicating the same to the Secretaries of State, and the rest of his Majesty's Council, &c. Secondly, That he hath Traiterously Endeavoured to Subvert the Ancient and well-established Form of Government, and instead thereof, to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Way of Government. And the better to effect this his Purpose, he did design the raising of an Army under Pretence of a War against the French King, and then to continue the same, as a Standing Army within this Kingdom, &c. Thirdly, That he Traiterously intending to alienate the Hearts and Affections of his Majesty's good Subjects from his Royal Person and Government, and to hinder the Meeting of Parliaments, and to deprive his Majesty of their Safe and Wholsome Counsels, &c. Fourthly, That he is Popishly affected, and hath Traiterously concealed, after he had Notice of the late horrid Plot or Conspiracy contrived by the Papists against his Majesty's Person and Government, and hath Suppress'd the Evidence, and reproachfully discountenanced the King's Witnesses in the Discovery of it in Favour of Popery, &c. Fifthly, That he hath wasted the King's Treasure by issuing out of his Majesty's Exchequer, and several Branches of his Revenue, divers great Sums of Money for unnecessary Pensions and secret Services, to the Value of 231602 l. within Two Years, &c. Sixthly, That he hath by indirect Means procured from his Majesty for himself divers considerable Gifts and Grants of Inheritance of the ancient Revenue of the Crown even contrary to Acts of Parliaments". These Articles were carried up to the Lords, with a Desire, That the said Thomas, Earl of Danby, might be Sequestred from Parliament, and forthwith committed to safe Custody. There had been before an Impeachment carried up of Treason and other high Crimes and Misdemeanours against Henry, Lord Arundel of Wardour; William, Earl of Powys, John, Lord Bellasis; William, Lord Petres, and William, Viscount Stafford, who had been all Committed to the Tower.

The King was so much disturb'd with these Proceedings, that on Monday, December 30th. he came to the House of Lords, and declared in a Speech, That it was with great Unwillingness that he was come to tell them that he intended to Prorogue them, That all of them were Witnesses, he had not been well used, the Particulars of which he would acquaint them at a more reasonable Time, in the mean time he would immediately enter upon the disbanding of the Army, and do what good he could for the Kingdom, and Safety of Religion, and that he would prosecute the Discovery of the Popish Plot, to find out the Instruments of it, and take all the Care that is in his Power to secure the Protestant Religion as it is now Established. And accordingly his Majesty was pleased to Prorogue the Parliament till the 4th of February next.

This Prorogation so Encouraged the Papists, that they flock'd to London and Westminster in great Numbers, and began to talk with so great Insolence, that the King, by the Advice of his Council, was forced to publish a Proclamation, dated January 3d. declaring, That whereas several Popish Recusants, and Persons reputed to be such, had, since the late Prorogation of the Parliament, taken the Boldness to resort to the said Cities, his Majesty was most highly offended with that their Presumption, and did Order, That a diligent and speedy Search and Inquiry should be made after them, and they should be proceeded against with the utmost Severity. And on January 11th his Majesty published another Proclamation, Commanding the immediate Return of all his Majesty's Subjects who were in any Foreign Seminaries, and forbidding Relief to be sent to them. according to a Statute made 27. Eliz.

But his Majesty having no Hopes of Ease and Satisfaction from the present Parliament, was now at last inclined to dissolve them, and therefore by Proclamation dated 24th January, his Majesty declared, "That He had taken into his serious Consideration the many Inconveniences arising by the over-long Continuance of One and the same Parliament, wherefore he publishes and declares his Royal Will and Pleasure to Dissolve this present

“ present Parliament — But to the Intent “ His Majesty’s Loyal Subjects may perceive the “ Confidence His Majesty hath in their good Affe“ ctions, and how willing and desirous His Majesty “ is to Meet his People, and have their Advice, by “ their Representatives in Parliament, he will “ cause Writs in due Form of Law to be issued “ for the Calling of a New Parliament, which “ shall Begin and be Holden at Westminster, on “ Thursday the Sixth Day of March next; when “ his Majesty doth expect such Laws will be “ Enacted, and such Order taken, by the Consent “ and Advice of his Parliament, as will tend to “ the Securing the True Protestant Religion, and “ the Peaceable and Happy Government of this “ his Kingdom.

Thus ended, with Honour to themselves, the Long Parliament; which being first Called, and Begun on the 8th of May, 1661. had been Continued by several Prorogations and Adjournments for Seventeen Years, Eight Months, and Seventeen Days. Many Reflections were made on the prime Reason of their Dissolution: Some Resolv’d it into the King’s Anger at the Commitment of, and Impeachment of his First Minister, the Lord Treasurer: but Sir William Temple is positive, “ That the Treasurer was before fallen into the “ King’s Displeasure, for bringing the Popish Plot “ into Parliament, against the King’s absolute “ Command.” Others think it was rather done upon Account of Protecting the Popish Lords in the Tower, and diverting, if possible, the Noise of the Popish Plot: For it is certain, the King did all along frown upon the Evidence, tho’ Thomas Killigrew is said to have told him, Your Majesty knows more of the Plot than any body else; and Your Discovery of it, would quickly satisfy your People.
 But undoubtedly, the greatest Reason of all, was, to cover the Duke of York from the Repentment of the Commons, and the general Indignation of the People: And therefore, to prevent any Question of him in the next Session, His Majesty thought fit to send him out of the Way, that his Absence, if possible, might drop the Disputes about him: so, on Feb. 28. he sent him this Letter:

I Have already given you my Resolves at large, why I think it fit that you absent your self for some time beyond the Seas: I am truly sorry for the Occasion; so may you be sure, I shall never desire it longer than it shall be absolutely necessary for your Good, and my Service. In the mean time, I think it proper to give it you under my Hand, That I expect this Compliance from you, and desire it may be as soon as conveniently you can. You may easily perceive with what Trouble I write this to you; there being Nothing I am more sensible of, than the constant Kindness you have ever had for me. I hope you are as Just to me, to be assur’d, That no Absence, nor any thing else, can ever change me from being truly and kindly,

Yours, C. R.

In pursuance to this Command, the Duke, with his Dutchess and Family, left St. James’s, took Shipping, and for a while retired to the Hague, and from thence, to Brussels.

As to Honours and Preferments Conferred this Year: On July 17th, the Right-Honourable George Lord Berkeley, of Berkeley-Castle, was Sworn of his Majesty’s Most-Honourable Privy-Council: On Octob. 18th, the Earl of Ailesbury was admitted to the same Board; as was James Earl of Salisbury on Jan. 3d; and the Earl of Clarendon on Jan. 8th.
 The Right Honourable James Earl of Arran, Son to his Grace the Duke of Hamilton, was on Jan. 14th Sworn one of the Gentlemen of his Majesty’s Bed-Chamber in Ordinary; which Mark of his special Favour his Majesty was graciously pleas’d to Confer upon him, in Consideration of the great and Loyal Services of that Ancient and Noble Family. Mr. Secretary Williamson having fell into an high Displeasure of the House of Commons, not only for the reason of his Commitment, but, as they thought, of his irregular Discharge, thought fit to resign his Place; and on Feb. 9th, His Majesty was pleas’d to Constitute the Right-Honourable Robert Earl of Sunderland, one of his Principal Secretaries of State, in the room of Sir Joseph Williamson, who did then resign the Seals into his Majesty’s Hands; and resolving to retire and enjoy the Country, he did on the 14th of January Marry the Relict of the Lord O Bryan, who Deceased on the 1st of December, 1678.) Sifter and Co-heir of Charles late Duke of Richmond and Lenax, who Died at Elsenour in Denmark on the 2d of December, 1672. being then his Majesty’s Ambassador Extraordinary to that Crown. Sir William Temple wis call’d over from Holland by His Majesty, in order to take upon him this Office; who acquainted the Prince of Orange and the States with his Journey, and the Design of it;

 who made him Compliments upon that Occasion, and would have had him believe, that the Secretariship was to make Amends for the Loss of his Ambassage. But Sir William told the Prince, “ That though he must go, yet if he found the “ Scene to be what it appear’d at that Distance, “ he would not Charge himself with that Employ“ ment, upon any Terms that could be offer’d.” Whether Sir William did refuse it, or whether it was never in earnest offer’d to him, this is certain, that it was dispos’d of before Sir William’s return to England: And it was not long a Secret, that the Earl of Sunderland paid Sir Joseph Williamson Six thousand Pounds, and Five hundred Guinea’s, in Consideration of his Surrender of the said Place.
 The Earl of Danby lying in the Tower under a like Displeasure of the Commons, His Majesty thought fit to Dismiss him from the Office of Lord High-Treasurer of England; and the Lord Latimer, his Son, having deliver’d the White Staff into His Majesty’s Hands, His Majesty was pleas’d to Appoint the Right-Honourable the Earl of Essex, Laurence Hyde Esq; Sir John Ernle, Sir Edward Deering, and Sidney Godolphin Esq; to be Commissioners of his Majesty’s Treasury.

In Prosecution of the Popish Plot, Mr. William Staley being Convicted of Treasonable Words against His Majesty’s Life, was Drawn, Hang’d and Quarter’d at Tyburn on the 26th of November.
 Edward Coleman Esq; found Guilty of High-Treason, in Conspiring the Death of the King, and Subverting his Government, and Extirpating of the True Protestant Religion, was Executed upon the like Sentence, on the 3d of December, having depended on a Promise of Pardon with so much Assurance, that some of his last Words were said to be, There is no Faith in Man. On the 24th of January, William Ireland a Jesuit, and John Grove, having been on the 14th of December Convicted at the Old-Bailey, of having Conspired the Destruction of the King’s Royal Person, the Subversion of his Government, and the Extirpation of the Protestant Religion, were accordingly Executed at Tyburn; but their Heads and Quarters were delivered to their Friends to be buried, through His Majesty’s extraordinary Grace and Mercy. Green, Hill, and Berry, who were Indicted at the King’s-Bench-Bar, on the 10th of February, for the Murther of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey, and upon a Full Evidence found Guilty, were soon after Executed: But Mr. Samuel Atkins being likewise Indicted as an Accessory to the said Murther, was, after a Full Hearing of the Evidence against him, Acquitted, and thereupon Discharged. And at the latter-end of January, Roger Earl of Castlemain, Mr. Daniel Arthur of London, Merchant, and Esq. Sheldon,

A strange Darknes.

It seems fit to be remembred as an Extraordinary Event, that on Sunday Jan. 12th, 1678. for above a Quarter of an Hour, between Ten and Eleven in the Morning, was so great and sudden a Darknes in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, that People within the Churches could not see to read in their Bibles, and were not able in the Streets to distinguish one Person from another. It was, for the time, a deeper Blacknes than that of an Eclipse, (which did not now happen) and was thought to equal, if not exceed the great Solar Eclipse, which in the late Times left the name of Black-Munday.

State of Religion.

The Year concluded in great Strife and Division, about Electing Members for the New Parliament; those Gentlemen were generally most Popular, who were most averse to Popery, and least inclined to the Court: The City of London set an Example, by Chusing for their Representatives Sir Robert Clayton, Kt. and Alderman; Sir Thomas Poyer, Kt. and Chamberlain of the City; William Love, Esq; late Alderman; and Thomas Pilkinton, Esq; a Turkey Merchant.

Commons desire a particular Prayer relating to the Popish Plot.

The State of Religion, in reference to the Designs and horrid Attempts of Popery, has been already represented. It may be further observed, That upon Meeting of the Parliament Octob. 21st, when a Day of Fasting and Humiliation was Appointed, and a Form of Prayer was drawing up for that Occasion, the Commons Address'd the King with a Desire, "That there might be a particular Prayer or Prayers Compos'd for the Cities of London and Westminster, relating to the Plot and Conspiracy contriv'd and carry'd on by the Papists, against His Majesty's Person and Government." To which His Majesty Answer'd, That it should be so done. But on the 10th of November they Resolve to represent unto his Majesty, "That those his Majesty's Commands have not as yet been Obey'd, there being no mention in the Prayers to be used on Wednesday next, of the Papists who are the Contrivers of this Damnable and Hellish Plot; And therefore they humbly Desire his Majesty to give effectual Orders, That his Commands may be Obey'd." On Tuesday Nov. 12th, the Day before the Fast, Mr. Secretary Williamson acquainted the House, "That he had attended his Majesty with their Second Address, touching a particular Prayer to be used on Wednesday next; And that His Majesty was pleas'd to give Orders, That the Prayers should be Altered.

Bill to Exclude Papists from either House of Parliament.

The Commons were so Zealous in their Bill for the more effectual Preserving the King's Person and Government, by Disabling Papists to Sit in either House of Parliament, that they Voted it to be a bill upon which the Safety of the King and Kingdom, and the Protestant Religion, do entirely depend. And when the Bill was likely to stick in the House of Lords, they sent up this Message to them; "The Commons in Parliament Assembled, reflecting on the imminent Dangers wherein the Kingdom is involved, by the restless Conspiracies of Popish Recufants against his Majesty's Person, and the Religion and Government Establish'd; do find themselves necessitated to remind your Lordships, for a speedy Proceeding on the Bill before you, Intituled, An Act for the more effectual Preserving the King's Person and Government, by Disabling Papists from Sitting in either House of Parliament: without which, they think themselves unable to prepare any effectual Remedies to prevent the Evils that hang over Us.

1678. After the Rising of the Parliament, there seem'd to be a Disposition in the Court to relax the many Orders that had been lately given for putting all the Laws in Execution against the Roman Catholicks; and it seems to have been upon this View, that the Justices of the Peace for Middlesex presented to His Majesty, in Council, these Six Quarries:

1. "Whether Foreigners (Popish Recufants) that are and have long been here settled House-keepers, and are Tradesmen, viz. Chirurgeons, Tailors, Perriwig-makers, or Ordinary Shop-keepers following Employments for their own Advantage, but not otherwise Merchants, but are certified to be Merchant-Strangers, shall be excused from taking the Oaths, or finding Sureties, or either of them?"
2. "Whether such Foreigners, being certified by Ambassadors, or other Foreign Ministers, to be their Servants at this time, shall be Excused?"
3. "Whether Foreigners (Popish Recufants) settled here House-keepers, but neither are Tradesmen, Travellers, or Foreign Ministers Servants, shall be Excused?"
4. "Whether Native Subjects of our Sovereign Lord, that are Menial Servants of Foreign Ministers, shall be Excused?"
5. "Whether Married Women, being Popish Recufants, but their Husbands Protestants, shall be Excused?"
6. "Whether Popish Recufants that have taken the Oaths, found Sureties, have Appeared, and are Convict, shall find new Sureties, or be Continued over?"

Quarries of the Justices of Peace, in relation to putting the Laws in Execution against the Papists.

And His Majesty had from the Judges, to whom the same were referred, received Answer in Writing in the Words following:

May it Please Your Majesty,

WE have Met and Consider'd of the Questions propos'd to us, and do hereby humbly return our Opinions.

Answer of the Judges.

- "To the First, We are of Opinion,
1. "That Foreigners (being Popish Recufants) and exercising Ordinary Trades (but not Merchants) are not Excused from taking the Oaths, or finding Securities.
 2. "To the Second; That Foreigners, though certified by Ambassadors to be their Servants, except they are their Menial Servants, are not Excused.
 3. "To the Third; That Foreigners, though settled House-keepers, being no Travellers, or Foreign Ministers Servants, are not Excused.
 4. "To the Fourth; That the King's Native Subjects are not Excused from taking the Oaths, by being Menial Servants to Foreign Masters.
 5. "To the Fifth; We find no Law that Excuses a Feme-Covert, being a Papist, from taking the Oaths, though her Husband be a Protestant.
 6. To the Sixth; That a Popish Recufant having taken the Oaths, is not bound to find new Sureties; unless upon a new tender of the Oaths, he shall refuse to take them.

"All which, with great Humility, we submit to Your Majesty's Judgment.

The Justices being too Remiss, are complain'd of in Council.

The King forc'd to quicken em.

The Dissenters Behaviour, upon the Popish Plot.

Abridgment of Dr Baxter's Life.

There seem'd to be a like Remissness in some Parts of the Country, as well as nearer Court; for Complaint was made to the King in Council, That several Justices of the Peace, of several Counties, Cities, and Liberties within this Kingdom, notwithstanding the many Proclamations which his Majesty had been pleas'd lately to publish for the better Security of his Majesty's Person and Government, and of the True Protestant Religion, did refuse or neglect to put the same in Execution. Whereupon his Majesty, on January 21st, was pleas'd in Council to Order, " That all his Majesty's Justices of the Peace should with all Care and Diligence pursue the said Commands in Execution of the Laws; and upon due Complaint made of their Neglect or Refusal, should be put out of Commission, as Persons Disaffected to his Majesty's Government, and the True Protestant Religion, and in their Places other Persons should be put who were likely to Act with more Vigour and good Affection." And at the beginning of this same Month, his Majesty, by Advice of his Privy-Council, issu'd out his Royal Proclamation, dated Jan. 8th, Commanding the immediate Return of all his Majesty's Subjects who are in any Foreign Seminaries, and forbidding Relief to be sent to them.

The Dissenters knew how to make some Advantage of the Popish Plot, and generally falling into the Wishes and Endeavours of a zealous Prosecution of it, became thereby the more Popular; and those Members in each House who were thought to be in their Interest, had now an Opportunity of being esteem'd the greater Patriots, and the better Friends of the Protestant Religion: while many of those who were more professedly for the Established Church of England were drawn into the Measures of the Court, and into the Personal Interest of the Duke of York, and thereby fell under the Character of being Popishly affected, and the Promoters of Arbitrary Power. The Dissolution of the Long Parliament was a spiteful Satisfaction to many of the Old Nonconformists, because of their Suffering by some Laws that had been made by them. And upon the Choice of a New Parliament, this same Party were very industrious to recommend those Gentlemen who had been most their Friends and Abettors, making the World at this Juncture believe, That they were the Chief Assertors of English Liberty, and the Reformed Religion. Their own History betrays this Truth: " At length, on the 14th of January, 1678. this Parliament, which so long Comply'd with the Court in all their Desires, which, to gratifie the Clergy, cast so many Worthy Ministers out of the Church by the Act of Uniformity, and afterwards laid such heavy Burdens on the Poor Nonconformists, which improv'd by Sitting, and grew more and more concern'd for the Publick Welfare, as they were awakened by a Sense of the Common Danger, was suddenly Dissolved. This Dissolution occasion'd a General Ferment in all Parts of the Country; it was generally esteem'd the Common Concern in the next Election to Chuse firm Protestants, who should heartily apply themselves to make Provision for the Common Security.

On March the 9th, Dr. Joseph Henshaw Bishop of Peterborough (who succeeded Dr. Benjamin Lancy, Translated to Lincoln in 1663,) Died suddenly, at his return Home from the Evening Service at the Abbey-Church in Westminster; whose Successor in that See was Dr. Francis Davies, Translated thither from Llandoff.

There is little more of Ecclesiastical Matter in this Year, excepting the Excellent Directions from the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury to his respective Suffragans, concerning Letters Testimonial to be granted unto Candidates for Holy Orders in these Letters dated from Lambeth, Aug. 23. 1678:

Salutem in Christo.

My LORD,

WHEREAS the Easie and Promiscuous Granting of Letters Testimonial, (which is in it self a Sacred Thing, and, in the first Intention, of great and very weighty Importance) is, by the Lapse of Time, and the Corruption which by insensible degrees is crept into the best Institutions, come to be both in the Universities, and elsewhere in the Dioceses, a matter of meer Formality, a piece of common Civility, scarce deny'd to any that ask it, and many times, upon the Credit of the first Subscriber, Attested by the rest, who have otherwise no knowledge of the Person so adorn'd; or else, where more Conscience is made of bearing False-witness, even for a Neighbour, is done so perfunctorily, and in so low and dilate Terms, as ought to signifie nothing at all to the great End which 'tis designed to serve, and yet is sometimes with a like Easiness and Remissness received and proceeded upon, whereby great Mischiefs in the Church and Scandals daily ensue; Persons altogether Undeserving, or at least not duly Qualified, being too often, upon the Credit of such Papers, admitted into Holy Orders: and in Consequence thereupon, thrusting themselves into Employments of high Trust and Dignity and Advantage in the Church, and by their numerous Intrusions preventing and excluding Others of greater Modesty and Merit: concerning all which, your Lordship cannot but remember how many and how great Complaints we met with both from our Brethren the Bishops, and Others, during the late Session of Parliament, and what Expedients for Remedy thereof were then under Debate and Consideration amongst us. Now, as the Result of those Counsels, and for the effectual redressing of those Inconveniences, and preventing the like for the future, though it would be abundantly sufficient, to call all Persons concerned on both Sides to the serious Perusal of, and exact Compliance with those excellent Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical made in the Year 1603, which have most wisely and fully provided to obviate all those Evils, yet (because in the Modern Practice they seem not duly to be attended to) it is thought fit and necessary again to limit and regulate the Grant, the Matter, and the Form of Testimonials, as followeth, viz.

Directions of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury for giving Testimonials for Holy Orders.

1. " That no Letters Testimonial be Granted only upon the Credit of Others, or out of a Judgment of Charity, which believes all things, and hopes all things, but from immediate and Personal Knowledge, and that own'd and express'd in the Letters themselves.
2. " That (as to the Form of these Letters) every such Testimonial have the Date both as to Time and Place expressly mentioned in the Body of it, before it be Subscribed by any, and pass also (as the Canon requires) under Hand and Seal; Those, namely, from the Universities, under the Common Seal of their respective Colleges, attested by the Subscription of the Master, Head, or Principal Person there; And those from other Places, under the Hands and Seals of three Priests at the least, of known Integrity, Gravity and Prudence, who are of the Vicinage where the Person testified of resides, or have otherwise known his Life and Behaviour by the space of three Years next before the Date of the said Letters.

2. "And as to the Matter of them, That they particularly express the present Condition of the Person in whose behalf the Testimony is given, his Standing and Degree in the University, his Place of present Abode, and Course of Life: his End and Design for which he would make Use of the said Testimonial, whether for obtaining the Order of Deacon or Priest, or the Employment of a Parson, Vicar, Curate, or School-Master, and that the Subscribers know him to be worthy, and in regard of Learning, Prudence, and Holy Life, duely qualified for the same respectively: And if he desire Holy Orders, his Age too, if the Subscribers know it, or else that they admonish him to bring it otherwise credibly and sufficiently Attested.

Lastly, "If such Testimonial be to be made use of in another Diocese than that where it is given, that it be by no means received, without the Letters Dimissory of the Bishop, or other Ordinary of the Place, attesting in Writing the Ability, Honesty, and Good Conversation of the Person commended, in the Place from whence he came.

"My Lord, This is (I think) the Summ of what was Discourf'd and Resolv'd between us, when we were last together: I therefore Desire you, with all convenient speed, to cause Copies hereof to be Transcribed, and transmitted to the several Bishops of this Province, and Vice-Chancellors of the Universities respectively, and to be by them communicated (as soon as may well be) to as many as are herein concerned, that they may not be disappointed, by coming furnished with such Testimonials only, as will not (nor ought to) be received to such great Purposes, for which they are so often made use of. Commending Your Lordship and your great Affairs to the Blessing of God Almighty, I remain, My Lord,

Your Lordship's Assured Loving Brother,

W. CANT.

Mr. Robert Foulkes, Minister of Stanton Lacy in the County of Salop, having been Convicted and Sentenced at the Sessions in the Old-Bailey, Lond. on the 16th of January, for the Murther of a Bastard Child begotten by him, was on Jan. 31. Executed at Tyburn, leaving behind him a very serious Declaration of Repentance, which was shortly after publish'd; and by the Strains of Devotion in it, did, in great measure, wipe away the Scandal he had given to Holy Orders.

On Thursday March 6. the New Parliament Met: At which time the King acquainted them what had been done in Prosecution of the Plot; as, the Exclusion of the Popish Lords from their Seats in Parliament, and the Execution of several Persons, as well for the horrid Conspiracy against his own Royal Person and Government, as for the Murther of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey: And that he had Commanded his Brother to depart the Kingdom, because he would not leave malicious Men room to say, That he had not removed all Causes which could be pretended to Influence him towards Popish Councils: That as he had not been slack in putting the present Laws in Execution against Papists, so he was ready to join in making such further Laws as might be necessary for securing the Kingdom against Popery. He then demanded a Supply, and Concluded with his earnest Desires to have this a Healing Parliament, assuring them, He would Defend the Protestant Religion with his Life, and expects to be Defended by them from the Calumny as well as Danger of these worst of Men, who endeavour to render both Him and his Government odious to the People." The Chancellor enlarged on all the Heads; and in reference to the Plot, reminded the Two Houses, not to Over-doe their Business, and by being too far transported with the Fears of Popery, neglect the Opportunity of making Sober and Lasting Provisions against it; which (says he) are the only Hopes of Papists, thus to see our Zeal out-run our Discretion, and that we our selves should become the unhappy Occasion of making our own Councils abortive.

The Commons returning to their House, at the Motion of Colonel Birch, Chose for their Speaker Edward Seymour Esq; Knight of the Shire for the County of Devon, Treasurer of His Majesty's Navy, one of His Majesty's Most-Honourable Privy-Council, and Speaker of the former Parliament. But the King taking this to be an ill Prefage, that this Parliament would Begin where the last did End, would not approve their Choice, commanding the House to Return, and to proceed to the Election of a New Speaker, and to present him at Eleven a Clock on Saturday March 8th: At which time the House being in some Surprise, at the Rejecting their Speaker Elect, made an humble Application to His Majesty, "That he would be pleas'd to grant them some further Time to take that Matter into their Consideration." To which His Majesty sent this Answer in Writing; Gentlemen, I have Consider'd of your Messige, and do consent to a further Time, which I appoint to be on Tuesday next, unless you shall find some Expedient in the mean time; for as I would not have my Prerogative intrench'd upon, so I would not do any thing against the Privileges of this House.

On Tuesday March 11. the Commons delivered an humble Representation to His Majesty, "To desire him to rest satisfied with their Proceedings, and not to deprive them of so necessary a Member as their Speaker Elect'd and Present'd according to Custom," &c. To which His Majesty gave this short Answer; Gentlemen, All this is but loss of Time, and therefore I desire you to go back again, and do as I have directed you. The Commons not yet satisfied, Resolv'd upon another Address, present'd on Wednesday March the 12th, "humbly to desire His Majesty to take the Representation Yesterday made to him into further Consideration." To this Address, His Majesty gave this quick and sharp Return; Gentlemen, I will send you an Answer to-Morrow. On that Morrow, being Thursday March 13th, His Majesty was pleas'd to Prorogue the Parliament till Saturday following, to convince them that he would have a New Speaker. On that Day, March 15th, His Majesty came into the House of Commons attending, his Majesty was pleas'd to put Both Houses in mind of what he had said to them at the Opening of the Parliament: And then the Lord Chancellor, by His Majesty's Command, directed the Commons to return to their House, and to proceed to the Choice of a Speaker. Which they accordingly did, and, by the Recommendation of the Lord Russell, did immediately Elect William Gregory, Serjeant at Law; who, the next Morning, was Present'd by the Commons to His Majesty, and Approved by him.

Meeting of the New Parliament

The King's Speech

1679. The House Resolved to pursue the Methods taken in the former Parliament, and therefore Resolved, on Wednesday the 19th of March, "That a Committee be Appointed to Inspect the Journals of the last Session of the last Parliament, and to Prepare and Draw up a State of the Matters then depending and undetermined, and the Progress that was made therein." And on March the 20th, they Resolved, "That a Committee of Secrecy be Appointed to take Informations, and Prepare Evidence, and Draw up Articles against the Lords that are Impeached, and that are now in the Tower; and to take such further Informations as shall be given, relating to the Plot and Conspiracy against His Majesty, and the Government, and the Murder of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey:" And immediately after Resolved, "That a Message be sent to the Lords, to put them in mind of the Impeachment of High-Treason Exhibited against Thomas Earl of Danby, in the Names of the Commons of England, and to desire that he may be Committed to Safe Custody: Resolving again, That it be Referred to the Committee of Secrecy, to Draw up further Articles against him.

On Friday March 21. the Lords and Commons Agreed in an Address to be Presented to His Majesty for Appointing a Solemn Day of Humiliation, being deeply sensible of the Sad and Calamitous Condition of this Kingdom, occasioned chiefly by the Impious and Malicious Conspiracies of a Popish Party, who have not only Plotted and Intended the Destruction of His Majesty's Royal Person, but the total Subversion of the Government, and True Religion Established among Us. And accordingly His Majesty Commanded a General and Publick Fast, to be kept throughout the Kingdom, on Friday April the 11th.

On Saturday March 22. the Commons Ordered a Bill to be brought in, to Secure the King and Kingdom against the Danger and Growth of Popery. And being Commanded to Attend His Majesty in the House of Peers, the King spoke to them in Favour of the Earl of Danby: But Returning to their House, they Resolved, "That a Message be immediately sent to the Lords, to remind their Lordships of the last Message sent them from this House, relating to Thomas Earl of Danby, and to Demand that he might be forthwith Sequestred from Parliament, and Committed to Safe Custody." Upon which the Lords Desired a present Conference with the Commons, where the Duke of Monmouth spake thus; I am Commanded by the Lords to Acquaint you, That their Lordships having taken into Consideration, Matters relating to the Earl of Danby, together with what his Majesty was pleased to say upon that Subject; have Ordered that a Bill be brought in, by which Thomas Earl of Danby may be made for ever incapable of coming to his Majesty's Presence, and of all Offices and Employments, and of receiving any Grants or Gifts from the Crown, and of Sitting in the House of Peers. In the mean time, the Commons hearing that the King had Signed a Pardon for the Earl, they appointed a Committee to repair to the Lord Chancellor, to enquire into the manner of Suing forth that Pardon. The Lord-Chancellor did inform the Committee, "That the Pardon was Passed with all Privacy, the King Commanding him to bring the Seal to Whitehall; and being there, he laid it upon the Table; whereupon his Majesty Commanded the Seal to be taken out of the Bag, which his Lordship was obliged to submit unto, it not being in his Power to hinder it; and the King writ his Name upon the top of the Parchment, and then directed to have it Sealed; whereupon the Petition that usually carried the Purse affixed the Seal to it." Upon this Report from his Lordship, the Commons Resolved, "That an humble Address be made to his Majesty, to represent the Irregularity and Illegality of the Pardon mentioned by his Majesty to be granted to the Earl of Danby, and the dangerous Consequence of granting Pardons to any Persons that lie under an Impeachment of the Commons of England."

On Tuesday March 25. the Lords sent a Message to acquaint the House of Commons, That they had sent to Apprehend Thomas Earl of Danby, both to his House here in Town, and to his House at Wimbledon; and that the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod had returned their Lordships Answer, That he could not be found. Whereupon the Commons Ordered, "That a Bill be brought in to Summon Thomas Earl of Danby to Render himself to Justice by a certain Day to be therein limited, or in default thereof, to Attaint him. On Thursday March 27. the Lords sent down a Bill, Intituled, An Act for Banishing and Disabling Thomas Earl of Danby, &c. But the Commons immediately Resolved, That the Bill be Rejected; And on April 1. Passed a Bill for the Attainder of Thomas Earl of Danby of High-Treason; which they sent up to the Lords by Sir Robert Peyton.

On April 3. the Commons Agreed upon the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason, and other high Crimes and Offences against William Earl of Powys, William Viscount Stafford, Henry Lord Arundell of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellasis, now Prisoners in the Tower of London. The next Day there was a Conference between the Two Houses, in the Painted Chamber, concerning the Bill sent up against Thomas Earl of Danby, where the Lord Privy-Seal managed the Conference for their Lordships, and delivered himself to this effect, "That the Lords chose to deliver back by Conference, rather than Message, to preserve a good Understanding, and to prevent Debate or Controversie between them: The Lords observe, That the great Affairs of this Nation are at a stand, at a time of greatest Danger and Difficulty that this Kingdom ever laboured under: That the King hath always in his Reign enclined to Mercy and Clemency to all his Subjects: Therefore to a King so Merciful and Compassionate, the first Interruption of his Clemency they did desire should not proceed from the Two Houses, pressing the King to an Act of the greatest Severity; therefore have Passed the Bill, with some Amendments, which he delivered." The Commons Disagreed to the Amendments made by the Lords, and drew up Reasons to be offered in another Conference, implying, That their Lordships Amendments had wholly altered the Nature of their Bill, and from a Bill of Attainder, had converted it into a Bill of Banishment: And at the same time drew up an Address to be presented to his Majesty, to desire him to issue out his Royal Proclamation for Apprehending the said Earl; and had the same Day another Conference with the Lords, upon the Earl of Danby's Case, where the Lord Huntington managed the Conference, and what he delivered was to this Effect; "The Lords have desired this Conference with the Commons, not so much to Argue and Dispute, as to Mitigate and Reconcile: They have already observed, That the Debate of this Bill hath given so long and so great an Obstruction to Publick Business and therefore they desire you to believe, that that is the Reason which hath chiefly prevailed with their Lordships in a Matter of this Nature. And upon this Ground it is, that if a Way may be found to satisfy and secure the Publick Fears, by growing less than the Bill you have proposed, the Lords do not think it advisable to insist upon the utmost and most “ rigorous Satisfaction, to prevent Justice, which might be denied. To induce you to this Compliance, the Lords do acknowledge, that Banishment is so far from being the Legal Judgment in Case of High-Treason, that it is not the Legal Judgment in any Case whatsoever, since it can never be inflicted but by the Legislative Authority: But they see no reason why the Legislative Authority should always be found to act to the utmost extent of its Power; for there may be a prudential necessity sometimes of making Abatements, and it might be of fatal Consequence if it should not be so. And the Lords, to remove all Jealousies of the Precedents of this kind, do declare, That nothing which hath been done in the Earl of Dunby's Case, shall be ever drawn into Example for the time to come, and will so enter it upon their Journal. And thereupon their Lordships insist upon their Amendments so far, as to exclude all Attainers; and do promise themselves, the Commons will in this Point comply with their Lordships, who do again assure them, That their Resolutions are grounded only upon their Tenderness and Consideration of the Publick.” There was another Conference on this Subject-Matter, April 12. upon which the Commons again Resolved to Adhere to their Bill, and to Disagree to the Amendments made by the Lords: Upon which the Bill of Attainder did at last Pass both Houses. Upon which Sir Edward Carteret, Usher of the Black-Rod, on April 16th, gave the House of Lords an Account, That the Earl of Dunby had the last Night Rendred himself to him, and was in his Custody. Their Lordships Ordered him to be brought to their Bar, where kneeling, and then standing up, the Lord-Chancellor let him know, That he stands Impeached by the Commons; and that, upon his Withdrawing himself, a Bill of Attainder had Passed the Two Houses; by which, however, he had Time given him to come in, and make his Defence.—— The Earl of Dunby excused his not Appearing sooner, declared his Innocency, and made several Petitions to the House, and then was Ordered to Withdraw. And being Called in, and brought to the Bar again, the Lord-Chancellor acquainted him, That their Lordships will allow him Time to give in his Answer to the Articles of his Impeachment, till the first Day of the Sitting of the House after Easter; That if any further Charge be put in against him, he shall have further Time to Answer; That he shall have Council assigned him, and shall have liberty to make use of Records, and that his Witnesses shall be Summoned.—— Upon which he Withdrew, and by Order of the House was Committed to the Tower.

On April 25th the Earl was brought from the Tower to the Bar of the Lords House, where he delivered in Writing his Plea and Answer to the Articles of his Impeachment: Which being read, he Withdrew. In the mean time, His Majesty made a Declaration, on April the 26th, for Dissolving the Privy-Council, telling them, “ He hath Resolved to lay aside the Use he may have hitherto made of any Single Ministry, or Private Advices, or Foreign Committee for the general Direction of his Affairs; and to constitute such a Privy-Council as may not only by its Number be fit for the Consultation and Digestion of all Business both Domestic and Foreign, but also, by the Choice of them out of the several Parts this State is compos'd of, may be the best Informed in the true Constitutions of it, and thereby the most able to Counsel him in all the Affairs and Interests of this Crown and Nation: And by the constant Advice of such a Council, His Majesty Resolved hereafter

“ to Govern his Kingdoms, together with the frequent Use of his great Council of Parliament, which he takes to be the true Ancient Constitution of this State and Government. And for the greater Dignity of this Council, their constant Number shall be limited to that of Thirty: And for their greater Authority, there shall be Fifteen of his Chief Officers who shall be Privy-Councillors by their Places; and for the other Fifteen, he will chuse Ten out of the several Ranks of the Nobility, and Five Commoners of the Realm, whose known Abilities, Interest and Esteem in the Nation, shall render them without all Suspicion of either mistaking or betraying the true Interest of the Kingdom, and consequently of Advising him ill.

The Names of this New Privy Council were as follow:

His Highness Prince Rupert; William Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; Heneage Lord Finch, Lord Chancellor of England; Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, Lord President of the Council; Arthur Earl of Anglesey, Lord Privy Seal; Christopher Duke of Albemarle; James Duke of Monmouth, Master of the Horse; Henry Duke of Newcastle; John Duke of Lauderdale, Secretary of State for Scotland; James Duke of Ormond, Lord Steward of the Household; Charles Lord Marquis of Winchester; Henry Lord Marquis of Worcester; Henry Earl of Arlington, Lord Chamberlain of the Household; James Earl of Salisbury; John Earl of Bridgewater; Robert Earl of Sunderland, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; Arthur Earl of Essex, First Lord Commissioner of the Treasury; John Earl of Bath, Groom of the Stole; Thomas Lord Viscount Falconberg; George Lord Viscount Hallifax; Henry Lord Bishop of London; John Lord Roberts; Denzil Lord Hollis; William Lord Russell; William Lord Cavendish; Henry Coventry, Esq; one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; Sir Francis Norib, Kt. Lord Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas; Sir Henry Capell, Knight of the Bath, First Commissioner of the Admiralty; Sir John Earnley, Kt. Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir Thomas Chicheley, Kt. Master of the Ordnance; Sir William Temple, Bar; Edward Seymour, Esq; and Henry Peole, Esq;

His Majesty had reason to Value himself upon this Establishment of a Council so generally Grateful to the Two Houses, and to all his Faithful Subjects; and therefore His Majesty came the next day into the House of Lords, and made this Speech on that Occasion:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Thought it requisite to acquaint you with what I have done now this Day; which is, That I have Establish'd a New Privy Council, the constant Number of which shall never exceed Thirty.

I have made Choice of such Persons as are Worthy, and Able to Advise Me; and am Resolved, in all My Weighty and Important Affairs, next to the Advice of my Great Council in Parliament (which I shall very often Consult with) to be Advised by this Privy Council.

I could not make so great a Change, without Acquainting Both Houses of Parliament.

And I Desire you all to apply your selves heartily, as I shall do, to those Things which are necessary for the Good and Safety of the Kingdom, and that no Time may be lost in it.

On April 27. a Committee of Secrecy had been appointed to look into the Answers of the Five Popish Lords in the Tower, and to enquire into the Methods of Proceeding to Tryals upon Impeachments: Who declared their Opinion to be,

" That the Lord Bellasis being Impeached of High-Treason by the Commons, cannot make any Answer but in Person : That the several Writings put in by the Lord Powys, Lord Stafford, and Lord Arundel of Wardour, which they call their several Pleas and Answers, are not Pleas or Answers, but Argumentative and Evasive ; to which the Commons neither can nor ought to Reply : That if the Answers of the Lord Powys, Lord Stafford, and Lord Arundel (as well as that of the Lord Petre) were sufficient ; yet there ought not to be any Proceedings against them, or any of them, until the Lord Bellasis also put in a sufficient Answer in Person : That the Commons do demand of the Lords, That their Lordships would forthwith Order and Require the said Lord Powys, Lord Stafford, Lord Arundel of Wardour, and Lord Bellasis, to put in their perfect Answers ; or, in Default thereof, that the Commons may have Justice against them.

On April 25. a Message was brought from the Lords, " That Thomas Earl of Danby, and John Lord Bellasis, had this Day Appeared in Person at the Bar of the House of Lords, and that Thomas Earl of Danby had put in his Plea, and the Lord Bellasis his Answer ; which the Lords have sent down, desiring they may be returned with all convenient speed." On April 26. the Lords Stafford, Arundel, and Powys, Appeared likewise at the Lords Bar, and retracted their former Pleas, and put in their Answers to the Impeachments exhibited against them.

On April 27. the Commons Resolved, " That the Duke of York being a Papist, and the hopes of his coming such to the Crown, has given the greatest Countenance and Encouragement to the present Conspiracies and Designs of the Papists against the King and the Protestant Religion " : And sent up this Vote to the Lords by the Lord Ruffel, desiring their Lordship's Concurrence to it. At the same time they Agreed to an Address, " That His Majesty would be Pleas'd to Order the Execution of one Pickering a Prisoner in Neigate, and of divers Priests and Jesuits, who had been Condemned by the Judges at the Old-Bayley, and in the several Circuits, but did remain as yet Unexecuted ; to the great Impboldening of such Offenders, in Case they should escape without due Punishment." To which His Majesty, in the Banqueting-House, returned this Answer ; Gentlemen, I have always been Tender in Matters of Blood, which my Subjects have no reason to take Exception at : But this is a Matter of great Weight, I shall therefore Consider of it, and return you an Answer.

April 28. the Committee appointed to Examine and Peruse the Nature of the Plea of Thomas Earl of Danby, made this Report ; " 1. We find no Precedent that ever any Pardon was Granted to any Person Impeached by the Commons of High-Treason, or other High Crimes depending the Impeachment. 2. As to the Manner of the Passing the Earl of Danby's Pardon, it hath been formerly Reported to the House, and the Committee refer themselves to that Report. 3. That by what Means it was obtained, the Time allowed the Committee hath been so short, that we cannot as yet discover the Advisers or Promoters thereof, any further than what is mention'd in the said Report relating to the Lord Chancellor. Resolved, That a Message be sent to the Lords, to Desire their Lordships to Demand of the Earl of Danby, Whether he will rely upon, and abide by the Plea of his Pardon? Accordingly the next Day the Earl was again brought to the Bar of the Lords House, where kneeling, and then standing up, the Lord Chancellor acquainted him, That the Commons had returned to their Lordships the Plea delivered by him at the Bar of their House on the 25th Instant, with a Desire that their Lordships would ask him, Whether he will rely upon, and abide by his said Plea? The Earl praying Time to Answer, their Lordships allow'd him till Saturday next, and then he Withdrew, and was conducted back to the Tower.

On Wednesday April 30. His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and sending for the Commons, spake thus :

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THE Season of the Year advancing so fast, I thought it necessary to put you in mind of Three Particulars. 1. Prosecution of the Plot. 2. Disbanding of the Army. 3. Providing a Fleet for Our Common Security. And to shew, that whilst you are Doing Your Parts, My Thoughts have not been Mis-employed, but that it is my constant Care to do every thing that may Preserve Your Religion, and Secure it for the future in all Events.

I have Commanded my Lord Chancellor to mention several Particulars ; which, I hope, will be an Evidence, that in all things that concern the Publick Security, I shall not Follow your Zeal, but Lead it.

Then the Lord Chancellor added :

My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses of the House of Commons,

" That Royal Care which His Majesty hath taken for the General Quiet and Satisfaction of all his Subjects, is now more evident, by these new and fresh Instances of it which I have in Command to open to You.

" His Majesty hath considered with himself, that 'tis not enough that your Religion and Liberty is secure during his own Reign, but he thinks he owes it to his People to do all that in him lies, that these Blessings may be transmitted to your Posterity, and so well secured to them, that no Succession in after-Ages may be able to work the least Alteration.

" And thereof His Majesty, who hath often said in his Place, That He is ready to Consent to any Laws of this kind, so that the same extend not to alter the Descent of the Crown in the Right Line, nor to defeat the Succession, hath now Commanded this to be further Explained.

" And to the end it may never be in the Power of any Papist, if the Crown descend upon him, to make any Change either in Church or State ; I am Commanded to tell You, That His Majesty is willing that Provision may be made, first, to distinguish a Papist, from a Protestant Successor ; then so to Limit and Circumscribe the Authority of a Popish Successor, in these Cases following, that he may be disabled to do any Harm :

" First, in reference to the Church ; His Majesty is content that Care be taken, that all Ecclesiastical and Spiritual Benefices and Promotions in Gifts of the Crown, may be Conferred in such a manner, that we may be sure the Incumbents shall always be of the most Pious and Learned Protestants : And that no Popish Successor (while he continues so) may have any Power to Controll such Presentments.

" In reference to the State, and Civil part of the Government ; as it is already Provided, That no Papist can Sit in either House of Parliament : so the King is Pleas'd that it be Provided too, That there may never want a Parliament, when the King shall happen to Die, but that the Parliament then in being may continue Indissolvable for a competent Time ; or if there be

 " But yet, if any thing else can occur to the

These were good Words: but the Commons, on May 1. Revived a Committee formerly Appointed to Consider what Part of the Money given for Disbanding of the Army, is yet Undisposed of, and Remaining in the Exchequer. And they fell at the same time upon the further Consideration of Securing and Preserving the King, and the Protestant Religion, against the Attempts of the Papists, both in the Reign of His Majesty and his Successors: And read a Second time, A Bill for better Prevention of Illegal Exaction of Money from the Subject; and Ordered, That Leave be given to " bring in a Bill, That when any Member of this " House is Preferred to any Office or Place of " Profit, a New Writ shall immediately issue out
 " for Electing a Member to Serve in his stead." On May 5. they Resolved, " That it was the Opi" nion of that House, That the Pardon Pleaded by " the Earl of Danby was Illegal and Void, and " ought not to be allowed in Bar of the Impeach" ment of the Commons of England." And Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Lord's Bar, and demanded Judgment against the said Earl. On the same Day, the Lord Ruffel acquainted the House, " That His Majesty Com" manded him to let the House know, That His " Majesty is willing to Comply with the Request
 " made to Him by the House, concerning Pickering,

 Properties of His Majesty's Subjects, and the Alteration of the Protestant Religion Establish'd, have en-deavour'd to Alienate the Hearts of his Loyal Subjects from his Person and his Government. To which the King only made this Cold Return, That He would Consider of it, and return an answer.

The King and Both Houses Agreed in one Thing, The Necessity of a Tax: And therefore, on May the 9th, after their Lordships had receded from their Amendments of the Money Bill, His Majesty came to his Throne, and the Commons Attending, their Speaker presented the Bill, and His Majesty gave his Royal Assent to it, For Money-Granting a Supply to His Majesty of Two hundred Bill Pass'd and six thousand four hundred sixty two Pounds, by the Seventeen Shillings, and Three Pence, for Paying off King. and Disbanding the Forces Raised since the Nine and twentieth of September, One thousand six hundred seventy seven. After this, the Commons understanding that the Lords would admit the Earl of Danby to have the Validity of his Pardon Pleaded at their Bar, they Resolved, " That no Com" moner whatsoever should presume to maintain " the Validity of the Pardon Pleaded by the Earl

On May the 10th, the Lords and Commons, in Address an Address to His Majesty, taking Notice of the of both

 London and Westminster, and Parts adjacent, and Popish their obstinate Continuance there, in Contempt of Priests.

 London, Westminster, Southwark, the Tower-Hamlets, and the Counties of Middlesex and Surrey, may immediately be Raised, and put in a Posture of Defence.* In the mean time, some Differences did arise, about the Manner of Proceeding upon the Impeachments depending before the Lords; for which Purpose the Commons had Proposed, That a Committee of both Houses might be Nominated, to Consider of the most proper Ways and Methods of Proceeding upon Impeachments. The Lords refused to Agree, for this Reason assign'd, That they did not find it Conformable to the Rules and Orders of Proceedings of this Court. Upon this, the House of Commons deliver'd this Resolution, in a Conference with their Lordships; That Things standing thus, they cannot Proceed in the Tryals of the Lords, before the Methods of Proceedings be adjusted between the Two Houses. Upon which, a Committee of Both Houses was accordingly Appointed to Consider of Propositions and Circumstances relating to the Tryals of the Lords in the Tower.

The King’s
Answer.

On Wednesday May 14. Mr. Powle delivered a Message from His Majesty, as followeth:

CHARLES REX.

King’s Message for Setting out a Fleet.

“ THOUGH His Majesty hath already, at the first “ Meeting in Parliament, and since, by a “ Word or two, mentioned the Necessity of having “ a Fleet at Sea this Summer: yet the Season “ for Preparing it being far advanced, and our “ Neighbours before us in their Preparations, he “ cannot hold himself discharged towards his “ People, if he do not now with more Earnestness “ again recommend the same to your present Care “ and Consideration; and the rather, from the “ daily Expectation of the return of the Fleet from “ the Streights, to which a great Arrear is Due;
“ and hereby he must acquit himself of the Evil “ Consequences, which the want of a Fleet in such “ a Juncture may produce: And he hath not “ done this without considering, That the entering “ on the Work presently, can be no Hindrance to “ the other great Affairs upon your Hands, but “ rather a Security, in the Dispatch thereof.” A Debate arising in the House, upon the Message, they Resolved, That the further Consideration of it be Adjourned till Monday Seven-night next.

Question
of the Vote of the Bishops in Capital Cases?

In the proposed Method for the Tryal of the Lords, a new Question did arise, How far the Bishops ought to Vote, or to be Present in Capital Cases? On which Occasion, on Tuesday May 13. it was Resolved, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, That the Lords Spiritual have a Right to Stay in Court, in Capital Cases, till such time as Judgment of Death comes to be Pronounced. And on May the 15th, the Lords explained themselves, That the Meaning of the Resolution Passed Yesterday, concerning the Lords Spiritual, is, That the Lords Spiritual have a Right to Stay, and Sit in Court, till the Court proceed to the Vote of, Guilty, or Not Guilty? After this Preliminary, on May the 16th, it was Resolved, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, That Thursday next be Appointed to begin the Tryals of the Five Lords in the Tower, (viz.) the Earl of Powys, Lord Viscount Stafford, Lord Petre, Lord Arundel of Wardour, and Lord Bellasis. (But the Day of Tryal was afterwards Adjourned till Tuesday May 27. On which very Day the Parliament was Prorogued.) After which Resolution Passed, the Lords Spiritual asked the Leave of the House, “ That they might With“ draw themselves from the Tryals of the said “ Lords, with the Liberty of Entering their usual “ Protections.” But the Commons Voted, and Instructed their Committee to Insist upon it, That the Lords Spiritual ought not to have any Vote in any Proceedings against the Lords in the Tower.

Bill of Exclusion.

On Thursday May 15. a Bill had been brought in to the House of Commons, to Disable the Duke of York from Inheriting the Imperial Crown of England: Which was read the Second time, on May 21. and Resolved, by a great Majority, That the Bill should be Committed to a Committee of the Whole House. This inclined His Majesty to bring this Session to a speedy Period: And therefore, on May 27. His Majesty came to the House his of Lords, and the Commons Attending, he gave Royal Assent to, 1. A Bill for the better Securing the Liberty of the Subject, and for Prevention of Imprisonments beyond the Seas. 2. A Bill for Re-ingrossing the Records of Fines, burnt in the late Fire in the Temple. 3. A Private Bill, concerning Charles Dale of Rutlandshire, Esq; Then His Majesty intimated to the Two Houses his Resolution to Prorogue them; And the Lord Chancellor accordingly, by His Majesty’s Command, did Pro-rogate the Parliament till the 14th of August next.

sed.

Parliament Prorogued.

Soon after, this Parliament was Dissolv’d, and another Summon’d to Meet at Westminster on the 17th Day of October next: But before the Meeting, His Majesty, by Proclamation the 24th, was pleas’d to Declare, That the said Parliament should be Prorogued till the 30th Day of the same Month:
And afterward Order’d a Commission for Proroguing the said Parliament till the 26th of January next: At which time His Majesty made a short Speech to the Two Houses, and without allowing them to enter upon any Debates, Commanded the Lord-Chancellor to Prorogue them till the 15th of April next.

And soon after Dis-solv’d.

About the End of August, the King was much Indisposed by Two or Three Fits of a Tertian-Ague. The News of this, and of the Parliament’s Dissolution, coming to the Duke of York in Flanders, he resolv’d upon an immediate return into England; and the Report of his sudden Return was thus made, by Authority: York returns to England. Windsor, Sept. 2d. This Morning His Royal Highness the Duke of York Arrived here, contrary to Expectation, and told His Majesty, “ That hearing of his Indisposition, he thought “ he could do no less than come to wait upon “ him, and see how he did: adding, That he “ was ready, as soon as His Majesty Pleas’d, to “ return to Flanders, or any other Part of the “ World His Majesty should Command him to.”

Duke of York returns to England.

This Return of the Duke, was very Surprising to the Court it self, and very Alarming to the greater Part of the Nation, who had so much Reason to fear a Plot upon the King’s Life, even for the sake of a Popish Successor. The King himself was sensible that he could not enjoy his Brother’s Company, without an universal Discontent among his Subjects. But the Duke was very unwilling to cross the Seas again; and therefore when he saw that he must leave the Court, he desir’d rather to Retire into Scotland, where his Figure might be greater than Abroad, and his Return, upon any Exigence, might be more quick and easie. This Compromise between the King and the Duke, had this Notice given of it by Authority: New-Market, Octob. 7. His Royal Highness having represented to His Majesty, That he conceives it, for many Respects, more proper for him to be in His Majesty’s Dominions, rather than those of another Prince, and made it his humble Request to His Majesty, to have his Leave to go into Scotland, His Majesty hath Granted it; and, it’s presumed, His Royal Highness will in a short time repair thither.

sons of Quality, followed with a numerous Train of Coaches, began their Journey towards Scotland, and lodg’d the first Night at the Earl of Salisbury’s Solemnity, where, Decemb. 4. His Royal Highness took his Place in the Council, and spoke to them in a very affectionate manner; “ expressing his

1679. "with since his entering into the Kingdom, and declaring his Readiness to do every thing that lay in his power, to promote the Honour and Service of the King, and the Interests of this Kingdom." It was some Advantage to the Interest and Designs of the Duke and his Friends, that the Rigid Presbyterians, or Field-Conventiclers, had in the beginning of this Year most barbarously Murdered the Arch-Bishop of St. Andrews, and afterward took Arms, seized the City of Glasgow, and encreas'd into a formidable Army, that was Routed by the Duke of Monmouth, at Bothwell-Bridge.

Duke of Monmouth grows Popular.

The Duke of Monmouth improv'd every Day in the Affections of the People of England, and by his Zeal in Prosecution of the Plot, and his Joining heartily with those Members of Both Houses who were thought the best Protestants, and the greatest Patriots, that he began to be invited to cast an Eye upon the Crown; and a Report was industriously given out, That the King had been Lawfully Married to his Mother. Upon which, His Majesty caused a Declaration to be entred in the Council Book,

The King declares he was never Married to the Duke's Mother

That to avoid any Dispute, which may happen in Time to come, concerning the Succession to the Crown, He Declares in the Presence of Almighty God, That He never gave nor made any Contract of Marriage, nor was Married to any Woman whatsoever, but to His present Wife Queen Catherine now Living.

Another Protestation.

Three Months after, His Majesty thought fit to renew a Protestation, On the Word of a King, and the Faith of a Christian, That he was never Married to Mrs. Barlow, alias Walters, the Duke of Monmouth's Mother, nor to any other Woman whatsoever, besides the now Queen. Which Royal Protestation was Recorded in the High Court of Chancery.

The Duke of York was so Jealous of the Competition of Monmouth, that at the beginning of September he had prevailed with the King to take from him his Commission of Captain-General, and to take from him all his other Places, and to Command him to Depart the Kingdom. Accordingly the Duke of Monmouth went over to Utrecht, and resolv'd to reside there, whilst the Duke of York staid at Brussels: But hearing of the Duke's sidden going back to England, he thought fit to follow him; and on the 27th of November he arrived at London about Mid-night: and the Watch spreading the News of it, the Bells rang, and Bonfires were made through the City and Suburbs in a very distinguishing manner.

Petitions for Sitting of the Parliament.

Upon the several Prorogations of the Parliament, the Members were very uneasy, and the People much grieved; so that very many Petitions were presented to the King, for the Sitting of the Parliament, as highly necessary for the Safety of His Majesty's Person, and the Peace of his Kingdoms. But the King resolving that there should be no Session, this manner of Petitioning was called Tumultuous and Unlawful: And the King in Council, December the 10th, Ordered the Lord-Mayor of London to suppress them, and punish those that went about collecting Hands to such Petitions. The King also publish'd a Proclamation, dated December the 12th, wherein he called this Way of Petitioning, "a Method set on foot by ill Men, to Promote Disorders among the People, and to raise Sedition and Rebellion:" and strictly Comanded all his Loving Subjects, of what Rank or Degree soever, That they presume not to promote any such Subscriptions, nor in any-wise join in any Petition of that manner to be presented to His Majesty, upon Discouraged by the King.

Peril of the utmost Rigour of the Law that may be inflicted for it. And yet this Business of Petitioning was zealously carried on, and many were prepared, and some Presented: But the King received them very coldly, and often Reprimanded those that brought them, particularly when Sir Gilbert Gerrard, accompany'd by many Eminent Citizens, did on Jan. 13. present to His Majesty such a Petition for the Sitting of the Parliament; His Majesty was pleas'd to Answer, That he look'd upon himself to be the Head of the Government, and the only Judge of what was fit to be done in such Cases, and that he would do what he thought most for the Good of Himself and his People: adding to Sir Gilbert, That he did not expect to find one of his Name, and particularly Him, in such a Thing, and that he was very sorry for it.

During these Intervals of Parliaments, the Duke of York thought it safe and proper for him to return out of Scotland: And to break the Design with more softness to the People, on Jan. 28. His Majesty was Pleas'd to Declare in Council, That He had sent for His Royal Highness, not having found such an Effect from his Absence as should incline him to keep him longer from him. That some Questions had been started of late, of such a Nature, and of so great Concern to the Duke, as made it reasonable to have him present at the next Session of Parliament; and that though His Majesty would take Care to preserve his Right, yet it might be for his Satisfaction to be here Himself. That His Majesty was so well assured of the Duke's Compliance, that he could Answer, his Return should have no ill Influence upon the Publick. So on Febr. 24. Their Royal Highnesses arrived at Deptford, and went up the River in a Burge, and were Saluted by the Guns from the Ships, and from the Tower; and at their Landing at the Privy-Stairs, His Majesty received them in a most affectionate manner, and led the Dutchess to the Queen's Appartment, and from thence to her own; whither many of the Nobility, and other Persons of Quality immediately repaired, to Compliment Their Royal Highnesses, and to Kifs their Hands: And two Days after, they were Attended by the Lord-Mayor, Court of Aldermen, Recorder, and Common-Council of London, where the Recorder made a Speech, and in all their Names Congratulated the Duke's safe Arrival, and Pray'd for his Health and Prosperity. So great Labour was employed to make the World (if possible) to believe, That the Duke of York was now the best Friend, and even a Favourite of the People.

There were this Year many and great Advances and Changes in Honours and Preferments: On April 12. His Majesty Signed a Warrant for Constituting Captain Thomas Cheek to be Lieutenant of the Tower of London, in the Room of Sir John Robinson. On April 25. Richard Coling, Esq; was Sworn Clerk Extraordinary of His Majesty's Most-Honourable Privy-Council. The Duke of York, to decline the Compliment of the Commons, laid down his Admiralty; and His Majesty appointed Sir Henry Capel, Knight of the Bath, Daniel Finch, Esq; Sir Thomas Lee, Sir Humphry Winch, Sir Thomas Meers, Bar^t. Edward Vaughan and Edward Hales, Esqrs, Commissioners for the Execution of the Office of Lord-High-Admiral of England. On April 23. Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir Thomas Player, and Colonel Birch and Colonel Whaley, were Appointed Commissioners to Disband the Army. On July 20th, His Majesty was graciously pleas'd, in Consideration of the many and faithful Services performed unto him by the Right-Honourable George Lord-Viscount Halifax, John Lord Roberts, and Charles Lord Gerrard of Brandon, to conferr upon them the Dignities of Earls of this Kingdom, creating the said Lord-Viscount Halifax Earl of Halifax; the Lord Gerrard

Honours and Preferments.

1679. Earl of Newberry, Viscount Brandon; and the Lord Roberts, Earl of Falmouth, Viscount Bodmyn: But on July 26. His Majesty was pleased to change the Title of Earl of Falmouth, which he had conferr'd on the Lord Roberts, and instead thereof to create him Earl of Radnor. And His Majesty was then pleas'd, as a Mark of his Grace and Favour to the Lord Viscount Yarmouth, to create him Earl of Yarmouth. And again, on Aug. 20. His Majesty changed the Title of Earl of Newberry, which he had conferr'd on the Lord Gerrard of Brandon, and instead thereof created him Earl of Macclesfield. In the beginning of October, the Earl of Shaftsbury was removed from the Place of President of the Privy-Council: For he had been now an hearty Opposer of Popery, and of the Duke's Succession: And though he had been once in the most Arbitrary Measures of the Court; yet now, either to make an Atonement, or to shew his Repentment, he was the greatest Patron of the Establish'd Religion and Laws. He had, at the Opening of this Session, made a famous Speech, wherein were these Odd and Notable Things: We have a little Sister, and she has no Breasts; What shall we do for our Sister in the day when she shall be spoken for, and we have several little Sisters without Breasts? the French Protestant Churches, the two Kingdoms of Ireland and Scotland. The Protection of the Protestants Abroad, is the greatest Power and Security the Crown of England can attain, and which can help us to give a Check to the Growing Greatness of France. Scotland and Ireland are two Doors, either to let in Good or Mischief upon us. Popery and Slavery, like two Sisters, go Hand in Hand; sometimes the one goes first, sometimes the other: but where-ever the one enters, the other is always following close at the heels. In England, Popery was to have brought in Slavery: In Scotland, Slavery went before, and Popery was to follow, &c. Upon this Removal of the Earl of Shaftsbury, His Majesty was pleas'd to make the Earl of Radnor President of the Council, who took his Place at the Board on October the 25th.

Speech of the Earl of Shaftsbury

About the Middle of September, His Majesty, in Consideration of the constant Loyalty of the Family of George Lord Berkeley of Berkeley-Castle, and of his Lordship's considerable Services and good Affection to His Majesty's Person, was graciously pleas'd, by his Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, to conferr upon his Lordship the additional Honours of Viscount Dursely, and Earl of Berkeley, in the County of Gloucester. On Octob. 20th, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Jonathan Raymond and Simon Lewis, Sheriffs, and William Russel one of the Common-Council of London, giving them the Character of Persons of whom His Majesty had received a very good Account as to their Principles and Affections to the Government, and to the Protestant Religion as now Establish'd in the Church of England.

In the Heats and Fatigues of prosecuting the Popish Plot, Sir William Jones, Attorney-General, humbly besought His Majesty, that he might Resign his Place, wherein he was unable longer to Serve His Majesty, because of the Affliction lately befallen him in his Family, and the Distempers of Body which he had contracted by a Sedentary Life. The King was pleas'd to gratifie him therein, and to permit him to quit that Employment, with an Assurance of his being very well satisfi'd with the good and faithful Services performed by him while he was in it; and His Majesty was then pleas'd to make Choice of Sir Creswel Levinz, one of His Majesty's Council Learn'd in the Law, to be his Attorney-General.

On November the 19. His Majesty was pleas'd to declare in Council, That he had given Leave to the Right-Honourable the Earl of Essex to Resign his Place of First Commissioner of the Treasury, but that His Majesty intended his Lordship should continue of his Privy-Council. And the Right-Honourable Lawrence Hyde, Esq; being by his Lordship's said Resignation become the First in that Commission, His Majesty caus'd him to be Sworn a Privy-Councillor, and accordingly he took his Place at the Board. And His Majesty was pleas'd to make Sir Stephen Fox, Kt. one of the Commissioners of the Treasury.

On the Removal of the Duke of Monmouth, His Majesty was pleas'd to make the Duke of Albemarle Captain of his Life-Guards of Horse: And the Earl of Mulgrave Governor of Hull, and Lord-Lieutenant of the East-Riding of Yorkshire. And about the same End of November, His Majesty created Edward Lord Viscount Conway Earl of Conway, and Granted to the Earl of Chesterfield the Offices of Warden and Chief-Justice in Eyre of all His Majesty's Forests, Parks, &c. on this side Trent. On December the 5th, His Majesty was pleas'd in Council to Declare, That designing to Employ Sir Robert Southwell, Kt. in his Service Abroad, he had given him Leave to Resign his Place of one of the Clerks of the Council, to Francis Gwynne, Esq; who being Called in, was Sworn accordingly. On December the 26th, His Majesty was pleas'd to Grant the Office of Receiver and Pay-Master of his Forces, to Nicholas Johnson and William Fox, Esquires. On Jan. 7th, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Edward Deering, Esq; Younger Son of Sir Edward Deering, Kt. and Bar. decess'd, in Consideration of several Services by him render'd both before and since His Majesty's happy Restauration

Nothing was become more acceptable to the Court, than the Humour of Stifling and Ridiculing the Popish Plot. For this Cause, Articles of Complaint were preferred by Dr. Oates and Mr. Bedlowe, against the Lord Chief-Justice Scroggs; which, with his Lordship's Answer, were openly Heard and Debated before His Majesty in Council, on Wednesday Jan. 21. where his Lordship was favoured and Vindicated in all Particulars by the King and Council, who therefore Dismiss'd the Matter from the Board, and left his Lordship to take such Course at Law as he should think fit. These and other Proceedings in Council were thought to be so Partial, that on Jan. 31. the Lord Russel, the Lord Cavendish, Sir Henry Capell, and Mr. Powle, pray'd His Majesty to give them Leave to withdraw from the Council-Board. To which His Majesty was pleas'd to Answer, With all his heart. And on Febr. 4th, Daniel Finch, Esq; First Commissioner of the Admiralty, and Sidney Godolphin, Esq; one of the Commissioners for the Treasury, were Sworn of His Majesty's Privy-Council, and took their Places at the Board.

Humour of Ridiculing the Popish Plot.

Privy-Councillors withdraw.

At the Beginning of Hillary-Term, Mr. Baron Raymond was Sworn one of the Judges of the Common-Pleas, in the Room of Sir Robert Atkyns, who the Day before receiv'd his Discharge, under the Great-Seal; and Sir Richard Weston, one of His Majesty's Serjeants at Law, was Sworn one of the Barons of the Exchequer, in the Place of Mr. Justice Raymond. On Febr. 7th, Charles Littleton was made Governor of Sheereness, in the Room of Major Dorrell, decess'd. And about the same time, His Majesty thought fit to add the Lord Brownkard and Sir Thomas Littleton to the Commission for Executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England.

Other Honours and Preferments.

On Febr. 11th, His Majesty was pleas'd to Declare in Council, "That Mr. Secretary Coventry had long sollicit'd him, on account of his Infirmities of Body, for his Leave to Resign his Place of one of his Principal Secretaries of State:

1679. " That His Majesty had at last been prevailed upon to grant it, though with some unwillingness, because of the great Satisfaction His Majesty had always had in his Services: That His Majesty's Intention was, he should however continue of his Privy-Council: And that His Majesty had made Choice of Sir Leoline Jenkins (Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, and his late Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at the Treaty at Nimeguen) to succeed him in that Station, which Mr. Secretary Coventry would quit, so soon as he had put his Affairs in order: And in the mean time, His Majesty was pleased to Command Sir Leoline Jenkins to be Sworn of his Privy-Council, who accordingly took his Place at the Board.

Ambassadors and Envoys.

On Febr. 17th, His Majesty appointed Sir Robert Southwell, Kt. to go his Envoy Extraordinary to the Elector of Brandenburgh: And Sir Francis Pemberton, one of the Justices of the King's-Bench, received his Discharge, under the Great-Seal. On Febr. 21st, His Majesty declared Sir Palmer Fairborne to be left Lieutenant-Governor of Tangier, in the Room of Colonel Duncan: upon whose Arrival, the Earl of Inchiquin the Governor had obtained Leave to come for England, in whose Absence the said Sir Palmer was to Command in Chief. The Lord Bodwyn went Envoy Extraordinary to the King of Denmark; and Sir Gabriel Silevius, in the same Quality, to the Dukes of Brunswick and Lunenburgh. On March 6th, His Majesty going to Blackwall to see some Frigots there Building, Dined with Henry Johnson, Esq; and conferr'd upon him the Honour of Knighthood.

State of Religion.

As to Religion; While the Nation and the Parliament were so justly Apprehensive of the Dangers of Poperie, the King was pleased to keep them in some Amusement, by seeming himself to shew a great Affection and Zeal for the Protestant Church Establish'd. He fell in readily with all the Parliamentary Addresses for Executing the Laws against the Papists, though nothing was more averse to his own Inclination and Judgment. On May the 4th, he caus'd a Proclamation to be publish'd, Commanding all Papists, or Reputed Papists, forthwith to Depart from the Cities of London and Westminster, and from within Ten Miles of the same. And on the same Day he publish'd another Proclamation for the Discovery and Apprehending Maurice Gifford a Popish Priest, and several other Persons of the Romish Religion, who had, (out of their detestable and barbarous Malice) Conspired and Agreed together to set on-Fire the City of London, the Suburbs thereof, and the Places thereunto adjacent. On June 13th, Thomas White, alias Whitebread, Provincial of the Jesuits in England; William Harcourt, pretended Rector of London; John Fenwick, Procurator for the Jesuits in England; John Gaven, alias Gaven, and Anthony Turner, all Jesuits and Priests, were brought to their Tryal at the Old-Bailey, by Virtue of a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, being Indicted of High-Treason, for Conspiring the Death of His Majesty, and the Subversion of the Government and Protestant Religion; and, upon Full Evidence, were found Guilty. And the next Day, Richard Langborne, Councillor at Law, who was Indicted for the same Crimes, was, after a long Tryal, likewise found Guilty. And then Sentence Pass'd upon them all Six, to be Drawn, Hang'd, and Quarter'd. When they came to Execution, they all Protested, upon their Salvation, at the very moment of Death, That they were wholly Innocent of the Crimes objected against them, and for which they were about to Suffer. Many People were surpriz'd at these Dying Affeverations, when the Evidence was so clear in all the Facts, and in every Circumstance of them: some imputed their obstinate Denial, to an Expectance of Pardon; others, to an extravagant Notion of Merit; and few believed them, but those who had been Profelyted to them. On July 18th, Sir George Wakeman the Queen's Physician, Mr. William Marshall, Mr. William Rumsley, and Mr. James Corker, were Tryed upon a like Indictment of High-Treason, for Conspiring the Death of the King, and Subverting the Government, and the Protestant Religion. But the King's Witnesses were now so far Discountenanced, that the Jury brought the Prisoners in, Not Guilty. Yet His Majesty suffered William Plesington a Popish Priest, being Convicted of High-Treason, for Exercising his Function here, contrary to the Law, to be Executed at Chester, on Saturday the 19th of July; and coniv'd at the like Execution of John Evans, and William Floyd, two Popish Priests, at Cardiff, on the 23d of July. His Majesty, by Proclamation Dated Septemb. 8th, Declares to the World, That it had appeared, at the Tryals and Arraignments of the Conspirators, in the Horrid and Traiterous Conspiracy now under Prosecution, That among the several Ways and Means contriv'd for the Murther of his Sacred Majesty, four Ruffians were appointed to go to Windfor, and there to Assassinate his Royal Person; and that by Information upon Oath, there was just cause to suspect that Layallyan, Karney, and Brahall, Irishmen, and Wilson an Englshman, were the Persons Hired to commit that Execrable Crime, and were since fled from Justice: And therefore His Majesty proposes the Reward of an Hundred Pounds for the Discovery of any one of those Offenders. In another Proclamation Dated Octob. 31st, His Majesty further Declared, That the late Horrid Plot and Conspiracy of divers Priests and Jesuits, and other Papists, against His Majesty's Sacred Person, and for the Subversion of the Protestant Religion and Government Establish'd, had been so far Discovered, that the sad Effects thereof, had, by his Majesty's Care, and the Blessing of Almighty God, been hitherto prevented, and the most Notorious Offenders therein brought to Con dign Punishment. But His Majesty considered, that nothing would more conduce to the lasting Safety of His Majesty, his Kingdoms, and the Protestant Religion therein Establish'd, than that there might be a full and perfect Discovery of the said Conspiracy, and therefore offers Pardon, and other Encouragement, to all that can make any further Discovery. Again, by Proclamation Dated November the 12th, His Majesty proposes a Reward of an Hundred Pounds to any Person who shall Discover and Apprehend any Jesuit; and Fifty Pounds to any Person who shall Discover any Estate Real or Personal belonging to any Jesuit, or College or Seminary of Jesuits, or to any Popish Priest, College, Seminary, Convent or Nunnery of Popish and Superstitious Foundation, (Except the same be issuing out, or Part of the Estate and Estates of Sir Thomas Preston, Sir John Warner, 2500 l. Charge upon the Estate of Henry Nevil, Esq; and 1500 l. in the Hands of Augustine Hungate, which are already Discovered, and now under Examination before the Lords-Commissioners of the Treasury.)

Some Papists Acquitted.

The King apprehends his own Life in danger,

And encourages a further Discovery of the Popish Plot.

In December, His Majesty further Declared, That out of his continual Care of the Protestant Religion, he had Appointed a Committee of the Lords of his Privy-Council, to Consider of the most Effectual Means for putting the Laws in Execution against the Papists, and for the Suppression of Poperie; who Reporting their Opinions to His Majesty in Council, there was a Reward of Ten Pounds to be Paid to the Discoverer of any Papist, or suspected Papist, who shall be Harbour'd in any of His Majesty's Houses, and the Officer who Harbour'd them should be Turn'd out of his Place. The Justices of Peace were likewise permitted to Search

1679. "Somerset-House, at any time in the Queen's absence, as also St. James's, for Priests and Papists. And that no Popish Recusant might expect any Favour or Connivance for their staying in Town, His Majesty Declared his Resolution, Not to Grant them any Dispensations or Licenses to that effect. And for preventing the Resort of all Persons to the Chapels of Ambassadors and Foreign Ministers of the Popish Religion, (except they be their Menial Servants) the Constables and Beadles were directed, to seize all Persons who should be found unduely resorting thither. And that no Encouragement might be wanting, in order to the Conviction of Papists, a Privy-Seal was Passing, to Enable all the Judges to Reward, according to their Discretions, all Persons that should Prosecute such Popish Recusants before them, to be pay'd out of the Estates or Forfeitures of those who should be Convicted by their Prosecutions. And for such Persons as were already Imprisoned any-where, upon Suspicion of being Popish Priests, It was further Ordered, That they be forthwith Prosecuted to an Attainder. And whereas Lists of the Papists and Reputed Papists of England and Wales had been lodg'd in the House of Commons by the Knights of the respective Shires, and Copies thereof laid before the Lords of the Committee, the Lord-Chancellor was now Directed to cause Commissions to be Prepared (in which the said Lists were to inserted) Impowering and Requiring the Justices of the Peace of each County to tender the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy to the Persons particularly named therein; And upon their Refusal, to Proceed against them according to Law, in order to their speedy Conviction."

Proclamation for putting the Laws in Execution against Papists.

And after all these Opinions of the Committee, Confirmed and Enforced by the King in Council, a Proclamation was published the same Day, Declaring, That His Majesty was sensible of the great Increase of Popery within this Kingdom of late Years, by reason of the Neglect of putting in Execution those good Laws which were provided for Suppressing the same, whereby Jesuits and Priests had been emboldened to resort thither from Paris beyond the Seas in great Numbers, and had openly Practised and Asserted the most pernicious and damnable Principles of that Religion, and to Persuade and Withdraw divers of His Majesty's good Subjects from their Obedience to His Majesty, and to reconcile them to the Pope and See of Rome: Therefore, His Majesty apprehending that many of his good Subjects might be ignorant of the good Laws made against Popery, His Majesty thinks fit to publish and make known the Principal and most Penal of the said Laws; as well to prevent and hinder any of his Loving Subjects from being Mised into any such Offences, through Ignorance, as to Guide and Encourage all Persons knowing of any such Offences, to a Legal Prosecution of the same.

The King is not thoroughly convinced of the Popish Plot.

On Jan. 17th, at the Sessions for Middlesex and London, Eight Persons were Arraigned for High-Treason, upon the Statute of 27 Eliz. cap. 2. who being born Subjects of the King of England, and having taken the Order of Priesthood, by Authority derived from the See of Rome, had come and remained in England, contrary to the Statute; and Six of them were Convicted, And yet after all these solemn Declarations, and formal Proceedings, the King was believed, by all who best knew him, to be a Papist in his Heart, and a Profess'd Encourager of Suppressing and Ridiculing the Popish Plot; which never ended in his Reign, nor with his Life.

Omission in the Test Act, about Members of Convocation.

There was little more of Ecclesiastical Concern; unless we take Notice, That the House of Lords had observed an Omission in the Test Act, and other Acts of Security, "That no Provision 1679. "was made for requiring the Members of Convocation to take the Oaths and Declaration." Upon which a Bill was brought in, Intituled, An Act to Disable any Person from Sitting in any of the Houses of Convocation, till he hath taken the Oaths, and made and Subscribed the Declaration therein contained. Which Bill being sent from the Lords, was on Apr. 3d Read the First time, and on Apr. 8th a Second time, and then Committed, upon the Debate of the House, to a Committee of Members expressly named; to which were to be added all the Members that served for the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. A Report from this Committee was made on Apr. 22d, That they had taken the Bill into Consideration, and Agreed upon several Amendments and Clauses: Which being Read, the Bill was re-Committed, and was afterwards dropt. The Foundation of this Bill was laid, in this Opinion of all People, That the Members of Convocation were not so Called to Parliament by the Premunientes Writ, as to be Intituled to the Privileges or Duties of Parliament-Men, by any Law or Statute, unless expressly named in it.

The Nation was so Divided into Party and Faction, under the unhappy Names of Whig and Tory, that at Elections for Parliament, and other Publick Meetings, it occasioned many Tumults and Riots, and other Personal Challenges and Combats. Upon which His Majesty, by his Proclamation Dated March 9th, was pleased to Declare, "That it had become too frequent, especially with Persons of Quality, under a vain Pretence of Honour, to take upon them to be the Revengers of their private Quarrels, by Duels and single Combat; which ought not to be, upon any Pretence or Provocation whatsoever: Therefore, His Majesty considering, that the Sin of Murther was detestable before God, and this Way of prosecuting Satisfaction was scandalous to Christian Religion, and was a manifest Violation of the Laws; out of his pious Care to prevent Unchristian and rash Effusion of Blood, He strictly Charges and Commands all his Loving Subjects, That they do not, either by themselves or others, Challenge any Person, nor Accept of any Challenge, nor actually Fight any Duel; Declaring his Royal Pleasure, That He will not grant his Pardon to any Person that shall be so concern'd in any Duel, but leave him to the utmost Rigour and Severities of the Laws."

Unhappy Distinction of Whig and Tory.

Proclamation against Duelling.

The Dissentions among the Clergy were as apparent as among the People. Those Divines who were hearty in their Zeal against Popery, and were stedfast in Asserting the Legal Rights and Liberties of Church and State, were unhappily Run down for Whigs, and even for Fanatics, though Persons of the greatest Learning, Sobriety, and Affection to the Establish'd Constitution: While other Clergy-men, who were Drawn in to Declaim against the Fanatics more than against the Papists, and to pretend to be more afraid of a Republick than of a Popish Successor, they Valu'd themselves for the Distinguishing Name of Tories; and run into such High Notions of Passive Obedience, and Unbounded Prerogative, that they really gave a great Advantage to the Papists, and help'd to make the Dissenting Teachers the more Acceptable not only to the Common People, but even to many of the Nobility and Gentry, who were offended at those new Marks of a High-Church. For, to use the Words of Sir John Hawles, late Solicitor-General, in his Remarks on Fitz-Harris's Tryal, Many of the Clergy of the Church of England had been prevailed with to cry-up the Popish, as a Fanatick Plot: The Papists and the Church of England being in the late Times equally Sufferers, and Oppress'd by the Fanaticks, they naturally grew to have a Kindness for each other, and both join'd in Having 1680. The Parliament, by the last Prorogation, was to have Met again on April the 15th. But on Monday April 5th, His Majesty was pleased to Declare in Council, "That he thought fit, for several weighty Considerations, to make a further Prorogation till the 17th of May next." At which time the Two Houses Met at Westminster, and were Prorogued, by Commission, till the 1st of July next: At which time it was further Prorogued, by Commission, till the 22d Day of the same Month. But in the mean time, His Majesty Declared in Council, on July 14th, "That he thought fit to Prorogue the Parliament from the 22d Instant, till the 23d of August;" when it was again Prorogued, by Commission, till the 21st of October. On which Day, His Majesty, by Proclamation, Declared, That the Parliament should then Meet, and Sit, and therefore Required the Presence and Attendance of all the Members.

Abhorrence of Petitioning. In the mean time, Instructions were given, and great Interest was made to obtain, at several Sessions and Assizes, a Declaration of Abhorrence of Petitioning for the Sitting of a Parliament; and many of these Forms of Abhorrence were presented to the King, who seem'd to be very fond of them. The City of Westminster was the first, who, by Francis Wythins, Esq; (Knighted for that Service) presented such an Address of Abhorrence, made by the Grand-Jury, and Subscribed by the Justices. The like Addresses were brought up from the Counties of Surrey, Essex, Middlesex, and Norfolk; this last County particularly giving the King their humble Thanks for Recalling the Duke of York from Flanders.

Meeting of the Parliament. On Thursday Octob. 21. the Parliament Met at Westminster; And His Majesty coming to the House of Lords, with the Commons Attending, was pleased to make this Gracious Speech to Both Houses:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech. THE several Prorogations I have made, have been very Advantageous to our Neighbours, and very Useful to Me; for I have employed that Time in making and perfecting an Alliance with the Crown of Spain, suitable to that which I had before with the States of the United Provinces, and they also had with Spain, consisting of mutual Obligations of Succour and Defence.

I have all the reason in the world to believe, That what was so much desired by former Parliaments, must needs be very grateful to you now: For though some, perhaps, may wish these Measures had been taken sooner, yet no Man can with Reason think that it is now too late; for they who desire to Make these Alliances, and they who desire to Break them, shew themselves to be of another Opinion.

And as these are the best Measures that could be taken for the Safety of England, and the Repose of Christendom; so they cannot fail to attain their End, and to spread and improve themselves further, if Our Divisions at Home, do not render Our Friendship less Considerable Abroad.

To prevent those as much as may be, I think fit to renew to you all the Assurances which can be desired, That Nothing shall be wanting on my Part to give you the fullest Satisfaction your Hearts can wish, for the Security of the Protestant Religion, which I am fully resolved to Maintain against all the Conspiracies of Our Enemies, and to Concurr with you in any new Remedies which shall be Propos'd, that may 1680. consist with Preserving the Succession of the Crown in its Due and Legal Course of Descent.

And in order to this, I do Recommend it to You, to pursue the further Examination of the Plot, with a strict and an impartial Enquiry. I do not think my Self safe, nor You neither, till that Matter be gone through with; And therefore it will be necessary that the Lords in the Tower be brought to their speedy Tryal, that Justice may be done.

I need not tell you what Danger the City of Tangier is in, nor of what Importance it is to Us to Preserve it. I have, with a mighty Charge and Expence, sent a very considerable Relief thither; but constantly to Maintain so great a Force as that War will require, and to make those New Works and Fortifications, without which, the Place will not be long Tenable, amounts to so vast a Sum, that without Your Support, it will be impossible for Me to undergo it: Therefore I lay the Matter plainly before You, and do desire Your Advice and Assistance.

But that which I value above all the Treasure in the World, and which I am sure will give Me greater Strength and Reputation both at Home and Abroad, than any Treasure can do, is, A perfect Union among Our Selves.

Nothing but This, can Restore the Kingdom to that Strength and Vigour which it seems to have lost, and Raise us again to that Consideration which England hath usually had.

All Europe have their Eyes upon this Assembly, and think their Own Happiness or Misery, as well as Ours, will depend upon it.

If We should be so unhappy as to fall into such a Misunderstanding amongst Our Selves, as would render Our Friendship unsafe to trust to; it will not be to be wondred at, if Our Neighbours should begin to take new Resolutions, and perhaps such as may be Fatal to Us.

Let Us therefore take Care that We do not Gratifie Our Enemies, and Discourage Our Friends, by any unseasonable Disputes.

If any such do happen, the World will see it was no Fault of Mine; for I have done all that was possible for Me to do, to keep You in Peace while I Live, and to leave You so when I Die.

But from so great Prudence and so good Affection as Yours, I can fear nothing of this kind; but do rely upon You All, that You will use Your best Endeavours to bring this Parliament to a good and happy Conclusion.

After this Speech, the Lord-Chancellor, by His Majesty's Command, Directed the Commons to Return to their House, and to proceed to the Choice of a Speaker: Which they accordingly did, and Unanimously Elected William Williams, Esq; of Grays-Inn, Councillor at Law, and Recorder of Chester; who, the next Day, was Presented to His Majesty seated in his Throne in the House of Lords, and Approved by Him. On Tuesday Oct. 26. they entred on their Debates: And because the Sense of the House, and the State of the Nation, will best appear by what was then deliver'd, we shall here insert the Two leading Speeches. The Lord R. began thus:

M^r SPEAKER;

SIR,

"S^Eeing, by God's Providence and His Majesty's Favour, We are here Assembled, to Consult and Advise about the greatest Affairs of the Kingdom. I humbly conceive it will become us, to begin first with that which is of most Consequence to our King and Country, and to take into Consideration how to save the Main, before we spend any Time about Particulars.

1680. “ restant Religion, are in great Danger from Popery; and that either the Parliament must Suppress the the Power and Growth of Popery, or else that Popery will soon Destroy not only Parliaments, but all that is Near and Dear to us. And therefore I humbly Move, That we may Resolve to take into our Consideration, in the first place, How to Suppress Popery, and Prevent a Popish Successor; without which, all our Endeavours about other Matters will not signify anything, and therefore this justly challengeth the Precedency.

He was Seconded by Sir H. C. in this Notable manner:

Mr. S P E A K E R;

S I R,

I Stand up to Second that Motion, and to give some Reasons, with your Permission, why I Agree in it; not doubting but other Persons will be of the same Opinion, if they have the same Sentiments what Influence the Popish Party have had in the Management of most of our Affairs both at Home and Abroad, for many Years last past; and how that Party hath Increased, and been Encouraged.

S I R, I remember, that after His Majesty's happy Restoration, it was thought convenient that an Act of Uniformity should Pass, as the best Law that could be invented to Secure the Church from the Danger of Popery and Emeticism; and accordingly it did Pass in the Year 1662: but in the Year 1663, some that then Managed the great Affairs of State, or at least had great Interest with His Majesty, were of another Opinion; for they had prevailed with Him to Grant a Toleration and Indulgence, and to make a Declaration to that Purpose. The Parliament Assembling soon after, thought it very strange, that in one Year an Act of Uniformity should be the best Way to Preserve the Church, and that in the next Year a Toleration and Indulgence; therefore, after a serious Debate about it, in Febr. 1663. they made an Address to His Majesty, humbly representing how it would reflect on the Wisdom of that Parliament, to have such an Alteration made so soon; and that such Proceedings, for ought they could foresee, would end in Popery. Upon which His Majesty, out of his great Goodness, stopt the Issuing out of the said Toleration, hearkening rather to the Advice of his Parliament, than to any private Counsellors.

S I R, I cannot inform you Who it was that gave that Advice to His Majesty, nor certainly affirm that they were Popishly Affected; but if I may take the liberty to judge of a Tree by its Fruit, I have some Reason to think so: because I find by Coleman's Letters, and other Discoveries, That a Toleration and Indulgence should be one of the great Engines they intended to use for the Establishing of Popery in this Nation. But the Project thus failing at this Time, they were forc'd to wait with Patience until they could have another Opportunity; employing in the mean time their Diabolical Counsels in Weakening the Protestant Interest (in order to a General Destruction of it) by Engaging us in a War with Holland: In which the French Acted the same Part in the Behalf of the Dutch, as they did afterwards in our Behalf against them in 1672, very fairly Looking on both times, while we poor Protestants with great fury Destroy'd one the other. But this was not so strange, nor so plain, as the Dividing of our Fleet under the Command of Prince Rupert and General Monk, and the Design of Destroying them, as well as their Ships, and the rest of our Navy-Royal at Chatham. And as they thus Acted their Part at Sea, so they did not forget to do their best a-Shore; in Apr. 1666, some Persons that were then Hang'd, Confess'd they had been treated with, and had treated with others, to Burn the City of London in September following; of which Confession we then took as little Notice, as we have of other Discoveries since: however, accordingly in September, Thirteen thousand Houses of the City of London were Burnt: And those that were Taken in Carrying on that Work, generously Discharg'd without any Trial; and one Papist that Confess'd, that himself and others did set the City on-Fire, was in great haste Hang'd, and so the Business was hush'd up, as complearily as the last great Plot is like to be now, branding Hubert, that then made that Confession, with Madness; as now these last Witnesses, with Perjury, Sodomy, and what not. However, these Businesses were not so Carried on, but His Majesty discern'd some of the Intrigues of them, which made him alter his Councils, and, contrary to the Endeavours of that Party, enter into New Alliances, by making up that excellent League, usually call'd the Tripple-League. Which put a stop to these Mens Designs as to Affairs Abroad, but not to their Designs here at Home. For having obtained the Oxford Act, and some others against the Dissenters, great Endeavours were used to have them executed severely, in expectation that the Dissenters would be made weary of living quietly under them, and in the end be glad of a Toleration: But the Dissenters deceived them, and submitted to the Laws, insomuch that in 1670, till 1671. there was hardly a Conventicle to be heard of in England; and might never have been more, if that Party had not been afraid of a great Disappointment thereby: Wherefore, to revive our Discussions, and to bring in (as they hoped) their own Religion, they employed all their Force again to get a Toleration; I say, They did it, because it cannot be imagin'd it could be from any Protestant Interest, both Churchmen and Dissenters publicly declaring their Detestation of it: And in 1672. it was Obtain'd, Printed, and Publish'd; after we had, in order to the Carrying it on, broke that never-to-be-forgotten Tripple-League, sacrificed our Honour to the French, not only by making a strong Alliance with them, but by seizing the Dutch Smyrna Fleet, and then afterwards Proclaiming War with them. Which War was Continu'd, in order to Ruine us Both; for the French proved but Lookers on at Sea, (as they had done when Engaged with the Dutch in 1665.) though great Conquerors at Land, especially of the Protestants in Germany and Holland. And as this Toleration was accompanied with these great Alterations in Affairs Abroad, so it was back't, 1. With a great Minister of State at the Helm at Home, who was so Confident of the Re-fixing Popery here, that he could not forbear to declare himself to be of that Religion, I mean my Lord-Treasurer Chifford: As also, 2. With a great Army at Black-Heath, Ready upon all Occasions: And, 3. With the greatest Violation on the Property of the Subject, that ever happen'd in this Nation, the Seizing of One Million and an Half, or thereabout, in the Exchequer. All which indeed made our Condition Desperate, and, as many thought, past Retrieve. But, Mr. Speaker, here again the Goodness and Wisdom of His Majesty Saved us, refusing to follow such panickish Counsels: Upon which Chifford not only lost his Place, but his Life too, braking his Heart (as is by most

believed) to see himself so disappointed in this great Design. And here, as we can never too much detest my Lord Clifford, and such Others who Contrived our Ruine; so we can never sufficiently admire His Majesty's Royal Care, in working out our Security, by refusing to follow any Advice that tended to those Ends. And therefore, to the great Disappointment of that Party, at the Request of the House of Commons at their next Meeting, he Recalled the said Toleration, Disbanded the Army, and, in convenient time, made a Peace with Holland. But though this Party were thus defeated of their Design, yet not so discouraged as to give it over. They changed their Measures, but not their Principles; and although they desisted from further aiming at a Toleration, yet they no ways neglected pursuing a Reformation, but, in order thereto, prosecuted a Correspondence formerly begun for that Purpose with the French King, and by promising him considerable Supplies to Carry on the War he was then Engaged in, secured themselves, as they thought, of his Assistance for Settling of Popery here. Accordingly it is not unknown, what a Party of Men, and what Quantities of Ammunition, and other Necessaries for War, were sent to the French King, during the War he was then Engaged in, and how it was done contrary to the Advice of the Parliament, and the Solicitations of most of the Princes of Europe, and true Interest of England, to the Astonishment of all good Men; especially because it was contrary to His Majesty's own Proclamation, and when the French had Declared they made that War for Religion, endeavouring to force the Dutch to allow of Popish Churches. However, such was the Strength of this Party, that this Assistance was continued until the French King was willing to make a Peace; and then, Who more Instrumental than our Ministers to effect it? several Ambassadors, and Plenipotentiaries too, being sent as well to the Court of Spain, as Germany and Holland, for that Purpose. And at last, the Dutch being Weary, and Consumed with the War, they were persuaded to be willing for a Peace; and accordingly on Jan. 10th, 1667. entered into a Treaty with Us for a General Peace, to be accomplished by such Ways and Means as are therein prescribed. Which League was kept private for some time; and instead of any Discovery thereof, about the End of February following (the Parliament being then soon after to Assemble) a great Noise was made of Entering into a War against France; it being concluded, That Nothing like That would incline the Parliament to give Money, nor the People freely to part with it, because it was the only Way to extinguish those Fears they lay under, by reason of the growing Greatness of France. At the Meeting of the Parliament, the Project was set on foot with all the Art and Industry imaginable; and so far were the Major-part of the Members persuaded of the Reality thereof, that they were inclinable to give a great Sum of Money for the Carrying on of the War: But while they were in Consultation about it, the League formerly mention'd, Agreed at the Hague, was unluckily made (in some measure) publick, and occasion'd a great jealousy of the Reality of the Pretended War; and the greater, because, upon Enquiry, they could not find there were any Alliances made to that Purpose. And yet notwithstanding this, and the great Endeavours of some Worthy Members of that Parliament, (now of this) an Army of Thirty thousand Men were raised, and a Tax of above One million two hundred thousand Pounds was given. And then, instead of 1680. a War, a General Peace, according to that Treaty Agreed with Holland, was presently made. By which that Party thought they had secured not only the Power of France, but the Men and Money here raised at Home, to be made serviceable for their Ends; there wanting nothing but a Popish King to perfect all these Designs. For which we have great Reason to believe they had made all necessary Preparations, as well by employing Men and Money to find out wicked Instruments to take away the King's Life, as by providing one Claypool to be a Sacrifice, to make an Atonement for the Act, and to cast the Wickedness thereof on the Fanatics. To which purpose, the said Claypool was really Imprison'd some time before in the Tower, upon the Evidence of Two Witnesses, That he should say, That he, and Two hundred more, had Engaged to Kill the King, the next time he went to New-Market. For which, in all probability, he had as really been Hang'd, if the breaking out of the Plot had not prevented their Designs. Then was Claypool, the next Term after, publickly Cleared at the King's-Bench-Bar, the Witnesses Appearing no more against him. Thus were we again reduced to a Miserable Condition: but it pleased God, by the Discovery of the Plot by Dr. Oates, once more to Save us; whose Evidence (he being but One Witness) they thought at first to have Out-braved; but some of them being so infatuated as to kill Justice Godfrey, and Coleman so unfortunate as to leave some of his important Papers in his House, notwithstanding the Time he had to convey them away, it wrought so great a Fermentation in the People, as that there was no Remedy, but that the further Pursuit of the Plot must be again laid aside, and a fair Face put upon Things: And so accordingly there was for a few Months; but how, after Wakeman's Tryal, Things turn'd again, what Endeavours have been since used to Ridicule the Plot, to Disparage the Old Witnesses, to Discourage New Ones, to set up Presbyterian Plots, and to Encrease our Divisions, I suppose must be fresh in every Man's Memory here, and therefore I shall not offer to trouble you therewith.

But, SIR, I cannot Conclude, without begging your Patience, while I Observe how Things have been Carry'd on in Scotland and Ireland, answerable to what was done here.

In Ireland, the Papists are at least Five to One in Number for the Protestants, and may probably derive from their Cradle an Inclination to Massacre them again: At least, the Protestants have no Security, but by having the Militia-Arms, and the Command of Towns and Forts in their Hands. But about the same time, or a little before that the Toleration came out here in 1672, an Order went from hence, which, after a long Preamble of the Loyalty and Affection of the Papists to His Majesty, Required the Lord-Lieutenant and Council to Dispense with the Papists wearing of Arms, and living in Corporations, and a great many other things in their Favour; of which they have made such Use, as that the Plot There, was in as good Readiness as that Here: but how Carry'd on, and what Endeavours were there also used to Stifle it, will appear, when your Leisure may permit you to Examine those Witnesses.

In Scotland, the Government is quite Altered, the Use of Parliaments, in a manner, abolished, and the Power of that Government lodged in a Commissioner and Council, a Standing Army of Twenty two thousand Men Settled, all Endeavours used to Divide the Protestant Interest, and to Encourage the Papists. By which we may conclude, That the same Interest hath had a great 1680. " great hand in the Management of Affairs There also.

" And, SIR, may we not as well believe, that the World was at first made of Atoms, or by Chance, without the help of an Omnipotent Hand, as that these Affairs in this our Little World have been thus Carry'd on so many Years together, so contrary to our true Interest, without some great Original Cause? by which the Papish Interest hath so far got the Ascendant of the Protestant Interest, that notwithstanding all His Majesty's Endeavours, Things have been strangely Over-ruled in favour of that Party; how, and which way, His Majesty's Declaration, made in April 1679, is to me a great Manifestation.

" SIR, I hope the Weight of the Matter I have Discours'd on, will Plead my Pardon with the House, for having troubled you so long: I submit what I have said to your Judgment, humbly desiring a favourable Construction: And although I have said some Things that are very Strange, and other Things grounded only on Conjectures; yet I believe that no Man will have just Reason to doubt the Probability of the Truth, if they will but consider what a Potent Friend the Papists have had of James Duke of York, and how Emboldened by the Hopes of having him for King. And as it is not to be doubted but that they have had his Assistance, so they have had the French Ambassador too, who, by his frequency at the Palace, hath seem'd rather one of the Family and King's Household, than a Foreign Ambassador; and by his Egresses and Regresses to and from His Majesty, rather a Prime Minister of State of this Kingdom, than a Counsellor to another Prince. And the Truth of All hath been so Confirmed by Coleman's Letters, making the Duke's Interest, the French Interest, and the Papists Interest so much one, and by the many Witness's that have come in about the Plot, that I think we may rather be at a Loss for our Remedy, than in Doubt of our Disease. And therefore, though I know the Difficulties I may bring my self under, by having thus Laid open some Men's Designs; yet seeing my King and Country have Call'd me to this Service, I am resolv'd, That as my Father lost his Life for King Charles the First, so I will not be afraid to adventure mine for King Charles the Second, and that makes me expose my self in his Service in this Place.

" SIR, I think (seeing Things are thus) without neglecting our Duty to our King and Country, nay, to our God too, we cannot defer Endeavouring the Securing of the King's Person, and Protestant Religion, by all Lawful Means whatsoever: And therefore I Second the Motion that was made, That we may, in the first place, take into our Consideration, how to Suppress Popery, and Prevent a Popish Successor; that so we may never return again to Superstition, Idolatry and Slavery, but may always preserve that pure Religion, to be the Religion of this Nation, for which so many of our Forefathers have suffer'd Martyrdom, I mean the Protestant Religion, as long as the Sun and Moon endure.

At the End of the Debates of this Day, the House Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this House, That they ought, in the first place, to proceed effectually to Suppress Popery, and prevent a Popish Successor.

The Duke of York seem'd to expect a Vote of this nature, and therefore would not stay to bear the Affront of it, but the Day before the Session, departed for Scotland, He and his Dutches and Retinue going down the River in their Barges, to embark on the Men of War appointed to Attend them, His Majesty being pleas'd to Accompany them as far as Woolwich. 1680.

On Octob. 27th, they first Resolved, That an Address be made to His Majesty, Declaring the Resolution of this House, to Preserve and Support the King's Person and Government, and the Protestant Religion at Home and Abroad. And then falling on the Debate of Dissolving, and so often Proroguing the Parliaments, and the Discouraging of Petitions for the Sitting of them, they came to these Resolutions:

Resolved, " That it is, and ever hath been the undoubted Right of the Subjects of England, to Petition the King, for the Calling and Sitting of Parliaments, and Redressing of Grievances. Resolution for the Right of Petitioning.

Resolved, " That to Traduce such Petitioning as a Violation of Duty, and to represent it to His Majesty as Tumultuous or Seditious; is to Betray the Liberty of the Subject, and Contribute to the Design of Subverting the ancient Legal Constitution of this Kingdom, and inducing Arbitrary Power.

Resolved, " That a Committee be Appointed to Enquire after all such Persons that have Offended against the Right of the Subject.

After these Votes, a Complaint was made against Sir Francis Wythons a Member of the House, who had preferred an Address to the King, against the Peoples Right of Petitioning: And he not being in the House, an Order was made, That he should Attend the next Day; where, after he was Heard in his Place, he was Ordered to Withdraw, and this Sentence was Pass'd upon him, That he should receive the Censure of the House upon his Knees, and be forthwith Expell'd the House. Sir Francis Wythons 12 Decem^r the House.

His Majesty, to stop the Torrent of the House, and to seem to fall in with them, in a like Zeal against Popery, did, on Octob. 30th, Publish a Proclamation, Declaring His Princely Care for Securing the True Protestant Religion, and for Satisfying the Minds of his Loving Subjects; And that therefore he thought fit to Encourage the more effectual Discovery and Suppression of the most Herrid and Execrable Popish Plot, by promising a free Pardon to any Persons who should come in, and give further Information and Evidence concerning it. Proclamation for further Discovery of the Popish Plot.

The Commons were so little satisfy'd with this Court-Promise of Suppressing Popery, that on Novemb. 2. they fell into a Debate of the Popish Plot, and came to these Resolutions: " 1. That the Duke of York's being a Papist, and the Hopes of his coming such to the Crown, hath given the greatest Countenance and Encouragement to the present Designs and Conspiracies against the King, and Protestant Religion. " 2. That in Defence of the King's Person and Government, and Protestant Religion, this House doth Declare, That they will Stand by His Majesty with their Lives and Fortunes; And that if His Majesty should come to any Violent Death, (which God forbid) they will Revenge it to the utmost on the Papists." And after several Speeches, it was Resolved, That a Bill be brought in, to Disable James Duke of York to Inherit the Imperial Crowns of England and Ireland, and the Dominions thereto belonging. This Bill was Read the First time on Novemb. 4th, when Sir Leoline Jenkins Argued, That it was, 1st, Contrary to Natural Justice, to Condemn a Man before the Conviction, or the Hearing of him. 2^{dly}, That it was contrary to the Principles of our Religion, to Dispose a Man of his Right, because he differs in Point of Faith. 3^{dly}, It was against the Divine Right of Monarchy, and to give the Crown to the Disposal of the People. 4^{thly}, It was against the Oath of Allegiance, which did bind all Persons to Resolutions against Popery.

Bill of Exclusion.

Arguments against it.

1680. the King, his Heirs and Successors; by which the Duke, as Presumptive-Heir, must be understood.

Arguments for it. Other Members Argued not only for the Legality, but for the Expedience, and even the Necessity of such a Bill, as the only Way of Preserving the King, the Government, and the Protestant Religion: And so it was, by a very great Majority, Resolved, "That the Bill should be read a Second time on Saturday Morning, Nov. 6th." At which time it was Resolved, "That the Bill be Committed to a Committee of the Whole House. That it be an Instruction to the said Committee, That the Exclusion in the said Bill do extend to the Person of James Duke of York only. And that this House will Resolve it self into a Committee of the Whole House, on Monday Morning next at Ten of the Clock, to proceed to the Consideration of the said Bill." Accordingly, on Novemb. 8th, the House Resolved it self into a Committee, and Reported their Resolution, "That the said Bill for Disabling James Duke of York, &c. with the several Clauses and Amendments, be Ingross'd.

The King offend. d. The King was Incens'd at this Proceeding of the Commons against his Brother; but to shew his Repentment in the calmest manner, he sent this Message to the House, on Novemb. 10th: His Majesty desires this House, as well for the Satisfaction of his People, as of Himself, to Expedite such Matters as are depending before them, relating to Popery, and the Plot; And would have them rest Assured, That all Remedies they can tender to His Majesty conducing to these Ends, shall be very Acceptable to him, provided they be such as may consist with Preserving the Succession of the Crown in its Legal Course of Descent. After a Debate upon this Message, and a general Dissatisfaction in it, the House came to these Resolutions: 1. "That a Committee be Appointed to draw up an humble Address to His Majesty, upon the Debate of the House, in Answer to His Majesty's Gracious Message. 2. That this House will proceed in the Prosecution of the Lords in the Tower, and will forthwith begin with William Viscount Stafford.

On Novemb. 11th, this Address to His Majesty was Read, and Agreed to be Presented:

Now it Please Your Most Excellent Majesty,

Address of the Commons. WE Your Majesty's Most Loyal and Obedient Subjects, the Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, having taken into our most serious Consideration Your Majesty's Gracious Message, brought unto us on the 9th Day of this Instant November, by Mr. Secretary Jenkins; do with all Thankfulness acknowledge Your Majesty's Care and Goodness, in Inviting us to Expedite such Matters as are depending before us, relating to Popery, and the Plot. And We do, in all Humility, represent to Your Majesty, That We are fully Convinced, That it is highly incumbent upon us, in Discharge both of our Duty to Your Majesty, and of that great Trust reposed in us by those whom we Represent, to endeavour, by the most speedy and effectual Ways, the Suppression of Popery within this Your Kingdom, and the bringing to Publick Justice all such as shall be found Guilty of the Horrid and Damnable Popish Plot. And though the Time of our Sitting (abating what must necessarily be spent in the Chusing and Presenting a Speaker, Appointing Grand-Committees, and in taking the Oaths, and Tests enjoined by Act of Parliament) hath not much exceeded a Fortnight, yet We have in this Time not only made a considerable Progress in some Things which to us seem, and (when Presented to Your Majesty in a Parliamentary way) will, we trust, appear to Your Majesty to be absolutely necessary, for the Safety of Your Majesty's Person, the effectual Suppression of Popery, and the Security of the Religion, Lives and Estates of Your Majesty's Subjects: but even in relation to the Tryals of the Five Lords Impeached in Parliament for the Execrable Popish Plot, we have so far Proceeded, as we doubt not but in a short time we shall be Ready for the same. But we cannot, without being Unfaithful to Your Majesty, and to our Country, by Whom we are Intrusted) omit, upon this Occasion, humbly to inform Your Majesty, That our Difficulties, even as to these Tryals, are much encreased by the Evil and Destructive Counsels of those Persons who Advised Your Majesty, first to the Prorogation, and then to the Dissolution of the last Parliament, at a Time when the Commons had taken great Pains about, and were Prepared for those Tryals. And by the like Pernicious Counsels of Those who Advised the many and long Prorogations of the present Parliament, before the same was permitted to Sit; whereby some of the Evidence which was prepared in the last Parliament, may possibly (during so great an Interval) be forgotten, or lost; and some Persons, who might probably have come in as Witnesses, are either dead, have been taken off, or may have been discouraged from giving their Evidence. But of one mischievous Consequence of those Dangerous and Unhappy Counsels, we are certainly and sadly sensible, namely, That the Testimony of a Material Witness against every one of those Five Lords, (and who could probably have Discovered and brought in much other Evidence about the Plot in general, and those Lords in particular) cannot now be given in Viva voce, forasmuch as that Witness is unfortunately Dead, between the Calling and the Sitting of this Parliament. To prevent the like, or greater Inconveniences for the future, We make it our most humble Request to Your Most Excellent Majesty, That, as You tender the Safety of Your Royal Person, the Security of Your Loyal Subjects, and the Preservation of the True Protestant Religion, You will not suffer Your self to be prevailed upon by the like Counsels, to do any thing which may Occasion in Consequence (though, we are assured, never with Your Majesty's Intentions) either the deferring of a full and perfect Discovery and Examination of this most Wicked and Detestable Plot, or the preventing the Conspirators therein from being brought to speedy and Exemplary Justice and Punishment. And we humbly Beseech Your Majesty to rest assured, (notwithstanding any Suggestions which may be made by Persons, who, for their own wicked Purposes, contrive to create a Distrust in Your Majesty of Your People,) That Nothing is more in the Desires, and shall be more in the Endeavours of Us, Your Faithful and Loyal Commons, than the Promoting and Advancing of Your Majesty's True Happiness and Greatness.

On the same Day was Read the Ingrossed Bill, Intituled, An Act for Securing the Protestant Religion, by Disabling James Duke of York to Inherit the Imperial Crown of England and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging; and Pass'd the House, by a very great Majority. In the Debates, one of the Members spoke thus:

Mr. SPEAKER,

THE Honourable Member that spoke before, made large Encomiums on the Duke, extolling his Endowments, and Services to the Nation.

1680. " Nation. For my part, I think, that the better
 " Qualify'd he is, the greater is our Danger.
 " But as to what he said, of having fought our " Battels, and done great Things for the Nation,
 " I think he hath not done fairly by the House;
 " for he should also have told us, how the Tripple-
 " League was broken, and my Lord of Sandwich " lost his Life; how he Chang'd his Religion, and " hath ever since Encouraged Popery, and Assisted " that Interest; how the City of London was Burnt,
 " and the Actors Discharg'd; how the Discovery of " the Popish Plot was Prevented as much as it " could be, and the Presbyterian one Encourag'd;
 " that so we might have all afore us ——— He was going on more severely, but was interrupted.

1680. " sent thither, had been in great part made up " of Popish Officers and Soldiers, and that the " Irish Papists had been the most Countenanc'd " and Encourag'd. That Here at Home the En" deavours and Attempts of the Popish Party had " been so bold and successful, that so it was Matter " of Admiration to them, and which they could " only ascribe to an Over-ruling Providence, That " His Majesty's Reign was still continued over " them, and that they were yet Assenbled to " Consult the Means of their Preservation. That " this Bloody and Restless Party had found " Countenance and Protection from the Laws
 " made against them: That they had form'd " Means to Disgrace their Opposers; and if they " were Judges, Justices of the Peace, or other Ma" gistrates, to have them turn'd out of Commission.
 " That after some Time, they became able to " Influence Matters of State and Government;
 " and thereby to Destroy Those they could not " Corrupt. The Continuance, or Prorogation
 " of Parliaments, had been accommodated to serve " the Purposes of that Party. Money rais'd upon " the People, to supply his Majesty's Extraordinary " Occasions, had, by the Prevalence of Popish " Counsels, been employed to make War upon " a Protestant State, and to advance and augment " the dreadful Power of the French King. That " great Numbers of His Majesty's Subjects were " sent into, and continued in the Service of that " King. That even the Ministers of England were " made Instruments to press upon the States of " Holland the Acceptance of one Demand (among " others) from the French King, for procuring " their Peace with him, That they should admit " the Publick Exercise of the Roman Catholick Re" ligion. That if ever any Command were given " for the Laws to be put in Execution against " the Papists, even from thence they gain'd Ad" vantage to their Party, whilst the Edge of those " Laws was turn'd against Protestant Dissenters,
 " and the Papists escap'd in a manner untouch'd.
 " That the Test Act had little effect; for the " Papists, either by Dispensation obtained from " Rome, submitted to those Tests, and held their " Offices themselves; or those put in their Places,
 " were so favourable to the same Interests, that " Popery it self had rather gain'd than lost Ground " since that Act. That a Popish Secretary (since " Executed for his Treasons) had maintain'd a " Correspondence at Rome, and in the Courts of " other Foreign Princes, for the Subduing (in their " own Words) that Pestilent Heresie which had so " long Dominic'd over this Northern World. That " out of those Councils and Correspondencies was " hatcht that Damnable and Hellish Plot, by the " good Providence of Almighty God brought to " light about two Years since. That when this " Accursed Conspiracy was first Discover'd, the " Papists began to smother it, with the Barbarous " Murder of a Justice of the Peace, within one of " His Majesty's own Palaces. That amidst these " Distractions and Fears, Popish Officers for the " Command of Forces were allowed upon the " Musters by Special Orders, Counter-sign'd by a Message from the King, about Tangier.

On Novemb. 12th, His Majesty sent this Message to the House of Commons: His Majesty did in his Speech, at the Opening of this Session, Desire the Advice and Assistance of his Parliament, in relation to Tangier: The Condition and Importance of the Place, obliges His Majesty to put ths House in mind again, That He relies upon Them for the Support of it; without which, it cannot be much longer preserv'd. His Majesty doth therefore very earnestly recommend Tangier again to the due and speedy Care and Consideration of this House.

Upon this Message, a warm Debate arose; some Objected, That it was a Duty incumbent on them to Secure Things at Home, on which their All depended, before they entred into an expence of Time about Securing Things Abroad: Tangier might be of great Importance to Trade, but not so managed as to be any Security to the Protestant Religion. The Portugueses, when they Deliver'd it up, did Covenant to have one Popish Church remain there, for the Conveniency of Priests and Fryars: And though it was then Agreed, That their Mortality should not be supply'd, but after the Decease of those Persons the said Popish Church might be Demolish'd, or Converted to a Protestant Use; yet Things had been otherwise managed, and the Papists There were now more than ever: That my Lord Bellasis, now a Prisoner in the Tower for the Plot, had been Governor of Tangier, and even still the Soldiers and their Commanders were most of that Religion, so that the Place was but a kind of Nursery for a Popish Army. — Others Argued, That they were indeed afraid of Tangier, but more afraid of a Popish Successor; and therefore till they were secured in the latter, they could not think themselves concern'd in the former; and in the mean time, they could not give Money, without endangering the Religion and Government of the Nation: For they remembred when One million one hundred thousand Pounds was given for Building of Ships, and not one Ship built; and above Two millions given to Support the Tripple-League, and then it was presently employ'd for the Breaking of it; when One million two hundred thousand Pounds was given for an Actual War with France, when at the same time we were under all the Obligations for Peace, and so continu'd. — Others again Pleaded, That there was no need of Raising New Forces for the Security of Tangier; since there were several Regiments, besides the Guards, in Pay at Home, which might be Transported thither, with little Charge, and be Maintained There, as cheap as Here. — At last the Commons Resolv'd, That a Committee be Appointed to Draw up an Address to be Presented to His Majesty, upon the Debate of the House, humbly representing to His Majesty, the Dangerous State and Condition of the Kingdom, in Answer to His Majesty's Message.

Address or Remonstrance of the Commons.

This Address was a Remonstrance of Grievances, and Acts of Popery, and Arbitrary Power; That Tangier had been several times under the Command of Popish Governors: That the Supplies

“divers of the most Considerable of His Majesty’s Protestant Subjects had Crimes of the highest Nature forged against them, the Charge to be supported by Subornation and Perjury, that they might be Destroyed by Forms of Law and Justice. That a Presentment being prepared for a Grand-Jury of Middlesex, against the Duke of York; the Grand-Jury were in an unprecedented and illegal manner Discharged, and that with so much haste and fear, lest they should finish that Presentment. That they were prevented from Delivering many other Indictments by them at that time found against other Popish Recusants. That because a Pamphlet came forth Weekly, call’d, The Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome, exposing Popery (as it well deserv’d;) a New and Arbitrary Court was made in the King’s-Bench (rather like a Star-Chamber, than a Court of Law,) That the same should not, for the future, be Printed by any Person whatsoever. That notwithstanding all the Proclamations for the Banishing Papists from about this great City, and Residence of His Majesty’s Court, and the Parliament, yet great Numbers of them, and of the most Dangerous sort, did daily resort hither, and abide here. Under these and other sad Effects and Evidences of the Prevalence of Popery, and its Adherents, They His Majesty’s Faithful Commons found this His Majesty’s Distressed Kingdom, and other Parts of his Dominions, labouring when They Assembled; They therefore humbly Desire to be Secured from the Dreadful Design of Introducing Popery; and that whilst They shall give a Supply to Tangier, They may be assured they do not augment the Strength of their Popish Adversaries, nor encrease their own Dangers. Which Desires of his Faithful Commons if His Majesty shall Graciously vouchsafe to Grant, They shall not only be ready to Assist His Majesty in Defence of Tangier, but do whatsoever else shall be in their Power, to Enable His Majesty to Protect the Protestant Religion and Interest at Home and Abroad, and to Resist and Repell the Attempts of His Majesty’s and the Kingdom’s Enemies.

On Novemb. 13th, several Persons were Examined at the Bar of the House of Commons, about the Dismissing of a Grand-Jury in Middlesex: And after a Debate, the House came to to these Votes: 1. That the Discharging of a Grand-Jury by any Judge, before the End of the Term, Assize, or Sessions, while Matters are under their Consideration, and not Presented, is Arbitrary, Illegal, Destructive to Publick Justice, a manifest Violation of his Oath, and is a Means to Subvert the Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom. 2. That a Committee be Appointed to Examine the Proceedings of the Judges in Westminster-Hall, and Report the same, with their Opinion therein, to this House.

On Novemb. 15th, the Bill for Securing the Protestant Religion, by Disabling James Duke of York to Inherit the Imperial Crown of England and Ireland, &c. was carry’d up to the House of Lords by William Lord Russell, Attended by almost the whole House of Commons. At the First Reading in the House of Lords, and its being put to the Vote, Whether it should be Read a Second time? It was Carry’d in the Affirmative by Two Votes only. On the Second Reading, it was Debated till Eleven a Clock at Night, the King being present all the while, to encourage an Opposition to it; and then it was Thrown out of the House, by a Majority of Thirty Voices, of which, some Men were pleas’d to Observe, that Fourteen were Bishops.

Resolution against the Discharging of Juries.

Bill of Exclusion thrown out of the House of Lords.

On Novemb. 25th, the Commons were so much Disgusted against the late Speaker, Edw. Seymour, Esq; and a Motion was made, for an Address to be Presented, To Remove him from His Majesty’s Council and Prefence, for Ever. Soon after, they fell upon Sir George Jefferies, then Recorder of the City of London, and Order’d, That an humble Address be made to the King, To Remove him out of all Publick Offices; and that the Members which Served for the City, should communicate this Vote to the Court of Aldermen. Upon the same Account, they Order’d Sir Giles Philips and Mr. Coleman to be sent for into Custody of the Serjeant at Arms, for Detesting and Abhorring the Petitioning for Sitting of the Parliament; and Voted it a Breach of Privilege of Parliament: The like the Commons did by Capt. William Castle, Mr. John Hutchinson, Mr. Henry Walrond, Mr. William Starvel, and Mr. Thomas Herbert; Sir Thomas Holt, Serjeant at Law, and Mr. Thomas Staples. And because Sir Francis North (Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas) Advised and was Assisting in Drawing up a Proclamation against Petitioning for the Sitting of the Parliament, the Commons Voted, That it was a sufficient Ground for the House to Proceed against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors. The like Vote Passed against Sir Thomas Jones, one of the Judges of the King’s-Bench; and Sir Richard Weston, one of the Barons of the Exchequer: And they Resolved actually to Impeach Sir William Scroggs of High-Treason.

On Tuesday Novemb. 30th, William Viscount Stafford, one of the five Lords Impeached by the House of Commons for the Horrid Popish Plot, was brought to his Tryal before the Lords in Westminster-Hall, a Committee of the Commons managing the Impeachment against him. This Day was taken up in Opening the Court, and in Hearing the General Evidence to Prove the said Popish Plot. Next Day, the Witnesses Proving the particular Charge against the Lord Stafford, were Heard, and Examined. The Tryal lasted a whole Week, when, on Decemb. 7th, he was brought to the Court, to receive the Judgment of the Lords; of whom Thirty one Pronounced him Not Guilty, and Fifty five Guilty: So that Sentence of Death was Passed upon him as in Cases of High-Treason. But his Execution was deferr’d till Wednesday Decemb. 29th, when he was Beheaded on a Scaffold for that Purpose erected on Tower-Hill; Protesting with his last Breath, That he was utterly Innocent of the Crimes for which he stood Condemn’d.

On Wednesday Decemb. 15th, His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and made this Speech to Both Houses:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

AT the Opening of this Parliament, I did acquaint You with the Alliances I had made with Spain and Holland, as the best Measures that could be taken for the Safety of England, and the Repose of Christendom.

But I told You withal, That if our Friendship became unsafe to trust to, it would not be wondrous at, if Our Neighbours should begin to take New Resolutions, and perhaps such as might be Fatal to Us.

I must now tell You, That Our Allies cannot but see how little has been done since this Meeting, to encourage their Dependance upon Us: And I find by Them, That unless We can be so United at Home, as to make Our Alliances Valuable to them, it will not be possible to hinder Them from seeking some other Refuge, and making such New Friendships, as will not be consistent with Our Safety. Consider, That a Neglect of this Opportunity is never to be Repaired.

I did likewise lay the Matter plainly before You, touching the State and Condition of Tangier: I must now tell You again, That if that Place be thought worth the Keeping, You must take such Consideration of it, that it may be speedily Supply'd: It being impossible for Me to preserve it, on an Expence so far above My Power.

I did promise you the fullest Satisfaction Your Hearts could wish, for the Security of the Protestant Religion; and to Concurr with You in any Remedies, which might consist with Preserving the Succession of the Crown in its Due and Legal Course of Descent: I do again, with the same Reservations, renew the same Promises to You.

And being thus Ready, on My part, to do all that can reasonably be expected from Me; I should be glad to know from You, as soon as may be, how far I shall be Assisted by You, and what it is You Desire from Me.

The Commons returning to their House, Resolved themselves into a Grand-Committee, How to Secure the Kingdom against Popery, and Arbitrary Government: And after some Debate, They Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That one Means to Suppress Popery, is, That the House be Moved, That a Bill be brought in immediately, To Banish all the Considerable Papists out of the Kingdom. And upon a further Debate on the Dangers of Popery, They Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That as long as the Papists have any Hopes of the Duke of York's Succeeding the King in the Kingdoms of England and Ireland, and Dominions thereunto belonging; the King's Person, the Protestant Religion, and the Lives, Liberties and Properties of all His Majesty's Protestant Subjects are in apparent Danger of being Destroy'd. And upon Reference made to an Act of Queen Eliz. for an Association, to Revenge her Death upon the Papists, They came to a like Resolution, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the House be Moved, That a Bill be brought in, For an Association of all his Majesty's Protestant Subjects, for the Safety of His Majesty's Person, the Defence of the Protestant Religion, and the Preservation of His Majesty's Protestant Subjects, against all Invasions and Oppositions; And for Preventing the Duke of York, or any other Papist, from Succeeding to the Crown.

On Decemb. 17th, the House went on, to Consider of Ways and Means to Secure the Kingdom against Popery, and Arbitrary Government; and after several Debates, They Resolved, 1. That it is the Opinion of this House, That the House be Moved, That a Bill be brought in, For the more effectual Securing of the Meetings and Sitzings of Frequent Parliaments. 2. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the House be Moved, That a Bill be brought in, That the Judges may hold their Places and Salaries, quam diu se bene gesserint. 3. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That one Means to Prevent Arbitrary Power, is, That the House be Moved, That a Bill be brought in, against Illegal Exaction of Money upon the People, to make it High-Treason.

His Majesty's Speech, made Decemb. 15th to Both Houses, was now Read and Considered by the Commons; and after many severe Reflections upon the French Ambassador, and the French Women, and the Duke, and the Duke's Creatures, They Resolved, That a Committee be Appointed to Prepare an Humble Address to His Majesty, upon the Debate of the House, in Answer to His Majesty's Speech. This Address was Agreed to, on December ther, in Case the Imperial Crown of this Protestant Kingdom should Descend to the Duke of York; the Opposition which may possibly be made to his Possessing it, may not only Endanger the farther Descent in the Royal Line, but even Monarchy it self? They therefore become Humble Petitioners to His Sacred Majesty, That in tender Commiseration of his Poor Protestant People, His Majesty would be Graciously Pleased to depart from the Reservation in his said Speech; And whenever a Bill shall be tendred to His Majesty, in a Parliamentary Way, To Disable the Duke of York from Inheriting the Crown, His Majesty will give his Royal Assent thereto. As also to another Act, whereby His Majesty's Protestant Subjects may be Enabled to Associate themselves, for the Defence of His Majesty's Person, the Protestant Religion, and the Security of His Kingdoms. And as some farther Means for the Preservation both of their Religion and Property, They are humble Suitors to His Majesty, That from henceforth such Persons only may be Judges, as are Men of Ability, Integrity, and known-Affection to the Protestant Religion, and that they may hold both their Offices and Salaries, quam diu se bene gesserint. That no one may bear the Office of a Lord-Lieutenant, but who is a Person of Integrity, and known-Affection to the Protestant Religion. That Deputy-Lieutenants and Justices of the Peace may be also so Qualified, and may be moreover Men of Ability, of Estates and Interest in their Country. That None may be Employed as Military Officers, or Officers in His Majesty's Fleet, but Men of known-Experience, Courage, and Affection to the Protestant Religion. And these their humble Requests being obtained, They shall, on Their part, be ready to Assist His Majesty, for the Preservation of Tangier, and for putting His Majesty's Fleet into such a Condition, as it may Preserve His Majesty's Sovereignty of the Seas, and be for the Defence of the Nation.

On Decemb. 23d, these Quaries relating to the Execution of William Viscount Stafford, were offered to the House by the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex: 1. Whether the King, being neither Judge nor Party, can Order the Execution? 2. Whether the Lords can Award the Execution? 3. Whether the King can Dispense with any Part of the Execution? 4. If the King can Dispense with some Part of the Execution, why not with All? After some Debate upon these Matters, the Wiser Members came to apprehend, that such a Dispute might end in preventing the Execution of the said Lord Stafford; and therefore it was Resolved, That this House is content that the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex do Execute William late Viscount Stafford, by Severing his Head from his Body only.

On Decemb. 30th, upon a Debate of Freedom of Voting, and of the Corruption and Partiality occasion'd by Offices and Pensions, They Resolved, That no Member of this House shall Accept of any Office or Place of Profit from the Crown, without the Leave of this House; nor any Promise of any such Office or Place of Profit, during such time as he shall continue a Member of this House.

On Jan. 5th, Articles of Impeachment were brought in against Sir William Scroggs, Chief-Justice of the King's-Bench; and it being the Sense of the House, That the late Order made in the King's-Bench, their Warrants for Seizing of Books, and their Dismissing of Grand-Juries, doth tend to the Subversion of the Government, and hath been, and ever ought to be, in Judges, Adjudged Treason; It was Resolved, That the said Sir William Scroggs be Impeached upon the said Articles; And

Vote of the Lords, for Relief of the Popish Plot.

On Jan. 6th, this Message was brought from the Lords, and Read in the House of Commons; Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, That They do Declare, That they are fully satisfied that there now is, and for divers Years last past hath been a Horrid and Treasonable Plot, Contriv'd and Carry'd on by those of the Popish Religion in Ireland, for Massacring the English, and Subverting the Protestant Religion, and the Ancient Establish'd Government of that Kingdom: To which Their Lordships Desire the Concurrence of this House. The Commons soon Resolved, That this House doth Agree with the Lords in the said Vote, with the addition of these Words, "That the Duke of York's being a Papist, and the Expectation of his coming to the Crown, hath given the greatest Countenance and Encouragement thereto, as well as to the Horrid Popish Plot in this Kingdom of England."

On Friday Jan. 7th, His Majesty's Gracious Message to the Commons in Parliament, January the 4th, 1680. sent on Tuesday last, was Read, as followeth:

CHARLES REX.

The King's Message.

HIS Majesty received the Address of this House with all the Disposition They could wish, to Comply with their Reasonable Desires: but upon perusing it, he is sorry to see their Thoughts so wholly fix'd upon the Bill of Exclusion, as to determine, that all other Remedies for the Suppressing of Popery will be ineffectual: His Majesty is Confirmed in an Opinion against that Bill, by the Judgment of the House of Lords, who Rejected it. He therefore thinks there remains nothing more for him to say, in Answer to the Address of this House, but to recommend to them, the Consideration of all other Means for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion; in which they have no reason to doubt of his Concurrence, whenever they shall be Presented to him in a Parliamentary Way: And that they would Consider the present State of the Kingdom, as well as the Condition of Christendom, in such a manner as may enable him to Preserve Tangier, and Secure his Alliances Abroad, and the Peace and Settlement at Home.

Upon a Debate on this Message, the House seem'd readily to come into these Opinions: Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this House, That there is no Security nor Safety for the Protestant Religion, the King's Life, or Government of this Nation, without Passing a Bill for Disabling James Duke of York to Inherit the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and the Dominions and Territories therunto belonging; And to rely upon any other Means and Remedies, without such a Bill, is not only Insufficient, but Dangerous.

Resolved, That His Majesty, in his last Message, having Assured this House of his Readiness to Concurr in all other Means for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion; this House doth Declare, That until a Bill be likewise Pass'd for Excluding the Duke of York, this House cannot Give any Supply to His Majesty, without Danger to His Majesty's Person, extreme Hazard of the Protestant Religion, and Unfaithfulness to those by whom this House is Intrusted.

After this, several Persons being named for giving ill Advice to His Majesty; and Motions, seconded by Arguments, That Addresses might be made, grounded on Common Fame, for their Removal from the King's Person, and from all Places of Trust and Power: The Result was, That they expressly named George Earl of Halifax, Lawrence Hyde, Esq; Henry Marquess of Worcester, Henry Earl of Clarendon, and Lewis Earl of Feversham; And Voted an Address to be Presented to His Majesty, To Remove them from all Offices of Honour and Profits, and from His Majesty's Councils and Presence, for Ever. Then the House entred into a Debate of Parliamentary Aids, and against all other Ways of Supplying the King's Occasions, as tending to Keeping off Parliaments, and Exhausting the Publick Treasure, and Contracting Debts, and Undermining the Government; and so came to these Concluding Votes:

Resolved, That Whoever shall hereafter Lend, or cause to be Lent, by way of Advance, any Money upon the Branches of the King's Revenue, arising by Custom, Excise, or Hearth-Money, shall be judged a Hinderer of the Sitting of Parliaments, and be Responsible for the same in Parliament.

Resolved, That Whoever shall Accept or Buy any Tally, or Anticipation, upon any Part of the King's Revenue, or Whoever shall Pay such Tally hereafter to be Struck, shall be adjudged to Hinder the Sitting of Parliaments, and be Responsible therefore in Parliament.

Things growing to this height, the King was extremely Troubled, to find that he could not Protect his Ministers, his Brother, nor (as he thought) Himself, and resolv'd to put an End to their Session, on Jan. 10th. Which the Commons having private Notice of, Assembled early in the Morning, and before the Usher of the Black-Rod came in, They Resolved, That Whoever Advised His Majesty to Prorogue the Parliament, to any other Purpose than in order to Passing a Bill for the Exclusion of James Duke of York, is a Betrayer of the King, the Protestant Religion, and of the Kingdom of England, a Promoter of the French Interest, and a Pensioner of France. After which, the House of Commons were sent for up to the Lords; where His Majesty, seated on his Throne, was Pleas'd to give His Royal Assent to, 1. An Act Prohibiting the Importation of Cattle from Ireland. 2. An Act for Supplying the late Act for Burying in Woollen: And, 3. To a Private Act, concerning Sir Charles Houghton. And then His Majesty was Pleas'd to Command the Lord-Chancellor to Prorogue the Parliament till Thursday the 20th of this Instant January. But on January 18th, His Majesty, by Proclamation, thought fit to Dissolve the present Parliament; and was Pleas'd to make known to all his Loving Subjects, "That he had given Directions to the Lord-Chancellor of England, for the Issuing out of Writs in due Form of Law, for the Calling of a New Parliament, which should Begin and be Holden at Oxford on the 21st of March next."

His Majesty dispos'd his Honours and Preferments chiefly to those Persons who were in the Interest of the Duke, and had most Opposed the late Proceedings of the House of Commons: Though some few Popular Men had the like Titular Favours from His Majesty, to Sweeten and Reconcile them to the Court. On April 16th, the Earl of Ossory was Sworn of the Privy-Council, who Died on July 30th, after some Days Sickness of a Violent Fever, leaving a Son and Heir, James now Duke of Ormond. On April 26th, Sir Leoline Jenkins was Sworn one of His Majesty's Principal-Secretaries of State, and received the Seals which Hen. Coventry, Esq; then delivered up to His Majesty. How far the being of a Party, was a Recommendation to His Majesty's Favour, was publickly shewn in the Case of the Lord Shandois, who having humbly acquainted the King, "That the Turkey-Company had made Choice of him to be sent as Ambassador to Constantinople, and Praying His Majesty's Approbation:" His Majesty was Pleas'd 1680. to Reply, That his Lordship having Countenanc'd and been Engag'd in the Business of Petitioning about the Parliament, (which His Majesty look'd upon as Derogatory to his Prerogative, and tending to Sedition) His Majesty could not think him so fit for his Favour. Whereupon his Lordship was forc'd, before the Committee of Foreign Intelligence, on April 26th, humbly to acknowledge his Fault unto His Majesty, and to say, That in the Matter of Petitioning, he was Drawn in, and Misled, by being given to understand, That that Proceeding was for His Majesty's Service: But that being since better Inform'd, he Abhorr'd and Disown'd all such Practices, and humbly begg'd His Majesty's Pardon for what was past, promising to behave himself more Dutifully for the future. Which humble Submission of his Lordship the King accepted of, and then assur'd him of his Favour, and approv'd of him for his Ambassador to go for Turkey.

New Judges. About the End of April, His Majesty thought fit to Constitute Sir Job Charleton, Kt. one of the Judges of the Common-Pleas, (from whence Mr. Justice Roymond was Called up to the King's-Bench:) By whose Removal, the Place of Chief-Justice, and one of His Majesty's Council at Ludlow, for the Marches of Wales, being become void, the King conferr'd the same upon Sir George Jeffryes, Kt. Recorder of the City of London. For the most unhappy Partiality in the Disposal of Royal Favours, was to find out those Lawyers who were thought most inclinable to carry the Prerogative beyond the Law: And it seem'd to be upon this View, that Sir George Jeffryes, Sir John Keeling, Robert Harpison, Edmund West, Thomas Walcott, Esq; Sir John Boynton, Edward Bigland, William Richardson, William Bugby, Esq; Sir Robert Wright, and Sir Francis Manly, received the King's Writs, Commanding them to take upon them the State and Degree of Serjeants at Law, and appear'd for that Purpose at the Court of Chancery on May the 12th.

Other Advance-ments. On May 26th, the Earl of Clarendon was Sworn of His Majesty's Privy-Council. On June 2d, His Majesty was Pleas'd, in Consideration of the great and eminent Services of the Earl of Rothes, Lord-Chancellor of Scotland, to conferr upon him the Honours and Dignities of a Duke and Marquess of that Kingdom, by the Title of Duke of Rothes, and Marquess of Brambreich, Earl of Lessie, Viscount of Lugtoun, Lord Acumtie and Casubery. His Majesty, near the same time, made Choice of the Earl of Middleton to go his Envoy-Extraordinary to Command the Forces going for Tangier. On August 3th, His Majesty, in Consideration of the great Abilities, and Twenty Years faithful Service of Phines Pett, Esq; in the Employment of Master-Shipwright of his Yard at Chatham, was pleas'd to conferr upon him the Honour of Knighthood, and to advance him to the Place of one of the Principal-Officers and Commissioners of his Navy, in the Place of Sir Anthony Deane, whom His Majesty (at his humble Suit) permitted to quit the same. On August 9th, His Majesty Knighted Jonas Moore, Esq; Master-Surveyor of His Majesty's Ordnance and Armories, giving him this Mark of Royal Favour, as well in Consideration of his known Abilities, as of the faithful Services of his Father, Sir Jonas Moore, deceas'd. On August 31st, at a Chapter of the Garter, held at Windsor, there were Elected into the Vacancies of that Order, his Grace the Duke of Grafton, who was then at Sea, and the Right-Honourable the Earl of Salisbury: And on Sept. 15th, the Prince-Elector Palatine, who this Summer made a Visit to the English Court, was Elected a Knight-Companion of the same Order.

On Sept. 3d, Henry Savill, Esq; was Sworn Vice-Chamberlain to the King, which Place had been Vacant since the Death of Sir George Cartwright: And on Sept. 11th, the Earl of Feversham was Declared Lord-Chamberlain to the Queen, in the Place of the Earl of Ossory; And the Lord-Viscount Lumley was made Master of the Horse to Her Majesty, in the room of the Earl of Feversham. About the same time, His Majesty was pleas'd to create the Lady Dacres, Mother to the present Earl of Suffex, Countess of Sheppey.

At the Beginning of October, Charles Fanshawe, Esq; was sent over His Majesty's Envoy-Extraordinary to the Prince-Regent of Portugal; Mr. Parry, His Majesty's late Envoy at that Court, having obtained Leave to return Home. On Octob. 15th, Sir Robert Carr, Bar^o Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, was Sworn of His Majesty's Privy-Council. On Novemb. 20th, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon Captain John Wetwang. On Novemb. 17th, the Earl of Plymouth Died at Tangier of a Bloody-Flux; and the Governor, Sir Palmes Fairborn, was Wounded by a Musket-Shot on the 24th of October, of which he Died three Days after, leaving the Chief Command of that Distressed Garrison to Colonel Sackville. About Christmas, His Majesty Appointed Sir Richard Dutton to succeed Sir Jonathan Atkins in the Government of Barbadoes. On Jan. 22d, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon George Treby, Esq; Recorder of the City of London, who in that Office succeeded the Violent Sir George Jeffryes. On Jan. 26th, the Earl of Oxford, the Earl of Chesterfield, and the Earl of Ailesbury were Sworn of his Majesty's Privy-Council, and took their Places at the Board. And soon after, His Majesty was pleas'd to Constitute the Right-Honourable Edward Earl of Conway, one of His Majesty's Principal-Secretaries of State, in the room of the Earl of Sandarland, and on Febr. 2d his Lordship in Council took the Oaths of Secretary of State and Privy-Councillor. On Febr. 14th, Sir Robert Sauger was Sworn His Majesty's Attorney-General, in the room of Sir Creswell Lewins, who was now made one of the Judges of the Common-Pleas, in the Place of Sir William Ellis, deceas'd. On March 9th, the Earl of Craven was Sworn of His Majesty's Privy-Council.

As to Religion, His Majesty was under a State of Popular Necessity of Declaring his Affection to the Church of England, and of expressing a Zeal against Popery. At the Beginning of April, His Majesty Commanded the Judges, who were returned from their several Circuits, to give an Account of what they had done in pursuance of the Directions they had received from His Majesty in Council, for the more effectual Executing the Laws against Popish Recusants: And accordingly All the Judges, on April 14th, Attended His Majesty at the Committee of Popery, and made the following Report:

That in some Counties they found most of those named in the Commissions, already Convicted, and their Convictions returned into the Exchequer; but that they had however caused them to be again Proclaimed as such. That in other Counties, many Popish and reputed Popish Recusants had taken the Oaths, and came to Church; That others, to avoid the Effect of the Law, shifted Counties; That in some Counties the Commissions were but newly come down; That however, all possible Care was taken for the speedy and effectual Proceeding upon them: And lastly, That in all their Circuits they had caused those that were not already Convicted, to be Presented; and had applied themselves, with all possible Zeal and Vigour, for the punctual Performance of the Directions they had received in this Matter.

His Majesty was pleas'd to Approve of what they had done, and to require them to proceed as they 1680. they had begun; letting them know, "That they should be supplied with all such Orders and Directions as should be further necessary. And that for such Persons as had absented or withdrawn themselves from their respective Counties, effectual Care be taken for their Prosecution at the next Assizes. And that His Majesty would direct the Lords-Commissioners of the Treasury to Appoint several fit and able Persons to Solicite and Attend this Service, as well at the Assizes, as where-ever else there should be Occasion; His Majesty's Intention being, That the said Laws against Papish Recusants be duly and effectually Executed." But indeed, all this was but a Feint in Politicks, and a Necessity upon the Court to be carry'd along with the Stream of the Country.

The Papists now against the Dissenters.

As it had been formerly the Interest of the Papists to promote Indulgence and Toleration to the Protestant Dissenters, that under the Effects of such a Liberty they might shelter themselves, and weaken the Church of England; so now, upon a Turn of Affairs, they chang'd their Opinion, or at least their Measures: For that Party now encourag'd the severe Prosecution of the Protestant Dissenters, thereby to take off the Edge of the Laws from themselves, and to divert the Zeal of the Members of the Church of England against their Brethren in Separation from them, and so to irritate and alienate the Hearts of all Protestants from one another. The Bigottry of the Scottish Presbyterians, helpt much to raise an Odium upon all of that Denomination: For when James Skeyn, Brother to the Laird of Skeyn, Archibald Steward, and John Spruell, were on November the 13th Examind before His Majesty's Privy-Council at Edinburgh, concerning the late Rebellion at Bothwell-Edge, and Airdjessie, the said James Skeyn did own and declare, "That the Persons who were concern'd in either of the said Rebellions were not Rebels. That the Burning the Acts of Parliament at Rutherglen, and the Proclamation made against His Majesty, were Just: That the Excommunication used against the King by one Cargill, and the Reasons of it, are Just. That the Killing of the late Arch-Bishop of St. Andrews, was no Murder; That the Actors were upon their Duty. That he thinks there is a Declared War between those that serve the Lord, and those that serve the King, against the Covenant. That it is Lawful to Kill any of the King's Council and Soldiers, in Defence of the Gospel. That he thinks, the King being Excommunicated, and there being now a Lawful Declared War against him, on Account of the Breach of the Covenant, it is Lawful to Kill him, and all those that are in Opposition to the Covenant.

"Archibald Steward Confess'd he was in the Rebellion of Airdjessie, and present at the Excommunication of the King; and that the King was Justly Excommunicated. He declared, he disown'd the King's Authority, and thought himself not obliged to Obey him. And being ask'd, Whether he thought it Lawful to Kill the King, being Excommunicated? he desired Time to Consider of it, before he Answer'd; but said it was Lawful to Kill the late Arch-Bishop of St. Andrews, and own'd the Proclamation against the King, and the Burning the Acts of Parliament.

Some of the Clergy too warm against the Dissenters.

As the Dissenters were made the more Odious, by the Violence of their Brethren in Scotland; so many of the Church-men, and especially the Clergy, fell under a Suspicion of being Popishly-affected, because they warmly espoused the Interest of the Court, in Abhorring of Petitions, and in Opposing the Association, and the Exclusion Bill: For which one Richard Thomson, Minister in Bristol, did so 1680. hotly distinguish himself, that the House of Commons Censur'd him, and sent for him into Custody; which turn'd only to his Merit at Court, and Preferr'd him soon after to the Deanery of Bristol. Under this Disposition of the Clergy, many severe Reflections were made upon them in the House of Commons; particularly one of the Members, J. B. upon a Debate of the Association, said thus: "Mr. Speaker; Sir, I retain a good Opinion of an Association Bill, notwithstanding what hath been said, as to the Weakness it may receive from our unhappy Divisions in Points of Religion and Interest, too much promoted by some of our Clergy. For, Sir, when I consider how the Laudean Principles, as to Raising of Money without Parliaments, in the late Times, infected most of our Clergy, so as that they not only Preach'd up the King's Absolute Authority over Mens Properties, but branded with the Title of Rebels, and condemn'd to Hell, those that offer'd to Argue against it; I do conclude, That it is usual for one or two Bishops to give Measures or Directions to the rest of the Bishops, and they to the Clergy of their several Diocesses; and that therefore the Clergy derive the Politicks generally from one or two Bishops in some great Station — But People will discern, that the Clergy may be good Divines, but not so good Politicians; and that there may be some difference, in Point of Interest, between them and the Laity; because Clergy-men may be in a possibility of being Advanc'd by Popery, if they submit; but the Laity, under a probability of Losing all, notwithstanding all Submissions. Sir, I do not trouble you with this Discourse, out of a fear that our Clergy will not shew themselves good Protestants, for I have that Veneration for them, and Opinion of them, as to believe, that many of the Bishops, and Clergy too, would as soon Die for the Protestant Religion, as any Persons in the Nation: But I am jealous that there is some over-ruling Power got in amongst them, something Answerable to that of a Popish Successor in the State." A further Advantage was taken, to bring the Bishops under a Suspicion, by their joining to throw out the Bill of Exclusion: Upon which Occasion, one of the Commons spoke thus — "If this be our Case, and there be nothing wanting but a Popish King to Compleat our Misery, and the Art of Man cannot find out any Way to Secure us against a Popish King, without the Exclusion Bill; Is it not strange it should be Rejected in the House of Lords? I cannot believe that the Fathers of the Church should join in that which must infallibly give Opportunity for the tearing out of the Bowels of their Mother, and Destroying her for ever: If so, well may we lie down, and cry, We have No-body to Help us, but only Thee, O God!"

The East and West of the Clergy, for Peace & Union.

During these Heats, and mutual Animosities, some of the most Learned and Exemplary Clergy endeavour'd, both in Private and Publick, to bring the Dissenters to a Sense of the Necessity of Union among Protestants, hoping the Apprehension of present Danger, would have dispos'd them to a better Inclination to the Things which belong'd to the Common Peace of the Reformation. With this Prospect, the Learned and Judicious Dr. Stillingfleet being Appointed to Preach before the Lord-Mayor, on May 2d, being the First Sunday in the Term, he thought fit to lay open the Unreasonableness and Mischief of the present Separation. Which Sermon he soon after publish'd, and prosecuted the Subject of it in an excellent Treatise, Intituled, The Unreasonableness of Separation; or, An Impartial Account of the History, Nature and Pleas of the present Separation from 1680. the Communion of the Church of England. To promote this Return of the Dissenters into the Communion of the Church of England, Henry Lord Bishop of London had held in the Year preceding Three feasonable Conferences with his Clergy upon the Two Sacraments, and upon Catechifing Youth in the True Principles of Religion. And in this Year, His Lordship purfued the good Design in Three other Conferences; on, 1. The Half-Communion: 2. Prayers in an Unknown Tongue: 3. Prayers to Saints. And the Substance of this Conversation his Lordship publish'd in a Letter to the Clergy of his Diocēse, Dated July 6th, 1680. His Lordship further hoped that it might tend to Pacific and Reconcile the Dissenters, by bringing in the Judgment of Foreign Divines, against their needless Separation: For this Purpose, his Lordship wrote to Monfieur le Moyne, Profeflor in Divinity at Leyden; and Monfieur L'Angle, one of the Preachers of the Reformed Church at Charington near Paris; and to Monfieur Claude, another Eminent French Divine; who, in their feveral Answers (that are all publish'd to the World) do Agree in Vindicating the Church of England from any Errors in the Doctrine, or any Unlawful Impositions in the Service and Discipline of it; and therefore do Condemn a Separation from it, as Needless and Uncharitable.

The Commons in Parliament were fenfible, that Nothing did more Encourage the Intereft of Popery, than thefe Divifions at Home, fomented by the Papifts: It was under this Opinion that they firft Agreed to bring in a Bill, For an Affociation of all His Majesty's Protestant Subjects, for the Safety of His Majesty's Perfon, the Defence of the Protestant Religion, and the Prefervation of His Majesty's Protestant Subjects, against all Invaſions and Oppofitions. And on Decemb. 21th, they Read and Committed a Bill, For Uniting His Majesty's Protestant Subjects. Which though Oppofed by one Member, who thought it more convenient to have a Law for Forcing the Dissenters to yield to the Church, and not to Force the Church to yield to Them: yet the Majority of the Houfe fell in heartily with this Bill of Comprehension, as the only Means of a firm Union among Protestants, and an effectual Suppreſſion of the Dangers of Popery. And one of the Members ſpoke thus:

Mr. SPEAKER,

“ I Would not open my Month in favour of this Bill, if I thought it would any-ways prejudice the Church, or Church-Government; but I believe it may have a quite contrary Effect, and tend more for the Prefervation and Safety of the Church and Church-Government, than any Bill whatfoever that could be contriv'd—
“ The Presbyterians, Independants, and all other Dissenters may be more in Number than the Papifts, and may be willing enough to have the Church-Government Altered, if not Destroy'd; yet being they cannot have any Succour from Abroad, nor from the Governmt here at Home, I cannot fee any great Danger of them; For it is not probable that they fhall ever have a King of their Opinion, nor a Parliament, by the difcovery they made of their ſtrength in the laſt Eleſtions; for according to the beſt Calculation I can make, they could not bring in above One in Twenty: And therefore, becauſe they have not ſuch Bloody, Deſperate Principles as the Papifts, and becauſe we agree in Points of Faith, and ſo no ſuch great Danger from them, as from the Papifts; I think we have reaſon to conclude, That the Church is moſt in Danger from the Papifts, and that therefore we ought to take care of them in the firſt place: and we cannot do that by any way

“ more likely to prove effectual, than by ſome ſuch Bill as this. Becauſe, if it ſhould have the Effect design'd, of bringing in many of the Dissenters into the Church, it would diſappoint them of the great Hopes they have grounded on our Divifions, and make the Church ſtronger, not only to oppoſe the Papifts, but ſuch Fanaticks as may not come in: And if we ſhould not have this Succes, I do not underſtand it will any way weaken the Church-Government.

The Act of 35 Eliz. for Payment of Twenty Pounds a Month for every Perſon not reſorting to their Parish-Church, was apparently made againſt the Papiſh Recuſants, but had been lately executed upon the Proteſtant Diſſenters. Upon which the Commons Reſolved, That it is the Opinion of this Houſe, That the Proſecution of Proteſtant Diſſenters, upon the Penal Laws design'd againſt the Papiſts, is at this time Grievous to the Subject, a Weakening the Proteſtant Intereſt, an Encouragement to Popery, and Dangerous to the Peace of the Kingdom. And therefore they prepared another Bill, *For Exempting His Majesty's Protestant Subjects Diſſenting from the Church of England, from the Penalties impoſed upon the Papiſts, by Repealing the ſaid Act of the 35 *Eliz. This Bill Paſſed the Commons, and was Agreed to by the Lords, and lay ready for His Majesty's Aſſent: But when His Majesty came to the Throne, to Paſs this among other Bills, this was taken from the Lords Table, and never heard of after: Which no Man durſt have done, without the King's Command, or at leaſt his Privy and Connivance at it. The Loſs of this Bill was Complain'd of, in the next Parliament, at Oxford, but without Satisfaction or Redreſs.

The King, at Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, had Summoned another to Meet on the 21ſt of March at Oxford. This Change of Place was very Diſpleaſing not only to the Cities of London and Weſtmiſter, but generally to Both Houſes, who apprehended ſome Arbitrary Deſigns in it. Whereupon ſeveral of the Nobility, after mature Conſideration of the Matter, reſolv'd to Petition the King againſt it. Which Petition was deliver'd by the Earl of Eſſex, with this Speech to the King:

May it Pleaſe Your MAJESTY;

“ THE Lords here preſent, together with divers others of the Peers of the Realm, taking Notice, That by the late Proclamation, Your Majesty has Declared an Intention of Calling a Parliament at Oxford; and obſerving, from History and Records, how Unfortunate many Aſſemblies have been, when Call'd at a Place remote from the Capital City; as particularly the Congreſs in King Henry the II'd's Time at Clarendon; Three ſeveral Parliaments at Oxford in Henry the III'd's Time; and at Cocentry in Henry the VIth's Time; and divers others which have proved Fatal to thoſe Kings, and have been follow'd with great Miſchief on the whole Kingdom: And Conſidering the preſent Poſture of Affairs, the many Jealouſies and Diſcontents that are among the People, they have great Cauſe to apprehend, that the Conſequences of a Parliament now at Oxford may be as Fatal to Your Majesty, and the Nation, as thoſe others mention'd have been to the then Reigning Kings. And therefore we do conceive, That we cannot Answer it to God, to Your Majesty, or to the People, if we, being Peers of the Realm, ſhould not on ſo Important an Occaſion humbly offer our Advice to Your Majesty, That, if poſſible, Your Majesty 1681. " may be prevail'd with to alter this (as we apprehend) unseasonable Resolution. The Grounds and Reasons of our Opinions are contain'd in this our Petition, which we humbly present to Your Majesty.

This Petition was so remarkable, that it deserves to be here insert'd.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty :

The Humble PETITION and Advice of the Lords under-named, Peers of the Realm,

Humbly Sheweth,

The Petition it self.

THAT whereas Your Majesty hath been pleas'd, by divers Speeches and Passages to your Houses of Parliament, rightly to represent to them, the Dangers that threatned Your Majesty's Person, and the whole Kingdom, from the Mischievous and Wicked Plots of the Papists, and the sudden Growth of a Power, unto which no Stop or Remedy could be provided, unless it were by Parliament, and an Union of Your Majesty's Protestant Subjects in one Mind, and one Interest.

And the Lord-Chancellor, in pursuance of Your Majesty's Commands, having more at large demonstrated the said Dangers to be as great as we in the midst of our Fears could imagine them; and so pressing, that our Liberties, Religion, Lives, and the whole Kingdom would be certainly lost, if a speedy Provision were not made against them.

And Your Majesty, on the 21st of Apr. 1679, having call'd unto Your Council many Honourable and Worthy Persons, and declared to them, and the whole Kingdom, That being sensible of the evil Effects of a Single Ministry, or Private Advice, or Foreign Committee, for the general Direction of your Affairs, Your Majesty would, for the future, refer all Things unto the Council; and by the constant Advice of them, together with the frequent Use of your great Council the Parliament, Your Majesty had hereafter resolv'd to Govern the Kingdom, we began to hope we should see an End of our Miseries.

But, to our unspeakable Grief and Sorrow, we soon found our Expectation frustrated; the Parliament then Subsisting, was Prorog'd and Dissolv'd, before it could perfect what was intended for our Relief and Security: And tho' another was thereupon Call'd, yet, by the many Prorogations, it was put off till the 21st of October past; and notwithstanding Your Majesty was then again pleas'd to acknowledge, That neither Your Majesty's Person nor the Kingdom could be safe, till the Matter of the Plot was gone through, it was unexpectedly Prorog'd on the 10th of this Month, before any sufficient Order could be taken therein; all their Just and Pious Endeavours to save the Nation were overthrow'd; the good Bills they had been industriously Preparing, to unite all Your Majesty's Protestant Subjects, brought to nought; the Discovery of the Irish Plot stifled; the Witnesses that came in frequently more fully to Declare that, both of England and Ireland, discourag'd; those Foreign Kingdoms and States, who, by a happy Conjunction with Us, might give a Check to the French Power, disheartned even to such a Despair of their own Security against the growing Greatness of that Monarch, as we fear may induce them to take New Resolutions, and perhaps, such as may be fatal to us; the Strength our Enemies, both at Home and Abroad, encreas'd, and our Selves left in the utmost Danger of seeing our Selves brought into utter Desolation.

1681. " In these Extremities, we had nothing, under God, to Comfort us, but the Hopes that Your Majesty (being Touch'd with the Groans of your perishing People) would have suffer'd your Parliament to have Met on the Day unto which it was Prorog'd, and that no further Interruption should have been given to their Proceedings, in order to the Saving of the Nation; yet that failed us too. But when we hear'd that Your Majesty, by the private Suggestion of some wicked Persons, Favourers of Popery, Promoters of French Designs, and Enemies to Your Majesty and the Kingdom, (without the Advice, and, as we have good Reason to believe, against the Opinion ev'n of your Privy-Council) had been prevail'd with to Dissolve it, and to Call another to Meet at Oxford, where neither Lords nor Commons can be in Safety, but will be daily expos'd to the Swords of the Papists, and their Adherents, of whom too many are crept into Your Majesty's Guards: The Liberty of Speaking according to their Consciences, will be thereby destroy'd; and the Validity of all their Acts and Proceedings concerning it, left Disputable. The Streightness of the Place, no way admits of such a Concourse of Persons as now follows every Parliament: The Witnesses that are necessary to give Evidence against the Popish Lords, such Judges, or others whom the Commons have Impeach'd, or had Resolv'd to Impeach, can neither bear the Charge of going thither, nor trust themselves under the Protection of a Parliament that is it self evidently under the Power of Guards and Soldiers.

The Premises consider'd, We Your Majesty's Petitioners, out of just Abhorrence of such a Dangerous and Pernicious Council (which the Authors have not dared to avow) and the direful Apprehensions of the Calamities and Miseries that may ensue thereupon; do make it our most humble Prayer and Advice, That the Parliament may not Sit at a Place where it cannot be able to Act with that Freedom which is necessary, and especially to give unto their Acts and Proceedings that Authority which they ought to have amongst the People, and have ever had, unless impair'd by some Awe upon them (of which there wants not Precedents;) And that Your Majesty would be Graciously Pleas'd to Order it to Sit at Westminster (it being the Usual Place,) and where they may Consult and Act with Safety and Freedom:

And Your Petitioners shall ever Pray, &c.

The King frown'd upon the Deliverers of this Petition, and persist'd in his Resolution of Holding the Parliament at Oxford: To which Purpose he went from Windsor on March 14th, and was receiv'd at the Confinde of the County by the High-Sheriff, and at Wheatly by the Lord Norris, Lord-Lieutenant of the County, and conducted in great Pomp to Oxford, where he was receiv'd with great Expressions of Loyalty by the University and City; and Publick Notice was given, That This University was no less Renowned Abroad, as well as at Home, for its Loyalty and Duty to His

Opening of the Parliament.

On Monday March 21st, the Parliament Opened at Oxford; And His Majesty coming into the House of Lords (which was in the Publick Schools) and being in his Robes, seated on his Throne, and sending for the Commons to Attend Him, he was pleas'd to make this Gracious Speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech.

THE Unarrantable Proceedings of the last House of Commons, were the Occasion of My parting with the last Parliament; for I, who will never use Arbitrary Government My Self, am resolv'd not to suffer it in Others. I am unwilling to mention Particulars, because I am desirous to forget Faults; but whosoever shall calmly consider what Offers I have formerly made, and what Assurances I renew'd to the last Parliament; how I recommended nothing so much to them, as the Alliances I had made for Preservation of the General Peace in Christendom, and the further Examination of the Popish Plot, and how I desir'd their Advice and Assistance concerning the Preservation of Tangier; and shall then reflect upon the strange unsuitable Returns made to such Propositions, by Men that were call'd together to Consult; perhaps, may wonder more, that I had Patience so long, than that at last I grew weary of their Proceedings.

I have thought it necessary to say thus much to You, that I may not have any new Occasion given Me to remember more of the late Miscarriages: It is much My Interest, and shall be as much My Care, as Yours, to preserve the Liberty of the Subject; because the Crown can never be safe, when That is in danger: And I would have You likewise be Convinced, That neither Your Liberties and Properties can subsist long, when the Just Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown are invaded, or the Honour of the Government brought low, and into Disreputation.

I let you see, by my Calling this Parliament so soon, that no Irregularities in Parliament shall make Me out of Love with Them; And by this Means, offer You another Opportunity of Providing for Our Security here, by giving that Countenance and Protection to our Neighbours and Allies, which you cannot but know they expect from Us, and extremely stand in need of at this Instant; And at the same time give one Evidence more, that I have not neglected My Part, to give that General Satisfaction and Security, which, by the Blessing of God, may be attained, if You, on Your Parts, bring suitable Dispositions towards it; And that the Just Care You ought to have of Religion, be not so manag'd and improv'd into unnecessary Fears, as to be made a Pretence for Changing the Foundation of the Government.

I hope the Example of the ill Success of former Heats, will dispose You to a better Temper; and not so much Breigh against what is past, as to Consider what is best to be Done in the present Conjuncture. The further Prosecution of the Plot; the Tryal of the Lords in the Tower; the providing a more speedy Conviction for Recusants; and, if it be practicable, the ridding Our selves quite of all of that Party, that have any considerable Authority and Interest amongst them, are Things, though of the highest Importance, that hardly need to be recommended to You, they are so obvious to every Man's Consideration, and so necessary for Our Security: But I must needs Desire you, not to lay so much weight upon any One Expedient against Popery, as to determine that all Other are ineffectual; And among all your Cares for Religion, remember, That without the Safety and

What I have formerly and so often Declared touching the Succession, I cannot depart from. But to remove all reasonable Fears that may arise from the Possibility of a Popish Successor's coming to the Crown, if Means can be found, that in such a Case, the Administration of the Government may remain in Protestants Hands; I shall be ready to bearkeer to any such Expedient, by which the Religion might be Prefer'd, and the Monarchy not Destroy'd.

I must therefore earnestly recommend to You, To provide for the Religion and the Government together, with regard to One Another, because they Support Each Other: And let Us be United at Home, that We may recover the Esteem and Consideration We used to have Abroad.

I Conclude, with this One Advice to You, That the Rules and Measures of all your Votes, may be the known and Establish'd Laws of the Land; which neither can, nor ought to be departed from, nor chang'd, but by Act of Parliament: And I may the more reasonably require, that You make the Laws of the Land Your Rule, because I am resolv'd they shall be Mine.

After this Speech, the Lord-Chancellor, by His Majesty's Command, directed the Commons to Return to their House, and to make Choice of a Speaker. Which they accordingly did, Unanimously Electing William Williams of Grays-Inn, Esq; Councillor at Law, and Recorder of Chester, who had been Speaker in the former Parliament. When the Commons Presented him to His Majesty, on Tuesday March 22d, he made this Speech:

W. Williams is again Chosen Speaker.

May it Please Your MAJESTY;

THE Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses in Parliament Assembled, with Duty and Loyalty agreeable to Themselves and the Persons whom they Represent, have, in Obedience to Your Royal Pleasure, for the disposing of themselves in that Great Assembly for Your Majesty's Service, Consider'd of a Speaker; and, to manifest to Your Majesty, and the World, they are not inclinable to Changes, have with one Voice Elected me their Speaker, having had the Honour to Serve Your Majesty and the Commons in that Trust in the last Parliament.

His Speech to the King.

With all Humility, I presume again, by Their Commands, to stand before Your Majesty, to receive your Pleasure, with a Head and Heart full of Loyalty to Your Sacred Person; arm'd with a settled Resolution never to depart from Your Well, Ancient and Establish'd Government.

Then the Lord-Chancellor, by His Majesty's Command, said to this Purpose:

Mr. Speaker, for so I am Commanded to call you, His Majesty hath well Consider'd the Choice the Commons have made, and does very much Approve of that Election, and doth Accept and Allow you for Speaker.

After which, the Speaker made this further Speech:

Most Gracious Sovereign;

Natural Allegiance commands Loyalty to Your Majesty from every Subject. Your singular Grace and Favour to me, in the last Parliament, continu'd by the Honour I have in this, add more than Dutifulness and Obedience to my Loyalty.

1681.

" I am set in the First Station of Your Commons, for Trust and Fidelity; an High and Slippery Place: It requires a steady Head, and a well-poss'd Body in him that will stand firm there. Uprightness, is the safe Posture, and best Policy, and shall be mine in this Place, guarded with this Opinion, That Your Majesty's Service, in this Trust, is one and the same with the Service of your Commons, and that they are no more to be divided than Your Crown and Sceptre.

" They truly serve the Crown and Country, (which shall be my Care and Industry) who make the Safety of Your Sacred Person, the Defence and Security of the Protestant Religion, the Support of Your Majesty's Government, the Maintenance of the Laws, and Preservation of the Ancient Constitutions of Parliament, one and the same undivided Interest, one and the same Safety, one and the same inseparable Security for Your Self and People.

" These are the Desires of all Good Men, but must be the Effects of Good Counsels, for the Enabling of Your Majesty's Great Council now in Parliament Assembled. To Compleat this blessed Establishment, with all Humility, I Address to Your Majesty, in the Name, and on the Behalf of the Commons in Parliament;

1. " That We and our Servants may be free in our Persons and Estates, from Arrests, and other Disturbances.

2. " That in our Debates, Liberty and Freedom of Speech be allow'd us.

3. " That, as Occasion shall require, Your Majesty will vouchsafe us Access to Your Royal Person.

" I take Leave to join this humble Petition for my Self, That nothing by me, in Weakness, or through Inadvertency, said or done, may turn to the Prejudice of the Commons; and that my Behaviour and Proceedings may receive a Benign and Favourable Interpretation with Your Gracious Majesty.

Then the Lord-Chancellor, by Command from His Majesty, said to this effect:

Mr. SPEAKER,

" All your Petitions are fully and freely Granted by His Majesty, in as large and ample a manner as ever any House of Commons yet enjoy'd them: The King is very sure, the Wisdom of this House of Commons will make as prudent an Use of them, as any of your Ancestors ever did. Your own particular Petition is grateful to the King too; because he knows you will be careful to avoid Mistakes, as His Majesty is ready to forgive them.

" And now, Mr. Speaker, these Preliminaries being thus over, the King desires you would hasten to the rest that are necessary to be dispatcht, before we can enter upon Business; that so we may husband Time, which is now more necessary than ever; and he hopes that this Parliament will come to a very Happy and Prosperous Conclusion: And that it may do so, God Almighty Direct and Prosper all your Consultations.

On Thursday March 24th, the Debates of the Commons, began with a Motion for Printing the Votes: Which was Oppos'd by Mr. Secretary Jenkins, as against the Gravity of that Assembly; That no Great Assembly in Christendom did it; That again, it was against their Gravity, and a sort of Appeal to the People. But the Members, on the other side, Argu'd, That Printing their Votes, was like True English-men, who are not asham'd of what they do; and that the People who they Represent, may have a True Account of their Proceedings; and so the Resolution pass'd for Printing.

Another Motion was made, To Enquire into the Miscarriage of the Bill for Repeal of the Bill of 35 Eliz. &c. how it came to be slipt over in the last Parliament, and not Presented, for the Royal Assent? " Which (said the Mover) I look upon as a Breach of the Constitution of the Government." But the farther Debate of this Matter was Adjourn'd to the next Day.

While another Motion was made, " That, for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, and the King's Person, a Bill be brought in, To Prevent a Popish Successor, and in particular against James Duke of York"; the same Bill which Pass'd the last Parliament. Mr. Secretary Jenkins stood up and said, " I must give my Negative to this Motion; and my Reason why I do so, is, because the King hath Declared in his Speech, That as to the Point of Altering the Succession, he cannot depart from what he has so often Declared."

He farther Argued, " That the King's Speech gave them a Latitude for Expedience; and therefore he would not have the Bill any more put to the hazard of Rejection, but hoped they would Consider of some Expedients." Other Members declared, " That they could see no Expedient to save Religion, and preserve the King's Person, but only the Bill to Exclude the Duke; however to pay the King all the Respect in the world, they would set a-part a Time to Consider Expedients, and Appointed Saturday for the Debate of them.

On Friday March 25th, a Motion was made, for returning Thanks to those Places who had freely and without Expence Chosen their Members; and the Members so Elected, were Ordered to send their Thanks to those who Chose them.

Then a Motion was made for Resuming the Debate upon the Loss of the Bill for Repeal of the Bill of 35 Eliz. Sir W. J. Argu'd thus; This Matter deserves material Consideration, whether in respect of the Loss of the Bill, or the Shaking of the very Constitution of Parliament. The Bill that is lost, is of great Moment, and of great Service to the Country, and perhaps to their Lives, in the Time of a Popish Successor. Those Men that hindered the Passing that Bill, had a Prospect of that; and if it be sent up again, we are like to meet with great Opposition. But be the Bill what it will, the Precedent is of the highest Consequence. The King has his Negative to all Bills, but I never knew that the Clerk of the Parliament had a Negative — If this Way be found out, That Bills should be thrown by; it may be hereafter said, They were forgot, and laid by: and so we shall never know whether the King would Pass them, or no. If this be suffer'd, it is in vain to spend Time here, &c. The Matter was at last refer'd to a Conference with the Lords, concerning the Constitution of Parliaments, in Matters relating to Passing of Bills. Then was read the Account of Fitz-Harris, and the Libel wrote by him. For the understanding of which Matter, it must be observed, that this Fitz-Harris was the Son of Sir Edward Fitz-Harris, an Irish Papist, and consequently a fit Tool to Ridicule the Popish Plot: With this Design, he became a Correspondent with the Dutches of Portsmouth, her Woman Mrs. Wall, and the French Ambassador's Confessor, from whom he had receiv'd several Sums of Money: And having been acquainted with one Everard beyond-Sea, when they were both in the French King's Service, he did about the Beginning of February, after the Parliament was Dissolv'd, renew his said Acquaintance with Everard, and represented to him the Advantages he might have, by Ingratiating himself into the French and Popish Interest; and that for this Purpose, it would be proper to draw

The Instructions that Fitz-Harris gave to Everard for the Subject-Matter of this Libel, were to this effect; "That the King, and Royal Family should be traduced, as being Papists, and Arbitrarily-affected from the Beginning: That King Charles I. had an Hand in the Irish Rebellion; and that Charles II. did Countenance the same, by preferring Fitz-Gerald, Fitz-Patrick, and Mount-Garret, who were Engaged in the Irish Rebellion: That the Act, forbidding to call the King a Papist, was to stop Mens Mouths, when he should incline to further Popery; which appeared by his adhering so closely to the Duke of York's Interests, and hindred him from being proceeded against by the Parliament; and hindring the Officers put in by the Duke of York, to be turn'd out; and for that the Privy-Councillors and Justices of Peace, who were for the Protestant Interest, were turn'd out of all Places of Trust: That it was as much in the Power of the People to Depose a Popish Possessor, as a Popish Successor; and seeing there was no hopes the Parliament, when they Met at Oxford, could do any Good, the People were bound to Provide for themselves." This was drawn up into a Traiterous Paper, or Libel, to be call'd, The True English-man speaking plain English: In a Letter from a Friend to a Friend. It was to be fix'd upon the Protestant Dissenters, and to be dispers'd by the Penny-Post to the Protestant Lords, and Leading Men in the House of Commons, who were immediately thereupon to be Taken up and Search'd. Everard affirm'd, The Court had an hand in it, and that the King had given Fitz-Harris Money, and would give him more, if it had Succes. And this is so much the more to be credited, since the King himself told Sheriff Cornish, That Fitz-Harris had, Three Months before his Apprehension, been with him, and acquainted him, he was in pursuit of a Plot, which very much related to His Majesty's Person, and the Government, &c. And that upon Sir William Waller's acquainting the King with the Particulars he had taken, while he was conceal'd, as aforesaid; though he Thank'd him for it, and Commanded Secretary Jenkins to issue out a Warrant for the Apprehension of Fitz-Harris, and that Sir William should take care of the Execution of it; yet he was no sooner gone, but Sir William said, He was inform'd by Two Worthy Gentlemen, That the King was highly offended with him, saying, He had broken all his Measures; and that he would, one way or other, have him taken off. Fitz-Harris, however, was soon after Taken, and Committed to Newgate; where being Examined by Sir Robert Clayton, and Sheriff Cornish, he discover'd a Disposition, and at length a Willingness to Discover the whole Design the next Day after. But to prevent it, in all appearance, he was that Day remov'd into the Tower. The Commons thought that all this look'd so much like a Trick, and a Continuation of the Popish Plot, that they Resolv'd to Impeach the said Edward Fitz-Harris of High-Treason, and Appointed Sir Leoline Jenkins to carry up the Impeachment to the House of Lords; who at first refus'd it, and said, The sending him upon that Message, reflected upon the King his Master, and let them do what they would to him, he would not go: But being threatned by the House, and better advis'd by his Friends, he said at last, He was ready to Obey the Order of the House, and was sorry his Words had given Offence.

Expedients to prevent a Bill of Exclusion.

for Excluding the Duke. Sir J. E. propos'd a Regency for the next Heir, leaving him the Name of a King, but not the Power. This was spoke against as a Dangerous and Impracticable thing; and the House came readily into a Resolution "That there was no Remedy, to save Religion, and the Government, but Excluding the Duke of York, and all other Popish Successors." In the Afternoon an Account was brought to the House, That the Lords had thrown out the Impeachment of Fitz-Harris, and had directed that he should be Prosecuted at Common-Law. This Incens'd the Commons to a high degree, and carry'd them into a Vote, "That this Refusal of the Lords, was a Denial of Justice, a Violation of the Constitutions of Parliaments, and an Obstruction to the further Discovery of the Popish Plot." They further Resolved, "That if any Judge, Justice, or Jury, or any inferior Court, shall Proceed against Edward Fitz-Harris, or any other Person Impeach'd in Parliament for the same Crimes for which he or they stand Impeached, it is a high Breach of the Privilege of Parliament.

1681.

The Lord, throw out the Impeachment of Fitz-Harris.

The Commons offended.

The Parliament Dissolv'd.

On Monday March 28th, the Bill for Excluding the Duke of York, was Read the First time, and Order'd a Second Reading; and they were refusing the Debate about Fitz-Harris, when on a sudden the Ulster of the Black-Rod commanded their Attendance in the House of Lords; whither they immediately went; And the King being there in his Robes, told them, "He perceiv'd there were great Heats between the Lords and the Commons; and their Beginnings had been such, as He could expect no good Succes of this Parliament, and therefore thought fit to Dissolve them:" And accordingly the Lord-Chancellor Declared the Parliament Dissolv'd.

The King pleas'd, that he had got safe from Oxford.

Arraignment of Fitz-Harris.

The King immediately took Coach, and drove in great haste to Windsor, where he lay that Night, and the next Morning he posted away to Whitehall, seeming there extremely pleas'd that he had made his Escape, as it were, from Oxford, and had got a Deliverance from his Parliament. On Apr. 3d, Fitz-Harris was Arraign'd at the King's-Bench-Bar, where he Three times refus'd to hold up his Hand, insisting upon his being Impeach'd in Parliament, and therefore that he ought not to be Try'd by any inferior Court. The Court assign'd him for Counsel Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pellaxfen, and Mr. Wallop, to Argue his Plea against the Judicature of the Court; and on Wednesday the 4th of May the Prisoner was again brought to the Bar, and his Council attended, where the King's Attorney-General, Sir Robert Sawyer, entred a Demurrer to the Prisoner's Plea, and insist'd chiefly upon the manifest Defect of Forms, because the Plea runs, That the said Fitz-Harris was Impeach'd at the late Parliament in Oxford, de alta Proditione, but does not say of what sort or manner of Treason; nor did it set forth the Impeachment at large, which a Plea ought to do, when it is against the Jurisdiction of the Court. The Prisoner's Council Mov'd for farther Time; which was given them till Saturday Morning, when the Matter was largely and Learnedly Debated on both Sides: The King's Council, and also the Court, declaring, That they meddled not at all with the Privilege of the House of Commons, or the Jurisdiction of the Lords in Parliament, which was not the Question; but only as to the Form of the Plea. After the Debates were ended, the Court took Time to Consider, before they would proceed to Judgment. The 11th of May the Court sat again; the Plea was over-ru'd; the Prisoner Pleaded, Not Guilty; and alledging, that a material Witness for him was absent in Holland, his Tryal was put off till the 9th of June. On June the 8th, Dr. Olover Plunket, Titular Arch-Bishop of Dublin, was Try'd

The Chief Matters Sworn against him were, That he was made Primate of Ireland by the Pope, at the French King's Recommendation; had actually Levy'd great Sums of Money among his Clergy, to introduce the French Dominion into that Kingdom, and to Exterminate the Protestants; and upon Evidence of this, was found Guilty. The next Day Fitz-Harris was Try'd at the same Bar: The Chief Evidences against him were, Sir William Waller, and Eccard, upon whose Testimonies he was found Guilty of High-Treason; and on the 1st of July they were both Executed at Tyburn. Presently after his Tryal, Mrs. Fitz-Harris, the Prisoner's Wife, Accused the Lord Howard of Eserick, for Contriving that Treasonable Libel for which her Husband was Condemn'd. Upon which that Lord was Committed to the Tower; and so was Rouse, Hains, White, and Colledge, commonly call'd the Protestant Joiner.

The Dissolution of Two Parliaments, especially of the last, in so abrupt a manner, rais'd up a general Spirit of Discontent and Distrust in the Body of the People of England. This made the King descend to an Apology for Himself, in an Appeal to the World, by a Royal Declaration of the Causes and Reasons that mov'd His Majesty to Dissolve the two last Parliaments. And on April 8th, 1681. it was Ordered by His Majesty in Council, That the said Declaration be forthwith Printed and Publish'd, and Read in all Churches and Chapels throughout this Kingdom. The Clergy Paid a Cheerful Compliance to the Reading of it, and thereby gave Offence to some of their Patrons, and to many of the People.

His Majesty's Declaration to all his Loving Subjects, touching the Causes and Reasons that mov'd him to Dissolve the Two last Parliaments.

Declaration of Reasons for Dissolving the two last Parliaments.

IT was with exceeding great Trouble, that We were brought to the Dissolving of the Two last Parliaments, without more Benefit to Our People by the Calling of them: But having done Our Part, in giving so many Opportunities of providing their Good, it cannot be justly imputed to Us, that the Success hath not answer'd Our Expectation.

We cannot at this time but take Notice of the particular Causes of Our Dissatisfaction, which at the Beginning of the last Parliament We did recommend to their Care to avoid, and expected We should have had no new Cause to remember them.

We Open'd the last Parliament, which was Held at Westminster, with as Gracious Expressions of Our Readiness to satisfy the Desires of Our Good Subjects, and to secure them against all their just Fears, as the weighty Consideration, either of Preserving the Establish'd Religion, and the Liberty and Property of Our Subjects at Home, or of Supporting Our Neighbours and Allies Abroad, could fill Our Hearts with, or possibly require from Us.

And We do solemnly Declare, That we did intend, as far as would have consist'd with the very Being of the Government. to have Comply'd with any thing that could have been Propos'd to Us, to accomplish those Ends.

We ask'd of them the Supporting the Alliances We had made for the Preservation of the General Peace in Christendom; We recommended to them the further Examination of the Plot; We desir'd their Advice and Assistance concerning the Preservation of Tangier; We offer'd to concur in any Remedies that could be propos'd for the Security of the Protestant Religion, that might consist with Preserving the Succession of the Crown in its Due and Legal Course of Descent. To all which We met with most unsuitable Returns from the House of Commons: Addreses, in the nature of Remonstrances, rather than of Answers; Arbitrary Orders for taking Our Subjects into Custody, for Matters that had no relation to Privileges of Parliament; strange illegal Votes, declaring divers Eminent Persons to be Enemies to the King and Kingdom, without any Order, or Process of Law, any Hearing of their Defence, or any Proof so much as offer'd against them.

Besides these Proceedings, they Voted as followeth, on the 7th of January last.

Resolved, That Whosoever shall Lend, or cause to be Lent, by Way of Advance, any Money upon the Branches of the King's Revenue, arising by Customs, Excise, or Hearth-Money, shall be adjudged to hinder the Sitting of Parliaments, and shall be Responsible for the same in Parliament.

Resolved, That Whosoever shall Buy any Tally of Anticipation upon any Part of the King's Revenue, or Whosoever shall Pay any such Tally hereafter to be Struck, shall be adjudged to hinder the Sitting of Parliaments, and shall be Responsible for the same in Parliament.

Which Votes, instead of giving Us Assistance to Support Our Allies, or enable us to Preserve Tangier, tended rather to disable Us from Contributing towards either, by Our Own Revenue or Credit; not only exposing us to all Dangers that might happen either at Home or Abroad, but endeavouring to deprive Us of the Possibility of Supporting the Government it self, and to reduce Us to a more helpless Condition than the meanest of our Subjects.

And on the 10th of the same Month they pass'd another Vote, in these words:

Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this House, That the Prosecution of Protestant Dissenters upon the Penal Laws, is at this time grievous to the Subject, a Weakening of the Protestant Interest, an Encouragement to Popery, and Dangerous to the Peace of the Kingdom.

By which Vote, without any regard to the Laws Establish'd, they assum'd to themselves a Power of Suspending Acts of Parliament. Whereas Our Judges, and Ministers of Justice, neither can, nor ought, in reverence to the Votes of either or both the Houses, break the Oaths they have taken, for the due and impartial Execution of Our Laws; which by Experience hath been found to be the best Support, both of the Protestant Interest, and of the Peace of the Kingdom.

These were some of the unwarrantable Proceedings of that House of Commons, which were the Occasion of Our parting with that Parliament.

Which We had no sooner Dissolv'd, but We caus'd another to be forthwith Assembled at Oxford; at the Opening of which, We thought it necessary to give them warning of the Errors of the former, in hopes to have prevented the like Miscarriages; and We requir'd of them to make the Laws of the Land their Rule, as We did, and do resolve they shall be Ours. We further added, That what We had formerly and so often Declared concerning the Succession, We would not depart from; but to remove all reasonable Fears that might arise from the possibility of a Popish Successor's coming to the Crown, if Means could be found, that in such a Case, the Administration of the Govern-

1681. "ment might remain in Protestants Hands, We were ready to hearken to any Expedient, by which the Religion Establish'd might be preserv'd, and the Monarchy not destroy'd.

"But, contrary to Our Offers and Expectation, We saw, that no Expedient would be entertain'd, but that of a total Exclusion, which We had so often declar'd, was a Point, that in Our Own Royal Judgment, so nearly concern'd Us, both in Honour, Justice, and Conscience, that We cou'd never consent to it. In short, We cannot, after the sad Experience We have had of the late Civil Wars, that Murder'd Our Father (of Blessed Memory,) and Ruin'd the Monarchy, consent to a Law, that shall establish another most Unnatural War, or at least make it necessary to maintain a Standing Force for the Preserving the Government, and the Peace of the Kingdom.

"And We have reason to believe, by what pass'd in the last Parliament at Westminster, that if We cou'd have been brought to give Our Consent to a Bill of Exclusion; the Intent was not to rest there, but to pass further, and to attempt some other Great and Important Changes, even in the present.

"The Business of Fitz-Harris, who was Impeach'd by the House of Commons of High-Treason, and by the House of Lords refer'd to the Ordinary Course of Law, was on the sudden carry'd on to that extremity, by the Votes which the Commons Pass'd on the 26th of March last, that there was no possibility left of a Reconciliation.

"The Votes were these :

"Die Sabbati 26 Martij, post Meridiem.

"Resolved, That it is the undoubted Right of the Commons in Parliament Assembled, to Impeach before the Lords in Parliament any Peer or Commoner, for Treason, or any other Crime or Misdemeanor; And that the Refusal of the Lords to Proceed in Parliament upon such Impeachment, is a Denial of Justice, and a Violation of the Constitution of Parliaments.

"Resolved, That in the Case of Edward Fitz-Harris, who by the Commons hath been Impeached of High-Treason before the Lords, with a Declaration, That in convenient Time they would bring up the Articles against him, for the Lords to Resolve, That the said Fitz-Harris should be Proceeded with according to the Course of Common-Law, and not by way of Impeachment at this time; is a Denial of Justice, and a Violation of the Constitution of Parliaments, and an Obstruction to the further Discovery of the Popish Plot, and of great Danger to His Majesty's Person, and the Protestant Religion.

"Resolved, That for any Inferior Court to Proceed against Edward Fitz-Harris, or any other Person lying under an Impeachment in Parliament, for the same Crimes for which he or they stand Impeach'd, is a high Breach of the Privilege of Parliament.

"It was a Matter extremely sensible to Us, to find an Impeachment made use of to Delay a Tryal, that We had directed against a profess'd Papist, charg'd with Treasons against Us, of an extraordinary Nature: And certainly the House of Peers did themselves Right, in refusing to give Countenance to such a Proceeding.

"But when either of the Houses are so far transported, as to Vote the Proceedings of the other to be a Denial of Justice, a Violation of the Constitution of Parliaments, of Danger to Our Person, and the Protestant Religion, without Conferences first had, to examine upon what Grounds such Proceedings were made, and how far they might be justify'd; This puts the 1681. Two Houses out of capacity of transacting Business together, and consequently is the greatest Violation of the Constitution of Parliaments.

"This was the Case; and every Day's Continuance being like to produce new Instances of further Heat and Anger between the Two Houses, to the Disappointment of all Publick Ends for which they were Call'd, We found it necessary to put an End to this Parliament likewise.

"But notwithstanding all this, let not the restless Malice of ill Men, who are labouring to poison Our People, some out of fondness of their Old Beloved Commonwealth-Principles, and some out of Anger at their being Disappointed in the particular Designs they had for the Accomplishment of their own Ambition and Greatness, persuade any of Our Good Subjects, that we intend to lay aside the Use of Parliaments: For We do still Declare, That no Irregularities in Parliaments, shall ever make Us out of love with Parliaments, which We look upon as the best Method for Healing the Distempers of the Kingdom, and the only Means to preserve the Monarchy in that due Credit and Respect which it ought to have both at Home and Abroad.

"And for this Cause, We are resolv'd, by the Blessing of God, to have frequent Parliaments; and both in and out of Parliament to use Our utmost Endeavours to Exterpate Popery, and to Redress all the Grievances of Our good Subjects, and in all things to Govern according to the Laws of the Kingdom.

"And We hope, that a little Time will so far open the Eyes of all Our good Subjects, that Our next Meeting in Parliament shall perfect all that Settlement and Peace which shall be found wanting either in Church or State.

"To which, as We shall contribute Our utmost Endeavours, so We assure Our Self, That We shall be assist'd therein by the Loyalty and good-Affections of all those who consider the Rise and Progress of the late Troubles and Confusions, and desire to preserve their Country from a Relapse.

"And who cannot but remember, That Religion, Liberty and Property were all lost and gone, when the Monarchy was shaken off; and could never be reviv'd, till that was restored.

This Declaration, however smooth and fair, was by no means Popular. Some thought it nothing but a Torrent of Words: Others had a worse Opinion of it, as a Stretch of Prerogative, and a profess'd Insult upon the late Members of both Houses. Many question'd the Validity of it: Sir William Jones, in his Just and Modest Vindication of the Two last Parliaments, plainly says, That though the King did not communicate this Paper to the Council till Friday the 8th of April, yet M. Barillon, the French Ambassador, read it over three Days before, and demanded of a Gentleman there his Opinion of it: Which M. Barillon might the better remember, because of the great liberty the Gentleman took to ridicule it to his face.

It is certain, that His Majesty had taken great Offence at the Oxford Parliament, for the particular Zeal of the People in many of their Elections; and for the particular Respect paid the Members of the City of London, in a great Retinue waiting on them, &c. Of this number of Attendants was one Stephen Colledge, commonly known by the Name of the Protestant Joiner, a Busy Man, and a great Zealot against Popery, who went down to Oxford, and there spoke Words, and recited Rhimes, that were said to reflect upon the King. This Mechanick was to be made an Example of meddling with

Politicks;

1681. Politicks; so an Indictment of High-Treason was Exhibited against him to the Grand-Jury of Middlesex; but the Jury return'd an Ignoramus upon it: For which Mr. Wilmere (the Fore-man) was, out of all Courfe of Law, Apprehended, and Examin'd before the Council, August 16th. and sent to the Tower; and was afterwards forc'd to flie beyond the Seas. When the Design had thus miscarry'd in London, they laid a new Scene against this Offender at Oxford, where they hoped to find a more pliable Grand-Jury: And to make sure that the Bill might not a second time miscarry, the Witnesses were sent down Post to the Athizes, and by secret Management were privately shut up with the Jury till they had found the Bill: Which was afterwards complain'd of, as an Intolerable Practice. As soon as the Bill was found against him, a Jailer and a Messenger were sent away to hurry him down to his Tryal, who, by Order of the King's Council, took from him all his Instructions for his Defence, and carry'd them to the Council, for them only to make their Use and Advantage of 'em. This way of Procedure was thought to be very harsh and illegal; yet the poor Man, under these severe Circumstances, was not wanting to himself, but stoutly made his Defence; and, as Sir John Hawles observes upon that Tryal, the best Defence, all Circumstances consider'd, that ever Man made for his Life. But indeed, it seem'd to be a Matter Resolv'd upon Above, He must Die; and so he was, August 18th. found Guilty of High-Treason, and on the 21st of the same Month Executed in the Castle-Yard.

Case of the Earl of Shaftsbury.

It was propos'd to make an Example of a Peer, as well as of a poor Commoner; my Lord Shaftsbury was a Person most odious to the Court, and the more so, because his Lordship (with several other Peers) had entred a Protestation against the Lords Rejecting the Impeachment of Fitz-Harris; and upon the Dissolution of the Parliament, return'd immediately to London, as if he intended there to Influence the City against the Court. Soon after his Return, One Bryan Huns came to him and assur'd him, he could give great Light in the Matter of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey's Murther, if he might have his Pardon. The Earl endeavoured to get one, but it could not be obtained. Huns being Taken, and carry'd before the Council, hoped to get Favour, by accusing the Earl of attempting to Suborn him to do it; and on the Information of this Irish-Evidence, the Lord Shaftsbury was Apprehended at His House in Aldersgate-street, and on the 2d of July Committed to the Tower, for High-Treason; and Capt. Wilkinson, who had waited on the Earl to Oxford (among other Friends and Followers) was now tempted to charge this upon his Lordship, as a Design of Sedition and Treason: But Wilkinson, tho' a Prisoner for Debt in the King's-Bench, resisted all their Temptations and Offers, and would not be drawn in to be an Evidence. The Earl, after his Commitment, presented several Petitions for a Tryal, or Bail, according to the Habeas-Corpus Act; but he could not be Heard till November the 24th, and then a Bill of High-Treason was preferred to the Grand-Jury at the Sessions-House in the Old-Bailey. Mr. Blauwaite and Mr. Gayne Swore, That the Papers produced in Court were taken in the Lord Shaftsbury's House: And Sir Leeline Jenkins Deposed, That one of them, which was a Project of an Association, was the same Paper, unaltered, that Mr. Blauwaite gave him. But this Writing (saith Sir John Hawles) was no manner of Evidence of Treason, admitting what the Witnesses Swore, as to the finding of it, to be true; because it was not proved that it was Compos'd or Prosecuted by the Earl of Shaftsbury, or by his Order. Two Macknamarr's, and One Booth, Swore, That Capt. Wilkinson was to have been Captain of 1681. a Troop of Horse in the Army which the Lord Shaftsbury was to Raise. One Turberville Swore, That the Lord Shaftsbury said about February last, That there was little Good to be done to the King, as long as his Guards were about him. One Smith gave Evidence, That the Earl shou'd say, If the King should offer any Violence to the Parliament at Oxford, he would meet with a strong Opposition. And One Haynes Swore to these Words spoken by the Earl, The Duke of Buckingham has as much Right to the Crown, as any Stewart in England. But the Jury (of whom Sir Samuel Bernadiston was Fore-man) Consider'd of the Depositions of Capt. Wilkinson, made before the King, giving a large Account of the Intrigue carry'd on by Booth, to engage him to be an Evidence against the Earl; and knew Booth to be a Fellow of infamous Character, who had been Condemn'd for Clipping and Coining: Nor had they reason to believe any thing said by Turberville, Smith, or Haynes; and there was so much of their Fallshoods and of their Designs to Perjure themselves, prov'd against them in Colledge's Tryal, that they therefore brought in an Ignoramus. Upon which Sir John Hawles makes this Remark; The Grand-Jury (though some of them afterwards smarted for it, upon other Pretences) did like Honest, Understanding Gentlemen: And had they done otherwise, to avoid the Ignominy of being call'd (though in truth it was an Honour to be) an Ignoramus-Jury, they had justly deserov'd the Reproach, which since has lighted on other Juries; such as Mr. Cornith's, and the like. The People were generally so well satisfy'd, that the Spite of the Papists was grounded on the Lord Shaftsbury's apparent Zeal for the Religion and Liberties, that they publickly Rejoyced in his Deliverance, and made Bonfires that Evening in several Parts of the City. Graham (who was the Solicitor against him, and had managed the Irish Evidence) had much a-doe to escape the Fury of the Multitude; and the Judges (as they themselves confess'd in Graham's Tryal) were Affronted as they sat on the Bench. The Earl being Clear'd by the Grand-Jury, mov'd to be Discharg'd, but could not obtain it till the End of the next Term. When he was at Liberty, he Prosecuted Graham, and his Accusers, as his Declaration sets forth, For Conspiring to Indict him of High-Treason, for which they solicited Wilkinson to give False-Testimony against the said Earl, &c. The Defendants mov'd, That they might not be Try'd in London, because the Sheriffs, Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute, were the Lord Shaftsbury's Friends. The Judges allow'd their Plea; but the Earl would not Try his Cause elsewhere.

In the mean time, by the Encouragement and Solicitations of the Court, a multitude of Addresses were brought up to the King, to Thank him for his late Declaration, and for his Maintaining the Succession in the Right Line; with some Compliments and Flourishes, that gave no Reputation to this New Way of Addressing, when it did not so much prove the Affections of the People, as it really betray'd the Inclinations of the Court.

The Duke of York was all this while in Scotland, as His Majesty's High-Commissioner, and found there an Obeisquious Parliament, who being first amus'd with An Act Ratifying all former Laws for the Security of the Protestant Religion; fell readily into another Act, Acknowledging and Asserting the Right of Succession to the Imperial Crown of Scotland, wherein they Declare, That no Difference in Religion, nor no Law, nor Act of Parliament made or to be made, can Alter or Invert the Right of Succession and Lineal Descent of the Crown to the Nearest and Lawful Heirs. After which, they made another Act for a Standing Army, under the Title of An Act for Continuing the Supply for the Maintaining His Majesty's Additional Standing Forces for Five Years Addresses promoted.

Duke of York in Scotland.

1681. Years longer. And concluded with another Act, For Securing the Protestant Religion, against Popery and Fanaticism. The Earl of Argyle mov'd in Parliament, for a Security against a Popish Successor. For which he could not be forgiven. He was immediately Committed, and soon after Prosecuted, under a Pretence of having put his own Sense and Interpretation upon the Test, when he took it; and he was upon this trivial Account found Guilty of High-Treason; and must have then Suffer'd, if he had not made a shift to escape his Destiny at that time, by exchanging Cloaths with his Daughter, and so getting privately out of Edinburgh-Castle, and flying beyond the Seas; from whence he return'd too soon, and brought back his own Destruction with him.

Honours and Preferments.

As to Honours and Preferments: On April 7th, Charles Duke of Richmond was Elected a Knight-Companion of the most Noble Order of the Garter, in a Chapter held at Whitehall, and was Install'd, with usual Ceremonies on April 18th. At the Beginning of Easter-Term, His Majesty was pleas'd to constitute Sir Francis Pemberton, Kt. Lord-Chief-Justice of the Court of King's-Bench; who having received his Commission, and taken the Oaths, was on April 13th brought by the Lord-Chancellor to pay his Duty to His Majesty; by whom he was most graciously receiv'd, suitable to the Opinion His Majesty had of his great Integrity, Loyalty, and knowledge of the Laws. On April 19th, His Majesty having appointed Thomas Dereham, Esq; to be his Resident at the Court of the Great-Duke of Tuscany, was pleas'd to conferr upon him the Honour of Knighthood. On April the 27th, His Majesty was pleas'd, in consideration of the faithful Services perform'd by the Right-Honourable Lawrence Hyde, Esq; First Commissioner of His Majesty's Treasury, in that and other Employments of eminent Trusts, to create him Viscount Hyde of Kenelworth, and Baron of Wootton-Basset. On May 14th, His Majesty was graciously pleas'd to conferr upon the Right-Honourable Heneage Lord Finch, Lord-Chancellor of England (as a Mark of the great Satisfaction His Majesty had in the many faithful Services which his Lordship had rendred the Crown) the Honour and Dignity of an Earl of this Kingdom, by creating him Earl of Nottingham. In July, His Majesty being desirous to place a lasting Mark of his Esteem upon the Family of Sir George Carteret, Kt. and Bar. late Vice-Chamberlain of His Majesty's Household, as well for the long and Loyal Services of the said Sir George at Home and Abroad, as for the Merit of his Son Sir Philip Carteret, who lost his Life in His Majesty's Service at Sea, was graciously pleas'd to create Sir George Carteret, Bar. (Eldest Son to the said Sir Philip, and Grand-son and Heir of the afore-said Sir George) a Baron of England, by the Name of Baron Carteret of Hawnes in the County of Bedford. On August 3d, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Christopher Buckley of Surrey, Esq; Sir Samuel Morland had invented an Engine, which, with the strength of Eight Men, would force the Water in a Continual Stream, at the rate of above Sixty Barrels an Hour, from the River Thames up to the Top of Windsor-Castle, and from thence into the Air above Sixty Foot high. This Experiment often repeated, gave so much Pleasure and Admiration to the King, that on August 14th he sent for Sir Samuel Morland, and in the Presence of Prince Rupert, and many of the Nobility, declar'd, That he was highly satisfy'd with all the late Experiments and extraordinary Effects of Sir Samuel's New Water-Engine; and therefore, as an Earnest of his particular Grace and Favour, gave him with his own Royal Hand, and commanded him to wear it on his Breast, as a Mark of Honour, during his Life, a fair Medal of Gold, fasten'd to a Green Ribbon, on the one side of which Medal was His Majesty's Effigies, set round with Diamonds of a considerable Value; and on the other side the following Inscription; CAROLO II^o Magnæ Britannie, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ, Regi, Samuel Morlandus Æques Auratus & Baronettus, Magister Mechanicorum, In rebus adversis summo vitæ periculo, In Prosperis, felici Ingenio frequens adfuit. After which, the Lord-Chamberlain (by His Majesty's Order) caused him to be Sworn Master of the Mechanicks, and the Inscription on the Medal to be Registred in the great Parchment Roll of the Office. On Septemb. 6th, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on George Raynsford of Lincolns-Inn, Esq; Son to the late Lord-Chief-Justice Raynsford.

Upon Occasion of the Ignoramus-Furies, the Court-Party concern'd themselves extremely much in the Election of New Sheriffs: But the Citizens, who thought their Liberties and Lives did depend upon it, chose Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute, by a very great Majority. The King was resolv'd to express his Displeasure at it; and therefore, when on Octob. 13th, Sir George Treby Recorder, and these Two Sheriffs, were sent to Invite His Majesty, in the Name of the City, to do them the Honour of Dining at Guild-Hall on the 28th, His Majesty gave them this Rebuke; Mr. Recorder, An Invitation from my Lord-Mayor, and the City, is very Acceptable to Me; and to shew that it is so, notwithstanding that it is brought by Messengers that are so Unwelcome to Me as these Two Sheriffs are, yet I Accept it. His Majesty had before condescended to a meaner thing, by distinguishing the Loyal Apprentices of London, and giving a Brace of Bucks for a Dinner at Sadlers-Hall, on August 4th, and sending many of his Principal Courtiers to Dine with them, and directing his Son the Duke of Grafton to be one of the Stewards for another Year: All which, was thought no less than to encourage Servants to oppose their Masters.

Election of Sheriffs for London and Middlesex.

On November the 6th, His Majesty knighted Major George Vernon of Farnham in the County of Surrey, for the Loyalty and Affection with which he had on all Occasions promoted the Service of His Majesty. On Decemb. 30th, His Majesty was pleas'd to constitute his Grace the Duke of Grafton Colonel of his First Regiment of Foot-Guards, in the room of Colonel Russel, who had, with His Majesty's Leave, resigned that Command. On March 3d, George Legg, Esq; Master-General of the Ordnance, was Sworn of His Majesty's Privy-Council. On March 16th, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on John Knight, Esq; one of the Sheriffs of Bristol, and was pleas'd to declare, that it was in consideration of his known Loyalty, and constant Adherence to the Church of England, and Interest of the Crown.

Honours and Preferments.

The Lady Anne, in a Dutiful Respect to her Father, paid him a Visit this Summer in Scotland, going by Sea, and attended by 3 of His Majesty's Yachts, and arriv'd safe in Scotland on July 19th. The Prince of Orange came over to make another Visit to the English Court, and Landing at Margate, came Post to Whitehall on July 23. and having Din'd with Sir Stephen Fox, went that Night to Windsor; and after some Diversions, went back to Harwich on Friday August 5th, to imbarck there for Holland.

Lady Anne goes to Scotland.

The Duke of York return'd from Scotland in one of His Majesty's Yachts, and Landed at Yarmouth on March 10. and went that Night to Norwich, where his Reception was contriv'd to be with great Demonstrations of Joy. The Picture of his Royal Highness in Guildhall had been Cut and Defaced by some unknown Hand: The Lord-Mayor, and Court of Aldermen, to take off the Imputation from the City, by a Solemn Order, dated Jan. 27th, 1681. declared their Abhorrence of this Indignity, which, they say, cannot be understood otherwise, than an effect of Malice against the Person of his Royal Highness; and therefore, out of a just and due Regard to the Honour of his Royal Highness, and their deep Repentment of that Insolent and Villainous Act, they offer a Reward of Five hundred-Pounds for finding out the Author of it.

Murder of Thomas Thynne, Esq;

On Sunday Febr. 12th, between Seven and Eight at Night, a barbarous Assassination was committed upon the Person of Thomas Thynne, Esq; who passing the Pall-Mall in his Coach, was set upon by three Men on Horse-back, one of which discharg'd a Musquetoon into the Coach, and mortally Wounded him, four Bullets entering his Body; and having perform'd this piece of Villainy, made their Escape. His Majesty having been inform'd of what had happen'd, was pleas'd to give immediate Orders for the stopping all Persons that could not give a good Account of themselves in the several Ports; and for the making diligent Search here in Town, in order to the Discovering the Assassins. The Diligence of those that made the Search, was so successful, that upon some Information that was given them, they traced the Murthers to their several Lodgings, and there Apprehended them, and brought them on Monday Morning before the Council, (which was Extraordinarily Assembled for that Purpose:) The Chief of them being call'd in, readily Confess'd the whole Fact, said his Name was Vrats, that he was a German, and a Captain of Foot; That he had accompany'd Count Charles-John Covingmark in his Travels, and came with him into England; That the Friendship and Acquaintance he had with him, and the Favours he had received from his Family, had made him take very much to Heart the Affronts which Mr. Thynne had put upon the Count, by his Discourses and otherwise, and therefore resolv'd to take Satisfaction of him; and being inform'd on Sunday, that Mr. Thynne was gone abroad in his Coach, he took Horse, with a Friend, and Servant of his own, who was provided with a Musquetoon, being themselves armed with Swords and Pistols: That meeting Mr. Thynne's Coach in the Pall-Mall, he rode up to it, and bid the Coach-man Stand, intending to Fight Mr. Thynne; but that his Servant, who was a Polander, not rightly apprehending what he said, discharg'd his Musquetoon upon Mr. Thynne; whereupon they made their Escape. Mr. Thynne Died on Monday about Six in the Morning. On Sunday Febr. 19th, about Eight at Night, Count Charles-John Covingmark was Taken as he landed at Gravesend in a Disguise, intending to embark on a Vessel that was going out: He was next Morning brought to Town, and Examind before His Majesty in Council, who refer'd the Matter to the Lord-Chief-Justice, and his Lordship Committed him Prisoner to Newgate, in order to his Tryal, at which he was with great difficulty Acquitted of the Murther; while the other Actors, Captain Vrats, John Sterne, and George Borotski, were, according to a Sentence pass'd on them at the Old-Bailey, Executed on March 10th, in the Pall-mall, where they committed that Barbarous Fact; and the Body of George Borotski (whose Hand did the Murther) was by His Majesty's Command to be hung up in Chains.

State of Religion.

In Matters of Religion, great Offence had been taken at a New Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, Written and Publish'd by Mr. Thomas Ashenden, Rector of Dingley in the County of Northampton, who was thereupon Conven'd, and Censur'd by his Ordinary; and on Sunday June 5th, he did Publicly in the Cathedral-Church of Peterborough make this Recantation, at the time of Divine-Service, being enjoind thereto by the Right-Reverend William Lord-Bishop of Peterborough, who was present, together with the Reverend Dean Dr. Patrick, some of the Prebendaries, and several Persons of Quality:

1681.

Recantation of Mr. Thomas Ashenden.

I Thomas Ashenden, being deeply sensible of the foul Dishonour I have done to our most Holy Religion, and the great Scandal I have given, by a late prophane Abuse of the Lord's-Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, which I Wrote, and caused to be Publish'd; Do here, in the Presence of God, and of his Ministers, and of this Congregation, most heartily bewail with unfeigned Sorrow, both that Notorious Offence, and also all my other Sins which betray'd me unto it: most humbly begging Forgiveness of God, and of his Church, whose heaviest Censures I have justly deserved. And as I earnestly desire that none of my Brethren (much less our Holy Function, or the Church) may be the worse thought of by Any, by reason of my Miscarriages; so I do faithfully Promise, by God's Grace, to endeavour to behave myself hereafter so Religiously in my Place and Calling, that I may not be any more a Discredit to them. In which Resolution that I may persist, I beg and implore the Assistance of all your Prayers; And desire withal, that this my Retraction, and sincere Profession of Repentance, may be made as Publick as my Crimes have been, that None may be tempted hereafter to do Evil by my Example.

Condition of the Dissenters.

The Dissenters were now Odious to the Court, not as Separatists from the Church, but as Enemies to the State, and especially to the Duke's Succession. And the Church-men were more Acceptable to the King, not as Members of a True Communion, but as the Promoters of Royal Prerogative, and Supporters of the Interest of his Royal Highness. Under this unhappy Way of Distinguishing Whigs and Tories, the former were so much suspected by the Government, that it would not trust them upon Common Juries, because of the late Returns of Ignoramus, which they thought chiefly owing to that Party. Upon this Account, a very strange Act of Partiality happened at the Sessions at Hicks-Hall, on August 26th, as will appear by this Account, though given by Authority, to palliate that Matter: "Whereas a Panel was Return'd by the Sheriff, of the Number of Fifty four Persons, to serve of the Grand-Jury for this County, very few of which, if any, were known to the Justices of Peace on the Bench, or the High-Constables of the Hundreds, which induced the Justices to enquire after the Persons so Returned, and most of them were found to be Dissenters, who frequented Conventicles, and seldom or never came to Church: Whereupon the Justices thought fit, according to the Power given to them by the Statute of 3 Hen. VIII. to Command the Sheriff there present to put out some of the Panel, and put in others in their stead; which the Sheriff refusing at three several Commands to do, the Justices, that the Service of the County might not be obstructed, did take Fifteen of those Return'd by the Sheriff, and Swore them to serve for the Grand-Jury: But to the intent they might make the best discovery they could of the said Persons so Sworn, the Court thought fit to tender them the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which they all took.

Address of Abhorrence.

His Majesty took all Occasions to express his Satisfaction in the Loyalty of those Church-men who came with their Addresses, Abhorring the Association, and declaring for the Unalterable Right of Succession; as particularly Dr. Gower, Master of St. John's College, and Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, waited on His Majesty at New-Market, on Septemb. 18th, and made a fine Speech in the Name of the University, of which this was the molt-1681. most-pleasing part: "We will still believe and maintain, That our Kings derive not their Titles from the People, but from God; That to Him only they are Accountable: That it belongs not to Subjects, either to Create or Censure, but to Honour and Obey their Sovereign, who comes to be so, by a Fundamental Hereditary Right of Succession, which no Religion, no Law, no Fault or Forfeiture can alter or diminish," &c. To which His Majesty was pleas'd to Answer; That he was fully satisfy'd of the Loyalty of the University, and that he did not at all doubt but they would always Act according to what they there Declared. His Majesty likewise told them, That he would constantly Own and Defend the Church of England as Establish'd by Law: This he bid them be assur'd of, for he would be as good as his Word, whatever Representation either had or should be made of him to the contrary. Being further pleas'd to add, That there was no other Church in the World that Taught and Practis'd Loyalty so Conscientiously as that did.

French Protestants Reliev'd. Upon the Persecution of the Protestants in France, His Majesty had a good Opportunity of Pleasing his own Protestant Subjects, by Receiving and Encouraging those Distress'd Sufferers and Refugees; and therefore, on August 28th, His Majesty was pleas'd in Council to Declare, That he held himself oblig'd, in Honour and Conscience, to Comfort and Support all such Afflicted Protestants, who by reason of the Rigours and Severities us'd towards them, upon account of their Religion, should be forced to quit their Native Country, and should desire to shelter themselves under His Majesty's Royal Protection, for the Preservation and free Exercise of their Religion. And in order hereunto, His Majesty was pleas'd further to Declare, That He will grant unto every such Distress'd Protestant who shall come hither for Refuge, and reside here, his Letters of Denization, under the Great-Seal, without any Charge whatsoever; and will likewise recommend it to his Parliament, at their next Meeting, to Pass an Act for the General Naturalization of all such Protestants as shall come over, as aforesaid, &c. When a Suspicion was rais'd, That many of these Exiles from France, pretending to be Protestants, were really French Papists, and therefore Dangerous Enemies in Disguise; His Majesty was pleas'd in Council to Order, October the 19th, that this following Advertisement should be published:

WHereas several scandalous Reports are daily spread abroad, That a great part of those who call themselves Protestants, and are lately come from France, for Protection, into this Kingdom, are Papists; whereby many Well-dispos'd People are discourag'd from Contributing to the Relief of these poor Protestants, who have forsaken their Liveliboods and Country, to preserve a good Conscience; These are to give Notice, That all Care imaginable is taken by the Ministers of the French Congregations, both at the Savoy, and in London, that according to His Majesty's Gracious Declaration, made in Council, on July 28th, 1681. None be admitted into either of their Congregations, or receive any Benefit of the said Collections, but such as bring very good and authentick Testimonials of their being of the Protestant Religion, and of their receiving of the Holy Sacrament. And if any Person can Detect any of those who pretend to be fled hither for Religion, to be really Papists; It is desired that he give Information thereof to the Lord-Bishop of London, or to the Ministers of the said French Congregations.

Profecution of Dissenters. But while this Care was taken of Foreign Protestants, there was a vigorous Profecution of the Protestant Dissenters here at Home; which was generally thought a piece of Court-Artifice, to play the Church of England against the Dissenters, and inrage the Dissenters against the Church of England; that they might not Unite and see their Common Danger, but rather, by Destroying one another, might make room for a third Party, that lay behind the Curtain and watch't an Opportunity of the Duke's Succession. The King, whose Principle and Practice (even against the Law) had been to Indulge the Dissenters, was now drawn-in to be very solicitous for the Rigorous Profecution of them; the Justices of Middlesex were very forward to obey the Instructions of the Court, by putting the Laws in Execution against them, and contriv'd to have His Majesty's express Command for it: For at the Beginning of December they humbly represented to His Majesty, "That an Intimation of his Pleasure was necessary at this time, as to the putting the Laws in Execution against Conventicles; in regard that when it was lately given them in Charge at the Council-Board, to put the Laws in Execution against Popish Recusants, there was no mention made of Suppressing Conventicles, and therefore it was pretended, that they were not to be disturb'd or medled with." His Majesty was pleas'd to take this Occasion to Command the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, and the said Justices of the Peace, "To use their utmost Endeavours to Suppress all Conventicles, and Unlawful Meetings, upon pretence of Religious Worship: His Majesty Declaring, It is his express Pleasure, That the Laws be effectually put in Execution against them, both in City and Country."

In these Proceedings, it was thought the greater Hardship, that the Act of 25 Eliz. design'd against Popish Recusants, which as soon as turn'd against Protestant Dissenters, had a Bill of Repeal brought in the last Westmynster Parliament, was now rigorously executed upon all manner of Nonconformists; which at this time gave a general Discontent, and occasion'd some Reflections on the King that were very rude and violent, as particularly on Novemb. 16th, Mr. Frederick Horsey was by Warrant of the Lords of His Majesty's Privy-Council, Committed Prisoner to Newgate, for High-Treason, he having spoken divers Treasonable and Dangerous Words against His Majesty and the Government, viz. That His Majesty's Consenting to the Tyrannical Proceedings of Convicting Dissenters, he did not question but would make Him (meaning the King's Majesty) the Head shorter; and that he did admire the City did not Secure him the last Lord-Mayor's-Day, when they had him there.

That which made the Dissenters the more Pitied, was, that very great Partiality was shown in Protecting the Papists from those Penal Laws, which had their Edge altogether turn'd upon the Protestant Dissenters. This Partiality was so Notorious, that at last a Publick Complaint was made against the Deputy-Clerk of the Peace of the County of Wilts, for favouring certain Papists in that County, who were Order'd to be Profecuted by the Sessions, and yet were afterwards by him Dismiss'd with Indemnity. Upon this formal Complaint, no less could be done than to bring up the said Offender, by one of His Majesty's Messengers, to the Council-Board, where (it is said) he receiv'd a severe Reprimand; and that it was likewise recommended to the Justices of the Peace for that County, at their next Quarter-Sessions, to Proceed against him for such Misdemeanors as he should be Charged with.

This Countenance of the Court, made the Papists not only Safe, but extremely Insolent. On March 3d, Information was given in Council, "That on the 2d of February last, the Officers of the High-Sheriff of Lancashire, having Distrain'd the Cattle and other Goods of divers “ Convicted Popish Recusants, living at Altarr near Ormeskerke in that County, for their Forfeitures, were, in their return with the said Goods, Riotously Assaulted in the High-way by the said Popish Recusants, and their Abettors; and the Goods not only rescued from them, but they beaten and wounded in such a manner, that the Recovery of some of them was much doubted.” Thereupon His Majesty was pleas'd to Order the Judges that go that Circuit, to cause such of the said Offenders as are already in Custody, to be Proceeded against for the same, according to the utmost Severity of the Law, and to endeavour the Apprehending of all others concern'd therein, by Rewarding the Discoverers of them, that so they may receive an Exemplary Punishment.

Character of the Duke of Monmouth

The Duke of Monmouth was now to be publickly Disgrac'd, of whom this Character is given by a late Author: “ This Gentleman stood possess'd of all the Qualities requisite to gain him the Love of the People, and stir up the Jealousie of the Duke of York. King Charles had heap'd Honours upon him, and nothing pleas'd him so much as to see him Great. He had been sent to Scotland in the Year 1679, to suppress an Insurrection which the Severity of Lauderdale's Administration had occasion'd; where his Lenity towards a People made by Oppression Mad, gain'd him the Ill-will of a Predominant Party at Court. The Zeal he shew'd some time after in the Prosecution of the Popish Plot, and his Friendships with some that were profess'd Enemies to the Duke, concurr'd to his Fall: yet King Charles still continu'd under-hand the same Tenderness for him, though he was declar'd in publick to be in Disgrace. The Duke's Faction at Home, and a Foreign Interest Abroad, were too powerful for King Charles to grapple with, even though the Fortune of a Favourite Son was at Stake. The more he was depress'd by the Envy of his Uncle, the higher he rose in the Affections of the People; till the breaking out of what was call'd the Protestant Plot, overwhelm'd not only him, but a whole Party with him.

Duke of Monmouth in Disgrace.

The first Mark of the King's new Anger to the Duke of Monmouth, was, to signify his Pleasure to the University of Cambridge, that they should Chuse another Chancellor in the Place of the Duke of Monmouth: With which Royal Will and Pleasure the University comply'd, and made Choice of his Grace the Duke of Albemarle to be their Chancellor; and they afterwards put a greater Mark of Ignominy upon the Duke of Monmouth, by taking down his Picture that was hanging in their Publick Schools, and burning it in a very eager and ridiculous manner. This Humour of the University of Cambridge, in Rejecting and Affronting their Chancellor the Duke of Monmouth, was plainly owing as a Compliment to the Duke of York, who being lately return'd from Scotland, Dr. Cogar the Vice-Chancellor waited on him at New-Market, at the beginning of April, and in the Name of himself and the University made a short Speech in Latin, “ To Congratulate his Royal Highness's Return into England, and to acknowledge, that by his Royal Highness's good Conduct, the Government of Scotland, both in Church and State, is settled in Peace, and therefore they would by no means doubt, but that under His Majesty, his Royal Highness's Presence would have a great Influence in effecting the same here in England; by which means, All Great Britain being join'd in One, the Church of England, and Rights of the Crown, may for ever Flourish.” To which his Royal Highness was pleas'd to Answer to this effect:

Event in Effigie, at Cambridge,

In Compliment to the Duke of York.

That he gave the University his Thanks, for their kind Expressions: That he was very glad of this, and all other Occasions to declare, That he would ever Stand by the Church of England, as now Establish'd, and Countenance the Members of it, as having seen by Experience, that they are the best Supporters of the Crown; and that he would use his Endeavours and Interest for the Preservation of the King's Person, and the Government in the State, and the Church of England, as now Establish'd by Law. The Duke, against his own Genius, was to pursue the Arts of Popularity; and therefore, on April 20th, he was pleas'd to honour with his Presence the Artillery-Company, at their Annual Feast in Merchant-Taylors-Hall, where he retir'd after Dinner into another Room, and gave Access to a great Number of Citizens, who were taught to Croud in, for the honour of Kissing his Hand. He had soon after an Occasion of going once more to Scotland, purposing to make but a very short Stay. So on May 3d he departed from Windsor, and went down in one of His Majesty's Yachts to embark on the Glocester, Commanded by Sir John Berry, and Attended by the Dartmouth, the Ruby, and the Happy Return. But on Friday May 5th, the Glocester Frigate ran upon the Sand call'd the Lemon and Ore, about 16 Leagues from the Mouth of Humber, and there was lost: His Royal Highness went off in a Boat, and took as many Persons of Quality with him as the Boat could well bear. Other Boats were sent to take out the Men from the sinking Ship, but she sunk so fast, that several of the Passengers and Sea-men perished with her, among whom were the Earl of Roxborough, the Lord O-Brian, the Laird Hopton, Sir Joseph Douglas, and Mr. Hyde Brother-in-Law to the Duke, with several of the Duke's Servants, and above an Hundred and thirty Seamen were miserably lost, the Commander Sir John Berry hardly escaping by a Rope over the Stern, into Capt. Wyborne's Boat; who being afterwards Examined before the Council, His Majesty declared himself satisfy'd, that the said Sir John was no way faulty in the Loss of the Glocester, and therefore was pleas'd to give him the Command of the Henrietta a Third Rate Frigate, and of the Squadron design'd for the Coast of Ireland, in the same manner as was at first intended. The Duke got safe to Scotland on May 7th; and with great Expedition came back by Sea to London, in Twenty Days.

1682.

Duke of York goes again to Scotland.

Danger at Sea.

The Court was very solicitous for the Choice of New Sheriffs for London and Middlesex, and earnestly recommended Mr. North and Mr. Box; but the Hearts of the Citizens were for Mr. Papilion and Mr. Dubois. This occasion'd a very Riotous Controversie; the Lord-Mayor complying with the Court, and the Old Sheriffs resolving to assert the Rights of the City. Hence, on the Day of Election, June 24th, a great Noise and Clamour was made in Guild-Hall, where the Whig Party (as they were call'd) being much the more Numerous, the Lord-Mayor adjourn'd the Common-Hall till Tuesday Morning: But the Two Sheriffs thinking that Ajournment to be an Arbitrary Act for Interrupting a Regular Election, went on with the Poll. Upon which Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute, the two Sheriffs, were by Order of Privy-Council taken into Custody by a Serjeant at Arms, and Committed Prisoners to the Tower, by a Warrant Sign'd by Twenty four Privy-Councillors, who made a further Order, “ That Mr. Attorney-General should forthwith Exhibit an Information in the King's-Bench against Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute, Esqrs, Sheriffs of London, and Henry Cornish, Esq; one of the Aldermen, and such Others as, upon Examination, should be found to have been Promoters and Encouragers of the late Enormous Riot, and that “ he

" utmoſt Severity of the Law.

On Friday June 30th, the Imprison'd Sheriffs were, upon a Writ of Habeas Corpus, brought by the Lieutenant of the Tower to the King's-Bench-Bar; where, after having Pleaded Not Guilty, they were admitted to Bail. The Sheriffs being thus at liberty, met at a Common-Hall on July the 1st, when the Lord-Mayor being Sick, sent Order by the Recorder to Adjourn the Hall to the 11th following: but the Sheriffs again denying the Validity of such Adjournment, proceeded in the Election, and Declared their Choice of Papilion and Dubois. On Friday July 7th the Mayor and his Party met again, and heard Lawyers Argue the Regularity of the late Adjournments: But coming to no Conclusion, the Court was again Adjourn'd to the 14th of July; on which Day an Order of Council was produced, whereby His Majesty thought fit, for the better keeping of the Peace of the City, to Direct and Require the Lord-Mayor to Maintain and Preserve intire the Ancient Customs of the City; and for the better doing thereof, to take effectual Order, That at the Common-Council to be held on July 14th, all Proceedings be Begun A-new, and Carry'd on in the usual manner, as they ought to have been on the 24th of June last. But the manner of Proceeding, was thought to be by no means usual: For Dudley North, Esq; was only put up to be Confirm'd, as being already duely Elect'd by my Lord-Mayor; and while the Sheriffs were Polling in another Place, his Lordship came down to the Hullings, and Declared the Election, by Majority of Voices, to fall upon Mr. Box: But he wisely paid his Fine, and Peter Rich, Esq; was Chosen in his Place, and he and Mr. North were Sworn before the Lord-Mayor in the Hullings.

This great Struggle, put the Court upon Considering, and in a manner Resolving to take away the Election of Sheriffs out of the Power of the City; and no other Expedient could be found, but by taking away their Charter; which if once effected, would not only give the Court the Advantage of making a Common-Hall, but open a Gap to their making a House of Commons too: For near Five Parts in Six of the House of Commons were Burgeſſes, and Barons of the Cinque-Ports, who would not dare to Contest their Charters, if the City of London could not hold her own by Law. So that in Hilary-Term this Year a Quo Warranto was brought against the City, for two heinous Crimes, no worse than these two: " 1st. That they had " made an Address to the King, for the Parliament " to Sit for Redrefs of Grievances. 2dly. That " the City had Raised Money towards Repairing " Cheapside-Conduit, Ruin'd by the Fire of London." The City Pleaded their Right. The Attorney-General Reply'd. Upon which there was a Demurrer; and here the Matter rested for a time: the Novelty of these Pretensions causing a great Amusement in the Generality of the City and Nation, who well knew whereto this tended, but could hardly imagine how it would end. After a long Suspence, two Arguments only were permitted on either side; one in Hilary-Term, 1682. and the other in Easter-Term following: And so Judgment was given, in Trinity-Term next after, against the City. This Judgment was observ'd to be very strange and unwarrantable, for it was without any Reason given, and by two Judges only, whereof the one was Sir Francis Wythens, (who had Heard but one Argument, and who afterwards, in the absence of Sir Edward Herbert, deliver'd that for Sir Edward's Opinion, which Sir Edward himself, when present, disown'd,) and the other was Sir Thomas Jones: however, to confirm their own Judgment with better Authority than their own, these two Judges declar'd upon the Bench, that their Brother Raymond was of the same Opinion with them, and that so was the Lord-Chief-Justice Sanders, though he indeed was past his Senses, and had only Understanding enough left to expostulate with them, why they would trouble him, when he had lost his Memory?

While the City of London lay under this Awe and Menace of the Court, many other Quo Warranto's were issued out against other inferior Places; and several of them were so terrify'd, that they came and resign'd their Charters, and accepted of New Patents, with Regulation at the Pleasure of the Court. Upon which way of Proceeding, these Remarks of a late Writer are not improper: " The Charters of the City of London, and other " Corporations, stood in the way of an Absolute " Government; and it was resolv'd to break " through this Barrier. In order to which, " Quo Warranto's were brought against them; and " in process of time, they were either Surrendered by the Corporations themselves, or Vacated in Westminster-Hall by a Sett of Judges pick'd out for that purpose. And it was resolv'd thereby to make one of the Estates of Parliament depend intirely upon the Will and Nomination of the Prince. While these Quo Warranto's were going on, whole Peals of Anathema's were rung out against those Patriots that had stood up for the Liberties of their Country in the preceding Parliaments: And it was look'd upon as a Crime against the State, for Any One to regret the approaching Fate of his Country; even the Holy Scriptures themselves were made a Stake for Arbitrary Power; and the Laws which were given to the Jews, as they were a Political State, were now brought in, upon every occasion, to Countenance the Designs of the Court: As if those Laws which were intended only to support the Political Government of the Jews, were the real Foundation of the Christian Religion; or, that the Constitution of England was founded upon the Jewish Doctrine. All which was not much for the Honour of those Gentlemen that broach'd that Notion. This was a time never to be forgot, when to Wish well to our Country, was a Crime; and when Heaven it self was rank'd upon our Enemies side, by some that pretended to Expound its Will. In some Places, new-kind of Funeral Harangues came in Fashion: Our Laws, our Liberties, our Parliaments, our Native Rights, were to be Buried: but instead of dropping a Tear at their Funeral, fulsome Panegyrics were made upon their Murtherers, and Curses denounc'd against those that would have retriev'd them from Destruction.

This Year was the more remarkable, for the Death of Three very Great Men. The Duke of Lauderdale Died August 24th, generally Fear'd in Scotland, and as universally Hated in England; a Man of Parts and Learning, not of Morals, nor reputed Integrity; of an Impetuous Spirit, a great Promoter of Arbitrary Power, and indeed the Underminer of Episcopacy in Scotland, by laying it on a New Foundation, the Pleasure of the King. His Highness Rupert Prince Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Cumberland, &c. Died at his House in Spring-Garden, Novemb. 29th, in the Sixty-third Year of his Age, after some Days Sickness of a Pleurise and Fever; his Body, on Decemb. 6th, was privately Interred among others of the Royal Family in a Vault on the South-side of King Henry VIIth's Chapel: A Person of great Forwardness and Fire in his Youth, and afterwards of Good-temper and Sedateness: He had of late Years proved a Faithful Councillor to the King, and a great Patriot to the English Liberty; and therefore was towards his Latter-end neglected by the Court to that degree, that nothing pass'd

On Decemb. 18th, in the Afternoon, the Right-Honourable Heneage Earl of Nottingham, Lord-Chancellor of England, Died at his House in Queen-street, in the Sixty-first Year of his Age, after having serv'd His Majesty Nine Years in that high Station with great Honour and Veracity.

Honours
ferments.

There was a great Disposal of Honours and Preferments: In the beginning of April, His Majesty was pleas'd, upon the Death of the Lord Bretchevil, to give the Government of the City and Garrison of York upon Sir John Beresby, Bar. And soon after, on the Death of Nicholas Johnson, Esq; His Majesty conferr'd the Office of Pay-Master of his Forces upon Charles Fox, Esq; On Aug. 22d, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on Mr. Cornwall Bradshaw, as being well satisfy'd of his Loyalty, and of his Care and Industry in the Management of his Revenue of Hearth-Money, of which he was one of the Managers.

The Earl of Hallifax had at first gone along with the Duke of Monmouth, the Earl of Shaftsbury, &c. but had been lately brought-over to the Interest of the Duke of York; for which reason, about the middle of August, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr upon him the Honour and Dignity of a Marquess of this Kingdom, by creating him Marquess of Hallifax, in consideration of the eminent and faithful Services which he had render'd His Majesty and the Crown; and soon after, His Majesty conferr'd upon him the Office of Lord-Privy-Seal. On Septemb. 20th, the Earl of Sunderland was by His Majesty's Command readmitted a Privy-Councillor, and again took his Place at the Board. On Septemb. 25th, the Duke of Hamilton was Elected a Knight-Companion of the Garter, in a Chapter held at Whitehall. Towards the end of November, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr upon Sir John Bennet, Knight of the Bath, the Dignity of a Baron of this Kingdom, under the Stile and Title of John Lord Ossulston. And presently after, His Majesty was pleas'd to create James Duke of Ormond in Ireland, a Duke of this Kingdom, by the same Name and Title: And the Lord-Marquess of Worcester, a Duke of this Kingdom, by the Name and Title of Duke of Beauford: And the Lord Norris, an Earl, by the Name and Title of Earl of Arington. And with a greater flood of Distinguishing Favours, cheap and grateful, at the beginning of December, His Majesty was pleas'd to grant the Title and Dignity of an Earl of this Kingdom, to Edward Viscount Cambridg, by the Name and Stile of Earl of Gainsborough: And to Conyers Lord Darcy, by the Name and Stile of Earl of Holderness: And to Thomas Lord Windsor, Governor of His Majesty's Town and Garrison of Kingslen upon Hull, by the Name and Stile of Earl of Plymouth: As also, the Title and Dignity of a Viscount of this Kingdom, to Heratio Lord Townsend, by the Name and Stile of Viscount Townsend of Raynham. The Titles and Dignities of a Baron and a Viscount, to Sir Thomas Thynne, Bar. by the Name and Stile of Baron Thynne of Warmister, and Viscount Weymouth. The Title and Dignity of a Baron, to Colonel George Legg, of His Majesty's Privy-Council, and Master-General of the Ordnance, by the Name and Stile of Baron of Dartmouth. The same Title and Dignity of a Baron, to William Lord Allington, Constable of His Majesty's Tower of London, by the Name and Stile of Baron of Weymondley. His Majesty at the same time created the Honourable Colonel Churchill, John Lord Churchill of Aymouth in Scotland. And His Majesty observing the extraordinary Inclination with which his Grace the Duke of Monmouth had apply'd himself to Sea-Affairs, and the successful Progress he had made therein, to encourage this Disposition in him, was gra-1682. ciously pleas'd to conferr upon him the Office of Vice-Admiral of England, vacant by the Death of his Highness Prince Rupert; whose Offices of Constable and Governor of the Castle and Forest of Windsor, and Lord-Lieutenant of the Counties of Berks and Surrey, His Majesty conferr'd upon Henry Earl of Arundel, Son and Heir to his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, Earl-Marshal of England. After the Death of the Earl of Nottingham, His Majesty was pleas'd, on Wednesday Decemb. 20th, to commit the Custody of the Great-Seal to the Right Honourable Sir Francis North, Lord-Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, with the Title of Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal of England; and on Decemb. 22d, his Lordship was Sworn at the Council-Board, and took his Place as Lord-Keeper. On the same Day, the Lord-Chief-Justice Pemberton was Sworn of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council; and at the beginning of the next Term, was removed from the King's-Bench, to be Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas. Upon which His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Place of Lord-Chief-Justice of the King's-Bench upon Sir Edmund Sanders. On Jan. 1st, Humphry Mackworth and Thomas Montgomery, Esqrs; Treasurers of the Middle-Temple, with some Others of that Society, waited on His Majesty, to With him a happy New-Year, and in a very Loyal Speech express'd their Unanimous Resolutions to Adhere to their former Addresses: Which His Majesty was pleas'd to accept very graciously. They then paid the like Respect to the Duke, and were very kindly receiv'd by his Royal Highness: For which Compliments, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Humphry Mackworth, Esq; as a Mark of his Royal Favour to the Loyal Society of the Middle-Temple. On Jan. 28th, the Earl of Conway (with whose Services His Majesty was pleas'd to declare himself very well satisfy'd) resign'd his Place of one of His Majesty's Principal-Secretaries of State: And His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the same upon the Right-Honourable the Earl of Sunderland, who was Sworn in Council on the 31st of January. His Majesty was pleas'd, on Febr. 11th, to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon the Honourable Dudley North, Esq; one of the present Sheriffs for the City of London and County of Middlesex. On Febr. 28th, the Right-Honourable Theophilus Earl of Huntingdon, and Henry Earl of Peterborough, were Sworn of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council. About the middle of March, His Majesty was pleas'd, upon the Death of Sir Edward Carteret, to conferr the Place of Usher of the Black-Rod upon Thomas Duppa, Esq; Eldest Gentleman-Usher to His Majesty. And Henry Bullstrode, Esq; was Sworn into the vacant Place of one of His Majesty's Gentleman-Ushers Daily Waiters.

In Matters of Religion, His Majesty was pleas'd to assert his Supremacy in the Right of Appointing Publick Fasts and Thanksgivings, upon this frivolous Occasion: The Party most Zealous in Opposing Papery and the Duke's Succession, to show their Strength, and to improve it, had Appointed a Publick Meeting, with a Sermon, and a Dinner, as usual in many other Companies and Societies of Men; and they Invited their Guests, upon a Ticket in this Form: It having pleas'd Almighty God, by His Wonderful Providence, to Deliver and Protect His Majesty's Person, the Protestant Religion, and English Liberties (hitherto) from the Hellish and frequent Attempts of their Enemies (the Papiſts;) In Testimony of Thankfulness herein, and for the Preserving and Improving Mutual Love and Charity, among such as are sensible thereof, You are Desired to Meet many of the Loyal Protestant Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and Citizens, on Friday the 21st Day of this Instant April, 1682. at Ten of the Clock, at St. Michael's Church in Cornhill, there to hear a Sermon, and

Order of Council.

“ WHEREAS the Appointing of Publick Fasts and Thanksgivings, is Matter of State, and belongs only to His Majesty, by his Prerogative ; And His Majesty being informed, That in the City of London, Invitations have been made of great and unusual Numbers, by Printed Tickets, one of which is hereunto annex'd ; His Majesty looks upon the same as an Insolent Attempt, in manifest Derogation of his Right, and of Dangerous Consequence : The Matter of the said Invitation being of a Publick Nature, and the Manner of Carrying it on tending to Sedition, and raising Distinctions and Confederacies amongst his Subjects, against the known Laws and Peace of the Kingdom, His Majesty therefore, by the Advice of his Council, hath thought fit, and doth hereby strictly Charge and Command the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, as they will Answer the contrary at their Peril, to take immediate and effectual Care to Prevent and Hinder the said Meeting, as an Unlawful Assembly : And all Sheriffs, Constables, and other His Majesty's Officers in the said City, are hereby Commanded to be Aiding and Assisting therein.

While the Duke of York was in Scotland, he found his greatest Interest to be among the Highest of the Episcopal Party : For which reason he confin'd his Favours to them, and encourag'd them to be very severe upon the Presbyterians. Upon his Return into England, he thought proper to have Letters Testimonials from the Scotch Bishops, Directed to his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury ; which were immediately sent after him, and toward the end of April were thus publish'd by Authority.

EDENBURGH, March 9th, 1682.

May it Please Your Grace ;

The Duke of York brings Testimonials from the Scotch Bishops.

“ HIS Royal Highness having parted from hence on Monday last, being Call'd by the King to Attend His Majesty at New-Market ; We should prove very defective in Duty and Gratitude, if upon this Occasion we should forget to acknowledge to your Grace, how much this poor Church, and our Order, do owe to his Princely Care and Goodness, that His Majesty, and the Worthy Bishops of England, may from you receive the just Accounts thereof.

“ Since his Royal Highness's coming to this Kingdom, we find our Case much changed to the better, and our Church and Order (which through the Cunning and Power of their Adversaries were expoted to extreme Hazard and Contempt) sensibly Relieved and Rescued ; which, next to the Watchful Providence of God, (that mercifully superintends his Church) we can ascribe to nothing so much, as to his Royal Highness's gracious Owing and vigilant Protection of us.

“ Upon all Occasions, he gives fresh Instances of his eminent Zeal against the most unreasonable Schism, which by Renting, threatens the Subversion of our Church and Religion, and concerns himself as a Patron to us, in all our Publick and even Personal Interests ; so that all Men take Notice of his signal Kindness to us, and observe, that he looks upon the Enemies of the Church, as Adversaries to the Monarchy it self : Nor did we ever propose or offer to his Royal Highness any Rational Expedient, which might conduce for the Relief or Security of the Church, which he did not readily Embrace and Effectuate.

“ The Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom, is the Effect of his prudent and steady Conduct of Affairs ; and the Humours of our wicked Fanaticks are much restrained from dangerous Eruptions, upon their apprehensions of his Vigilance and Justice : For they dread nothing so much, as to see him upon the Head of His Majesty's Councils and Forces against them.

“ We hope your Grace will make our Dutiful Acknowledgment to his Royal Highness, for all his Princely Favours to us, and give him the most firm Assurance of our most sincere Endeavours to serve him, and of our most fervent Prayers for his Temporal and Eternal Happiness, as the bounden Duty of,

May it Please Your Grace,

Your Grace's most Humble and Faithful Servants,

Under the Duke's Protection, many of the Roman Catholics were Publickly Encourag'd and Preferr'd ; and some others of them acted a more secret Part, in assuming the Name of Protestants, and under that Disguise thrusting themselves into Places and Employments : Among these, one at least crept into a Cure of Souls, one John Duffey a Scotch-man, who obtained the Rectory of Raile in Essex, and who, upon Information of his Character given to the Council-Board, was sent for into Custody ; but on the 5th of December he made his Escape from one of His Majesty's Messengers. Upon which, it was the next Day Order'd by His Majesty in Council, “ That His Majesty's Messengers should make strict and diligent Search after him, and that all the Ports should be stoppt, in order to his being Apprehended ; and Publick Notice was given of him, to the Intent, “ That any Person that could Discover him, might cause him to be Secured, and carry'd before the next Justice of the Peace, in order to his being brought before the Board : He being describ'd to be a Tall Man, of a Fair Complexion, Full Eye, about Fifty Years of Age, &c. He had been Taken on the Sunday before, coming out of the House of a Foreign Ambassador at the time of Mass, and being carry'd before a Magistrate, the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy were tendred him ; which he refusing, was Committed to the Custody of that Messenger from whom he made his Escape, and was flying beyond-Sea : but on Thursday Decemb. 7. he was retaken at Rochester, and brought the next Morning before the Couucil ; where he again refusing to take the Oaths, he was, by Order of the Board, sent to the Lord-Chief-Justice of the King's-Bench, to be Proceeded against according to Law.

The Zeal against Popery, was now look'd upon to be only a Faction ; and those who were Eminent in it, were to be distinguish'd as Seditious Men, and Enemies to the King, and his Government. Upon this Rule of State, the Popular Rejoycings on the Fifth of November were to be prevented and suppress'd. But when it was impossible to restrain the Spirit of the People, the Court resolv'd to Punish it, for a Terror to others ; and therefore at the Sessions held in the beginning of December, at the Old-Bailey, several Appenices and Young Persons were Indicted, for having committed a Riot within the Citizens of London are Condemn'd, for a Riot.

On Tuesday the 8th of May several Persons were Try'd at the Old-Bailey, before the Lord Chief-Justice Sanders, for a pretended Riot and Assault made on Sir John Moore, Kt. the late Lord-Mayor, upon Midsummer-Day last, being the Day for Election of Sheriffs ; and after a long Tryal were found Gilty, and had these severe Fines imposed upon them : Thomas Pilkington 500 Pounds ; Samuel Sbute 1000 Marks ; Ford Lord Gray, and Henry Cornish, Alderman, the like Summ ; Sir Thomas Player 500 Marks ; Slingsby Eetzel, Esq; 1000 Marks ; Mr. Jenkes 300 Marks ; Mr. Deagle 400 Marks ; Mr. Freeman 300 Marks ; Mr. Jekyl 200 Marks ; Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Swinnock 500 Marks ; Mr. Keys and Mr. Wickham 100 Marks each. This Reckoning was inflam'd by a late Arrest of the present Lord-Mayor, the Sheriffs and several Aldermen, made at the Suits of Mr. Papilion and Mr. Dubois, who claim'd a Right of being Legally Elected Sheriffs the last Year. Which was thought to be such an Insult upon the Friends of the King and Court, that the City were forc'd to Disclaim the Action, by this Order in Common-Council, on the 22d of May :

The Lord-Mayor Arrested.

“ W Hereas Sir William Prichard, Kt. Lord-Mayor of this City, was in a rude manner lately Arrested, at the Suit, or in the Name of Mr. Papilion and Mr. Dubois ; And whereas it hath been alledged by the said Mr. Papilion and Mr. Dubois, That the Action upon which the said Arrest was, was Prosecuted at the Instance of the Citizens of London : The Members of this Court, to deliver themselves and the said Citizens from this untrue Imputation, do Declare, That they were not Privy or Consenting to the said Action and Arrest, and do Disown and Disapprove the same.

These Distractions of the City hasten'd the Loss of their Charter, and their Constitution : For on June 12. the Court of King's-Bench, in the absence of the Lord Chief-Justice, gave Judgment for the King upon the Quo Warranto, That the Franchises and Liberties of the City of London be seized into the King's Hands. But Judge Jones was pleas'd to say, “ That by the King's Special Command, Judgment should not be entred till His Majesty's Pleasure were further known.” This was generally look'd upon to make the Citizens Resign their own Liberties, instead of being Condemned to a Deprivation of them. On Monday the 18th of June, a Petition of the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Commons, was presented to His Majesty in Council, confessing themselves most heartily and unfeignedly Sorry for the Misgovernment of the City of late Years, whereby the Citizens had fallen under His Majesty's Displeasure, and Judgment had been pronounc'd against them, acknowledging the great Favour of His Majesty's not requiring Judgment to be immediately entred thereupon ; and considering this their Distressed Condition, they humbly cast themselves at his Royal Feet, imploring his Princely Compassion and Grace to be extended to this his Ancient City, most humbly begging His Majesty's Pardon for all their Offences, and promising to Submit themselves to His Majesty's good Pleasure. After the Reading this Petition, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens were Commanded to Withdraw : And being again call'd in, the Lord-Keeper, in a Speech, told them, That His Majesty would still show the City all the Favour they could reasonably desire ; and though he had obtained Judgment in a Quo War- ranto, it was not his Intention to prejudice them in their Properties or Customs. That the City had not been well Advis'd, to Deferr their Application to His Majesty thus long, even till the Court had pronounc'd Judgment : It might have been done with much better Grace, if it had been more early. However, His Majesty would not reject their Suit, if they agreed upon the Particulars the King did now require of them : For (says he) His Majesty requires your Submission to these Regulations :

Judgment given upon the Quo Warranto.

1. “ That no Lord-Mayor, Sheriff, Recorder, Common-Serjeant, Town-Clerk, or Coroner of the City of London, or Steward of the Borough of Southwark, shall be capable of, or admitted to the Exercise of their respective Offices, before His Majesty shall have Approved them under his Sign-Manual.
2. “ That if His Majesty shall Disapprove the Choice of any Person to be Lord-Mayor, and signifie the same under his Sign-Manual to the Lord-Mayor, or, in default of a Lord-Mayor, to the Recorder, or Senior Alderman ; the Citizens shall within one Week proceed to a New Choice : And if His Majesty shall in like manner Disapprove the Second Choice, His Majesty may, if He Please, Nominate a Person to be Lord-Mayor for the ensuing Year.
3. “ If His Majesty shall, in like manner, Disapprove the Persons Chosen to be Sheriffs, or either of them ; His Majesty may Appoint Persons to be Sheriffs for the ensuing Year, by his Commission, if he so Please.

The Lord-Keeper told them, That these Regulations being made, His Majesty would not only Pardon this Prosecution, but Confirm their Charter in such manner as may be consistent with them : concluding thus ; My Lord-Mayor, The Term draws toward an end, and Midsummer-Day is at hand, when some of the Officers use to be Chosen, whereof His Majesty will reserve the Approbation ; Therefore, It is His Majesty's Pleasure, That you return to the City, and Consult the Common-Council, that He may speedily know your Resolutions hereupon, and accordingly give His Directions. That you may see the King is in Earnest, and the Matter is not capable of Delay, I am Commanded to let you know, He hath given Order to His Attorney-General to Enter up Judgment on Saturday next, unless you prevent it by your Compliance in all these Particulars. A Common-Council was held at their return, to Consider of these Proposals ; And the Question being put, Whether they should Assent, and Submit to His Majesty's Order of Regulations ? It was carry'd in the Affirmative, by a Majority of Eighteen Voices : And this Submission was Presented to His Majesty on the 21st of June.

A Submission made

These evident Violations of Liberty and Property, improved by the nearer Prospects of Popery, had provoked many of the Nobility and Gentry to enter into some Measures of stopping the Torrent of the Court, and providing, if possible, for the Enjoyment of their Establish'd Laws and Religion. This was the true Rise of what they call'd the Fanatick Plot, first Discover'd by one Keeling, who gave a long and confused Narrative of it, only naming some mean Persons, and charging three several Designs ; one, Of Surprizing the Guards ; another, Of Murdering the King and the Duke of York at the Rye-House, as they were to pass by from New-Market ; and a third, Of an Insurrection at Black-Heath, upon a Match at Foot-ball there appointed. Upon this Discovery, a Proclamation was publish'd for the Apprehending Colonel John Rumsey, Richard Rumbold, Malster, Richard Nelthorpe, Esq; Edward Wade, Gent. Richard Goodenough, Gent. Capt. Walcott, William Thompson, James Burton, and William Hone, Joiner. Upon this Proclamation, Colonel John Rumsey, for a Pardon and Reward, Surrendered himself the next Day,

Charge of a Fanatick Plot.

1683. Day, and was Examined by Mr. Secretary Jenkins, and made a large Confession; which was soon confirm'd, by the Information of Mr. Robert West and Mr. Sheppard: so that on June 28th, another Proclamation was issued for the Apprehending of James Duke of Monmouth, Ford Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Kt. and Robert Ferguson, a Fanatick Teacher. The Duke of Monmouth had been the last Summer Diverting himself in the Country, with Sir Thomas Armstrong in his Company: In his Return toward London, he was taken into Custody of a Searjeant at Arms at Stafford. The Duke receiv'd the Message with great Presence of Mind, and went along with the Serjeant to London, and offer'd himself to Mr. Secretary Jenkins to be Examined, provided there were others of the Council present: But the Secretary refusing to let any of the Lords attend, the Duke would not be Question'd by him; so the Secretary Order'd a second Warrant to be drawn, for the Messenger's keeping him in longer Custody, which he did from Saturday till Monday, and then the Duke was Bail'd before Judge Raymond: His Bail were the Earl of Clare, the Lord Gray, the Lord Russell, William-Levison Gower, Esq; and John Offley, Esq. The first Day of the Term he made his Appearance at the King's-Bench-Bar, according to his Recognizance, and Clear'd his Bail. He was now very unwilling to come into Custody again, and therefore Withdrew, as soon as the Proclamation came out for Apprehending of him. As to Ferguson, he had the Art of Escaping, in a manner thus related by a Modern Writer: "Here I cannot omit acquainting the Reader, that Ferguson was always look'd upon as the more Dangerous Plotter, one that gave the bloodiest Counsels of all that were in the Confederacy; and yet when this Warrant was deliver'd to Mr. Legat the Messenger, to seize the rest of the Offenders, Mr. Secretary Jenkins gave Legat a strict Command, not to take Ferguson, but to shun him where-e'er he met him, and if he should happen to find him in Company among the rest, he should suffer him to escape: Which is such a Mystery, that can never be unriddl'd, without believing him to be a State-Intelligencer, to betray the rest of the Confederates. This Relation I had from several Gentlemen of known Credit; but being unwilling to publish it upon Hear-say, I ask'd Mr. Legat himself about it, who is yet living, and a Messenger in this Reign, and he assur'd me of the Truth of it, as it is above related from his own Mouth, and who will still justify it to any Man, whose Curiosity leads him to make further Enquiry about it.

Character of Robert Ferguson.

Lord Howard of Escrick.

The Lord Howard of Escrick had been formerly Committed Close-Prisoner to the Tower, upon Information given by Fitz-Harris's Wife, That he was concern'd in Writing that Libel for which her Husband was Executed. This Noble Peer had join'd with the Whig-Party in the House of Lords, and had heard them talk many things with a Liberty common to Discontented Men: Which gave him an Opportunity of being capable to be made an Evidence; and it was said, That the Dutchess of Portsmouth did now reconcile him to the Court, upon Condition He should go through the Drudgery of Swearing. And upon this Encouragement, he soon became (as Sir John Hawles calls him) a Thorough-pac'd Evidence: And upon his Information, Warrants for High-Treason were issued out against the Earl of Essex, the Lord Russell, and others. The Earl of Essex not offering to Abscond, was presently confin'd Prisoner in the Tower, where, soon after, he was found with his Throat Cut by a Razor. This rais'd a Suspicion of his being Murder'd; and these Circumstances happen'd, to confirm it: The King and the Duke of York were at that very time within the Tower, where they had not been for near fifteen Years before. Before the Jury was Inpanell'd to make an Inquest upon this Fact, the Earl's Body was taken out of the Closet where the Fact was committed, and stript of the Cloaths, which were carry'd away, and the Closet wash't; and when one of the Jury insisted to see my Lord's Cloaths in which he Died, the Coroner was sent for into another Room, and upon his return he told the Jury, It was the Body, and not the Cloaths they were to Sit upon. After this, a Motion being made, That the Jury should Adjourn, and give Notice to my Lord's Relations, That if they had any thing material to Discover, they should do it within such a time; It was Answer'd, That the King had sent for the Inquisition, and would not rise from the Council-Board till it was brought. There was another unlucky Circumstance that gave a greater Loose to the Tongues of People, which was, that it happen'd on the very same Morning when my Lord Russell was upon his Tryal; and particular Care was taken to give immediate Notice of it to the Court at the Old-Bailey: And the King's Council made a direct Use of it to Confirm the Plot, and to Condemn the Lord Russell, as the more apparently Guilty of it. But notwithstanding these Presumptions, and the Offer of alledging many more; it was rather taken for granted, that the Earl of Essex, from a Greatness of Spirit, had laid Violent Hands on himself; and it is said, that his Nearest Relations were of that Opinion. The King himself seem'd to be very much Concern'd at the Misfortune, and said thus, My Lord of Essex needed not to have Despair'd of Mercy, for I Ow'd him a Life.

1683.

On Thursday July 12. Capt. Thomas Walcott was brought to his Tryal upon this Plot, and was found Guilty of High-Treason, In Conspiring the Death of His Majesty, and Preparing Money and Arms, in order to an Insurrection for the Subversion of the Government. The next Day, William Lord Russell, William Hone, and John Rouse, were Indicted for the same Crimes, and found Guilty. On July 20. Walcott, Rouse and Hone were Drawn upon Sledges to Tybourn, and there Hang'd and Quarter'd: And on the next Day, Sentence of Death was likewise Executed upon William Lord Russell, by Severing his Head from his Body, upon a Scaffold erected for that Purpose in Lincolns-Inn-Fields, where he deliver'd a Paper to one of the Sheriffs, with this short Speech to him:

The Lord Russell Executed.

Mr. Sheriff;

I Expected the Noise would be such, that I cou'd not be very well heard: I was never very fond of much Speaking, much less now; therefore I have set down in this Paper, all that I think fit to leave behind me. God knows, how far I was always from Designs against the King's Person, or of Altering the Government; and I still Pray for the Preservation of both, and of the Protestant Religion.

His Lordship's Speech & Paper.

I am told, that Capt. Walcott has said something concerning my Knowledge of the Plot: I know not whether the Report be true or no, but I hope it is not; for, to my knowledge, I never saw him, to speak with him, in my whole Life: And in the Words of a Dying Man, I know of no Plot, either against the King's Life, or the Government. But I have now done with this World, and am going to a Better. I Forgive all the World; and, I Thank God, I Die in Charity with all Men: And I Wish all sincere Protestants may Love one another, and not make Room for Popery, by their Animosities.

1683. The PAPER deliver'd by the Lord RUSSELL to the Sheriffs.

" I Thank God, I find my self so Compos'd
 " and Prepared for Death, and my Thoughts
 " so fix'd on Another World, that I hope in God,
 " I am quite from setting my Heart on This;
 " yet I cannot forbear now the setting down in " Writing, a farther Account of my Condition,
 " to be left behind me, than I will venture to say
 " at the Place of Execution, in the Noise and " Clutter that is like to be there. I bless God " heartily, for those many Blessings which He, in " his Infinite Mercy has bestow'd upon me, through " the whole Course of my Life: That I was Born
 " of Worthy Good Parents, and had the Advan" tages of a Religious Education, which are " invaluable Blessings; for, even when I minded
 " it least, it still hung about me, and gave me
 " Checks; and has now, for many Years, so " influenc'd and possess'd me, that I feel the " happy Effects of it in this my Extremity; in " which I have been so wonderfully (I thank " God) supported, that neither my Imprisonment,
 " nor Fear of Death, have been able to Discompose
 " me in any degree; but, on the contrary, I have " found the Assurances of the Love and Mercy of " God, in and through my Blessed Redeemer, in " whom only I Trust: And I do not question
 " but I am going to partake of that Fulness of " Joy which is in his Presence: The Hopes there" fore do so wonderfully Delight me, that I think " this is the Happiest Time of my Life, tho' others " may look upon it as the Saddest.

" I have lived, and now am of the Reformed " Religion, a True and Sincere Protestant, and in " the Communion of the Church of England;
 " tho' I could never yet comply with, or rise up to " all the Heights of many People. I With with " all my Soul all our Differences were remov'd;
 " and that all Sincere Protestants would so far
 " Consider the Danger of Pepery, as to lay aside
 " their Heats, and Agree against the Common " Enemy; and that the Church-men would be " less Severe, and the Dissenters less Scrupulous;
 " for I think, Bitterness and Persecution are at " all times bad, but much more now.

" For Pepery, I look on it as an Idolatrous
 " and Bloody Religion; and therefore thought
 " my self bound, in my Station, to do all I could " against it: And by that, I foresaw I should " procure such Great Enemies to my self, and " so Powerful One's, that I have been now, for " some time, Expecting the Worst; and blessed " be God, I fall by the Axe, and not by " the Fiery Tryal: Yet, whatever Apprehen" sions I had of Pepery, and of my own severe " and heavy Share I was like to have un" der it, when it should prevail, I never had a " Thought of doing any thing against it Basely,
 " or Inhumanly, but what would consist with " the Christian Religion, and the Laws and Liber" ties of this Kingdom: And I thank God, I " have Examind all my Actions in that Matter " with so great Care, that I can appeal to God
 " Almighty, who knows my Heart, that I went " on Sincerely, without being mov'd either by " Passion, Bye-Ends, or Ill Designs. I have al" ways Lov'd my Country much more than my " Life; and never had any Design of Changing " the Government, which I value, and look upon " as one of the best Governments in the World,
 " and would always have been ready to venture
 " my Life for the Preserving it; and would suffer " any Extremity, rather than have Consented to " any Design of taking away the King's Life;
 " neither had any Man the Impudence to Propose " so Base and Barbarous a Thing to me: And " I look upon it as a very Unhappy and Uneasie 1682.

 " part of my present Condition, that there should " be so much as mention made of so Vile a Fact,
 " though nothing in the least was said to Prove " any such Matter; but the contrary, by my Lord
 " Howard: neither does Any Body, I am confident, " believe the least of it: So that I need not, I " think, say more.

" For the King, I do sincerely Pray for Him,
 " and With Well to Him, and the Nation; That " that They may be Happy in one another; That " He may be indeed the Defender of the Faith;
 " That the Protestant Religion, and the Peace
 " and Safety of the Kingdom may be preserv'd " and flourish under His Government, and that " Himself, in his Person, may be Happy both " here and hereafter.

" As for the Share I had in the Prosecution " of the Papish Plot, I take God to Witness, that " I proceeded in it in the Sincerity of my Heart,
 " being then really convinc'd (as I am still)
 " that that there was a Conspiracy against the " King, the Nation, and the Protestant Religion:
 " And I likewise profess, That I never knew any " thing, directly or indirectly, of any Practice " with the Witnesses; which I look upon as so " Horrid a Thing, that I never could have en" dured it: For, I thank God, Falshood and " Cruelty were never in my Nature, but always " the farthest from it imaginable. I did believe,
 " and do still, that Pepery is breaking in upon
 " this Nation; and that those that Advance it,
 " will stop at nothing to Carry on their Design.
 " I am heartily sorry that so many Protestants
 " give their helping Hand to it: But I hope " God will preserve the Protestant Religion, and " this Nation; though I am afraid it will fall " under very great Trials, and very sharp Suf" ferings: And indeed, the Impiety and Pro" phaneness that abounds, and appears so scan" dalously bare-fac'd every where, gives too just " Occasion to fear the Worst thing that can befall
 " a People. I pray God prevent it, and give " those who have shew'd a Concern for the Pub" lick Good, and have appear'd Heartly for the " True Interest of the Nation, and the Protestant " Religion, Grace to Live so, that they may not " cast a Reproach on that which they endeavour " to Advance; which (God knows) has often " given me sad Thoughts: And I hope, such of my " Friends as may think they are Touch'd by this,
 " will not take what I say in Ill Part, but will " endeavour to Amend their Ways, and Live " suitable to the Rules of the True Reformed Re" ligion; which is the only Thing that can ad" minister True Comfort at the Latter-end, and " relieve a Man when he comes to Die.

" As for my present Condition, I bless God,
 " I have no Repining in my Heart at it; I know,
 " for my Sins, I have deserved much worse at the " Hands of God; so that I cheerfully submit to " so small a Punishment, as the being taken off
 " a few Years sooner, and the being made a " Spectacle to the World. I do freely Forgive
 " all the World, particularly those concern'd in " taking away my Life; and I desire and conjure
 " all my Friends to think of no Revenge, but to " submit to the Holy Will of God, into whose " Hands I resign my self intirely.

" But to look back a little; I cannot but give " some Touch about the Bill of Exclusion, and " shew the Reasons of my appearing in that Busi" ness; which, in short, is this: That I thought
 " the Nation in such Danger of Pepery, and that " the Expectation of a Papish Successor (as I have " said in Parliament) put the King's Life like" wise in much Danger, that I saw no Way so " effectual to Secure both, as such a Bill. As " to the Limitations that were Propos'd, if they " were sincerely Offer'd, and had Pass'd into a " Law,

1683. " Law, the Duke then should have been Excluded " from the Power of a King, and the Government
 " quite altered, and little more than the Name of a " King left : So I could not see either Sin or Fault
 " in the one, when all People were willing to admit
 " of the other ; but thought it better to have a King
 " with his Prerogative, and the Nation Easie and " Safe under him, than a King without it ; which bred " perpetual Jealousies, and a continual Struggle.
 " All this I say, only to Justifie my self, and not to " Inflame others ; though I cannot but think my " Earnestness in that Matter, has had no small " Influence in my present Sufferings. But I " have now done with this World, and am going " to a Kingdom which cannot be moved.

" And as to the Conspiring to Seize the Guards,
 " which is the Crime for which I am Condemn'd,
 " and which is made a Constructive Treason for " taking away the King's Life, to bring it within " the Statute of Edward III. I shall give this true " and clear Account. I never was at Mr. Shep- " ppard's with that Company, but once, and there " was no Undertaking then of Securing or Seizing
 " the Guards, nor none appointed to View, or " Examine them : Some Discourse there was, of " the Feasibleness of it ; and several times, by " Accident in general Discourse elsewhere, I have " heard it mention'd as a thing might easily be " done, but never Consented to, as a thing fit to " be done : And I remember particularly, at my " Lord Shaftsbury's, there being some general
 " Discourse of this kind, I immediately flew out,
 " and exclaim'd against it, and ask'd, If the thing
 " succeeded, what must be done next, but Mastering
 " the Guards, and Killing them in Cold-blood ?
 " Which I look'd upon as a Detestable thing,
 " and so like a Papish Practice, that I could not " but Abhor it. And at the same time, the " Duke of Monmouth took me by the Hand, and " told me very kindly, My Lord, I see you and " I are of a Temper ; Did you ever hear so Horrid
 " a thing ? And I must needs do him Justice, to " declare, that I ever observ'd in him an Abhor-" rence of all Base things.

" As to my going to Mr. Sheppard's, I went with " an Intention to taste Sherry ; for he had prom-
 " is'd to reserve for me the next very good Piece
 " he met with, when I went out of Town ; and " if he recollects himself, he may remember I
 " ask'd him about it, and he went and fetch'd a " Bottle ; but when I tasted it, I said, It was " Hot in the Mouth, and desired, that whenever " he met with a Choice Piece, he would keep it " for me : Which he promised. I enlarge the " more upon this, because Sir George Jeffreys
 " insinuated to the Jury, as if I had made a " Story, about going thither : But I never said " that was the only Reason, and I will now
 " truly and plainly add you the rest.

" I was, the Day before this Meeting, come " to Town for two or three Days, as I had done
 " once or twice before, having a very Near and Dear
 " Relation lying in a Languishing and Desperate " Condition : And the Duke of Monmouth came to " me, and told me, He was extremely glad I was " come to Town ; for my Lord Shaftsbury, and " some Hot Men, would Undoe us all. — How " so, my Lord ? (I said.) — Why (answer'd
 " he) they will certainly do some Disorderly thing
 " or other, if great Care be not taken ; and there- " fore, for God's sake, use your Endeavour with " your Friends to prevent any thing of this kind.
 " He told me, there would be Company at " Mr. Sheppard's that Night, and desired me to " be at Home in the Evening, and he would call " me ; which he did. And when I came into the " Room, I saw Mr. Rumsey by the Chimney, " though he Swears he came in afterward ; and " there were Things said by some, with much 1683. " more Heat than Judgment, which I did sufficient" ly Disapprove ; And yet, for these Things I stand

 " Condemn'd : But I thank God, my Part was Sin" cere, and Well-meant. It is, I know, inferred " from hence, and press'd to me, That I was ac" quainted with these Heats, and Ill Designs, and " did not Discover them : But this could be but " Misprision of Treason at most ; so I Die Innocent " of the Crime I stand Condemn'd for. I hope,
 " no-Body will imagine that so mean a Thought " should enter into me, as to go about to Save
 " my self, by Accusing others : The Part that " some have Acted lately of that kind, has not " been such as to invite me to love Life at such " a Rate.

" As for the Sentence of Death pass'd upon " me, I cannot but think it a very hard one ; for " nothing was Sworn against me (whether true or " false, I will not now examine) but some Discourses " about making some Stirs. And this is not " Levying War against the King, which is Treason,
 " by the Statute of Edw. III. and not the Con" sulting and Discourging about it, which was all " that is Witnessed against me : But by a strange " Fetch, the Design of Seizing the Guards, was " constru'd, a Design of Killing the King ; and so " I was in that Cast.

" And now I have truly and sincerely told " what my Part was, in that which cannot be more " than a bare Misprision ; and yet I am Condemn'd, " as Guilty of a Design of Killing the King. I " pray God lay not this to the Charge, neither " of the King, Council, nor Judges, nor Sheriffs
 " nor Jury : And for the Witnesses, I Pity them,
 " and Wish them Well : I shall not reckon up
 " the Particulars wherein they did me Wrong,
 " I had rather their own Consciences would do " that ; to which, and the Mercies of God, I leave " them : Only I shall averr, That what I said,
 " of my not hearing Col. Rumsey deliver any " Message from my Lord Shaftsbury, was True ;
 " for I always detested Lying, though never so " much to my Advantage ; And I hope None
 " will be so Unjust and Uncharitable, as to think
 " I would venture on it in these my Last Words, " for which I am so soon to give an Account to " the Great God, the Searcher of Hearts, and " Judge of all Things.

" From the Time of Chusing Sheriffs, I con" cluded, the Heat in that Matter, would produce " something of this kind ; and I am not much
 " surpriz'd, to find it fall upon me : And I wish,
 " what is done to me, may put a stop, and " satiate some Peoples Revenge, and that no more " Innocent Blood be shed ; for I must and do still " look upon mine to be such, since I know I " was Guilty of no Treason ; and therefore I " would not betray my Innocency by Flight,
 " (though much press'd to it,) of which I do " not, I thank God, yet repent, how fatal soever
 " it may have seem'd to have proved to me :
 " for I look'd upon my Death in this manner
 " (I thank God) with other Eyes than the " World does. I know I said but little at the " Tryal, and I suppose it looks more like Inno" cence than Guilt : I was also advis'd, not to " confess Matter of Fact plainly, since that cer" tainly must have brought me within the Guilt
 " of Misprision ; and being thus restrain'd from " dealing frankly and openly, I chose rather to " say little, than to depart from that Ingenuity,
 " that, by the Grace of God, I had carry'd along " with me, in the former part of my Life ; and " so could easier be silent, and leave the whole " Matter to the Consciences of the Jury, than to " make the Best and Solemnest part of my Life,
 " so different from the Course of it, as the using " little Tricks and Evasions must have been. Nor " did I ever pretend to any great Readiness in " Speaking ;

1683.

“ Speaking ; I with those Gentlemen of the Law, who have it, would make more Conscience in the Use of it, and not run Men down, and, by Strains and Fetches, Impose on Easie and Willing Juries, to the Ruine of Innocent Men : For to Kill by Forms and Subtilties of the Law, is the worst sort of Murther : But I with the Rage of Hot Men, and the Partiality of Juries, may be stopp'd with my Blood ; which I would offer up with so much the more Joy, if I thought I should be the Last that were to Suffer in such a Way.

“ Since my Sentence, I have had but few Thoughts, but Preparatory ones for Death ; yet the Inportunity of my Friends, and particularly the Best and Dearest Wife in the World, prevaild with me to Sign Petitions, and make an Address for my Life ; to which I was ever averse : For (I thank God) though in all Respects I have liv'd the Happiest and Contentedst Man of the World (for now very near Fourteen Years,) yet I am so willing to leave All, that it was not without Difficulty that I did any thing for the Saving of my Life, that was Begging ; but I was willing to let my Friends see what Power they had over me, and that I was not Obstinate nor Sullen, but would do any thing that an Honest Man could do, for their Satisfaction ; which was the only Motive that sway'd, or had any weight with me.

“ And now to Sum up all ; As I had not any Design against the King's Life, or the Life of any Man whatsoever, so I never was in any Contrivance of Altering the Government. What the Heats, Passions and Vanities of other Men have occasion'd, I ought not to be responsible for ; nor could I Help them, though I now Suffer for them. But the Will of the Lord be done, into whose Hands I commend my Spirit ; — And trust, that Thou, O most Merciful Father, hast forgiven all my Transgressions, the Sins of my Youth, and all the Errors of my past Life ; and that Thou wilt not lay my secret Sins and Ignorances to my Charge, but wilt Graciously Support me, during that small Time of Life now before me, and Assist me in my Last Moments, and not leave me then to be Disorder'd by Fear, or any other Temptations, but make the Light of Thy Countenance to shine upon me : Thou art my Sun, and my Shield ; and as Thou Supportest me by thy Grace, so I hope Thou wilt hereafter Crown me with Glory, and receive me into the Fellowship of Angels and Saints, in that blessed Inheritance purchased for me by my Most Merciful Redeemer, who is, I trust, at thy Right-Hand, preparing a Place for me, and is ready to receive me ; into whose Hands I commend my Spirit.

In the beginning of August, a Description was given, and a Reward promised, for the Discovery of these Conspirators that fled ; Richard and Francis Goodenough, Richard Nelthorpe, Nathanael Wade, Joseph Tye, Stephen Lebb, Hugh Westlach, Edward Norton, John Rowe, John Ayleffe, and Robert Ferguson, of whom this last was thus described, A Tall Lean Man, Dark-brown Hair, a great Roman Nose, Thin Jaw'd, Heat in his Face, speaks in the Scotch Tone, a Sharp Piercing Eye, Stoops a little in the Shoulders ; he hath a Shuffling Gate that differs from all Men, wears his Perriwig down almost over his Eyes, about 45 or 46 Years old.

Under a vigorous pursuit of this Plot, the Honourable Colonel Algernon Sidney was taken up, not directly for a Plotter, but for a Republican, and a Fanatick : He lay some time in the Tower, and was brought thence, by Habeas Corpus, on the 7th of November, to the King's-Bench-Bar, where he was Arraign'd, upon an Indictment of High-Treason, in Conspiring the Death of the King, and Levying War against His Majesty. To which he Pleaded, Not Guilty, and desired a Fortnight's time for his Tryal ; which being granted, he came to his said Tryal on the 21st of November, and was found Guilty. He was known to be a Person of Excellent Parts, and Political Knowledge ; and yet he was observ'd to say very little in his own Defence, as believing, whatever he shou'd say, wou'd signifie nothing with that Judicature, who he thought had already Prejudg'd him : And so it was really, in effect. For as the learned Sir J. Hawles has well remark'd, “ He was meerly Talk'd to Death, under the Notion of a Commonwealth's-man ; and found Guilty, by a Jury who were not much more proper Judges in the Case, than they would have been, if what he had wrote, had been done by him in Syriac or Arabick. It's Observable, The Indictment against him was never Presented to the Grand-Jury before they came into the Hall, and yet they found it immediately. The greatest part of the Evidence (as it was in my Lord Russell's Case) was only Hear-say ; and West, whose Evidence was once rejected, was now admitted to tell a long Story of what he had heard by Common Fame, and in mix'd Conversation. My Lord Howard was Rhetorical even to Pedantry, upon the Matter, according to his vain Custom. The two chief Articles against him, were, his sending a Messenger into Scotland, to Invite them into a Rebellion ; And his Writing a Treasonable Libel, found in his Closet, upon the Original and Forms of Govern-ment.”

As to the first Fact, The Prisoner absolutely Deny'd it. As to the other, he Answer'd, That if the Papers were his, they might be Written long since, in Answer to Sir Robert Filmer's Book, for his own Diversion, and not for Publication. But one of the Council warmly urged this new Axiom in Law, Scribere est Agere, and cited this Passage out of the said Writing ; The King is subject to the Law of God, as he is a Man ; and to the People that made him such, as a King : And further Argued, That the said Author had maliciously produced several Examples, how some Evil Princes had been sometimes Destroyed by a Popular Fury, and others had been Depos'd. It was never so much as proved to be his Hand-Writing : But whatever the Writing of those Papers was then thought to be, the Printing of them has been since found to be Safe and Legal, and they are no more than an Essay upon Government, with a strong Byas to a Commonwealth. The Lord-Chief-Justice Jeffreys shou'd himself an angry Party against him ; for without any Regard to the Noble Family of the Earls of Leicester, and to the Name of the Sidney's, he was pleas'd to tell the Jury, that the Prisoner was Born a Traytor. After his Condemnation, he is said to have despis'd the way of Petitioning to His Majesty about the Disposal of his Body : But by the Application of his Friends, he had the Honour, on the 7th of December, to Die upon a Scaffold erected on Tower-Hill, where he made this SPEECH :

Men, Brethren and Fathers ; Friends, Countrymen and Strangers ;

“ IT may be expected that I should now say some great Matters unto you : But the Rigour of the Season, and the Infirmities of my Age, encreas'd by a close Imprisonment of above five Months, doth not permit me.
“ Moreover, we live in an Age that maketh Truth pass for Treason : I dare not say any thing contrary unto it ; and the Ears of those that are about me, will probably be found too tender 1683.

Algernon Sidney's hard Usage.

His Dying Speech.

1683. "tender to hear it. My Tryal and Condemnation doth sufficiently evidence this.

"West, Rumsey, and Keyling, who were brought to Prove the Plot, said no more of me, than that they knew me not; And some others, equally known unto me, had used my Name, and that of some others, to give a little Reputation unto their Designs. The Lord Howard is too Infamous by his Life, and the many Perjuries not to be denied, or rather Sworn by himself, to deserve mention; and being a Single Witness, would be of no Value, though he had been of an unblemish'd Credit, or had not seen and confess'd that the Crimes committed by him, would be pardon'd, only for committing more; and even the Pardon promis'd, could not be obtain'd till the Drudgery of Swearing was over.

"This being laid aside, the whole Matter is reduc'd to the Papers said to be found in my Closet by the King's Officers, without any other Proof of their being Written by me, than what is taken from the Supposition upon the Similitude of an Hand, that is easily Counterfeit'd, and which have been lately Declar'd, in the Lady Cas's Case, to be no Lawful Evidence in Criminal Causes.

"But, if I had been seen to Write them, the Matter would not be much altered; They plainly appear to relate unto a large Treatise written long since, in Answer to Filmer's Book, which, by all Intelligent Men, is thought to be grounded upon wicked Principles, equally pernicious unto Magistrates and People.

"If he might publish unto the World his Opinion, That all Men are born, under a Necessity, derived from the Laws of God and Nature, to submit unto an Absolute Kingly Government, which could be restrain'd by no Law or Oath; and that he that hath the Power, whether he came unto it by Creation, Election, Inheritance, Usurpation, or any other Way, had the Right; none must oppose his Will, but the Persons and Estates of his Subjects must be indispensably subject unto it: — I know not why I might not have publish'd my Opinion to the contrary, without the Breach of any Law I have yet known.

"I might, as freely as he, publicly have declared my Thoughts, and the Reasons upon which they were grounded: And I am persuaded to believe, That God had left Nations unto the Liberty of Setting up Governments as best pleas'd themselves.

"That Magistrates were Set up for the Good of Nations, not Nations for the Honour or Glory of the Magistrates.

"That the Right and Power of Magistrates in every Country, was that which the Laws of that Country made it be.

"That those Laws were to be observ'd; And the Oaths taken by them, having the Force of a Contract between Magistrate and People, could not be violated without danger of dissolving the whole Fabrick.

"That Usurpation could give no Right; And the most Dangerous of all Enemies to Kings, were they, who raising their Power to an Exorbitant Height, allow'd unto Usurpers all the Rights belonging unto it.

"That such Usurpations being seldom compass'd without the Slaughter of the Reigning Person or Family, the worst of all Villainies was thereby rewarded with the most glorious Privileges.

"That if such Doctrines were received, they would stir up Men to the Destruction of Princes, with more Violence than all the Passions that have hitherto rag'd in the Hearts of the most Unruly.

1683. "That None could be safe, if such a Reward were propos'd unto any that could Destroy them.

"That few would be so Gentle, as to spare even the Best; if, by their Destruction, one, of a Wild Usurper, could become God's Anointed; and by the most execrable Wickedness, invest himself with that divine Character. —

"This is the Scope of the whole Treatise; the Writer gives such Reasons, as at present did occur unto him, to Prove it. This seems to agree with the Doctrines of the most Reverenc'd Authors of all Times, Nations and Religions: The Best and Wisest Kings have ever acknowledg'd it. The present King of France hath declared, That Kings have that happy Want of Power, that they can do nothing contrary unto the Laws of their Country: and grounds his Quarrel with the King of Spain, Anno 1667. upon that Principle. King James, in his Speech to the Parliament, Anno 1603. doth in the highest degree assert it: The Scriptures seem to declare it. If nevertheless the Writer was mistaken, he might have been refuted by Law, Reason and Scripture; and no Man, for such Matters, was ever otherwise Punish'd, than by being made to see his Error: And it hath not (as I think) been known, that they had been referred to the Judgment of a Jury, compos'd of Men utterly unable to comprehend them.

"But there was little of this in my Case; the Extravagance of my Persecutors goes higher: The above-mention'd Treatise was never finish'd, nor could be in many Years, and most probably would never have been. So much as is of it, was written long since, never review'd, nor shew'd unto any Man; and not the Fiftieth part of it was produced, and not the Tenth of that afforded to be read. That which was never known unto those who are said to have Conspir'd with me, was said to be intended to stir up the People, in Prosecution of the Designs of those Conspirators.

"When nothing of particular Application unto Time, Place, or Person, could be found in it, (as hath ever been done by those who endeavoured to raise Insurrections,) all was supply'd by Innuendo's.

"Whatsoever is said of the Expulsion of Tarquin, the Insurrection against Nero, the Slaughter of Caligula or Domitian, the Translation of the Crown of France from Merovius's Race unto Pepin, and from his Descendants, unto Hugh Capet, and the like, are applied, by Innuendo, unto the King.

"They have not consider'd, that if such Acts of State be not good, there is not a King in the World that has any Title to that Crown he wears; nor can have any, unless he could deduce his Pedigree from the Eldest Son of Noah, and shew that the Succession had still continu'd in the Eldest of the Eldest Line, and been so deduced to him.

"Every One may see what Advantage this would be to all the Kings of the World; and whether, that failing, it were not better for them to acknowledge they had receiv'd their Crown by the Consent of Willing Nations; or to have no better Title unto them than Usurpation and Violence, which by the same Ways may be taken from them.

"But I was long since told, That I must Die, or the Plot must Die.

"Left the Means of Destroying the best Protestants in England should fail, the Bench must be fill'd with such as had been Blemishes to the Bar.

"None but such as These would have advis'd with the King's Council, of the Means of bringing

On the last Day of Michaelmas-Term, the Lord Brandon Gerard, Mr. Hambden, Jun. Mr. Booth, Mr. Trenchard, Mr. Charlton, and Major Wildman, who had been all Accused, as Conspirators in the late Plot, were brought by Habeas Corpus from the Tower to the King's-Bench-Bar; and there being but One Witness against them, they were admitted to give Bail for their Appearance the first Day of the next Term: Which Appearance they made on the 23d of January, and their Recognizances were continu'd. Mr. Hambden had Notice, that his Tryal would be on the first Wednesday in February; where dropping the Treason, he was found Guilty of a High Misdemeanour, and was Fined Forty thousand Pounds to the King, to find Sureties for his Good-behaviour during Life, and to be Committed till it was perform'd: But the Lord Brandon, Mr. Booth, Major Wildman, Mr. Charlton, Mr. Trenchard, and some Others that were Bailed the last Term, had now the Favour to be Discharg'd.

Mr. Hambden

 discharg'd.

Tryal of Brandon and Speak.

An Information had been Exhibited the last Term against Mr. Lawrence Braddon, and Mr. Hugh Speak, setting forth, “ That whereas the late “ Earl of Essex, Committed to the Tower for “ High-Treason, had, on the 13th of July last, “ Cut his own Throat, and was, by Inquisition “ taken before the Coroner of the Liberty of the “ Tower, found Felo de se; the said Braddon and “ Speak, to Defame the Government, had Con“ spired together, by Writing and otherwise, to “ spread a False and Scandalous Report, That “ the said Earl was Murder'd by some Persons “ about him; and had endeavour'd to Suborn “ Witnesses to Testifie the same.” The Tryal was brought on, on the 7th of February, and having lasted till Three in the Afternoon, the Court rose, leaving the Jury to give in a private Verdict to one of the Judges, which they deliver'd next Morning, and it was, That the said Braddon was Guilty of the whole Matter charg'd in the Information; And that Speak was Guilty of all the Matter, except the Subornation.

John Darby, a Printer, had been Convicted, upon an Information the last Term, for a Misdemeanour, in Printing a Seditious Libel call'd, My Lord Russell's Speech; and he was now, on Febr. 1st. brought to the Court of King's-Bench, to receive his Judgment. He humbly Submitted himself to the Court, and begg'd Pardon, with a Promise never to commit the like Offence: And therefore the Court gave a milder Sentence, That he should pay Twenty Marks for a Fine to the King, and find Sureties for his Good-behaviour for a Twelve-month; and till this was paid and done, he should be Committed to the Prison of the King's-Bench.

1683.
 Conviction of John Darby, a Printer.

Another Information had been Exhibited against Sir Samuel Barnardiston, for Writing and Publishing, in Four Letters to several Persons in the Country, most Scandalous and Seditious Reflections against the Government, and concerning the late Horrid Conspiracy: Of which, in a Tryal had at the Guildhall, before my Lord-Chief-Justice Jeffreys, on Febr. 14th. he was found Guilty.

Information against Sir
Sam. Barnardiston.

Another Information had been Preferr'd the last Term, against Mr. Johnson, a Clergy-man of good Parts and Character, for Writing and Publishing what they term'd a very Scandalous and Seditious Book, call'd Julian the Apostate; wherein the Author had only confuted those Notions of Passive Obedience and Non-resistance which some Writers, and those especially of his own Order, had carry'd up to a Consequence of Tyranny and Slavery. He was call'd to his Sentence on Febr. 11th. when the Court of King's- Bench had Judged, “ That he should pay Five-“ hundred Marks for a Fine to the King; That “ he find Sureties for his Good-behaviour for a “ Year; That he should be Committed to the “ Prison of the King's-Bench till this be paid and “ done, and that the Book be Burnt by the Hands “ of the Common Hangman.

Against
 Mr. Sam.
Johnson.

The Lords in the Tower, upon a Parliamentary Impeachment, had often moved for Bail, which could never be obtained: But the Earl of Danby made now another Motion in July-Term, and had the Case Argued by learned Council; and on February 12th the Judges deliver'd their Opinions severally, giving their Reasons, and concluding all in one Judgment, That his Lordship ought to be Bail'd: And accordingly Bail was taken, his Lordship being bound in a Recognizance of Twenty thousand Pounds; and the Dukes of Somerset and Albemarle, and the Earls of Oxford and Chesterfield, his Sureties, in Five thousand Pounds a-piece, upon Condition, That the Earl of Danby do Appear in the House of Lords the next Session of Parliament, and not Depart without Leave of that Court. This was to be a Precedent for the Liberty of the Popish Lords; and therefore, on the same Day, the Earl of Perceys, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, and the Lord Bellasis, (the Ld. Petre Dying in the Tower, under Confinement,) were brought from the Tower, and the Earl of Tyrone from the Gate- house, to the Court of King's-Bench, upon Writs of Habeas Corpus, praying, by their Council, to be admitted to Bail. Mr. Attorney-General declared, he had Order from His Majesty to Consent to any thing the Court should think fit to be done: Upon which my Lord-Chief-Justice, and the other Judges, did Agree, That for the same Reasons they had given in the Earl of Danby's Case, these Lords ought likewise to be Bail'd; And accordingly Re-cognizances and Sureties were accepted.

The Earl of Danby Bail'd.

The Popish
 Lords
 Bail'd.

The Duke of Monmouth had Absconded (or seem'd to do so) ever since the Proclamation for Apprehending the Conspirators; but now, in confidence of the King's Affection, and a Satisfaction in his own Dutiful Intentions to the King, he resolv'd to Discover himself: So he wrote a Letter to His Majesty, with some Acknowledgments of his Folly, and promising himself.

1683. promising better Obedience for the future. The King, in Answer, required him to Surrender himself to the Secretary of State: Which he did not immediately care to venture. He wrote again to the King, and in this Letter he agravates his Sorrow, and Tortures of Mind, for his Failings against His Majesty; confessing, that being fatally Circumvented by the Inchantments of others, he was precipitated into those Evils, the Consequences whereof he had not expected. The King, at last, granted him an Interview; as appears by the Duke's own Journal taken in his Pocket, after Sedgmore Fight: "His Majesty, at their first Meeting, assured the Duke, of his not believing he ever knew any thing of the Rye-House Plot; But (says the King) as Things go, I must behave my self as if I did believe it. The King saw him on the 13th of October: And there was another Meeting to have been on the 2d of November; but there being an extraordinary Council, the King did not come." These Interviews were held at one Major Long's House in the City, who has often Attested the Truth of it. "The 4th of November the King came again, was very Kind, and gave the Duke Directions how to manage his Business, and what to say, ordering a Person to come to him every Night, till Matters were ripe. On the 9th, the Duke was told the Business should be done to his Mind, the next Week; That Interest was made to the Duke of York for him, by another Person; which His Majesty took kindly of that Person. The Messenger said, at parting, There should be nothing requir'd of him, but what was safe and honourable, adding, Something must be done, to blind the Duke of York. Novemb. 15th, the Lord who came between the King and him, brought the Duke the Copy of the Letter he was to write to please his Royal Highness. The Duke was persuaded to do this; yet before he parted with the Letter, he desired to know in whose Hands it was to be deposited, for he would trust it with none but the King. The Lord told him, It should be as he would have it; though, if his Royal Highness ask'd a Copy, it could not be refused. The Duke said, He must referr himself intirely to His Majesty's Pleasure. In this Letter, he was made to write, That his Crimes appear'd to him with so terrible an Aspect, that he would rather Die, than be tormented with the Stings of them: He therefore implor'd the King's Grace and Pardon, which he did not desire, but by the Mediation of his Royal Highness." The 24th of November, the same Lord came to him, and acquainted him, "That His Majesty's Command was, To render himself the next Day; caution'd him, to play his part, to avoid Questions as much as possible, and to seem absolutely converted to his Unkle's Interest, bidding him bear with some Words that might seem harsh." The Way being thus made for the Duke of Monmouth's Appearance at Court, and for his formal Reconciliation to the King, a Relation of it was thus given to the Publick, to please the Duke of York, and to deceive the People.

The Affection and Arts of the King.

Whitchall, Nov. 25. His Majesty having this Afternoon Called an Extraordinary Council, was pleas'd to Acquaint them, That the Duke of Monmouth did last Night Surrender himself to Mr. Secretary Jenkins, having before writ a very submissive Letter to His Majesty, intirely Resigning himself to His Majesty's Disposal. That His Majesty, and His Royal Highness went down to Mr. Secretary's Office, where the Duke of Monmouth was, who shew'd himself very sensible of his Crime in the late Conspiracy, making a full Declaration of it: And that having shew'd an extraordinary Penitence for the same, and made a particular Submission to His Royal Highness, for his Misbehaviour towards him; His Majesty, and His Royal Highness receiv'd so much Satisfaction, that, upon His Royal Highness's Desire and Intreaty, His Majesty was pleas'd to Pardon the said Duke, and thereupon did Order Mr. Attorney-General to stop farther Proceedings against him: But Ordered, he should Proceed, notwithstanding, against all the rest of the Conspirators.

The Duke of Monmouth, in his own Journal, farther Observes, "That His Majesty seeing him at Night, could not dissemble his Satisfaction, but press'd his Hand; which he had not done since his Return from the French Service. The King acted his Part very well, so did the Duke, and His Royal Highness was not ill pleased. The next Day, His Majesty took the Duke aside, and falling on the Business of the Lord Russell, said, He inclin'd to have Sav'd him, but was forc'd to Consent to his Death, otherwise he must have broke with his Brother: And when the Duke was going to Remonstrate, how Cruelly that Noble Lord had been dealt with; the King bid him think no more of it. At Night, the Lord who was the King and the Duke's Confident, told His Grace, He fear'd the Duke of York began to finell out His Majesty's Carriage; for a Courtier had that Morning told His Royal Highness, All that was done, was but a Sham; and His Royal Highness appearing to be the Instrument of the Reconciliation, was a meer Trick." 'Tis certain, the Duke of York did suspect the Double-dealing; and was so far Incens'd at it, that he would not be Content, till the King demanded of the Duke of Monmouth the Publication of his Two Letters; one of which he had written before his Surrendring, and the other after. In this latter, he was brought to say, He was inform'd, 'twas reported of him, as if he had design'd to Exteminate the late Conspiracy, and Traduce the Testimonies against them that Suffer'd. His Majesty, and the Duke, knew how ingenuously he Confess'd all things, and that he was not conscious of the least Evil against His Majesty: It griev'd him, however, that he had so greatly Countenanc'd the said Conspiracy. He would Publish this, for his Vindication; beseeching His Majesty not to Look back, but that He wou'd please to Forget those Injuries which He had Forgiven: It shou'd be his Care, for the future, to Sin no more, or suffer himself to be Miss'd from his Duty. He wou'd spend his whole Life, to deserve that Pardon which He had Granted to,

Duke of York Dissatisfy'd.

His Most Dutiful MONMOUTH.

To this Motion of the King, the Duke humbly Answer'd, "That the first Paper was Sign'd, on Assurance it shou'd never be made Publick, and therefore he must positively refuse to Consent to it; And that the last was got out of him by Threats and Promises: So he earnestly Address'd himself to His Majesty, to have the first Letter deliver'd back to him; and said, He thought the last, was a Diminution of his Honour." The King us'd Arguments to persuade him to Consent, that all his Letters might be Printed; as the only Means to continue him in his Favour, without Offending His Royal Highness: But the Duke would by no means Consent, and therefore was to fall again under His Majesty's Displeasure, and must be Banish'd from the Court. The Duke makes this Entry in his Journal, Novemb. 27. Several told me of the Storm that was brewing: Rumsy was with 39 (i. e. the Duke of York,) and was seen to come out, crying, That he must Accuse a Man he Lov'd. The King gave his secret Instructions to the Duke of Monmouth, That he should, for his own Safety, go out of England: And 1683. And yet His Majesty wrote a Letter to him on Decemb. 19. bidding him Stay till he heard farther from him. But, it seems, the King could not prevail with his Brother to Forgive the Duke; and therefore he retir'd to Holland, and met with a Noble Reception at the Hague. His Majesty was Well-pleas'd with the Entertainment he found in another Court; though, for Reasons of State, he was oblig'd to forbid him his Own: He secretly supply'd him with Money, and sometimes writ to him with his own Hand; and could never endure those Courtiers, that (by mistake) thought it a Compliment to speak Ill of him, and to aggravate his Disobedience to His Majesty.

Duke of Monmouth again under the King's Displeasure.

Marriage of the Lady Anne, & George Prince of Denmark.

The most happy Action in this Year, was the Marriage of the Princess Anne to a Protestant Prince, George, Brother to the King of Denmark. 'Tis certain, that the King, by his own Judgment, or by an Over-ruling Providence, had taken Care that his two Neices should be strictly Bred up in the Religion of the Church of England, and both Marry'd into Protestant Families, even against the Inclination, and the Design and Interest of their Father. The present Match, had this Notice given of it, by Authority:

Whitehall, July 28. "His Majesty having been Pleas'd, upon Instance made unto Him, in the Name of the King of Denmark, to Consent, That his Brother, Prince George, should come hither, to make his Addresse to the Lady Anne, His Majesty's Neice, in order to Marriage; The same was accordingly Celebrated this Evening, at St. James's, by the Bishop of London, in the Presence of Their Majesty's, Their Royal Highnesses, and the Chiefest of the Nobility. And since, Their Majesty's, and Their Royal Highnesses, as likewise the Prince and Princess, have, upon this Occasion, receiv'd the Compliments and Congratulations of the Foreign Ministers residing at this Court.

The King seem'd Resolv'd not to be troubled with another House of Commons, and labour'd to suppress all Accounts of the late Proceedings in Parliament; as appears by this Order of Council, Dated Novemb. 16. Whereas Mr. Jodrell, Clerk of the House of Commons, hath this Day made Oath before His Majesty in Council, That he is credibly inform'd, and well assured, That diverse Booksellers in London, and elsewhere, have surreptitiously obtained several Books pretended to be Copies of all the Journals of the said House of Commons, ever since his Majesty's most Happy Restauration, and do design to Print the same, by which many Errors and Mistakes will unavoidably happen therein: His Majesty was this Day Pleas'd to Order in Council, That no Person whatever do Presume to Print, or cause to be Printed the said Journals, or any part thereof, without His Majesty's License in that behalf first had and obtained. And it was further Ordered, That Notice of this His Majesty's Pleasure be Publish'd in the next Gazette, to the end None may pretend Ignorance thereof.

An Order against Printing the Journals of the House of Commons.

Honours and Preferments.

As to Honours and Preferments: On Aug. 14. His Majesty, as a Mark of his Royal Favour, Knighted William Halford of Welham, and Edward Wigley of Scraptoft in the County of Leicester, Esq; On Sept. 26. His Majesty was pleas'd, as a Mark of the gracious Esteem he had for the great and faithful Services which the Right-Honourable Sir Francis North, Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal of England, had rendred the Crown, to create him a Baron of this Kingdom, by the Name and Stile of Baron of Guilford in the County of Surrey. About the same time, the Place of Lord-Chief-Justice of the King's-Bench, being vacant by the Death of Sir Edmund Sanders, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the same upon

Sir George Jeffreys, Kt. and Bar. Chief-Justice of Chester; who, on Michaelmas-Day, was accordingly Sworn into that Office, by the Lord-Keeper. His Majesty was likewise pleas'd to constitute Sir Thomas Jones, one of the Judges of the King's-Bench, Lord-Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, in the Room of Sir Francis Pemberton, who not being able to go into all the New Measures of the Court, had now obtain'd his Quietus. And Sir Richard Holloway, one of His Majesty's Serjeants at Law, was Sworn one of the Judges of the King's-Bench, in the Place of Mr. Justice Raymond, deceas'd. On Octob. 4. Mr. Attorney-General acquainted His Majesty, That Judgment was Entred upon the Quo-Warranto against the City of London, according to His Majesty's Command: Whereupon the King Commanded the late Lord-Mayor and Sheriffs of the City to Attend him in Council: Who Attended accordingly; and being Call'd in, Sir William Pritchard was Sworn Lord-Mayor; and Peter Daniel, and Samuel Dashwood, Esq; took the usual Oaths of Sheriffs; and His Majesty then deliver'd to them their Commissions, under the Great Seal, to hold their respective Offices during his Pleasure. His Majesty was likewise pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon Thomas Jenner of the Inner-Temple, Esq; and to constitute him Recorder of the City of London: And on the same Day, the Lord-Chief-Justice Jeffreys was Sworn of the Privy-Council. On New-Year's-Day, Prince George of Denmark was Elected a Knight-Companion of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, in a Chapter held at Whitehall, being first Knighted by the Sovereign, and then Invested with the George and Garter: And on Jan. 10. the Dukes of Somerset and Northumberland were Elected Knights-Companions of the same Order. About the middle of January, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Stile and Dignity of a Duke of this Kingdom, upon Charles Earl of Burford, his Natural Son, by Creating him Duke of St. Albans. On the First Day of Hilary-Term, Sir Thomas Jenner, Kt. John Wyndham, Esq; Edwin Wyatt, Esq; Edward Birch, Esq; Henry Bedingfield, Esq; Sir Edward Nevile, Kt. Sir Paul Barret, Kt. Anthony Farrington, Esq; John Jeffreson, Esq; Edward Lutwiche, Esq; Richard Heab, Esq; Henry Selby, Esq; John Millington, Esq; Thomas Powell, Esq; Owen Wynne, Esq; and Sir George Pudsey, Kt. being Call'd, by the King's Writ, to take upon them the State and Degree of Sergeants at Law, appear'd in the Court of Chancery, and took their Oaths, and perform'd the usual Ceremonies of a Procession to Westminster-Hall, on Jan. 31. when they presented their Rings with this Servile Motto, A Deo Rex, à Rege Lex: Which some interpreted to be, a Resolving the Laws of England into the King's Will and Pleasure.

The Lord-Mayor & Sheriffs made by the King's Commission.

Call of Serjeants.

This Year, Abroad, was remarkable, for the formidable Siege of Vienna by the Turks, and the Raifing of it by the King of Poland, and the Electors of Saxony and Bavaria: And likewise, for the Demolishing of Tangier, which the King of England could hold no longer, without an Expence of Men and Money, greater than he was willing to bear.

Siege of Vienna.

Demolishing of Tangier.

In Matters of Religion, the Dissenters bore all the Odium of the late Conspiracy; and were not only branded for express Rebels and Villains, in a multitude of Addresses presented to the King, but were likewise severely Arraign'd by the King himself, in a solemn Form of Declaration to all his Loving Subjects, concerning the Treasonable Conspiracy against his Sacred Person and Government, lately Discover'd: Appointed to be Read in all Churches and Chapels within this Kingdom, as well on Sunday the 2d of September, as upon a Day of Publick Thanksgiving, (as followeth:)

State of Religion.

CHARLES R.

1683.

The King's Declaration.

“ I T hath been Our Observation, That for “ several Years last past, a Malevolent Party “ hath made it their Business to promote Sedition, “ by False News, Libellous Pamphlets, and other “ Wicked Arts; whereby they endeavour'd not “ only to render Our Government Odious, and “ Our most Faithful Subjects Suspected to the “ People, but even to Incite them to a Dislike and “ Hatred of Our Royal Person: Whereupon it “ was evident to Us, That the Heads of this “ Party could have no other Aim, but the Ruine “ of Us, and Our Government.

“ And whilst, by Our utmost Care, We mani“ fested to all Our Subjects, Our Zeal for the Mainte“ nance of the Protestant Religion, and Our Resolu“ tions to Govern according to Law; It was a “ great Trouble to Us, to find, That Evil Persons, “ by Mis-representing Our Actions to the People, “ should so far Infringe themselves into the Af“ fections of the Weaker Sort, as that they look'd “ upon them as the only Patriots and Assertors of “ their Religion and Liberties, and gave them“ selves up intirely to their Conduct.

“ As their Numbers encreas'd, so did their “ Boldness, to that height, that by often shewing “ themselves in Tumults and Riots, and Unlawful “ and Seditious Conventicles, they not only En“ gaged, but Proclaimed an Impunity to their “ own Party, who thought themselves already “ too Strong for the Laws; and they seem'd to “ believe, that in a short Time they should Gain “ upon the People, so as to persuade them to a “ Total Defection from the Government.

“ But it pleas'd God, by these their Violent “ Ways, to Open the Eyes of Our good Subjects, “ who easily fore-saw what Troubles these Methods “ would produce; and thereupon, with great “ Courage, aswell as Duty and Affection towards “ Us, upon all Occasions, did manifest their Reso“ lution and Readiness in Defence of Our Person, “ and Support of Our Government, and the Reli“ gion Established; And did likewise Convince “ the Common People, of the Villainous Designs “ of their Factious Leaders, and the Miseries that “ would befall them, in pursuing such Courses.

“ By these Means, the Factious Party lost “ Ground daily; and finding that it was impos“ sible to keep up the Spirits of their Followers, “ against the Religion Establish'd, and the Laws, “ whilst We were Steady in the Maintenance and “ Execution of them, became Desperate, and re“ solv'd not to trust any longer to the slow Me“ thods of Sedition, but to betake themselves to “ Arms; not doubting, but that they remain'd still “ Strong enough, by Force, to Over-turn the Go“ vernment, which they could not Undermine.

“ It is hard to imagine, how Men of so many “ different Interests and Opinions, could Join in “ any Enterprize; but it is certain, they readily “ Concurr'd in the Resolution of taking Arms “ to Destroy the Government, even before they “ had Agreed what to set up in the Place “ of it.

“ To which Purpose, they took several Ways:
“ For, whilst Some were Contriving a General “ Insurrection in this Kingdom, and likewise in “ Scotland; Others were Conspiring to Assassinate “ Our Royal Person, and Our Dearest Brother, “ and to Massacre the Magistrates of Our City “ of London, and Our Officers of State, that “ there might be no Appearance of Government, “ nor any Means for Our Subjects to Unite for “ their Defence.

“ In case it had pleas'd God to permit these “ Wicked Designs to have taken Effect, there could “ have been nothing in Prospect but Confusion:

“ For instead of the Reformation they pretended, “ their Success would have produced Divisions, “ and Wars amongst themselves; until the Pre“ dominant Party would have Enslav'd the “ rest, and the whole Kingdom.

“ But the Divine Providence, which hath pre“ served Us through the whole Course of Our “ Life, hath at this time, in an Extraordinary “ manner, shew'd it self, in the Wonderful and “ Gracious Deliverance of Us, and Our Dearest “ Brother, and all Our Loyal Subjects, from this “ Horrid and Damnable Conspiracy.

“ As it is therefore Our Desire, that all Our “ Loving Subjects should Join with Us, in giving “ Thanks to Almighty God for this Mercy; so “ we thought it necessary they should be now, “ in some measure, Inform'd of the Fact, as it “ hath been Discover'd to Us by undoubted Proof, “ and the Confession of divers of the Accomplices “ in this Conspiracy; whereof, though we have “ not as yet perfectly Traced all the Particulars, “ the Principal and Main Designs of it, never“ theless, have appear'd to be as followeth.

“ About the Beginning of October last, when “ the Heads of the Faction saw the Magistracy “ of Our City of London settled in Persons of “ Loyal Principles, they became Impatient, and “ fell immediately to Consult of Raising in Arms; “ for which some thought their Party so well “ prepared, that they could not fail of attaining “ their Ends, whenever they should break-out “ into open Force.

“ Whereupon there was a Meeting of some of “ the Principal Conspirators, to Agree about the “ best Means to Master Our Guards, and to Seize “ Our Person: But, upon Consideration, they “ found it necessary to prepare their Friends in “ the several Counties, as also the Disaffected Party “ in Scotland, to Join with them; without which, “ any Attempt in Our said City, or upon Our “ Guards, appear'd too Rash to be undertaken: “ so that they laid aside the thoughts of a present “ Raising, and dispos'd themselves to find, by a “ Correspondence with Scotland, and with several “ Parts of this Our Kingdom, how far they might “ be Assisted by a General Insurrection, so that “ they might not, in humane probability, fail of “ Success.

“ Whilst this first Design was forming, some “ Villains were likewise carrying on that Horrid “ and Execrable Plot, of Assassinating Our Royal “ Person, and Our Dearest Brother, in Our com“ ing from New-Market, and Money was deposited “ for that Purpose: But by the Shortness of the “ Time, (We being then immediately upon Our “ Return) and for want of necessary Prepara“ tions, they were forced to deferr the Execution “ of it till further Opportunity.

“ It was then Propos'd among them, Whether “ they should attempt the same, at our next going “ to New-Market in March last? But some Ob“ jected, That Our Guards which usually remain “ here for some time after Our Departure, would “ be capable of making a great Opposition, upon “ the arrival of the News: For which Reason, “ and because they were not then in a sufficient “ Readiness, it was Agreed to be done at Our “ Return from New-Market.

“ The Place appointed, was the House of one “ Richard Rumbold, a Malster, call'd the Rye, “ near Hoddesdon in the County of Hertsford: “ And it was Resolv'd, That Forty Persons in “ Number, who were to be Actors in this Assassi“ nation, under the Command of the said Richard “ Rumbold, should hide themselves in or near the “ said House, and when our Coach should come “ over against them, then Three or Four were to “ Shoot with Blunderbuffes at the Postilion and “ Horfes, ſome were to be ready in the Way, who, in the Habit of Labourers, ſhould turn a Cart croſs the Paſſage, and ſo ſtop Our Coach : Others were appointed to Shoot into the Coach, where Our Royal Perſon and Our Deareſt Brother were to be : Others to Fire upon the Guards that ſhould be then Attending Us. And it was further Reſolved, That upon the ſame Day, many Lords, and other Perſons of Quality, whom they ſuppoſed favourable to their Deſign, ſhould be Invited to Dine in Our City of London, that they might be the more ready to Appear among the Citizens, upon arrival of the News. The Actors in the ſaid Aſſaſſination having Contriv'd the Manner of their Eſcape, by a nearer Paſſage than the uſual Road ; by which means they hoped to get to London as ſoon as the News could be brought thither.

“ They thought it would be eaſie, upon their Perpetrating this Horrid Fact, to Poſſeſs themſelves of the Government ; Prefuming upon the Numbers of the Diſaffected.

“ But leſt the Blackneſs of ſuch an Action might Deter others from Joining with them, they prepared to Palliate it, as far as they could, by ſome Remonſtrance, or Declaration, which was ready to be Printed, and Diſperſed in that Confuſion, to Amuſe the People. And leſt Our Officers of State, and the Magiſtrates of Our ſaid City, with the Militia thereof, and other Our Loyal Subjects, ſhould be able to put ſome Stop to their Career, they Reſolved to follow this Blow with a Maſſacre ; wherein they particularly deſign'd for immediate Slaughtering, Our Officers of State, the preſent Lord-Mayor and Sheriffs, and the Magiſtracy of Our City, and other Our Subjects that had been moſt Eminent for their Loyalty.

“ But it pleaſed Almighty God, by his Wonderful Providence, to Deſeat their Councils, by the ſudden Fire at New-Market, which neceſſitated Our Return from thence before the Time We had appointed.

“ Yet theſe Villains were not thereby Diſcouraged from Purſuing the ſame Bloody Deſign, but Reſolved to take the firſt Opportunity for Eſſecting the ſame ; and propoſed to themſelves, That it might be done, either in Our Paſſage from Windſor to Hampton-Court, or in Our Journey to Wincheſter, or when We ſhould go by Water in Our Barge, or under Bedford-Garden-Wall, as We ſhould paſs that Way, or at the Bull-Feaſt which was to be in Red-Lion-Fields ; they being inform'd, that We and Our Deareſt Brother had Intentions of coming thither.

“ And that they might be the better Prepared, when there ſhould be Occaſion, by having a certain Number of Arms lying always ready for that Purpoſe ; Arms for Forty Men were beſpoke in all haſte, (viz.) Thirty Carbines with Bells and Swivels, Thirty Caſes of Piſtols, and Ten Blunderbuſſes ; which were accordingly made, and paid for.

“ And for the more eaſie Drawing their Party together againſt the Time of Execution, they Contriv'd to Divide Our Cities of London and Weſtmiſter, and the Suburbs, into Twenty Parts ; from each of which they expected Five-hundred Men to be ready at the firſt Onſet : And ſome Agitators were to give an Account of the Men to be furniſh'd in each Division, and to give out Orders to them, as there ſhould be Occaſion.

“ And to the End, the Forces they ſhould Raiſe, might be the ſooner Modell'd into the Form of an Army, there were One Hundred Old Officers, who had been Engaged in the late Rebellion, “ ready in Town to take the Command of them : In the Purſuit of which Project they continued, till they knew that a Diſcovery had been made unto Us.

“ During all this Time, the Principal Conſpirators were Managing their other Deſign for a General Inſurrección in both Kingdoms.

“ The late Earl of Shaftsbury, who had at firſt preſſed them to a ſudden Riſing, which he would have had before the 17th of November laſt, or upon that Day at the fartheſt, ſent to the Conſpirators, at a Meeting appointed by them, to know their Reſolution ; and finding they would not adventure, without farther Preparation, convey'd himſelf ſecretly into Holland, to avoid the Danger he might be in by a Diſcovery.

“ His Withdrawing himſelf from their Councils, did not Diſcourage them from Purſuing their Deſign, only made them more Cautious : Whereupon a New Council was appointed of Six Perſons that were to have the Chief Management of Affairs, in order to a General Inſurrección, by a Correſpondency with their Party in Scotland, and ſeveral Counties of this Our Kingdom. And becauſe a Correſpondency by Letters was thought Dangerous, it was held neceſſary that ſome Perſon ſhould be ſent into Scotland, to Invite the Heads of the Diſaffected Party in that Our Kingdom, to come hither, under pretence of Purchaſing Lands in Carolina ; But, in truth, to Concert with them the beſt Means for Carrying on the Deſign Jointly in both Kingdoms : And a Treaty was thereupon had with Archibald Campbell, late Earl of Argyll, already Attainted of Treſon, who demanded Thirty thouſand Pounds at firſt, but afterwards agreed to accept of Ten thouſand Pounds, for Buycing of Arms in Holland, and making other Proviſions neceſſary for a Rebellion within Our Kingdom of Scotland.

“ In the ſaid Council of Six, it was Debated, Whether the Riſing in this Kingdom ſhould be firſt in Our City of London, where, by reaſon of the vaſt Numbers that might readily Unite, they thought they might eaſily Maſter the Guards ; or rather in ſome remote Parts, whereby We ſhould be under a neceſſity of ſending Our Guards to Suppreſs them, and thereby the Riſing in Our ſaid City would become more Secure and Eſſectual ? But at laſt it was Reſolved, as moſt convenient, That it ſhould be in all Parts at the ſame Time, leſt Our City might be Deſended by the Militia thereof, without the Help of Our Guards, which we might ſend for the Suppreſſing any Inſurrección in the Country ; And they did All diſpoſe themſelves accordingly, for the Compaſſing their Deſign, which was very near taking Effect.

“ But ſuch was the abundant Mercy of Almighty God, while they were yet meditating their Execrable Miſchiefs againſt Our Royal Perſon, Our Deareſt Brother, and the Government, a Diſcovery was made unto Us by one of the Accomplices, on the 12th of June laſt ; ſince which time, We have uſed the beſt Means We could, for the Detecting and Prevention of ſo Hellish a Conſpiracy.

“ But ſo it has happen'd, that diverſe of the Conſpirators having Notice of Warrants iſſued out for their Apprehenſion, are fled from Juſtice, (viz.) James Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Melbourn, Sir John Cochrane, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Robert Ferguſon, who was the Common Agitator intruſted by all Parties in the ſeveral Conſpiracies, Richard Goodenough, Francis Goodenough, Richard Rambold the Maſter, William Rambold his Brother, Richard Nelthorpe, Nathanael Wade, William Thompſon, James Burton, Joſeph 1683. " Joseph Elby, Samuel Gibbs, Francis Charleton, Joseph Tyly, Castlers, Lobbs, both Nonconformist Preachers, Edward Norton, John Row, John Ayloffe, and John Atherton.

" Ford Lord Gray being Apprehended, made his Escape out of the Hands of a Serjeant at Arms; and Arthur late Earl of Essex, being Committed to the Tower, for High-Treason, Kill'd himself.

" Others have been Taken, and Committed to Custody; some of Whom, (viz.) the Lord William Russell, Thomas Walcott, William Hone, and John Rouse, have, upon their Tryals, been Convicted, Attainted, and Executed, according to Law.

" This We thought fit to make known to Our Loving Subjects; that they being sensible (as We are) of the Mercy of God, in this great Deliverance, may Cheerfully and Devoutly Join with Us, in Returning Solemn Thanks to Almighty God for the same.

" For which End, We do hereby Appoint the Ninth Day of September next, to be Observed as a Day of Thanksgiving, in all Churches and Chapels within this Our Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, in such Manner as shall be by Us Directed in a Form of Prayer, with Thanksgiving, which we have Commanded to be Prepared by Our Bishops, and Publish'd for that Purpose.

" And it is Our Pleasure, That this Declaration be Publickly Read in all the said Churches and Chapels, aswell on Sunday the Second of September next, as upon the Day of Thanksgiving aforesaid.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Twentyninth Day of July, 1683. In the Five and thirtieth Year of Our Reign.

As the Dissenters were now mark'd out for Hatred and Prosecution, because of their high Offences given to the Court; so the Church-men were in much the greater Reputation with the King, and his Brother; not for the sake of the Purity of their Faith and Worship, nor indeed for their Legal Establishment, but purely for the Distinction of Loyalty, i. e. of Adherence to the Interest of the Court, and the Cause of the Duke's Succession. Under the Impulse of this Zeal, they carry'd the Principles of Prerogative and Subjection, to a much higher degree than their Fore-fathers had ever thought of, or than they themselves could ever practise. Sermons and Discourses were full of those flaming Notions; and especially the University of Oxford made a warm Decree, Drawn up in Latin by the Professor of Divinity, and Pass'd in the Convocation on Saturday July 21. and Presented to His Majesty in English on the 24th of July.

The Judgment and Decree of the University of Oxford, Pass'd in their Convocation, on July 21. 1683. against certain Pernicious Books, and Damnable Doctrines, Destructive to the Sacred Persons of Princes, their State and Government, and of all Humane Society.

Although the Barbarous Assassination lately Enterpris'd against the Person of His Sacred Majesty, and his Royal Brother, engage all our Thoughts to reflect, with utmost Detestation and Abhorrence, on that Execrable Villainy, hateful to God and Man; and pay our due Acknowledgments to the Divine Providence, which, by Extraordinary Methods, brought it to pass, that the Breath of our Nostrils, the Anointed of the Lord, is not taken in the Pit which was prepared for him, and that under his Shadow we continue to live and enjoy the Blessings of his Government; yet notwithstanding, we find it to be a necessary Duty at this time, to Search into, and Lay open those Impious Doctrines, which having of late been studiously Disseminated, gave Rise and Growth to these nefarious Attempts, and pass upon them our Solemn Publick Censure and Decree of Condemnation.

Therefore, To the Honour of the Holy and Undivided Trinity, the Preservation of Catholick Truth in the Church; And that the King's Majesty may be Secured both from the Attempts of Open Bloody Enemies, and Machinations of Treacherous Hereticks and Schismaticks: We the Vice-Chancellor, Doctors, Proctors, and Masters Regent and Not Regent, Met in Convocation, in the accustomed Manner, Time, and Place, on Saturday the One and twentieth Day of July, in the Year 1683. concerning certain Propositions contained in diverse Books and Writings publish'd in the English, and also the Latin Tongues, Repugnant to the Holy Scriptures, Decrees of Councils, Writings of the Fathers, the Faith and Profession of the Primitive Church, and also Destructive of the Kingly Government, the Safety of His Majesty's Person, the Publick Peace, the Laws of Nature, and Bonds of Humane Society; by our Unanimous Assent and Consent, have Decreed and Determined in Manner and Form following.

The First Proposition.

All Civil Authority is derived Originally from the People.

The Second.

There is a mutual Compact, Tacit or Express, between a Prince and his Subjects; and that if He perform not His Duty, they are discharg'd from theirs.

The Third.

That if Lawful Governors become Tyrants, or Govern otherwise than by the Laws of God and Man they ought to do, they Forfeit the Right they had unto their Government." Lex Rex. Buchanan, de Jure Regni. Vindicie contra Tyrannos. Bellarm. de Conciliis, de Pontifice. Milton. Goodwin. Baxt. H. C.

The Fourth.

The Sovereignty of England, is in the Three Estates, viz. King, Lords, and Commons. The King has but a Co-ordinate Power, and may be Over-ruled by the other Two." Lex Rex. Hunton, Of a Limited and Mix'd Monarchy. Baxter's H. C. Polit. Catechis.

The Fifth.

Birth-right, and Proximity of Blood, give no Title to Rule or Government; and it is Lawful to Preclude the next Heir from his Right and Succession to the Crown." Lex Rex. Hum's Postscript. Dolman's History of Succession. Julian the Apostate. Menck Telcel.

The Sixth.

It is Lawful for Subjects, without the Consent, and against the Command of the Supreme Magistrate, to enter into Leagues, Covenants, and Associations, for Defence of themselves and their Religion." Solemn League and Covenant. Late Association.

The Seventh.

Self-Preservation, is the fundamental Law of Nature, and supercedes the Obligation of all others,

Principles of Loyalty, carry'd higher than Law or Reason.

Oxford Decree.

1683.

1683. "others, whensoever they stand in Competition "with it." Hobbs, de Civ. Leviathan.

The Eighth.

"The Doctrine of the Gospel, concerning Patient Suffering of Injuries, is not inconsistent with violent Resisting of the Higher Powers, in case of Persecution for Religion." Lex Rex. Julian the Apostate. Apolog. Relat.

The Ninth.

"There lies no Obligation upon Christians to Passive Obedience, when the Prince Commands any thing against the Laws of our Country; and the Primitive Christians chose rather to Die, than Resist, because Christianity was not settled by the Laws of the Empire." Julian the Apostate.

The Tenth.

"Possession and Strength, give a Right to Govern; and Success in a Cause or Enterprize, proclaims it to be Lawful and Just: To Pursue it, is to Comply with the Will of God, because it is to follow the Conduct of his Providence." Hobbs. Owen's Sermon before the Regicides, Jan. 21. 1648. Baxter. Jenkin's Petition, Octob. 1651.

The Eleventh.

"In the State of Nature, there is no difference between Good and Evil, Right and Wrong: The State of Nature, is a State of War, in which every Man hath a Right to all things.

The Twelfth.

"The Foundation of Civil Authority, is this Natural Right; which is not Given, but Left to the Supreme Magistrate, upon Mens entering into Societies: And not only a Foreign Invader, but a Domestick Rebel, puts himself again into a State of Nature, to be Proceeded against, not as a Subject, but an Enemy; and consequently acquires, by his Rebellion, the same Right over the Life of his Prince, as the Prince, for the most heinous Crimes, has over the Life of his own Subjects.

The Thirteenth.

"Every Man, after his Entering into a Society, retains a Right of Defending himself against Force; and cannot transferr that Right to the Commonwealth, when he consents to that Union whereby a Commonwealth is made: And in case a great many Men together have already Resisted the Commonwealth, for which every one of them expecteth Death, they have liberty then to join together to Assist and Defend one another: Their bearing of Arms, subsequent to the first breach of their Duty, though it be to maintain what they have done, is no new Unjust Act; and if it be only to Defend their Persons, it is not Unjust at all.

The Fourteenth.

"An Oath superadds no Obligation to Part, and a Part obliges no farther than it is credited: And consequently, if a Prince gives any Indication, that he does not believe the Promises of Fealty and Allegiance made by any of his Subjects, they are thereby freed from their Subjection; and notwithstanding their Parts and Oaths, may Lawfully Rebel against, and Destroy their Sovereign. Hobbs, de Civ. Leviathan.

The Fifteenth.

"If a People, that by Oath and Duty are Obliged to a Sovereign, shall sinfully Dispossess him; and, contrary to their Covenants, Chuse and Covenant with another; they may be "Obliged by their latter Covenants, notwithstanding their former." Baxter's H. C. 1683.

The Sixteenth.

"All Oaths are Unlawful, and contrary to the Word of God. Quakers.

The Seventeenth.

"An Oath Obligeth not in the Sense of the Imposers, but the Takers." Sheriff's Case.

The Eighteenth.

"Dominion is founded in Grace.

The Nineteenth.

"The Powers of this World, are Usurpations upon the Prerogative of Jesus Christ; and it is the Duty of God's People to Destroy them, in order to the setting Christ upon his Throne."

Fifth Monarchy-men.

The Twentieth.

"The Presbyterian Government is the Sceptre of Christ's Kingdom, to which King's, as well as others, are bound to Submit: And the King's Supremacy in Ecclesiastical Affairs, asserted by the Church of England, is Injurious to Christ, the Sole King and Head of his Church." Altore Damascenam. Apolog. Relat. Hist. Indulg. Cartwright Tracts.

The Twenty-first.

"It is not lawful for Superiors to Impose any thing in the Worship of God that is not antecedently necessary.

The Twenty-second.

"The Duty of not Offending a weak Brother, is inconsistent with all Humane Authority of making Laws concerning Indifferent Things." Protestant Recensurer.

The Twenty-third.

"Wicked Kings and Tyrants ought to be put to Death; and if the Judges and Inferior Magistrates will not do their Office, the Power of the Sword devolves to the People: If the Major-part of the People refuse to Exercise this Power, then the Ministers may Excommunicate such a King: After which, it is Lawful for any of the Subjects to Kill him, as the People did Ahabiah, and Jehu Jezabel." Buchanan. Knox. Goodman. Gilby. Jesuits.

The Twenty-fourth.

"After the Sealing of the Scripture Canon, the People of God, in all Ages, are to expect New Revelations for a Rule of their Actions (a); And it is Lawful for a Private Man, having an Inward Motion from God, to Kill a Tyrant (b)." (a) Quakers, and other Enthusiasts. (b) Goodman.

The Twenty-fifth.

"The Example of Phinehas, is, to us, instead of a Command: For what God hath Commanded or Approved in one Age, must needs Oblige in all." Goodman. Knox. Naphtali.

The Twenty-sixth.

"King Charles I. was Lawfully put to Death; and his Murtherers were the Blessed Instruments of God's Glory in their Generation." Milton. Goodwin. Owen.

The Twenty-seventh.

"King Charles I. made War upon his Parliament: And in such a Case, the King may not only be Resisted, but he ceaseth to be King." Baxter.

1683.

“ We Decree, Judge and Declare all and every of these Propositions to be False, Seditious, and Impious, and most of them to be also Heretical and Blasphemous, Infamous to Christian Religion, and Destructive of all Government in Church and State.

“ We further Decree, That the Books which contain the aforesaid Propositions, and Impious Doctrines, are fitted to deprave Good-manners, corrupt the Minds of Uneasie Men, stir up Seditions and Tumults, overthrow States and Kingdoms, and lead to Rebellion, Murder of Princes, and Atheism it self. And therefore we Interdict all Members of the University from the Reading of the said Books, under the Penalties in the Statutes express'd. We also Order the before-recited Books to be publickly Burnt by the Hand of our Marshal, in the Court of our Schools.

Likewise we Order, That, in perpetual Memory hereof, these our Decrees shall be Entred into the Registry of our Convocation; And that Copies of them being communicated to the severall Colleges and Halls within this University, they be there publickly affix'd in the Libraries, Rectories, or other fit Places where they may be seen and read of all.

Lastly, “ We Command and strictly Enjoin all and singular the Readers, Tutors, Catechists, and others to whom the Care and Trust of Initiating of Youth is committed, That they diligently instruct and Ground their Scholars in that most necessary Doctrine, which, in a manner, is the Badge and Character of the Church of England, of Submitting to every Ordinance of Man, for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the King, as Supreme; or unto Governors, as unto them that are sent by him, for the Punishment of Evil-doers, and for the Praise of them that do Well: Teaching, That this Submission and Obedience, is to be Clear, Absolute, and without any Exception of any State or Order of Men: Also, That they, according to the Apostle's Precept, Exhort, That first of all, Supplications, Prayers, Intercessions, and giving of Thanks, be made for all Men, for the KING, and all that are in Authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable Life, in all Godliness and Honesty, for this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour: And in especial manner, That they press and oblige them humbly to offer their most Ardent and Daily Prayers at the Throne of Grace, for the Preservation of our Sovereign Lord, King CHARLES, from the Attempts of Open Violence and Secret Machinations of Perfidious Traitors; That the Defender of the Faith, being Safe under the Defence of the Most-High, may Continue his Reign on Earth, till He exchange it for that of a late and Happy Immortality.

Upon whatever Order from a Higher Place this Decree was Drawn up by a single Person, and Impos'd upon a Convocation in Surprize; whatever Excuse might be given for the Making and the Passing of it: Yet there was this Justice due to it at the Revolution, that it should then have been openly Adher'd to, or as openly Retraçted and Condemn'd. Whereas, the Maker and Chief Promoters of it did evidently Contradict it, in their avow'd Principles, and apparent Practice, without any Reversal of it, or any other sign of Confession, but only a tacit Condemnation of it, by privately Ordering the Printed Copies of it to be taken away from the Halls and other Publick Places, where they had before hung in Triumph. A Way of Proceeding so offensive to some of the Younger Students, that it occasion'd some Re-fections and Pieces of Wit; among others, this Distich:

Cum Fronti sit nulla Fides, ut Carmina dicunt; Cur Tibi Bifronti JANE sit ulla Fides?

The Severe Punishment of State-Offenders went on; for on April 19. Sir Samuel Barnardiston (who was Convicted the last Term of a High Misdemeanour, for Writing and Publishing, in Letters to several Persons in the Country, most Scandalous and Seditious Reflections against the Government) was brought to the King's-Bench-Bar, to receive the Judgment of the Court; which was, That he should pay a Fine of 10000*l.* to the King, should find Sureties for his Good-behaviour during his Life, and should be Committed to the King's-Bench Prison till the same was paid and done. Mr. William Wright, Alderman of Oxford, having Defended the Privileges of the City, when the Majority of that Corporation, in an Address, Offer'd them up to the King's Pleasure, was, on April 16. Committed to the King's-Bench Prison, for Publishing Scandalous Libels; and being brought, by Rule, to the Court of King's-Bench, on Apr. 19. Bail was accepted for him, himself being bound in a Recognizance of 10000*l.* and Four Sureties in 5000*l.* a-piece, for his Appearance and Abiding his Tryal, upon the Information Exhibited against him.

On April the 21. James Holliday, (who, upon Discovery of the late Plot, had fled to Nevis in the West-Indies, and being there seized, had been sent a Prisoner hither.) was brought from Newgate to the King's-Bench-Bar; and being ask'd, What he could say, why Execution should not be Awarded against him, he standing Attainted, by Outlawry, upon an Indictment of High-Treason? &c. He desired to hear the Indictment read: Which being done, Mr. Attorney-General acquainted the Court, That His Majesty was graciously pleas'd, in Mercy to the Prisoner, to wave the Outlawry, and to allow him liberty to make his Defence, upon a Tryal, if he were able to make any: But he saying nothing for himself, and seeming to Confess the Indictment, the Court made a Rule, That he should be Executed at Tyburn, on Wednesday Seven-night; which was accordingly done. On the same Day, Mr. Lawrence Braddon, and Mr. Hugh Speak, who had been last Term found Guilty of spreading a false Report, That the Earl of Essex was Murdered in the Tower; were now Fined, the first 2000*l.* the other 1000*l.* to the King, and to find Sureties for their Good-behaviour during their Lives. And poor Langley Curtis, who was Convicted the last Term, for Printing a Scandalous and Seditious Pamphlet, call'd, The Lord Russell's Ghost, or, The Night-Walker of Bloomsbury; was Fined 500*l.* and Ordered to stand in the Pillory on Saturday next, in Bloomsbury-Market, and the said Libel to be then Burnt by the Hands of the Common Hang-man.

On April 20. at the Nisi prius held for the County of Middlesex, before the Lord-Chief-Justice Jeffreys, George Cadron, Steward to the Earl of Clare, was Tryed upon an Information, for Speaking most Scandalous and Seditious Words against His Majesty and the Government; and was found Guilty; and was the next Term Fined 100*l.* and to stand in the Pillory in two several Places, and to find Sureties for his Good-behaviour during his Life.

In the Town of Nottingham, upon Michaelmas-Day, 1682. there had been a great Scuffle, upon the Election of a Mayor, and other Officers for that Corporation, some Claiming the Ancient Custom, and others insisting on the New Charter; for which reason, those who opposed the said Charter, (viz.) William Sacheverell, George Gregory, and

Of the Nottingham Gentlemen.

1684. and Charles Hutchinson, Esqrs; William Greeces, and Seventeen others, had an Information Exhibited against them, for a great Riot by them committed, to the great Terror of many of His Majesty's Loyal Subjects; and at a Tryal at the King's-Bench-Bar, on May 2. they were all, except one Barker, found Guilty of the said Riot.

The Duke of York brings an Action of Scandalum Magnatum against John Dutton Colt, Esq; His Royal Highness the Duke of York, in Michaelmas-Term last, had brought his Action, upon the Statute of Scandalum Magnatum, against John Dutton Colt, Esq; sometime Bailiff of Leominster in the County of Hereford, and Burgets for that Borough in the three last Parliaments, for these Words following, which were, no doubt, aggravated beyond the real Expression of them; The Duke of York is a Papist; and before any such Papist Dog shall be Successor to the Crown of England, I will be Hang'd at my own Door; and I will venture my Life and Fortune to prevent the same. — If the King had no worse Bailiffs nor Mayors in all his Corporations in England, and no worse Parliament-Men than my self, we would soon rout the Duke of York, Lord Marquess of Worcester, and Lord Peterborough, and all such Popish Dogs, out of the Kingdom; for I am sure they are Damn'd ones. — If any of the Members of Parliament come to any Accident, or Untimely End, it shall presently be laid on the Papists; and from that time, I will begin to Cut the Throat of the first Papist I meet, if it be the Duke of York himself. — If the King follows the Advice of that Damn'd Popish Dog his Brother, Lord Marquess of Worcester, and such-like Evil-Councilers, as I believe he does, in so often Dissolving the Parliament, it will in the End be Worse for him. — I will be Hang'd at my own Door, before such a Damn'd Popish Rascal as the Duke of York shall ever Inherit the Crown of England; and to prevent that, we will first take off that Damn'd Rogue our Popish Lord-Lieutenant, Lord Peterborough, Lord Hallifax, Sir Lionel Jenkins, and several others, who, I am sure, are the Imps and Promoters of the Interest of that Damn'd Popish Dog, York. — In a Tryal at the King's-Bench-Bar, on May 2. the Jury brought in their Verdict for his Royal Highness, and Assessed for Damages 100000 Pounds.

Tryal of Samuel Packer. On May 12. Samuel Packer, Deputy to Richard Goodenough, when he was Under-Sheriff of Middlesex, having been Convicted last Term, for Publishing a Scandalous and Seditious Libel, was now Fined 50 Marks, and Ordered to stand in the Pillory at three several Places in Westminster.

Of Francis Smith. On June 11. another Tryal was had at the Guildhall, before my Lord-Chief-Justice Jeffreys, upon an Information against Francis Smith, living at the Elephant and Castle in Cornhill, for Printing and Publishing a Scandalous and Seditious Libel, call'd, The Rurree Show; of which he was found Guilty, and Condemned to pay a Fine of 500 l. and to stand Thrice in the Pillory, with the said Libel burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman, and to find Sureties for his Good-behaviour during Life, and to be Committed till all was perform'd.

Sir Thomas Armstrong Executed. Sir Thomas Armstrong, who had been Named in His Majesty's Proclamation of 28 June, 1682. was Apprehended at Leyden in Holland, by Order of the States; and being put on-board one of His Majesty's Yachts at Rotterdam, he was brought to Greenwich on the 10th of June at Night, and the next Morning Committed to Newgate, and was brought to the King's-Bench-Bar on the 14th of June; where being ask'd, What he could say for himself, why Execution should not be Awarded against him, he standing Attainted, by Outlawry, upon an Indictment of High-Treason &c. He offer'd nothing in his own Defence which the Court thought material; and therefore a Rule was made, That he should be Executed on Friday next at Tyburn; which was accordingly done.

1684. Dr. Titus Oates, who had been long in Disgrace at Court, and had his Lodgings, his Guard, and a great part of his Pension taken from him, was now, on May 10. publicly Arrested at the Amsterdam Coffee-House, in an Action of Scandalum Magnatum, at the Suit of the Duke of York, for saying, His Royal Highness was a Traytor; with several such other Reflections charged to be Malicious and Scandalous: He was carry'd from thence to Woodstreet-Compter, for the greater Ignominy, where he lay in Durance Two Days, and then was Removed, by Habeas Corpus, to the King's-Bench Prison: The next Term, he suffered Judgment to pass, by Default, and on June 18. the last Day of the Term, a Writ of Enquiry of Damages was Exhibited at the King's-Bench-Bar; where the Jury, upon Hearing the Evidence, gave 100000 Pounds Damages to the Duke. In the Michaelmas-Term following, he was Indicted in the King's-Bench, for Perjury: To which he Pleaded, Not Guilty; and had his Tryal deferr'd till the next Term. Soon after, he was again Indicted at the Old-Bailey, for Perjury, upon another Matter of Fact, and had his Tryal Appointed to be likewise the next Term, in the Court of King's-Bench.

On Novemb. 6. a Tryal was had at the Guildhall, before my Lord-Chief-Justice Jeffreys, upon an Action brought by Sir William Pritchard, formerly Lord-Mayor of London, against Mr. Papilion, and Mr. Dubois, (the latter of which was lately Dead) for Maliciously causing him to be Arrested, and falsely Imprison'd, during his Mayoralty: This Fact was represented by the Council, as a very Evil Design, and Malicious Practice, Contrived with several of the Traytors lately fled from Justice, as well against His Majesty's Government, and the Magistracy of the City, as against the Person of the said Sir William Pritchard. Upon which, the Jury brought in their Verdict for Sir William, and gave him 10000 Pounds Damages.

One Mr. Roswell, a Dissenting Teacher, had been Arraign'd on the 25th of October, at the King's-Bench-Bar, upon an Indictment of High-Treason, for Endeavouring to stir up His Majesty's Subjects to Rebellion, by inciting them thereunto, in a Sermon at a Conventicle in Rotherhithe, with Seditious and Traiterous Words against His Majesty's Royal Person and Government; and being brought to his Tryal on Nov. 18. was found Guilty of High-Treason.

Elias Bess, who had sometime since been Convicted upon an Information, for Speaking Scandalous and Seditious Words against the Government, and fled thereupon; being lately Apprehended, was on Nov. 20. brought to the King's-Bench-Bar, to receive the Judgment of the Court; which was, That he should pay a Fine of 1000 Pounds, should stand Thrice in the Pillory, and be bound, with Sureties, for his Good-behaviour.

In the same Term, Dalby and Nicholson, two of Oates's Men, for a farther Disgrace to their Master, were Convicted; the first, at the Nisi prius for the County of Middlesex; the other at the Nisi prius held for the City of London, at Guildhall, for Speaking most Scandalous and Seditious Words against His Majesty, and the Government.

Mr. Butler of Northamptonshire, having been Convicted, upon an Information, for Presenting and Reading to the Knights of that Shire (at the last Election of Parliament-Men) a Seditious Paper, being an Address to them, from some of the Freeholders, call'd Faction's Persons, was on Nov. 28. brought to the King's-Bench-Bar, to receive the Judgment of the Court; which was, That he should pay a Fine of 500 Marks, should find Sureties for his Good-behaviour during Life, and be Committed till all be perform'd.

And indeed, the whole History of this Year seems to have little less but Prosecutions and Penalties; and what was the Effect of them, the Surrendry of Charters: For most of the Cities, Towns, and other Corporations, thinking their Liberties could not survive those of the Great Metropolis, and finding the Court Resolute in the Expectance and Demand of them, did generally agree to offer them up a Sacrifice to His Majesty's Will and Pleasure: And even many of the Courtiers were employ'd to make an Interest in those Places where they were most concern'd, to obtain and extort the said Surrendry; and the Lord-Chief-Justice Jeffreys, in the Mid-land Circuit, made it his great Business to terrifie the People into this Compliance, and at his Return he waited on his Majesty at Windsor, and deliver'd up to him the Charters of the City of Lincoln, and of several other Corporations within his Circuit, as an Oblation of his own Loyalty, and a Triumph over the Peoples Liberties.

Delivery of Charters.

By these Measures, the Duke of York was known to Govern all, and was now Restored to his Offices of Profit and Honour, without any farther Scruple, that it was against the Law to hold them. So, on May 12. the King declared, That He had thought fit to Revoke and Determine the Commission for Executing the Office of Lord-High-Admiral of England, and to commit these Affairs to the Care of His Royal Highness: And on May 28. His Majesty was pleas'd to Declare in Council, That He thought it fit, and for his Service, that His Royal Highness should be present at the Meetings of the Council.

Duke of York Govern.

Sir Leoline Jenkins, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is said to have long pray'd His Majesty to permit him, by reason of his Indisposition, to Resign that Place; and that His Majesty was at last pleas'd to grant it, though with much unwillingness, because of the great Satisfaction His Majesty always had in his Services: So on Apr. 14. at Windsor, he deliver'd up the Seals to His Majesty; who was pleas'd to give them to the Honourable Sidney Godolphin, Esq; one of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, who was accordingly Sworn into the Secretary's Office on the 17th of April, in the Council held at Hampton-Court.

Sidney Godolphin, Esq; made Secretary of State.

On July 11. the Earl of Murray, and the Earl of Middletown, His Majesty's Secretaries of State for the Kingdom of Scotland, were, by His Majesty's Command, Sworn of his Most Honourable Privy-Council here in England, and took their Places at the Board in Hampton-Court. On July 15. His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon Simon Taylor, and John Turner, Esqrs, Aldermen of the Town of Lynn-Regis. On Aug. 24. His Majesty was pleas'd to Declare in Council, That having given the Earl of Rudnor, Lord-President of the Council, (with whose Services he was very well satisfy'd) Leave to Retire, in consideration of his great Age; He had Resolved to make the Earl of Rochester Lord-President, Mr. Secretary Godolphin First Commissioner of the Treasury, and the Earl of Middletown Secretary of State; and accordingly the Earl of Rochester took his Place at the Board, and the Earl of Middletown was Sworn one of His Majesty's Principal-Secretaries of State: And soon after, His Majesty was pleas'd to grant the Title and Dignity of a Baron of this Kingdom, unto the Right-Honourable Sidney Godolphin, Esq; by the Name and Stile of Baron Godolphin of Rialton in the County of Cornwall. Toward the End of September, His Majesty, by Commission under the Great-Seal, Appointed Sir William Gossling, and Sir Peter Vandeputt, to be Sheriffs of London and Middlesex for the Year ensuing: And in October, Sir James Smyth was Commissionated by His Majesty to be Lord-Mayor.

Other Honours and Preferments.

About the same time, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon Doctor Thomas Weatherley, one of His Majesty's Physicians in Ordinary, and President of the College of Physicians. In this Michaelmas-Term, His Majesty was pleas'd, upon the Death of Mr. Justice Wyndham, to Remove Mr. Baron Street to the Common-Pleas, and to Constitute in his Place Sir Robert Wright, His Majesty's Sergeant at Law, one of the Barons of the Exchequer.

On Decemb. 1. His Majesty taking Notice of the Loyalty and good Services of Capt. John Clark, Citizen of London, was pleas'd to conferr upon him the Honour of Knighthood: And on Dec. 15. His Majesty did the like Honour to Edmund Warcup, of Northmoor in the County of Oxford, Esq; And on Jan. 1. the same Honour of Knighthood was conferr'd upon William Creagh, of New-Castle upon Tyne, being Presented by His Royal Highness to His Majesty; who did him this Honour, as a Mark of his gracious Acceptance of the Loyal Zeal he had on several Occasions express'd for His Majesty's Service. On Jan. 7. John Drumond, Esq; one of His Majesty's Secretaries of State for the Kingdom of Scotland, was Sworn of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council, and took his Place at the Board in Whitehall. On Jan. 16. William Bridgeman, and Philip Musgrave, Esqrs; were Sworn Clerks of the Privy-Council, in the Room of Sir Thomas Delman, and Francis Gwynn, Esq; to whom His Majesty had given Leave to Resign. The last Honour His Majesty bestow'd, was that of Knighthood, on Jan. 28. upon Henry Brabant, of New-Castle, Esq; for his many Loyal Services.

Though the Duke of York had hitherto bore an Absolute Sway at Court; yet it is very certain, the King had now a mind once more to Part with Him, and to Recall his More-beloved Duke of Monmouth from his Banishment in Holland. The Duke, in his Journal, has upon this Subject made two Remarkable Entries: *Jan. 5. I receiv'd a Letter from L. mark'd by 29. (i. e. the King) in the Margin, to trust intirely in 10. and that in Febr. I should certainly have Leave to Return: That Matters were concerting towards it; and that 39. (i. e. the Duke of York) had no Suspicion, notwithstanding of my Reception here. — Febr. 3. A Letter from L. That my Business was almost finish'd as done; but must be so sudden, as not to leave room for 39's Party to Counterplot: That it is probable, he would chuse Scotland rather than Flanders or this Country; which is all one to 29. But the King was fatally prevented in these kind Intentions to his Son, and Resolution of Sending away his Brother; for on Monday Febr. 2. His Majesty was taken very Ill; and the Report of it was so great an Alarm to the Nation, that the Privy-Council thought fit to Quiet the People by this Account:*

The King enclined to Recall the Duke of Monmouth,

But fatally prevented.

At the Council-Chamber, WHITEHALL, 4 Febr. 1684. at Five in the Afternoon.

THE Lords of His Majesty's Most-Honourable Privy-Council, have thought fit, for preventing false Reports, to make known, That His Majesty, upon Monday Morning last, was seized with a violent Fit, that gave great cause to fear the Issue of it; but after some Hours, an Amendment appeared; which, with the Blessing of God, being Improved by the Application of proper and seasonable Remedies, is so now advanced, that the Physicians have this Day, aswell as Yesterday, given this Account to the Council, viz. That they conceive His Majesty to be in a Condition of Safety, and that He will in a few Days be freed from his Distemper.

Account of the King's Illness.

1684.

But notwithstanding these Hopes, and flattering the World with them, there was this sad Account given from Whitehall, Febr. 6. " On Monday last in the Morning, our late Gracious Sovereign, King Charles II. was seized with a Violent Fit, by which his Speech and Senses were for some time taken from him; but upon the immediate Application of fitting Remedies, he returned to such a Condition as gave some Hopes of his Recovery, till Wednesday Night; at which time the Disease returning upon him with greater Violence, he Expired this Day about Noon.

As to the Manner and Circumstances of his Distemper, and his Death, it is best to deliver them in the very Words of a good Physician, and faithful Historian, who, in his Memoirs, writes thus:

Account
of the King's Sickness
& Death.

" It's confess'd, few Princes come to Die a Sudden Death, but the World is apt to attribute it to Foul-Play; especially if attended with Unusual Circumstances in the Time and Manner of it. King Charles had a Healthful Constitution beyond most Men, and took great Care to preserve it, by Diet and Exercise, which Naturally promise a Long Life: And it was more Extraordinary to see such a Man Die before Threescore, than another in the Bloom of Youth. Now, if he Died a Natural Death, it's agreed by all, that it must have been an Apoplexy. This Disease seizes all the Vital Faculties at once; and yet, for the most part, does not only give some short Warnings of its Approach, by unusual Affections of the Head, but many times is occasion'd by some evident preceding Cause. In King Charles's Case, there appeared no visible Cause, either near or remote, to which, with any certainty of Reason, his Disease could be ascribed; and the Fore-runners of it were rather to be found in the Stomach and Bowels, than in the Head. For after he was a-Bed, he was over-heard to Groan most part of the Night: And both then, and next Morning, before he fell into the Fit, he complain'd first of a heavy Oppression in his Stomach, and about his Heart, and afterwards of a sharp Pain in those Parts; all which Symptoms had but little relation to an Apoplexy. That Morning there appear'd to every-body about him a Ghastriness and Paleness in his Looks: And when he sat down to be Shav'd, just before the Fit took him, he could not sit straight, as he us'd to do, but continu'd in a Stooping Posture, with his Hand upon his Stomach, till the Fit came. After he had been brought out of it, by Opening a Vein, he complain'd of a Racking Pain in his Stomach, and of no Indisposition any-where else: And during the whole time of his Sickness, and even when he seem'd most Insensible, he was observ'd to lay his Hand, for the most part, upon his Stomach, in a Moaning Posture, and continu'd so till his Death: And so Violent was the Pain, that when all Hopes were gone, the Physicians were desir'd to use all their Art to procure him an Easie Death.

" So much for the Distemper it self. There remains some Things to be taken Notice of, that fell out before and after his Death.

" A few Days before he was taken Ill, King Charles being in Company where the present Posture of Affairs were discours'd of, there escap'd him some warm Expressions, about the Uneasie Circumstances he was plung'd into, and the Ill Measures had been given him: And how, in a certain particular Affair, he was pleas'd to mention, He had been Abus'd; adding, in some Passion, That if He Liv'd but a Month longer, he wou'd find a Way to make himself Easie, for the rest of his Life. This Passage was whisper'd abroad next Day; and the Rumour of Recalling the Duke of Monmouth, and Sending away the Duke of York, came to take Air about the same time. Indeed, all things were making ready, to put the latter in execution; and there is reason to believe the King had intimated as much to the Duke himself; for some of his Richest Furniture was put up, and his Chief Servants Order'd to be in a readiness to Attend their Master upon an Hour's Warning; and Yatches were waiting, to Transport some Person of Quality, without mentioning who it was, and whither bound. The Romish Party that Manag'd about Court, were observ'd to be more than ordinary Diligent and Busie up and down Whitehall and St. James's, as if some very Important Affair was in Agitation; and a new and unusual Concern was to be seen on their Countenances. Nor was it any wonder; for in this suspected Change, they were like to be the only Losers, and all their teeming Hopes were in a fair way to be Disappointed. How far the Principles of some of that Party might leave them at liberty to push on their Revenge for this design'd Affront, as well as to prevent the Blow that threatn'd them, though without the Privacy, much less the Consent of the Duke of York, is left to the Reader to judge.

" There was a Foreign Minister, that some Days before the King fell Ill, order'd his Steward to buy a considerable Parcel of Black Cloth, which serv'd him and his Retinue afterwards for Mourning: And the late Ambassador, Don Pedro Ronquillo, made it no Secret, That he had a Letter from Flanders the Week before King Charles Died, that took Notice of his Death, as the News there. But both these might fall out by meer Accident.

" There remains Two things more, that deserve some Consideration in this Matter. When his Body was Open'd, there was not sufficient Time given for taking an exact Observation of his Stomach and Bowels; which, one would think, ought chiefly to have been done, considering the Violent Pains he had there: And when a certain Physician seem'd to be more Inquisitive than ordinary about the Condition of those Parts, he was taken aside and Reprov'd for his needleless Curiosity. In the next place, His Body Stunk so extremely within a few Hours after his Death, notwithstanding the Coldness of the Season, that the People about him were very much offended with the Smell: Which is a thing very Extraordinary, in one of his Strong and Healthful Constitution; and is not a proper Consequent of a meer Apoplethical Distemper.

" There was some Weight laid upon an Accident that fell out at Windsor some Years before his Death: For the King Drinking more liberally than usual, after the Fatigue of Riding, he retir'd to the next Room, and wrapping himself up in his Cloak, fell a-sleep upon a Couch. He was but a little time come back to the Company, when a Servant belonging to one of them lay down upon the same Couch, in the King's Cloak, and was found Stabb'd Dead with a Poniard. Nor was it ever known how it happen'd, but the Matter hush'd up, and no Enquiry made about it.

" To Conclude: Dr. Short, who was a Man of great Probity and Learning, and a Romantic, made no scruple to declare his Opinion to some of his Intimate Friends, That he believ'd King Charles had Foul-Play done him: And when he came to Die himself, express'd some Suspicion, that he had met with the same Treatment, for opening his Mind too freely in that Point.

" So much for the Circumstances of King Charles's Death, that seem to have an ill Aspect. There are

“ As, First, He had Liv'd so fast, as might Enervate, in a great measure, the Natural Force of his Constitution, and Exhaust his Animal Spirits; and therefore he might be more subject to an Apoplexy, which is a Disease that weakens and locks up these Spirits from performing their usual Functions: And though, in his later Years, he had given up himself more to the Pleasures of Wine than of Women; that might be rather the Effect of Age than of Choice.

“ Next, It's known, He had been once or twice attack'd before, with Fits that much resembled those of which he afterwards Died: And yet, as the manner of them is told, they look rather to have been a Convulsive Motion, than an Apoplexy; seeing they were attended with violent Contorsions of his Face, and Convulsions of his whole Body and Limbs. This is the more confirm'd, by a Passage that happned during the Heat of the Papish Plot. King Charles had some Secret Matters to manage at that time, by the means of a Papish Priest then beyond-Sea, whom he order'd to be privately sent for: And the Gentleman employ'd between the King and him (from Whom I had the Story) was directed to bring him in a Disguise to Whitehall. The King and the Priest were a considerable Time together alone in the Closet, and the Gentleman attended in the next Room: At last the Priest came out, with all the Marks of Fright and Astonishment in his Face; and having recover'd himself a little, he told the Gentleman, That he had run the greatest Risque ever Man did; for while he was with the King, His Majesty was suddenly surprized with a Fit, accompany'd with violent Convulsions of his Body, and Contorsions of his Face, which lasted for some Moments; and when he was going to call out for Help, the King held him by force till it was over, and then bid him not be afraid, for he had been troubled with the like before; the Priest adding, what a Condition he should have been in, considering his Religion, in the present Juncture of Affairs, if the King had Died of that Fit, and no-Body in the Room with him besides himself.

“ But leaving this Story to the Credit of the Priest; there might be another Natural Cause assign'd for King Charles's falling into such a Fit as that of which he Died, which is this: He had for some time an Issue in his Leg, which run much, and consequently must have made a great Revulsion from his Head; upon which Account, it's probable, it was made. A few Weeks before his Death, he had let it be dry'd up; contrary to the Advice of his Physicians, who told him it wou'd prejudice his Health. Their Prognostick was partly true in this, that there came a painful Tumour upon the Place where the Issue had been, which prov'd very obstinate, and was not thoroughly heal'd up when he Died.

“ In fine, It is agreed on all hands, that King Charles express'd no Suspicion of his being Poison'd, during all the time of his Sickness: Though it must be also observ'd, That his Fits were so Violent, that he could not Speak when they were upon him, and shew'd an Aversion to Speaking during the Intervals. And there was not any thing to be seen, upon Opening his Body, that could reasonably be attributed to the Force of Poison. Yet, to allow these Considerations no more Weight than they can well bear, this must be acknowledg'd, That there are Poisons which affect originally the Animal Spirits, and are of so subtle a Nature, that they leave no Concluding Marks upon the Bodies of those they Kill.

“ Thus Reign'd, and thus Dy'd King Charles II. a Prince Endowed with all the Qualities that might justly have rendred him the Delight of Mankind, and entitl'd him to the Character of one of the greatest Genius's that ever sat upon a Throne, if he had not fully'd those Excellent Parts with the soft Pleasures of Ease; and had not entertain'd a Fatal Friendship, that was incompatible with the Interest of England. His Religion was that of Deism, or rather that which is call'd so: And if, in his Exile, or at his Death, he went into that of Rome; the first was imputed to a Complaisance with the Company he was then oblig'd to keep; and the last, to a lazie Diffidence in all other Religions, upon a Review of his past Life, and the near approach of an Uncertain State. His Person was Tall and Well-made, his Constitution Vigorous and Healthy; and it's hard to determine, whether he took more pains to preserve it by Diet and Exercise, or to impair it by Excess in his Pleasures. In Health, he was a great Pretender to Physick, and Encourager of Quacks, by whom he was often Cheated of considerable Sums of Money for their pretended Secrets: But whenever he was Indispos'd, he consulted his Physicians, and depended on their Skill only.

“ His Face was compos'd of harsh Features, difficult to be trac'd with the Pencil; yet, in the main, it was agreeable; and he had a Noble Majestick Mein. In Contradiction to all the common receiv'd Rules of Physiognomy, he was Merciful, Good-Natur'd; and, in the last Twenty-four Years of his Life, Fortunate, if to succeed in most of his Designs, may be call'd so. Never Prince lov'd Ceremony less, or despis'd the Pageantry of a Crown more; yet he was Master of something in his Person and Aspect, that commanded both Love and Veneration at once.

“ He was a great Votary to Love; and yet the Easiest and most Unconcern'd Rival. He was, for the most part, not very Nice in the Choice of his Mistresses, and seldom possess'd of their First Favours; yet would sacrifice All to please them; and upon every Caprice of theirs, deny'd himself the Use of his Reason, and acted contrary to his Interest. He was a Respectful Civil Husband; a Fond Father, a Kind Brother, an Easie Enemy; but none of the Firmest or most Grateful Friends: Bountiful by Starts; one day Lavish to his Servants; the next leaving them to Starve: Glad to Win a little Money at Play; and Impatient to Lose but the Thousandth Part of what within an Hour after he would Throw away in Grofs. He seem'd to have had nothing of Jealousie in his Nature, neither in Matters of Love nor Power: He bore patiently Rivals in the one, and Competitors in the other; otherwise he would not have contributed to a Foreign Greatness at Sea, nor given his Brother so uncontroll'd a Share in the Government.

“ Though his Understanding was quick and lively, with a vast compass of Thought; yet he would submit his Judgment, in greatest Matters, to others of much inferior Parts: And as he had an extraordinary share of Wit himself, so he lov'd it in others, even when pointed against his own Faults and Mismanagements. He had Read but little, yet he had a good taste of Learning, and would reason nicely upon most Sciences. The Mechanicks were one of his peculiar Talents, especially the Art of Building and Working of Ships; which no-Body understood better, nor, if he had liv'd, would have carry'd it farther. He had a strong Laconick way of Expression, and a Genteel, Easie and Polite way of Writing: And when he had a mind to lay aside the King, which he often did 1684. " in select Companies of his own, there were a " thousand irresistible Charms in his Conversation.

 " He lov'd Money, only to spend it; and would " privately accept of a small Sum paid to Him" self, in Lieu of a far greater to be paid into the " Exchequer.
 " He lov'd not Business, and sought every Oc" casion to avoid it; which was one reason that " he pass'd so much of his Time with his " Mistresses: Yet when Necessity call'd him,
 " none of his Council could Reason more closely " upon Matters of State; and he would often,
 " by fits, out-doe his Ministers in Application " and Diligence. No Age produced a greater " Master in the Art of Dissimulation; and yet no " Man was less upon his Guard, or sooner De" ceiv'd in the Sincerity of Others. If he had any " one fix'd Maxim of Government, it was to Play
 " one Party against another, to be thereby the " more Master of both: And no Prince understood " better how to shift Hands upon every Change
 " of the Scene.
 " To sum up his Character: He was Dex" terous in all the Arts of Insinuation; and had
 " acquir'd so great an Ascendant over the Af" fections of his People, in spite of all the un" happy Measures he had taken, that it may
 " in some sense be said, He Died opportunely
 " for England; since if he had Liv'd, it's pro" bable we might, in Compliance with him, have " Complimented our selves out of all the Remains 1684. " of Liberty, if he had had but a mind to be " Master of them: Which it's but Charity to " believe he had not, at least immediately before " his Death.

 " There is one thing more, that may help to " make up the Character of this Prince; That in " Lines and Shape of his Face (all but the Teeth)
 " he had a great Resemblance of the Ancient " Busts and Statues we have of the Emperor
 " Tiberius: Inasmuch that one of the most Learn'd " Men of this Age told me, That walking in the " Farnesian Gardens at Rome, with a Noble Italian
 " that had been at the Court of England, he took " Notice of this Resemblance in an Antique Statue
 " of Tiberius; and asking the Italian if he re" membered any Prince he had seen that resembled
 " it? the other immediately nam'd King Charles.
 " As there was a great Likeness betwixt these " Two Princes in their Faces, there was likewise
 " some in their Maxims of Government; the Time
 " of their Age in which they came to Govern; the " Length of their Reigns; and the Suspensions about " the Manner of their Death. And indeed,
 " excepting Tiberius's Temper, his Cruelty, Jealousie,
 " and Unnatural Lusts, any One that's acquainted " with both their Stories, will easily find some" thing of a Parallel betwixt them. Nor is this " any Reflection upon the Memory of King Charles;
 " for, except in what I nam'd, Tiberius may be " reckon'd among the Wisest and the Bravest of " Those that wore the Imperial Purple.

LIFE and REIGN
King JAMES the Second.

1684.

AFTER the Death of King CHARLES, the Privy-Council immediately Assembled; And the New King, JAMES the Second, appearing in Person among them, was Graciously pleas'd to express himself in this manner:

My LORDS;

BEfore I enter upon any other Business, I think fit to say something to You. Since it hath pleas'd Almighty God to place Me in this Station, and I am now to Succeed so Good and Gracious a King, as well as so very Kind a Brother; I think it fit to Declare to You, That I will endeavour to follow his Example, and most especially in that of his great Clemency and Tenderness to his People. I have been reported to be a Man for Arbitrary Power; but that is not the only Story that has been made of Me: And I shall make it my Endeavour to Preserve this Government, both in Church and State, as it is now by Law Establish'd. I know, the Principles of the Church of England are for Monarchy, and the Members of it have shewn themselves Good and Loyal Subjects; therefore, I shall always take Care to Defend and Support it. I know too, that the Laws of England are sufficient to make the King as Great a Monarch as I can Wish: And as I shall never Depart from the Just Rights and Prerogative of the Crown, so I shall never Invade any Man's Property. I have often heretofore Ventur'd My Life in Defence of this Nation; And I shall still go as far as any Man in Preserving it in all its Just Rights and Liberties.

Whereupon the Lords of the Council were Humble Suitors to His Majesty, That these His Gracious Expressions might be made Publick: Which His Majesty did Order accordingly. Then a Proclamation was Drawn up, signifying His Majesty's Pleasure, "That all Men being in Office of Government at the Decease of the Late King, should so Continue till His Majesty's farther Direction." And in the Afternoon, the King was Proclaimed before Whitehall-Gate, at Temple-Bar, and the Royal Exchange, with the usual Solemnity: But the Signs of Popular Grief exceeded of those of Joy. On Febr. 9. the King Publish'd a Proclamation, For Continuing the Collection of the Customs and Subsidies of Tonnage and Poundage; Declaring, "That He had thought fit to Call a Parliament speedily to be Assembled, in which He made no doubt but Care would be taken for settling a sufficient Revenue on the Crown, for the Support of the Government; the Necessities of which, in the meantime, requir'd that the Customs and Subsidies, and other Duties upon Merchandizes, should be Contin'd to be Collected, as in the Time of his Dearest Brother lately Deceas'd." Though this was no Extraordinary Stretch of Power; yet it was suspected by some wise Persons, to be an Eagerness of breaking through the Laws of the Land, and the Liberties of the Subject: And it fell under the greater Suspicion, when the Address of the Barristers and Students of the Middle-Temple came to be Presented by Sir Humphry Mackworth, with this Expression in it: We cannot but with the deepest Sense of Gratitude acknowledge Your Majesty's great Goodness and Condescension in Your late Declaration; and in particular, That Your Majesty hath been Graciously pleas'd, in pursuance of the same, to extend Your Royal Care of the Government, to the Preservation of the Customs; the Intermision whereof, would not only have disabled Your Majesty to Maintain the Navy in Defence of the Realm, but, by taking away the Balance of Trade, have ruin'd Thousands of Your Majesty's Subjects that paid Custom in the Life of our Late Sovereign; and by an Excessive Exportation and Importation Custom-free, have rendred that Branch of the Revenue unprofitable for some Years to come, notwithstanding all the Care and Loyalty of the succeeding Parliament, &c.

There was another Offence taken, at the Obscure and Parsimonious Funeral of the late King; which was look'd upon to be either a want of Spirit or a want of Affection in his Royal Successor. This Account was given of it by Authority:

Whitehall, Febr. 14. "This Evening was privately solemnized the Funeral of his Late Majesty, King Charles II. from the Painted-Chamber in the Palace at Westminster, to the Abbey-Church there. The Body was carry'd under a Velvet-Canopy, borne by Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber, Six Earls supporting the Pall. The Proceeding began with Servants to the Nobility, their Royal Highness's, their present Majesty's, the Queen Dowager's, and the Late King's Servants, &c. After Whom follow'd Barons, Bishops, and others of the Nobility, according to their respective Degrees, together with the great Officers, and the Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. His Royal Highness the Prince of Denmark was Chief-Mourner, (his Train borne by the Lord Cornbury:) The Supporters to the Chief-Mourner were the Dukes of Somerset and Beaufort, wearing their Collars of the Order, (as the other Knights of the Garter, then present, did.) The Assistants to the Chief-Mourner were Sixteen Earls. One of the Kings of Arms carry'd the Crown and Cushion; the rest of the Officers of Arms Attending and Directing the Ceremony; which was Clos'd with His Majesty's Band of Gentlemen-Pensioners, and the Yeomen of the Guard. At the Entrance into the Church, the Dean and Prebendaries of Westminster, attended with the Choir, met the Body, and proceeded to King Henry VIIIth's Chapel, where it was Interred in a Vault under the East-end of the South-Isle. ended, and the Officers of His Majesty's Household having broken their Staffs, the Royal Stile was Proclaim'd by another of the Kings of Arms, according to Custom.

Honours and Pre-terments.

On Febr. 9. His Royal Highness Prince George, Hereditary Prince of Denmark, was, by his Majesty's Command, call'd into the Council-Chamber, and took his Place at the Board. Within few Days after, His Majesty was graciously pleas'd to make His Grace the Duke of Ormond Lord-Steward; the Earl of Arlington Lord-Chamberlain; the Lord Newport Lord Treasurer; the Lord Maynard Comptroller; and Henry Savil, Esq; Vice-Chamberlain of his Household: in which Offices they had served the Late King. And soon after, His Majesty appointed Henry Bulkley, Esq; to be Master of his Household; Sir Stephen Fox Eldest Clerk of the Green-Cloth; Sir William Boreman Second Clerk of the same; Sir William Churchill Eldest Clerk-Comptroller; and Sir Richard Mason Youngest Clerk-Comptroller: in which Places they had likewise served His Late Majesty. Lawrence Earl of Rochester, Lord President of the Council, was now constituted Lord High-Treasurer of England; and on Monday Morning, Febr. 16. His Majesty gave the White-Staff to His Lordship. On Wednesday following, in the Afternoon, His Majesty was pleas'd, in Council, to Declare the Right-Honourable the Marquess of Halifax Lord President of his Privy-Council; the Earl of Clarendon Lord Privy-Seal; the Duke of Beaufort Lord President of Wales; and the Lord Godolphin Lord Chamberlain to the Queen. On March 8. His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon Thomas Vernon, of London, Esq; as a Mark of his Royal Favour, for his stedfast Loyalty: And near the same time, he did the same Honour to William Haman, Esq; Mayor of the City of Bristol. And on March 22. His Majesty conferr'd the like Honour on Marmaduke Dayrel, Esq; Son of Sir Thomas Dayrel, late of Comps-Castle in the County of Cambridge, Kt.

Account of Religion.

Dissenters Complain of their Sufferings.

In Matters of Religion, the Dissenters Complain of great Persecutions, and give this Tragical Account of their Sufferings: "About this time, one Mr. Robert Mayot, of Oxon, a Pious Conformist, who had devoted his Estate to Charitable Uses, gave, by his Last Will, 600 Pounds, to be distributed by Mr. Baxter to Sixty Poor Ejected Ministers; adding, That he did it not because they were Nonconformists, but because many such were Poor and Pious. But the King's Attorney, Sir Robert Sawyer, Sued for it in the Chancery; and the Lord-Keeper North gave it all to the King. It was Paid into the Chancery, by Order; (and, as Providence Order'd it, there kept safe till King William so happily ascended the Throne, when the Commissioners of the Great-Seal restor'd it to the Use for which it was intended by the Deceased; and Mr. Baxter Dispos'd of it accordingly.) This Year, while Mr. Baxter lay in Pain and Languishing, the Justices of the Sessions sent Warrants to Apprehend him, he being One in a Catalogue which was said to contain the Names of a Thousand Persons, who were all to be Bound to their Good-Behaviour. Knowing that their Warrant was not to Break-open Doors, he refused to Open to them, though they were got into his House. Whereupon they set six Officers at his Study-Door, who kept him from his Bed and Food, by Watching all Night: And the next Day he Yielded. They carry'd him to the Sessions, when he was scarce able to stand, and Bound him in a Bond of 400 Pounds to his Good-Behaviour. He desired to know his Crimes, and Accusers: but was told, 'Twas only to Secure the Government against Suspected Persons. He was sometime after carry'd again to the Sessions-House in great Pain, and forc'd to continue Bound. He refus'd to stand Bound, not knowing what they might interpret a Breach of the Peace: But his Sureties would be Bound, lest he should Die in Jail. He was carry'd thither a third time, and still Bound, though, for the most part, he kept his Bed.

Sept. 23. Mr. Thomas Roswell, who was Minister of a Dissenting Congregation in Rotherhitb, was Imprison'd in the Gate-House in Westminster, by a Warrant from Sir George Jeffreys, for High-Treason. A Bill was found against him at the Quarter-Sessions at Kingston in Surrey: Upon which he was Arraign'd on Octob. 25. and Try'd on Novemb. 18. following, at the King's-Bench-Bar, by a Surrey Jury, before the Lord Chief-Justice Jeffreys, and Three other Judges of that Court, Wythins, Halloway and Walcot. The High-Treason, as laid in the Indictment, and Sworn by the Witnesses, was, That in a Sermon which he Preach'd on Sept. 14. he said these Words; That the People (meaning the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King) make a flocking to the (said Sovereign Lord the) King, upon pretence of Healing the King's-Evil; which He (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King) could not doe: But that We (meaning himself, and other Traiterous Persons, Subjects of our said Lord the King) are they to whom They (meaning the Subjects of our said Lord the King) ought to flock; because We (meaning himself, and the said other Traiterous Persons) are Priests and Prophets, that, by our Prayers, can Heal the Dolours and Grievs of the People. We (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) have had Two Wicked Kings, (meaning the most-Serene Charles I. late King of England, and our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is) whom we can resemble to no other Person, but to the most wicked Jeroboam: And that if They (meaning the said Evil-dispos'd Persons then and there so, as aforesaid, with him Unlawfully Assembled and gather'd together) would stand to their Principles, He (meaning himself) did not fear but They (meaning Himself and the said Evil-dispos'd Persons) would Overcome their Enemies, (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King, and his Subjects) as in former Times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. The Witnesses were Three Women: They Swore to the Words as they stand, without the Innuendo's. The Tryal lasted about seven Hours. Mr. Roswell made a most Full and Clear Defence of himself; very modestly, and yet strenuously Vindicating his Innocence, to the Satisfaction of those that were present, and so as to gain the Applause of many Gentlemen of the Long-Robe. The Jury, however, after they had been out about Half an Hour, brought him in Guilty. The Women who were the Witnesses were Infamous Persons, laden with the Guilt of many Perjuries; which had easily been Prov'd upon them all, before the Tryals, could Justice have been had: But they were skreen'd by the Recorder, who was the Person that laid the whole Scheme of the Business, and patcht up the Indictment, in Terms suited to his known Abilities. But such of them as could be met with, were afterwards Convicted of Perjury, and Smith, the Chief Witness, was Pillory'd before the Exchange. Sir John Talbot, who was present, represented to King Charles the State of the Case, as it appear'd at the Tryal; and He Order'd Jeffreys to find an Evasion. Whereupon he assign'd him Council afterwards to Plead to the Insufficiency of the Indictment in Arrest of Judgment; and the King gave him his Pardon:

“ Pardon : Upon which he was Discharg'd. Jan. 19. Mr. Fenkyns Died in Newgate, as did also Mr. Bampfild and Mr. Ralphson, and several others in other Prisons. And quickly after Died King Charles Himself, viz. on Febr. 6. 1684. Though he continu'd the Prosecution of the Poor Dissenters, yet they held on their Meetings; heartily Praying for his Peace and Prosperity : And at last they were as much Concern'd at his Death, as any People in the Kingdom.

Death of many Bishops.

King Charles's Death was preceded, if not Prognosticated by the Death of several Bishops : Dr. Edward Rainbow, who had been Consecrated Bishop of Carlisle on Jan. 10. 1664. and had now Liv'd to the Age of 76 Years, Died in his Palace of Rose-Castle on March 26. And on the 1st of April following his Body was Interred in the Church-Yard of Dalston, under the Chancel-Wall; with a Funeral Sermon Preach'd by Mr. Thomas Tulley, one of his Lordship's Chaplain's, and Chancellor of the Diocese of Carlisle, which was afterwards publish'd; with the Life of the Bishop, Written by Jonathan Bankes School-Master of Appleby. He was Succeeded by Dr. Thomas Smith, sometime Fellow of Queen's-College in Oxford. Doctor Peter Gunning, Translated from the See of Chichester to that of Ely, on March 4. 1674. Died now on Sunday July 6. and his Body was soon after Buried with due Solemnity in the Cathedral-Church of Ely, and had his Great Character and Good Works remembered in a Discourse Deliver'd in Two Sermons Preach'd in the Cathedral of Ely, in Sept. 1684. by Humphry Gower, D. D. Master of St. John's College in Cambridge, and one of the Prebendaries of Ely. Upon his Death, Dr. Francis Turner, Bishop of Rochester, in great Favour with the New King, was Translated to the good Bishoprick of Ely : And on Sunday Nov. 2. Dr. Thomas Spratt, Dean of Westminster, another great Favourite, was Consecrated Bishop of Rochester, by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Assisted by several other Bishops, in the Chapel at Lambeth. Dr. George Morley, Bishop of Winchester, a very Learned and Exemplary Prelate, after a good old Age of 87 Years, Died in Farnham-Castle, on Octob. 29. Whereupon his Body was conveyed to Winchester, and Buried in a little Vault at the foot of the Steps ascending to the Choir on the North-side. Soon after, an Alter-Tomb was erected over his Grave, and a Latin Inscription put upon it, which the Bishop himself had compos'd in the 80th Year of his Age. Dr. Peter Mew, Bishop of Bath and Wells, was Translated to this Rich See of Winchester, and did Homage to His Majesty on Nov. 24. And Dr. Thomas Kenn, Fellow of Winchester-College, a Man Eminent for a Devotional and Austere Life, was on Sunday Jan. 25. Consecrated Bishop of Bath and Wells, by the Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Assisted by several other Bishops, at his Chapel at Lambeth.

K. Charles supposed to Die a Papist.

King Charles had Liv'd in a Profest Communion with the Church of England, but had Indulg'd Himself and his Court in so many Liberties of Life, and such a Prophaneness of Humour, that he was generally thought to be a Prince of little or no Religion : And indeed, for that Reason, he was the fitter to Die in the Communion of the Church of Rome, if he could make himself believe that he might in the Bosom of that Church (and of that alone) obtain Salvation, without Repentance. The Pious Bishop Kenn, of whom His Majesty was thought to have the highest Opinion, was appointed to Attend him, in his last Sickness; but he was allow'd no Opportunity to Talk seriously with him, being frequently Dismiss'd, and again industriously Interrupted in the Duties which he offer'd to Perform : While Father Huddleston was carefully brought into the Bed-

Chamber, and was allow'd to Perform all the Last Duties to His Dying Majesty ; but whether so much at the King's own Desire, or at the Officious Importunity of Others, is not so easie to determine. But this is certain, That King James, who had better have Conceal'd this Matter, was very zealous to Divulge it : For he Publish'd Two Papers, written by the Late King, and left in his Strong Box ; where his Royal Brother, King James, affirm'd that He found them, and they are as follow :

The First PAPER.

THE Discourse We had the other day, I hope, Papers in the Strong Box. satisfy'd you in the Main, That Christ can have but One Church here on Earth ; and I Believe, that it is as visible, as that the Scripture is in Print, That None can be that Church, but That which is call'd the Rom. Cath. Ch. I think you need not trouble your self with entering into that Ocean of particular Disputes, when the Main (and in truth, the only) Question is, Where that Church is, which We do profess to Believe, in the Two Creeds? We Declare there, to Believe One Catholick and Apostolick Church : And it is not left to every Fantastical Man's Head to Believe as he pleases, but to the Church, to whom Christ left the Power upon Earth, to Govern us in Matters of Faith, who made the Creeds for our Directions. It were a very irrational thing to make Laws for a Country, and leave it to the Inhabitants to be the Interpreters and Judges of these Laws. For when every Man will be his own Judge, and by Consequence no such Thing as either Right or Wrong ; Can we therefore suppose, that Almighty God would leave us at those Uncertainties, as to give us a Rule to go by, and leave every Man to be his own Judge? I do ask any Ingenious Man, Whether it be not the same thing, to follow our own Fancy, or to Interpret the Scripture by it? I would have any Man shew me, where the Power of Deciding of Matters of Faith is given to every particular Man. Christ left his Power to the Church, even to Forgive Sins in Heaven ; and left his Spirit with them, which they exercis'd after his Resurrection : First, by his Apostles, in these Creeds ; and many Years after, by the Council at Nice, where that Creed was made that is call'd by that Name : And by the Power which they had received from Christ, They were the Judges, even of the Scripture it self, many Years after the Apostles, which Books were Canonical, and which were not. And if they had this Power then, I desire to know how they came to lose it ; and by what Authority Men Separate themselves from that Church? The only Pretence I ever heard of, was, Because the Church hath fail'd, in Wrestling and Interpreting the Scripture, contrary to the true Sense and Meaning of it ; and that they have impos'd Articles of Faith upon Us, which are not to be Warranted by God's Word. I do desire to know, Who is to be Judge of That ; whether the Whole Church, (the Succession whereof has continu'd to this day, without Interruption,) or Particular Men, who have rais'd Schisms of their own advantage ?

This is a True COPY of a PAPER I found in the late King my Brother's Strong Box, Written by his own Hand.

J. R.

The Second PAPER.

IT is a sad thing to consider what a world of Heresies are crept into this Nation ; Every Man thinks himself as Competent a Judge of the Scriptures, as the very Apostles themselves : And 'tis no Wonder that it should be so ; since That Part of the Nation which looks most like a Church, dares not 1684. not bring the true Arguments against the other Sects, for fear they should be turn'd against themselves, and Confuted by their own Arguments. The Church of England (as 'tis call'd) wou'd fain have it thought They are the Judges in Matters Spiritual, and yet dare not say positively there is no Appeal from them; for either they must say, that They are Infallible, (which they cannot pretend to;) or confess, that what they Decide in Matters of Conscience, is no farther to be follow'd, than it agrees with every Man's private Judgment. If Christ did leave a Church here upon Earth, and We were all once of that Church; How, and by what Authority, did We Separate from that Church? If the Power of Interpreting Scripture, be in every Man's Brain, What need have we of a Church, or Church-men? To what purpose then did Our Saviour, after he had given his Apostles Power to Bind and Loose in Heaven and Earth, add to it, That he would be with them to the End of the World? These Words were not spoken Parabolically, or by way of Figure: Christ was then Ascending into his Glory, and left his Power with his Church, even to the End of the World? We have had, these Hundred Years past, the sad Effects, of Denying to the Church that Power in Matters Spiritual, without an Appeal. What Country can subsist in Peace or Quiet, where there is not a Supreme Judge, from whence there can be no Appeal? Can there be any Justice done, where the Offenders are their own Judges, and Equal Interpreters of the Law, with Those, who are Appointed to administer Justice? This is Our Case here in England, in Matters Spiritual: For the Protestants are not of the Church of England, as 'tis the true Church from whence there can be no Appeal, but because the Discipline of that Church is conformable, at that present, to their Fancies; which as soon as it shall contradict or vary from, they are ready to embrace or join with the next Congregation of People, whose Discipline or Worship agrees with their own Opinion at that time: so that, according to this Doctrine, there is no other Church, nor Interpreter of Scripture, but that which lies in every Man's giddy Brain. I desire to know therefore of every Serious Considerer of these things, Whether the great Work of our Salvation ought to depend upon such a sandy Foundation as this? Did Christ ever say to the Civil Magistrates, (much less to the People) That He would be with them unto the End of the World? Or did He give them the Power to Forgive Sins? St. Paul tells the Corinthians, Ye are God's Husbandry; Ye are God's Buildings; We are Labourers with God. This shews Who are the Labourers, and Who are the Husbandry and Building. And in this whole Chapter, and in the preceding one, St. Paul takes great Pains to set forth, That They (the Clergy) have the Spirit of God; without which, no Man searches the Deep Things of God: And he concludes the Chapter, with this Verse; For Who hath known the Mind of the Lord, that he may instruct him? But We have the Mind of Christ. Now, if We but Consider, in humane Probability and Reason, the Powers Christ leaves to his Church in this Gospel, and St. Paul explains so distinctly afterwards, We cannot think that Our Saviour said all these things to no purpose. And pray Consider, on the other side, That Those who resist the Truth, and will not submit to his Church, draw their Arguments from Implications, and far-fetch'd Interpretations, at the same time that they deny plain and positive Words: Which is so great a Disingenuity, as 'tis not almost to be thought that they can believe themselves. Is there any other Foundation of the Protestant Church, but that if the Civil Magistrate please, he may call such of the Clergy as he thinks fit for his Turn at that time, and turn the Church either to Presbytery, Independency, or indeed what he pleases? This was the Way of our pretended Reformation here in England; And, by the same Rule and Authority, it may be Altered into as many more Shapes and Forms, as there are Fancies in Mens Heads.

The Festival of St. George, Apr. 23. had been Appointed for the Coronation of the King and Queen, which was Perform'd in this manner: Their Majesties being come from Whitehall to the Palace at Westminster, (where the Nobility and Others who were to go in Procession were Assembl'd) came down in State from the House of Lords into Westminster-Hall about Eleven in the Morning, and being seated on the Throne there, the Sword of State, the Sword Curtana, and the Two Pointed Swords, together with the Golden Spurs, were Presented to His Majesty, and laid on a Table before him. Then the Dean and Prebends of Westminster, having before brought the Crowns and other Regalia in solemn Procession from the Collegiate-Church there, came up the Hall, and Presented them severally to His Majesty; which being likewise laid on the Table, were (together with the Four Swords and Spurs) delivered to the Lords appointed to carry them in the Procession, (which then began.) These Noblemen bore the King's Regalia: The Earl of Ailesbury St. Edward's Staff; the Lord De Gray the Spurs; the Earl of Peterborough the Sceptre with the Cross; the Earl of Pembroke the Third Sword; the Earl of Derby the Second Sword; and between them the Earl of Shrewsbury bearing the Curtana, or Pointless Sword; the Earl of Oxford the Sword of State; the Duke of Ormond St. Edward's Crown; the Duke of Somerset the Orb; and the Duke of Albemarle the Sceptre with the Dove.

Three other Noblemen carry'd the Queen's Regalia: The Earl of Dorset the Ivory Rod; the Earl of Rutland the Sceptre; and the Duke of Beaufort the Crown. The Queen's Majesty was Assisted by the Bishops of London and Winchester, under a Rich Canopy supported by Sixteen Barons of the Cinque-Ports, with her Train borne up by the Young Dutchess of Norfolk. The King's Majesty was Assisted by the Bishops of Durham and Bath, under a Rich Canopy borne likewise by Sixteen Barons of the Cinque-Ports, and his Train borne up by Four Earls Eldest Sons

Their Majesties being entred the Collegiate-Church, and the Nobility and Others being all duely Placed, they ascended the Theatre raised in the Choir, and repaired to their Private Devotions on the East-part thereof, and then seated themselves in their Chairs of State. Then follow'd the Recognition; and after an Anthem, the King and Queen came to the Altar, and made their first Oblation; and the Lords who carry'd the Regalia Presented them at the Altar, to be there deposited. Then the Litany was sung by Two Bishops: Which ended, the Bishop of Ely began the Sermon.

After Sermon, the King took the accustomed Oath: And Veni Creator being sung, and the King Disrobed of his Mantle and Surcoat, He was Anointed, and Vested with all the Sacred Habits, in King Edward's Chair; and the Crown being put on by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, just at Three in the Afternoon, all the People Shouted, &c. Then follow'd the Coronation of the Queen; at which likewise the Ladies put on their Coronets, (as the Lords had done before at the King's:) And Her Majesty having receiv'd into Her Hands the Sceptre and Ivory Rod, was conducted to Her Royal Seat upon the Throne. Then Their Majesties being Enthronized, after an Anthem was sung, the Arch-Bishop ended with the Benediction. Their Majesty's and the Great Retinue returning to Westminster-Hall in the same Order they came, to a Noble Dinner.

Coronation of the King & Queen.

Opening of the New Parliament.

The 19th Day of May had been Appointed for Opening of the New Parliament : At which time His Majesty went from Whitehall, by Water, to the House of Peers, and being there Seated on His Throne, sent for the House of Commons ; And then my Lord-Keeper spoke thus :

My Lords, and You the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of the House of Commons ;

Lord-Keeper's Speech.

" I Am Commanded by His Majesty to Acquaint You, That there are diverse Preliminaries for You to doe, and severall Oaths required by Act of Parliament for us All to take, before You can proceed to Business. It is therefore His Majesty's Pleasure, That You, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, do go back to Your House, and make Choice of a Speaker, and come and Present him to His Majesty at Four of the Clock : And when You have done that, and taken the usual Oaths, His Majesty will then Acquaint You with the Reasons why He Call'd You together.

The Commons being return'd to their own House, my Lord Middleton named Sir John Trevor as a fit Person for their Speaker, and One that would be Acceptable to His Majesty. Whereupon the Commons Unanimously made Choice of him, and at Four in the Afternoon Presented him to His Majesty : When the Lord-Keeper, by His Majesty's Command, Ratify'd and Confirm'd him Speaker ; adding, " That His Majesty was well Satisfied of his Experience and Ability, and that he was every way fitted and qualify'd for that Employment.

Rebellion of the Duke of Monmouth, and the Earl of Argyle.

The great Business of this Parliament, was to Suppress the Rebellions of the Duke of Monmouth, and the Earl of Argyle, who were both in Holland, with many other Discontented Persons, and had Agreed the One to Invade England, and the other Scotland, at the same time. The Earl of Argyle was first ready, and Sail'd from the Ulye, on the 2d of May, with Three Ships : On the 13th he Landed in Lorn, and Garrison'd the Castle of Dunstaffcar, and began to March through the Counties of Argyle and Lorn, to encrease his Numbers among his own Clan. The News of this Invasion was brought to the King on Friday Morning, May 22d. The King went that Day to the House of Peers, and sending for the Commons, He made this SPEECH :

My Lords and Gentlemen ;

The King's Speech.

" A Fter it pleas'd Almighty God, to take to His Mercy the Late King my Dearest Brother, and to bring Me to the Peaceable Possession of the Throne of my Ancestors ; I immediately resolv'd to Call a Parliament, as the best Means to Settle every thing upon those Foundations, as may make My Reign both Easie and Happy to you : Towards which, I am dispos'd to contribute all that is fit for Me to doe.

" What I said to My Privy-Council, at My first coming there, I am Desirous to renew to You ; wherein I fully declare my Opinion concerning the Principles of the Church of England, whose Members have shew'd themselves so eminently Loyal in the worst of Times, in Defence of My Father, and Support of My Brother, (of Blessed Memory) that I will always take Care to Defend and Support it. I will make it My Endeavour to Preserve this Government, both in Church and State, as it is by Law Establish'd : And as I will never Depart from the Just Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown, so I will never Invade any Man's Property ; And you may be sure, that having heretofore Ventur'd My Life in the Defence of this Nation, 1685.

" I will still go as far as any Man in Preserving it in all its Just Rights and Liberties. And having given this Assurance concerning the Care I will have of your Religion and Property, which I have chose to do, in the same Words which I us'd at my first coming to the Crown, the better to evidence to you, That I spoke them not by Chance, and consequently, that you may firmly Rely upon a Promise so Solemnly made ;

" I cannot doubt that I shall fail of suitable Returns from you, with all imaginable Duty and Kindness on your Part, and particularly to what relates to the Settling of My Revenue, and Continuing it, during My Life, as it was in the Life-time of My Brother. I might use many Arguments to enforce this Demand, for the Benefit of Trade, the Support of the Navy, the Necessity of the Crown, and the Well-being of the Government it self ; which I must not suffer to be Precarious : But I am confident, your own Consideration of what is Just and Reasonable, will suggest to you whatsoever might be enlarged upon this Occasion.

" There is One Popular Argument, which, I foresee, may be used against what I ask of you, from the Inclination Men have for frequent Parliaments ; which some may think would be the best Security, by feeding Me, from time to time, by such Proportions as they shall think convenient : And this Argument, it being the first time I speak to you from the Throne, I will Answer once for all, That this would be a very improper Method to Take with Me ; And that the best way to Engage Me to Meet you often, is always to Use Me Well.

" I expect therefore, that you will Comply with Me in what I have Desired, and that you will do it speedily ; that this may be a short Session, and that We may Meet again to all Our Satisfaction.

My Lords, and Gentlemen ;

" I must Acquaint you, That I have had News this Morning from Scotland, that Argyle is Landed in the West Highlands, with the Men he brought with him from Holland. That there are Two Declarations Publish'd ; one in the Name of all those in Arms, the other in his Own : It would be too long for Me to repeat the Substance of them ; it is sufficient to tell you, I am charged with Usurpation and Tyranny. The shorter of them I have Directed to be forthwith communicated to you.

" I will take the best Care I can, that this Declaration of their own Faction and Rebellion may meet with the Reward it deserves : And I will not doubt but you will be the more zealous to Support the Government, and give Me My Revenue as I have Desired it, without Delay.

Both Houses immediately Resolv'd to return their most Humble and Hearty Thanks to His Majesty, for his most Gracious Speech and Declaration : The Lords coming to this Resolution ; His Majesty having Graciously imparted to this House, That He is inform'd that the late Earl of Argyle, Attainted of Treason, with diverse other Rebels, are Landed in Scotland, and are in actual Rebellion ; It is Ordered, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, That this House do Wait upon His Majesty at Five a Clock this Afternoon, in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, to give His Majesty their humble Thanks, for having imparted the same to this House ; and do humbly offer to Assist His Majesty with their Lives and Fortunes, against the said Rebels, and all other his Enemies whatsoever.

1685.

The Commons came to a like Resolution; "That this House will Stand by and Assist His Majesty, with their Lives and Fortunes, against Archibald Campbell the pretended Earl of Argyle, and his Adherents, and all Rebels and Traytors, and all others whatsoever that shall Assist him, or any of them: And that this House will in a Body Attend His Majesty with this Vote.

Declaration of the Earl of Argyle.

The First Declaration, to which the King, in his Speech, refers, was thus Entituled, The Declaration and Apology of the Protestant People, that is, of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgesses, and Commons of all sorts, now in Arms within the Kingdom of Scotland; with the Concurrence of the True and Faithful Pastors, and of several Gentlemen of the English Nation, Joined with them in the same Cause, &c. Herein they Complain'd, That having admitted King Charles II. to Reign over them, upon certain Terms and Conditions; He had Broken these Terms, and made his Government to be Ungrate, Illegal, Arbitrary and Tyrannical. That by Rescinding of the Solemn League and Covenant, all the Oaths since Impos'd, were horrid Perjury; and the Publick Exercise of Religion, as Established by the late Laws, was a continued Apostacy. They Accused the Parliament, for Rescinding many wholsom Laws, and for Making others on purpose to Persecute and shed the Blood of Protestants. They charged the Government with the Desolating the Kirk, Conniving at Papiests, and Keeping up of Standing Forces, which they call the Bane of Civil Government; and say, all the late Administration has been Tyranny and Popery twissled together. They therefore Declare against James Duke of York his Assension to the Throne, as being Excluded from it by the Commons of England; And likewise Declare against the present Parliaments in Both Kingdoms, as Pack'd and Cabald, and Return'd by Fraud and Injustice. For which Reason, they throw off all Bonds of Subjection, and take up Arms against James Duke of York, and all his Accomplices, for Obtaining these Ends. 1. The Restoring and Settling the Protestant Religion. 2. The Suppression and perpetual Exclusion of Popery and Prelacy. 3. The Restoring of All who have been Sufferers for their Adherence to their Religion and Liberties: Concluding, with an Earnest Invitation to their Brethren to Join with them, and Vigorously Assist them against a Persecuting Tyrant, and an Apostate Party.

The other Declaration, which the King communicated to the Two Houses, run thus:

The DECLARATION of Archibald Earl of Argyle, Lord Kintyre, Cowall, Campbell, and Lorn, Heritable Sheriff and Lieutenant of the Shires of Argyle and Turbett, and Heritable Justice-General of the said Shires, and of the West-Isles and others; with his Orders to his Vassals and others in the said Shires, and under his Jurisdiction, to Concurr for Defence of their Religion, Lives, and Liberties.

Second Declaration of the Earl of Argyle.

"I Shall not mention my CASE, Publish'd in Print in Latin and Dutch, and more largely in English; nor mean I to repeat the Printed DECLARATION Enitted by several Noblemen, Gentlemen and Others of Both Nations now in Arms: But because the Sufferings of me and my Family are therein mention'd, I have thought it fit for me to Declare for my self; That as I go to Arms, with those who have Appointed me to Conduct them, for no Private nor Personal End, and only for those contained in the said Declaration, which I have Concerted with them, and Approve of; so I do claim no Interest, but what I had before the pretended Forfeiture of my Family, and have sufficient Right to. 1685.

"And that I do freely (and as a Christian) forgive all Personal Injuries against my Person or Family, to all that shall not Oppose, but Join and Concurr with us in our present Undertaking, for the Ends mention'd in the said Declaration; And hereby I oblige me, never to Pursue them in Judgment, nor out of Judgment. And I do further Declare; That, obtaining the peaceable and quiet Possession of what belong'd to my Father, and my Self, before our pretended Forfeitures, I shall Satisfie all Debts Due by my Father, and my Selt, as any Heir or Debitor can be Obliged.

"And as my Faithfulness to his Late Majesty, and his Government, hath sufficiently appeared to all Unbyas'd Persons, void of Malice; so I do with Grief acknowledge my former too much Complying with, and Conniving at the Methods, that have been taken to bring us to the sad Condition we are now in, though, God knows, never Concurring in the Design.

"I have now, with God's Strength, suffered patiently my Unjust Sentence and Banishment, Three Years and an Half, and have never offer'd to make any Uproar, or Defence by Arms, to Disturb the Peace, upon my private Concern: But the King being now Dead, and the Duke of York having taken off his Mask, and having Abandon'd and Invaded our Religion and Liberties, Resolving to Enter into the Government, and Exercise it, contrary to Law; I think it not only Just, but my Duty to God and my Country, to use my outmost Endeavours to Oppose and Repress his Usurpations and Tyranny.

"And therefore being Assisted and Furnish'd very nobly by several good Protestants, and Invited and Accompany'd by several of both Nations to Lead them; I resolve, as God shall enable me, to use their Assistance of all kinds, towards the Ends express'd in the said Declaration.

"And I do hereby earnestly Invite and Obtest all honest Protestants, and particularly all my Friends and Blood-Relations, to Concurr with us in the said Declaration. And as I have written several Letters, so having no other way fully to intimate my Mind otherwise, I do hereby Require all my Vassals any where, and all within my several Jurisdictions, with their Fencible Men within their Command, to go to Arms, and to Join and Concurr with us, according to the said Declaration, as they will be Answerable at their Peril; And, that they Obey the particular Orders they shall receive from me, from time to time.

The Scotch Presbyterians were very Numerous, and had Provocation enough to Join with the Earl of Argyle: For besides the late Extreme Severities against them, there had been two Rigorous Acts Pass'd in the Parliament now Sitting at Edinburgh; the one Declaring, That whereas the Obstinacy of the Fanatical Party, notwithstanding all the Laws formerly made against them, do persevere to keep their House and Field-Conventicles, which are the Nurseries and Rendezvous of Rebellion; Therefore, His Majesty, with Consent of His Estates in Parliament, doth Statute and Ordain, That all such as shall hereafter Preach at such Fanatical House, or Field-Conventicles, as also such as shall be present as Hearers at Field-Conventicles, shall be Punish'd by Death, and Confiscation of their Goods. — The other Declaring, That the Giving or Taking of the National Covenant, as Explained in the Year 1638. or of the League and Covenant, so commonly called, or Writing in Defence thereof, or Owing of them as Lawful Discontents and Provocations in Scotland.

1685. Lawsful or Obligatory on themselves or others, shall infer the Crime and Pains of Treason.

And indeed, the Episcopal Party had no great reason to be fond of the present Administration; for they were under the Burden of great Taxes, and the Terrors of a Standing Army: Nay, and Episcopacy it self was made but a sort of Civil Office, and held, as it were, by Commission, during the Pleasure of the King, or his Council. But the Scots seem'd to be of this Disposition, to be most Quiet under Hard Usage: And therefore very few went in to the Assistance of Argyle, who being Pursued by the King's Army, under the Command of the Earl of Dunbarton, he was Deserted by many of his Followers, and (as it was then generally believ'd) was Betray'd by Sir John Cockran, who came over with him: So, on June 17. he was forc'd to pass the River Clyde, and to provide Guides to carry him and his remaining Forces safe into Galloway: but they mistaking the Way, led them into a Bogg, where they lost their Horses and Baggage, and the Foot were dispers'd into very small Parties. The Earl of Argyle return'd towards Clyde, and was fallen upon by two of Greinock's Servants, but would not Yield, firing at them when they call'd to him. He receiv'd a Wound in his Head; upon which, not trusting to his Horse, he alighted, and ran into the Water. The Noise brought out a Country-man, who ran into the Water after him: The Earl being almost up to the Neck, presented his Pistol to the Country Fellow, but it mis-served: Upon which the Fellow gave him a Wound in the Head, which stunn'd him so, that he sank down, and, in the sinking, cry'd out, Unfortunate Argyle! Before he recover'd himself, they took him, and carry'd him to their Commander, who sent him to Glasgow, and thence to Edinburgh, where he was Beheaded, on the 30th of June. There were taken with him, among the Prisoners, Colonel Ayliffe, who soon after ript up his own Belly with a Pen-knife; and Mr. Rumbold the Malster, who was Executed, with many others.

When the Commons had Waited on His Majesty, with an Offer of their Lives and Fortunes, in Defence of His Royal Person, against the Earl of Argyle, &c. His Majesty made them this Answer: Gentlemen, I could expect no less from a House of Commons so Compos'd as (God be thanked) you are: I Rely on the Assurances you have given Me, which are the Natural Effects of Monarchical Church of England-men. I shall Stand by all such; and, so Supported, have no reason to fear any Rebels or Enemies I now have, or may have.

The Commons, in great Loyalty, Pass'd A Bill for Settling the Revenue of Tonnage and Poundage on His Majesty for His Life, as had been Settled on His Late Majesty for his Life. Which being easily Agreed to by the Lords, the King gave His Royal Assent, on Saturday May 30. when Mr. Speaker Presented His Majesty with the said Money-Bill, in these Words:

May it Please Your Sacred Majesty;

THE Commons of England have here Presented Your Majesty with the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, with all Readiness and Cheerfulness, and that without any Security for their Religion, though it be Dearer to them than their Lives, Relying wholly on Your Royal Word for the Security of it; And humbly Beseech Your Majesty to Accept this their Offer; And Pray, that God would Bless You with a Long Life, and Prosperous Reign over them.

Then His Majesty Pass'd the Act, and made the following SPEECH to Both Houses:

My Lords and Gentlemen;

I Thank you very heartily for the Bill you have Presented Me this Day; And I Assure you, The King's Speech.
The Readiness and Cheerfulness that has attended the Dispatch of it, is as Acceptable to Me as the Bill it self. After so Happy a Beginning, you may believe I would not Call upon you Unnecessarily for an Extraordinary Supply: But when I tell you, That the Stores of the Navy and Ordnance are extremely Exhausted; That the Anticipations upon several Branches of the Revenue are Great and Burthensom; That the Debts of the King My Brother, to his Servants and Family, are such as deserve Compassion; That the Rebellion in Scotland, without putting more Weight upon it than it really deserves, must Oblige Me to a Considerable Expence Extraordinary: I am sure, such Considerations will Move you to Give Me an Aid to Provide for those Things, wherein the Security, the Ease and the Happiness of My Government are so much concern'd. But above all, I must Recommend to you the Care of the Navy, the Strength and Glory of this Nation; that you will put it into such a Condition, as may make us Consider'd and Respected Abroad. I cannot express My Concern, upon this Occasion, more suitable to My own Thoughts of it, than by Assuring you, I have a True English Heart, as Jealous of the Honour of the Nation as you can be; And I please My Self with the Hopes, That, by God's Blessing, and your Assistance, I may carry the Reputation of it yet Higher in the World, than ever it has been in the Time of any of My Ancestors: And as I will not Call upon you for Supplies, but when they are of Publick Use and Advantage; so I Promise you, That what you Give Me upon such Occasions, shall be Managed with Good-husbandry; And I will take Care, it shall be Employ'd to the Uses for which I Ask them.

The Forwardness of the Commons, in Preparing and Presenting this Bill, made some People recollect, that it was needless at least for the King to Levy that Revenue which had Legally Expired at his Brother's Death; since a Parliament was to Meet within a few Days, and then the same Customs Granted in a Parliamentary-way would have been much more to the King's Service and Honour, than while they were Forefall'd by a Seizure of them at the King's Command only.

The Commons were now Liberally dispos'd; for immediately after taking this last Speech of His Majesty into Consideration, they Resolv'd, "That Commons Ready to give Supplies.
a Supply be Given to His Majesty, for Repair of the Navy, Ordnance and Stores, and in Defence of the same, and for all other Occasions mention'd in His Majesty's Speech." And when they came to the Ways and Means, they Agreed upon an Additional Duty of Excise upon Wines and Vinegar, and a farther Imposition upon Sugars and Tobacco." And on June 10. received this Message from His Majesty, by Sir John Ernley, "That His Majesty did heartily The King's Message.
Thank the House, for their Readiness in his Supplies; That He Desired no more this Session, than what they are about: That He would make Tryal of the Impositions on Sugars and Tobacco; but if He should find them Injurious to His Plantations, He would not make Use of them, but hop'd they would Supply Him some other Way.

We must look back on the Duke of Monmouth in Holland, who was very averse to that Desperate Enterprize which his Friends had put him upon;

De'eat of the Earl of Argyle.

King's Answer to the Commons.

Speaker's speech, upon the Money-bill.

1685. as appears by an Original Letter of his Own, in Answer to the Solicitations of some one Importunate Confident who had been driving him upon that Attempt; says he, Judge what we are to Expect, in case we should Venture upon any such Attempt at this time. It's to me a vain Argument, That our Enemies are scarce yet well settled: When you consider, That Fear in some, and Ambition in others, have brought them to Comply; and that the Parliament, being made up, for the most part, of Members that formerly run our Enemy down, they will be ready to make their Peace as soon as they can, rather than hazard themselves upon an uncertain Bottom. I give you but Hints of what, if I had Time, I would Write you at more Length: But that I might not seem Obstinate in my own Judgment, or neglect the Advice of my Friends, I will Meet you at the Time and Place appointed. But, for God's sake, think in the mean time, of the Improbabilities that lie naturally in our Way; and let us not, by struggling with our Chains, make them straighter and heavier. For my part, I'll run the hazard of being thought any thing, rather than a Rash, Inconsiderate Man. And to tell you my Thoughts without Disguise, I am now so much in love with a Retir'd Life, that I am never like to be fond of making a Bustle in the World again.

But after all this Reluctancy, his Friends about him, who were weary of their Exile, prevail'd with him to Attempt a Return into England. King James was very Apprehensive of this Design of the Duke of Monmouth; and in order to prevent it, he us'd his utmost Endeavours, by his Envoy Mr. Skelton, to get him Secured by the States, and sent a Prisoner into England.

The Prince of Orange, as became a Nephew and Son-in-Law, shew'd a sincere Friendship and Respect to the King; and offer'd to concert such Measures with him, as might have preserv'd the Peace of England, and the Common Safety of all Europe: But he found the King to be rather jealous of his Counsels, and fond of his Own Ways. And therefore when the Prince saw the Vigilance of Skelton in hunting after the Duke of Monmouth, he not only gave the Duke Notice of the Plot against him, by Monsieur Bentinck his Favourite, but supply'd him with Money to go privately to Brussels; with a further Assurance, That if he would go to the Campaign in Hungary, he should be Maintain'd Honourably, with an Equipage suitable to his Quality.

The Duke had not been long at Brussels, before the Marquis de Grana, Governor of the Netherlands, receiv'd a Letter from King James, charging the Duke with High-Treason. Upon which, to Comply with the King's Request, he gave him Notice forthwith to Depart the Spanish Dominions.

Under this Necessity of Flying, the Duke listen'd to his Friends, who had solicited his Return to Amsterdam, and there he Comply'd with their urgent Entreaties to Head them in an Expedition to England. He Hired a Man of War of 32 Guns, at Amsterdam and Three other small Vessels, on which he loaded Arms for 5000 Men. Skelton had some Notice of these Preparations, and us'd his utmost Endeavours to stop the Vessels in the River: But all he could effect, was to detain one small Frigot, and to extort an Order from the States to Arrest the Duke of Monmouth; who therefore went the sooner a-Board, Accompany'd by Ferd Lord Grey, a German Count, Sir Joseph Tyley, Colonel Holmes, Colonel Matthews, Major Perrot, Captain Annesley, Captain Hewling, Mr. Wade, Dr. Temple, Mr. Ferguson, and about 670 Officers and Gentlemen who had been forced to flee to Holland for Refuge from Punishment or Persecution, and were desperately dispos'd to take any Opportunity of Returning to their Native Country.

On May 24. the Duke Sail'd out of the Texell with his Man of War, and Two Tenders; and met with such Bad Weather in his Voyage, that he was 19 Days at Sea, and yet was never discover'd by the English Ships who lay in the Channel to intercept him. On Thursday the 11th of June he appeared off of Lyme in Dorsetshire, and went a-Shore about Eight in the Evening. As soon as his Men were Landed, he Commanded Silence, and falling on his Knees, he Implor'd the Protection of Heaven, in a short Prayer: Then Drawing his Sword, he Led his Men a Back-Way into the Town, and set up his Standard in the Market-place, without any Opposition. Then he Muster'd his little Company, who were all well Arm'd, and in good Equipage. Being ask'd, Whom they were for? They Declar'd, For the Protestant Religion; Inviting all Persons to come and Join with them. Captain Lark and several of the Towns-men immediately Join'd them. After this, a Printed DECLARATION was Read at the Market-Cross, Intituled, The Declaration of James Duke of Monmouth, and the Noblemen, Gentlemen and Others now in Arms for the Defence and Vindication of the Protestant Religion, and the Laws, Rights and Privileges of England. Of which the Preface was to this effect; That "Government was originally Instituted by God, and This or That Form of it Chosen and Submitted to by Men, for the Peace, Happiness and Security of the Governed, and not for the Private Interest and Personal Greatness of those that Rule. That the Government of England, was, above all others, Happy in its Primitive Form; whereby the Prerogatives of the Crown, and the Privileges of the Subject, were so far from jostling one another, that the Rights reserved unto the People, tended to render the King Honourable and Great; and the Prerogatives settled on the Prince, were in order to the Subjects Protection and Safety: But the Boundaries of the English Government had of late been broken, and nothing left unattempted for turning the Limited Monarchy into an Absolute Tyranny." Then it proceeds to charge upon the Duke of York, in his Brother's Reign, "His Contriving the Burning of London, his Instigating a Confederacy with France, and a War with Holland; his Fomenting the Popish Plot, and Encouraging the Murder of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey; his charging Treason against Protestants, and Suborning Witnesses to Swear the Patriots of our Religion and Liberties out of their Lives; his Hiring Execrable Villains to Assassinate the late Earl of Essex, and causing others to be clandestinely Cut off, in hopes to Conceal it; his Advising and Procuring the Prorogation and Dissolution of the Parliaments, in order to prevent their Looking into his Crimes, and that he might escape the Justice of the Nation." It goes on, to the "Tyrannies which he had exercis'd since he snatch'd the Crown from his Brother's Head: For, in Defiance of all the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, made for the Security of the Reformed Protestant Religion, he not only began his Reign with a bare-faced avowing Himself of the Romish Religion, but call'd in Multitudes of Priests and Jesuits, for whom the Law makes it Treason to come into this Kingdom, and hath Impower'd them to exercise Idolatries: And besides his being daily present at the Worship of the Mass, he hath publicly Assisted at the greatest Fopperies of their Superstition. Neither hath he been more tender in trampling upon the Laws which concern our Properties; seeing in two Proclamations, whereof the one requires the Collecting of the Customs, and the other, the Continuing that part of the Excise which was to Expire at the “ Late King’s Death. He hath Violently, and “ against all the Laws of the Land, broken in “ upon our Estates. Neither is it any Extenuation “ of his Tyranny, that He is Countenanc’d “ in it, by an Extra-Judicial Opinion of Seven “ or Eight Suborn’d and Forsworn Judges, but “ rather Declaring the Greatness and Extent of “ the Conspiracy against our Rights; and that “ there is no Means left for our Relief, but by “ Force of Arms: For Advancing those to the “ Bench, that were the Scandal of the Bar; and “ Constituting those very Men to Declare the “ Laws, who were Accused and Branded in “ Parliament for Perverting of them; we are “ Precluded all Hopes of Justice in Westminster-“ Hall: And by Packing Juries together, by False “ Returns, New Illegal Charters, and other Cor“ rupt Means, he doth at once Deprive us of all “ Expectations of Succour, where our Ancestors “ were wont to find it: And hopes to render That “ which ought to be the Peoples Fence against “ Tyranny, and the Conservator of their Liber“ ties, the Means of Subverting all our Laws, “ and of Establishing his Arbitrariness, and Con“ firming our Thralldom.” — Then it lays down the Ways and Means of Redressing all Grievances, and promises to pursue those Ends in a fair and effectual manner: Concluding thus;

*We make our Appeal unto God, and all Protestant Kings, Princes, States and People, concerning the Justice of our Cause, and the Necessity we are Reduced unto, of having our Recourse to Arms. And as We do Beseech, Require and Adjure all Sincere Protestants and True English-Men to be Assisting to Us, against the Enemies of the Gospel, Rights of the Nation, and Liberties of Mankind; so We are confident of obtaining the utmost Aid and Succour which they can yield us with their Prayers, Persons and Estates, for Dethroning the said Tyrant, &c.
 Nor do We doubt being Justify’d, Countenanc’d and Assisted by all Protestant Kings, Princes and Commonwealths who either regard the Gospel of Jesus Christ, or their own Interest. And, above all, our Trust and Dependence is upon the Lord of Hosts, in Whose Name we go forth, and to Whom we commit our Cause, and refer the Decision betwixt Us and our Enemies in the Day of Battle. Now let us play the Men, for our People, and for the Cities of our God; and the Lord do that which seemeth good unto Him.*

On Saturday June 13. His Majesty received an Account of the Duke’s Landing, by a Express from the Mayor of Lyme; And immediately sent a Message to the Commons, by the Earl of Middleton, That the Duke of Monmouth, and several of his Adherents, were Landed at Lyme in Dorsetshire, and there set up his Standard. When this Message was Deliver’d, Mr. Thorold and Mr. Dassel, the one Mayor of Lyme, the other an Officer belonging to the Customs, being in the Lobby of the House, were Call’d in, and gave this following Account; “ That on Thursday Night “ about Six or Seven of the Clock, they discern’d “ Two Vessels and a Doggar at Sea, hovering near “ their Shore. That they sent a Messenger in a “ Boat to know their Meaning, and see who they “ were; but they took the Messenger on-Board, “ and Bound him. That about Half an Hour “ after, they sent another Messenger in a Boat, “ and they kept him likewise. That about Nine “ a Clock at Night they sail’d into the Cobb, and “ the Duke of Monmouth came on-Shore, with “ diverse Men all well Arm’d and Genteel in their “ Habit. That the Duke Led them on to the “ Market-Place or Cross of the said Town, and “ there set up his Standard, being a Blue Flag, “ and Exercis’d the Men himself, who were, as “ these Informants guess, near an Hundred and “ fifty, or thereabouts. That the said Duke of “ Monmouth and his Men, being asked what they “ came for? said, To Settle the Protestant Religion, “ and to Destroy Popery; Inviting all Persons that “ would, to come and Join with them. Being “ told, There were no Roman Catholicicks there, “ but Protestants, and there was no need for them “ to come there. That these Informants came “ away from Lyme about Ten a Clock that Night, “ and that they met many People on the Road, who “ said they were going to Join them.

After this Relation, the House Resolved, “ to “ Wait on His Majesty, and give their Thanks, “ in an Humble Address, for his Favour in Im“ parting the said Intelligence to this House; “ And do humbly Offer to Assist and Stand by “ His Majesty, with their Lives and Fortunes, “ against James Duke of Monmouth, and all “ Rebels and Traitors, and all other His Majesty’s “ Enemies whatsoever.” This Address was Presented in the Banqueting-House that Evening; with another, of like Import, from the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, to Whom His Majesty had communicated the same Intelligence.

Addresses of the Two Houses.

It is Observable, That the House of Commons were most eminently Loyal; and not only call’d the Duke of Monmouth, in their Address, That Ingrateful Rebel, but, on the same Day, Resolved, “ That a Bill be brought in, for the Attainder of “ James Duke of Monmouth of High-Treason; “ Praying His Majesty to Issue out his Royal “ Proclamation, Promising a Reward of Five thou“ sand Pounds to Any that shall bring in the “ Body of the Duke of Monmouth Dead or Alive.” This Bill of Attainder was in Two Days Dispatcht by the Commons; and as soon by the Lords, who sent it back without any Alteration, on Tuesday June 16. And the same Day His Majesty came to the Throne, and gave His Royal Assent to, (1.) An Act for Granting to His Majesty an Imposition upon all Wines and Vinegar Imported between the 24th Day of June, 1685. and the 24th of June, 1693.
 (2.) An Act for Granting to His Majesty an Imposition upon all Tobacco and Sugar Imported between the 24th Day of June, 1685. and the 24th of June, 1693.
 (3.) An Act to Attain James Duke of Monmouth of High-Treason. And to Two Private Acts: one, to Enable the Earl of Ossory to make a jointure;
 the other, for Naturalization of several Persons.

Bill of Attainder.

On the Day before, the King had Publish’d A Proclamation against Spreading a Traiterous Declaration Publish’d by James Duke of Monmouth.
 And this Day, after Passing the Act of Attainder, the King Publish’d another Proclamation, Promising a Reward of Five thousand Pounds to such Person or Persons who shall bring in the Person of James Duke of Monmouth Alive or Dead.

Proclamations.

On Thursday the 18th of June, the Earl of Middleton brought this Message from His Majesty, to the House of Commons; “ That He judges it “ Necessary for the Members (on whose Loyalty “ He depends) to be Present in their respective “ Counties, and therefore designs there shall be a “ Recess in a very few Days. But because the “ Rebellion in the West will occasion an Extraor“ dinary Expence, His Majesty Desires there may “ be a Good Fund for a Present Sum of Money, “ to Answer the Immediate Charge His Majesty “ must be at: And to the end the Bills now “ Depending may not be Prejudiced, His Majesty “ is Pleas’d, this Separation shall be an Adjourn“ ment, and for some short Time only.

The King’s
Message
to the Commons.

After the Delivery of which Message, the Commons immediately Resolved, That a Supply not exceeding Four hundred thousand Pounds be Given to His Majesty, for His Present Extraordinary Occasions. And the Two Houses were so Dispatchful, that on Saturday the 27th of June His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and gave his Royal

And to Seven Private Acts.

Other Bills Enacted

The Houses proceeded with great Unanimity, till on Thursday the 2d of July His Majesty came again to the House of Peers; And the Commons being sent for to Attend, He gave His Royal Assent to these other Bills: (1.) An Act for Revising and Continuance of several Acts of Parliament therein mentioned. (2.) An Act to Encourage the Building of Ships in England. (3.) An Additional Act for the Improvement of Tillage. (4.) An Act for Erecting a New Church, to be call'd the Parish of St. James, within the Liberty of Westminster. (5.) An Act for the Repair of the Cathedral-Church of Bangor, and for the Maintenance of the Choir there, and for the Augmentation of the Revenue of the Bishoprick of Bangor; and also, for an Augmentation of several Vicarages within the Comportions of Laudinum in the Diocese of Bangor aforesaid. And then my Lord-Keeper spoke thus:

My Lords and Gentlemen;

The Lord Keeper's Speech.

" I Am Comanded to let you know, That it is His Majesty's Pleasure, That Both Houses Adjourn forthwith till Tuesday the 4th of August next. Not that His Majesty intends that then there shall be a Session, but that the Members that are about Town shall then Meet and Adjourn themselves from Time to Time, as there shall be Occasion, till Winter: And when His Majesty would have a Full House, He will give Notice of it by Proclamation.

So Both Houses Adjourn'd till the 4th of August: On which Day, the Earl of Rochester being Committed to Supply the Place of the Lord Keeper (then Indispos'd) as Speaker in the House of Lords, express'd His Majesty's Pleasure, That they should farther Adjourn till the 9th Day of November next.

Progress of the Duke of Monmouth in the West.

The Duke of Monmouth, by the Concourse of the Country People, had soon the Appearance of an Army, and March'd from Lyme to Taunton a Populous Town in Somersetshire, where he was received by Men and Maids with unusual Demonstrations of Joy; and at the Solicitations of his Friends, he there suffered himself to be Proclaimed King; which lost him some Interest in the true Old Republicans, and was said to be a Breach of the Promise he had made in Holland. He began his Mock-Reign with Three Proclamations; the one, setting a Sum of Money on King James's Head: The second, Declaring the Parliament of England a Seditious Assembly: And the third, Commanding the Duke of Albemarle to Lay down his Arms, under the Penalty of Suffering as a Traitor. He March'd from Taunton in good Order to Bridgewater, still Encreasing his Numbers; from thence to Bath, where he was Denied Entrance, and would not stay to Force it: The Train-Bands still flying two Days March before him, by Order (as was said) from the Court, to give Pretence to the King to Raise more Forces. At Philips-Norton, by a Surprise, he Cut off the best part of a Troop of Horse of the King's Army; the Duke of Grafton narrowly escaping with his Life. Encouraged by this Success, he March'd within Two Miles of Bristol; where a Consult being held, he was Advised, Not to enter that City, but to retreat back to Bridgewater. Which False-Step began to Dishearten his Party, and to hinder his Recruits: Whereas, if he had entred Bristol, there being no Force to oppose him but the Train-Bands, (and the generality of those for him, not only in their Hearts, but in open Discourses, and publick Healths, he might have furnish'd himself with Men, Arms and Money, and thence Marched into Gloucestershire among the Clothiers, where great Numbers even of the best Estates and Degrees waited to Join him.

When the Prince of Orange heard of the Duke's Landing, and that he began to gather Strength, and was Proclaim'd King, he thought himself so far concern'd, that he not only dispatch'd over the Six English Regiments Recalled from the Service of the States, but he likewise sent over Mons. Bentinck to the King, with Orders to acquaint him, That though he look'd upon the Duke of Monmouth to be a Man of no great Parts, yet that he had a Warlike Genius, and was better Skill'd in the Military Art, than any the King was to Employ against him; and therefore, if His Majesty pleas'd, He would not only Lend him his Troops, but come in Person to Head his Army. The same Offer had been before communicated to Skelton at the Hague; who was either so Jealous of the Prince, or so Malicious to him, that he gave the King Notice of it, with a wrong Turn of Suspicion and Fear: So that the King put off Mons. Bentinck, with telling him, He should acquaint his Master, That their Common Interest did require the Prince's staying in Holland: And farther open'd his Mind to him in such Terms, as sufficiently discover'd, He did not take His Highness's Zeal for his Service to be at that Time sensible.

The first Forces which His Majesty sent down against Monmouth, were some of the Earl of Oxford's Regiment, under the Command of my Lord Churebill, who attended the Motions of the Duke with great Conduct. The Duke of Albemarle Headed the Militia of Devonshire: The Duke of Somerset the Militia of that County, at Bath: The Duke of Beaufort the Militia of Gloucestershire, at Bristol: The Earl of Pembroke, the Militia of Wiltshire, at Chippenham. And the Militia of other Counties were on their March towards the West; though the King did not care to Confide in them. And therefore the King sent away all his Regular Troops and Guards, to Form an Army under the Command of the Earl of Feversham, who in the Beginning of July Encamp'd at Sedgmore.

The Duke of Monmouth being at Bridgewater near adjoining, thought himself Besieged, and saw his Men 1685. Men daily Desert in great Numbers, and therefore resolved to make One Desperate Pulh for All; and so, in a Council of War, Agreed to Attack the Earl of Feversham on the very first Night of his Encampment. Sunday July 5. the Country People had given the Duke Intelligence, that the King's Forces were very Remiss, the Troopers in Bed, and the Foot Revelling in their Camp: So that the Duke said, They should have no more to do, than to Lock up the Stable-Doors, and Seize the Troopers in their Beds. The Duke began his March about Eleven at Night, without Drum Beating, or Trumpet Sounding, and all were forbid to Fire a Piece till they entred the Camp. The Guide that promis'd to lead them thither a Bye-Way, conducted them round by Chedsey to that part of Sedgmore where Dunbarton's Regiment was Posted; the most Old and Experienc'd Soldiers, who had agreed that an Hundred of them should keep Guard, and Lie upon their Arms all Night. And yet they had been Caught, with all their Caution, had not the Duke's Guide happen'd to lead his Men above the Ford; and they not having patience to wait his Motions, ran Disorderly, as fast as they could, over the Ditch, to come at the Enemy; by which means they lost their Guide: and a Pistol accidentally going off, alarm'd those of Dunbarton's Regiment, who immediately put themselves in Order, and receiv'd their Enemy, as if they had not been Surprized. The Duke's Men began the Engagement with a Volley of Shots and Shouts, and forced the Rear of the King's Foot to Retreat into Weston. The Duke seeing these early Hopes of Success, Ordered the Lord Grey to bring up his Horse, which were ordinary Marsh-Mares and Colts, that would not stand the Noise of Drums and Guns. Two of his best Troops, Commanded by Captain Hewling, were the Day before Detatch'd to bring off some Cannon from Minhead, and did not return till after the Defeat, to which their Absence very much contributed.

Battle of Sedgmore.

Lord Grey suspected.

The Duke entirely Routed.

Duke's Flight.

The Lord Grey could never get his Horse into a right Posture of Charging; so that upon the Advance of Colonel Oglethorpe and Sir Francis Compton with Two Parties of the King's Horse, His Lordship Retir'd, and quitted the Field, not without great Suspicion of Treachery.

The Duke had another Misfortune; that he was not only Deserted by his Horse, but his Foot wanted Ammunition; because the Baggage, by some default, was not yet brought into the Moor: so that the Duke's Foot, in vain crying out for more Powder and Shot, after a Brave Resistance, gave Ground, and about Four a Clock on Monday Morning were intirely Routed, 300 Kill'd on the spot, 1000 in the Pursuit, and as many taken Prisoners: Those of Note were Colonel Holmes and Major Perrot, both Dangerously Wounded; Captain Madders the Constable of Crookborn, and one Williams a Menial Servant of the Duke's, who had his Master's Cloak and 200 Guinea's.

The Duke's Army were 5000 Horse and Foot; and the King's did not much exceed in Number, though it did in Strength and Resolution. This Decisive Battle was a Day or two too soon; for immediately after, Capt. Hewling return'd with two of the bravest Troops of Horse; and the very next Day Mr. Vaughan of Somersetshire would have Join'd the Duke with 1000 Men; and Colonel Danvers and Sir Robert Peyton were just ready for a Rising in Essex, which would have given Opportunity for Multitudes in and about London to have Joined with them.

The Duke of Monmouth had much-ado to preserve 50 Horse to secure his Retreat, and they were soon dispers'd. The Duke was advis'd to make down to Uphill a small Creek on the Severn Sea, and from thence to get over into Wales;

but He himself was for going toward Limington in Hampshire. The Lord Feversham Sent out several Parties to Pursue him; and on Tuesday Morning July 7. the Lord Grey was Taken in a Disguise at Holtbridge in Dorsetshire, by the Lord Lumley's Men, who enquiring of the Cottagers, were inform'd, that two Men went over a Hedge into an Enclosure over-grown with Fern. So Guards were set on the Avenues, and about Five in the Morning next Day the German Count was Taken, who Confess'd, he parted with the Duke of Monmouth about four Hours before. Hence a more diligent Search was made, and at last one Perkin discover'd him hid in a Ditch cover'd over with Fern, and having some Pease in his Pocket. The Duke at first offer'd to make Resistance; but the Fellow crying out for Help, and some Soldiers running in to his Assistance, the Duke was Taken, and Secured by the Lord Lumley, who, under a strong Guard, conveyed him, the Lord Grey, and the German Count, by easie Journeys, to London.

1685. Lord Grey Taken.

Duke of Monmouth Taken.

He Writes to the King.

The Duke Wrote to the King from Ringwood, on July 8. the same Day he was Taken, to make his Submission to offer some Discovery, and to desire earnestly to Speak with the King: concluding thus; I hope, Sir, God Almighty will strike Your Heart with Mercy and Compassion for me, as He has done mine with the Abhorrence of what I have done: Wherefore, I hope, Sir, I may Live to shew You how Zealous I shall ever be for Your Service; and could I say but one Word in this Letter, You would be convinced of it; but it is of that Consequence, that I dare not do it. Therefore, Sir, I do Beg of You once more, to let me Speak to You; for then You will be convinc'd, how much I shall ever be,

Your Majesty's Most Humble and Dutiful

MONMOUTH.

This Unhappy Captive was brought to London on the 13th of July, and, by the Intercession of the Queen-Dowager, was brought to the King's Presence, and fell presently at his Feet, and confess'd he Deserv'd to Die; but conjur'd him, with Tears in his Eyes, not to use him with the Severity of Justice, and to Grant him a Life, which he would be ever ready to sacrifice for his Service. He mention'd to Him the Example of several Great Princes, who had yielded to the Impressions of Clemency, on the like Occasions, and who had never afterwards repented of those Acts of Generosity and Mercy: concluding, in a most pathetic manner, Remember, Sir, I am Your Brother's Son, and if you take my Life, it is Your own Blood that You will shed. The King ask'd him several Questions, and made him Sign a Declaration, That his Father told him, He was never Marry'd to his Mother: And then said, He was Sorry indeed for his Misfortunes, but his Crime was of too great a Consequence to be left Unpunisht, and he must of necessity Suffer for it. The Queen is said to have Insulted him in a very Arrogant and Unmerciful manner. So that when the Duke saw there was nothing designed by this Interview, but to fatisfie the Queen's Revenge, he rose up from His Majesty's Feet with a new Air of Bravery, and was carry'd back to the Tower; from whence, without any farther Hearing, on Wednesday July 15. he was deliver'd to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, on a Warrant for his Execution, about Ten in the Morning: He was conducted by them to a Scaffold on Tower-Hill, where two Eminent Divines exhorted him to Repent of his Treason and Rebellion. He desir'd them, not to trouble him with any unseasonable Discourses: He said, He Repented of all his Sins in General, of the Blood spilt on his Account, and fear'd the ill Consequence of his Enterprize. That he Dy'd in the Faith

Faith

1685. Faith of this, That God would work a Deliverance for his People, and then will be Discover'd the Great, Horrid, and scarcely to be Parallell'd Villainies our Enemies have been Guilty of: adding, You see my Case is Desperate; yet know, I Dye a MARTYR for the People. He hop'd King James would shew himself of his Brother's Blood, and extend his Mercy to his Children, ev'n as He was wont to his greatest Enemies; they being not capable to Act, and therefore not Conscious of any Offence against the Government. To one of the Divines he express'd himself with some Indignation against the Lord Shaftsbury, complaining, He was a Tricking Man; and more especially against Ferguson, who (says he) is a Bloody Villain. He stay'd on the Scaffold Half an Hour, then laid himself down to the Block. The Executioner, after the Sign given, struck him first on the Shoulder: He rais'd himself a little, and lying down again, his Head was, at two Blows, Sever'd from his Body; which was put in a Black Velvet Coffin, and carry'd in a Velvet Hearse to the Tower, where 'twas Bury'd in the Chapel.

The Duke of Monmouth beheaded.

The Lord Grey Pardoned.

Inquisition in the West.

Mrs. Lyle beheaded.

Cruelty of the Lord Chief-Justice Jeffreys.

The Lord Grey obtain'd a Pardon from the King, which confirm'd the World very much in their Opinion of his Betraying the Duke.

The Lord Chief-Justice Jeffreys, with Four other Judges his Assistants, and a Body of Troops Commanded by Colonel Kirk, was sent into the West of England, with a Special Commission, to Try the Poor Wretches that had been in the Rebellion. At Winchester, Mrs. Alicia Lyle, the Relict of John Lyle one of King Charles the First's Judges, a Woman of extreme Age, was Try'd for Concealing Mr. Hicke's a Nonconformist Teacher, and Richard Nelthorpe, (the latter being a Stranger, and the former in no Proclamation) and though the Jury brought her in Three times Not Guilty, yet Jeffreys Threats so far prevail'd, that she was at last Found Guilty of High-Treason, and Beheaded for it. A Cruel Judgment, that was afterwards Revers'd by the Convention Called by the Prince of Orange.

The Judges went next to Dorchester, where Jeffreys finding 30 Persons Return'd by the Grand-Inquest, as Assistants to the late Duke of Monmouth, he contriv'd this Stratagem, of taking the Shortest Way with them: When they came upon their Tryals, he told them, That Whosoever Plead Not Guilty, and was Found so, should have little Time to Live; but if any expected Favour, they must Plead Guilty. But the Prisoners would not trust him; though they might have depended as well on his Mercy as his Justice, and a Confession or Denial had been all one: For of Thirty Pleading Not Guilty, Twenty nine were Found Guilty, and soon after Executed; as were Fourscore more out of Two hundred thirty three, who were Deluded to Plead Guilty to their Indictments, by a Promise of Pardon. The same was done at Exeter to near as many, who were alike Deluded; as also at Taunton, and Wells, where the Lord Jeffreys finish'd his Bloody Assizes: In these two last Places he Condemn'd above Five hundred Persons, whereof Two hundred thirty nine were Executed, and had their Quarters set up in the Principal Places and Roads of those Countries, to the Terror of Passengers, and the great Annoyance of those Parts.

And yet the Cruelty of the Chief-Justice often yielded to the Avarice of the Man, who was not more hasty to Hang up those who had no Money, than he was forward to procure Pardons for those that could pay the Purchase of them. He had the Conscience to take above Fourteen thousand Pounds from one Gentleman, to Save him; with which he bought an Estate, that might justly be call'd, The Field of Blood; and seem'd to have a Curse Intail'd upon it, of not being Enjoy'd by a Third Heir. Those Poor Wretches who could not purchase Pardons at my Lord's Rates, were Sold for Slaves into the American Plantations.

1685. And when, after this Satiating of Justice, there came out a General Pardon; it was clogg'd with so many Exceptions, that it was call'd Ridiculously Cruel: For not only those were Excepted who had made their Escape, but all the Taunton Maidens who had made Colours and Presented them to the Duke of Monmouth, some of them but Girls of Eight or Nine Years old, were all Excepted by Name; and no Pardon could be purchased for this Piece of Treason, till their Parents had paid more for it, than would have provided a Marriage-Portion for them. 'Tis said, that after this Barbarous Expedition, the Lord Jeffreys, a Man of a Sarcastick and Abusive Wit, was heard to boast with some Pleasure, That he had Hang'd more Men, than all the Judges of England since William the Conqueror.

Some of the Foreign Popish Historians have affirm'd, That King James was no sooner inform'd of the Cruelties of Jeffreys, but he show'd his Indignation at his Unwarrantable Proceedings. But this is hardly to be reconcil'd with the Approbation and Reward which the King gave to him: For it is certain, that His Majesty writ him a Letter, in his Circuit, and bid him Dispatch the Business before him, and come and take the Seals, for he was forc'd, in the mean time, to be Chancellor himself. And when with greater Haste and Fury he did Expedite his Business, and return'd to be made Lord Chancellor; it was expressly said to be in Consideration of the many eminent and faithful Services he had rendred the Crown, as well in the Late King's time, as since His Majesty's Accession to the Throne.

The King said to be displeas'd at these Proceedings.

Jeffreys made Lord Chancellor.

Nor was Judge Jeffreys the only Person who was thought to Execute the King's Order's; but Colonel Kirk, a Soldier of Fortune, a Man of Boldness and Looseness, did also Act a considerable Part in these unhappy Tragedies: After the Duke's Defeat, he caus'd Ninety Wounded Men to be Hang'd at Taunton, not only without permitting their Relations to speak with them, but with Pipes playing, Drums beating, Trumpets sounding, and all other Military Pomp and Joy. At another Town he invited his Officers to Dinner, near the Place where some of the Condemned Rebels were to be Executed, and Order'd Ten of them to be Turn'd off with a Health to the King, Ten in a Health to the Queen, and Ten more in a Health to the Lord Jeffreys. These Cruelties he afterwards endeavour'd to palliate, by pretending, that he did nothing but by Express Order from the King, and his General. But he was charg'd with one Action that could proceed only from his own Brutal Inclination to Lust and Blood, and that was, the drawing in a poor Maiden to Prostitute her self to him, with the Promise of Saving her Brother's Life, and nevertheless causing him to be Hang'd on the Sign-post of the same House, and out of the Window presenting the credulous Abused Damfel with that Barbarous Spectacle of his Treachery and Cruelty.

Barbarities committed by Colonel Kirk.

The Suppressing of this Rebellion, was so great an Advantage to the Strength and Interest of the King, and to the Peace and Quiet of the Nation, that King James, with any Moderation, might have been the Happiest Prince that ever Sway'd the English Sceptre. But his Misfortune was, that instead of Securing his Just Prerogative, and Encouraging his Loyal Subjects, he fell upon the Resolution of a Standing Army, for the Support of Popery and Arbitrary Power. He had a House of Commons very Pliable to his Desires in the last Session, and very Obsequious in all the Steps of Reducing and Executing the Duke of Monmouth, and as forward in Supplies of Men and Money. The King was willing to mistake their Zeal in going so far, for an Assurance of going as much farther as He pleas'd to call them: As if He, and Suppressing of this Rebellion turn'd to ill Uses.

1685. and his Ministers were not rightly sensible what a Tenderness and Affection English Men have for their Laws and Liberties; and how hard a Matter it is for any Prince to make a House of Commons Accessory to the Enslaving of a Nation. This appear'd in the next Session held at Westminster, on Monday the 9th of November; when His Majesty being come to the House of Peers, and Seated on his Throne, He Sent for the Commons, and made this SPEECH to Both Houses:

Parliament Meect.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

The King's Speech. "AFTER the Storm that seem'd to be coming upon Us when We Parted last, I am glad to Meet you in so great Peace and Quietness; God Almighty be Praised, by whose Blessing that Rebellion was Suppress'd. But when I reflect, what an inconsiderable Number of Men Began it, and how long they Carry'd it on without any Opposition, I hope every Body will be convinc'd, that the Militia, which have hitherto been so much Depended on, is not Sufficient for such Occasions; and that there is nothing but a good Force of Well-Disciplin'd Troops in constant Pay, that can Defend Us from such as either at Home or Abroad are dispos'd to Disturb Us. And in truth, My Concern for the Peace and Quiet of My Subjects, as well as for the Safety of the Government, made Me think it Necessary to Encrease the Number to the Proportion I have done, that I owed as well to the Honour as the Security of the Nation, whose Reputation was so infinitely expos'd to all Our Neighbours, by having Lain open to this late wretched Attempt, that it is not to be Repair'd, without keeping such a Body of Men on foot, that None may ever have a Thought of finding Us again so miserably Unprovided. It is for the Support of this great Charge, which is now more than Double to what it was, that I Ask your Assistance, in Giving Me a Supply Answerable to the Expences it brings along with it: And I cannot doubt, but that what I have Begun so much to the Honour and Defence of the Government, will be Continued by you with all Cheerfulness and Readiness that is requisite for a Work of so great Importance.

"Let no Man take Exception, that there are some Officers in the Army, not Qualify'd, according to the late Tests, for their Employment: The Gentlemen, I must tell you, are most of them well known to Me; and having formerly Served with Me on several Occasions, and always Approv'd the Loyalty of their Principles by their Practices, I think them now fit to be Employ'd under Me; And will deal plainly with you, That after having had the Benefit of their Services in such Time of Need and Danger, I will neither expose them to Disgrace, nor My Self to the Want of them, if there should be another Rebellion, to make them Necessary to Me.

"I am afraid some Men may be so wicked, to hope and expect that a Difference may happen between you and Me, upon this Occasion: But when you consider what Advantages have risen to Us in a few Months, by the Good-Understanding We have hitherto had; what wonderful Effects it hath already produced in the Change of the whole Scene of Affairs Abroad, so much more to the Honour of the Nation, and the Figure it ought to make in the World; And that Nothing can hinder a further Progress in this Way, to all Our Satisfactions, but Fears and Jealousies amongst Our Selves. I will not apprehend that such a Misfortune can befall Us, as a Division, or but a Coldness between you and Us; nor that any thing can shake you, in your Steadiness and Loyalty to Me, who, by God's Blessing, will ever make you all Returns of Kindness and Protection, with a Resolution to Venture even my own Life in Defence of the True Interest of this Kingdom.

The Speech was very Offensive.

This Speech was immediately understood to be, the Declaring for a Standing Army, to be Comanded by Popish Officers. And therefore, though the Earl of Middleton Moved, That the House would immediately Return their Thanks to His Majesty, for His most Gracious Speech, and also proceed to the Consideration of Answering the Ends therein mention'd; the House could not but shew their Jealousies and Fears, and Adjourn the Debate till Thursday next: On which Day, Nov. 12. the House Resolved it self into a Committee of the Whole, to take into Consideration His Majesty's Speech. Those on the Court-Side Moved to Vote the Militia Insufficient; and that the New Levies made by the King were Just, Reasonable and Necessary; and that a Supply ought to be Given, for the Keeping up of those Standing Forces. Those call'd the Country-Party, were for Vindicating the Militia, and making them more Useful; were against a Standing Army, and especially against Dispensing with Popish Officers in it; and Sir T. C. spoke holdly thus: — "His Majesty, on his first Entrance on the Throne, told us, He had been Mis-represented; and that He would Preserve the Government in Church and State, now Establish'd by Law, and Maintain us in all our Just Rights and Privileges. Over-joy'd at this, we run hastily in to Him; we gave Four Millions (reckoning what we added to him for Life was worth) at once. The present Revenue is One million nine hundred thousand Pounds, or Two Millions Yearly; the Charge of the Government (admitting this Army Kept up) is but One million three hundred thousand Pounds Yearly. And pray let us not forget, that there was a Bill of Exclusion Debated in this House; I was here, and shew'd my self against it: The Arguments for it, were, That we should, in case of a Popish Successor, have a Popish Army. You see the Act of the Test already broken: But pray remember what the late Lord Chancellor told you, when the late King (of Blessed Memory) Passed that Act, (the Words were to this Effect) By this Act, you are Provided against Poperie, that no Papist can possibly creep into any Employment. I am Afflicted greatly at this Breach on our Liberties; and seeing so great Difference betwixt this Speech and those heretofore made, cannot but believe this was by some others Advice. This struck at here, is our All: And I wonder there have been any Men so desperate, as to take any Employment, not Qualify'd for it, and would have therefore the question, that a Standing Army is Destructive to the Country.

Spee hes against a Standing Army.

The Result of this Debate, was, the Appointing a Committee to Draw up an Address to His Majesty; which, on Monday Nov. 16. was Read and Agreed to, in this Form:

Most Gracious Sovereign;

WE Your Majesty's most Loyal and Faithful Subjects, the Commons in Parliament Assembled, do, in the first place, (as in Duty bound) Return Your Majesty our most Humble and Hearty Thanks, for your great Care and Conduct in Suppressing the late Rebellion, which threatned the Overthrow of this Government, both in Church and State, to the Extirpation of our Religion as by Law Established, which is most Dear unto us, and which Your Majesty hath been pleas'd to give “ us repeated Assurances, You will always Defend and Maintain : Which, with all Grateful Hearts, we shall ever Acknowledge.

Address of the Commons.

“ We further crave Leave to Acquaint Your Majesty, That we have with all Duty and Readiness taken into our Consideration Your Majesty's Gracious Speech to us. And as to that Part of it, relating to the Officers in the Armies, not Qualify'd for their Employments, according to an Act of Parliament made in the 25th Year of the Reign of Your Royal Brother, Intituled, An Act for Preventing Damages which may happen from Popish Recusants ;

“ We do, out of our bounden Duty, humbly Represent unto Your Majesty, “ That these Officers cannot, by Law, be Capable of their Employments ; And that the Incapacities they bring upon themselves that way, can no way be taken off but by an Act of Parliament :

“ Therefore, out of that great Reverence and Duty we owe unto Your Majesty, who have been Graciously Pleas'd to take Notice of their Services to Your Majesty, we are Preparing a Bill to Pass Both Houses, for Your Royal Assent, to Indemnifie them from the Penalties they have now Incurred. And because the Continuing of them in their Employments, may be taken to be a Dispensing with that Law, without an Act of Parliament, the Consequence of which is of the greatest Concern to the Rights of all Your Majesty's Subjects, and to all the Laws made for the Security of their Religion ;

“ We therefore, the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of Your Majesty's House of Commons, do most humbly Beseech Your Majesty, That You would be most graciously Pleas'd to give such Directions therein, that no Apprehensions or Jealousies may remain in the Hearts of Your Majesty's most Loyal Subjects.

This Address was Presented by the Speaker, Attended by the House, to His Majesty, in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, on Tuesday Nov. 17. When His Majesty, with some Resentment, gave them this Answer :

GENTLEMEN ;

King's Answer,

I Did not Expect such an Address from the House of Commons. For having so lately recommended to your Consideration the great Advantages a Good-Understanding between Us had produced in a very short Time, and given you Warning of Fears and Jealousies amongst Our Selves ; I had reason to hope, that the Reputation God had blessed Me with in the World, would have Seal'd and Confirm'd a Good Confidence in you for Me, and of all that I say to you.

But however you Proceed on your Part, I will be Steady in all My Promises I have made to you ; and be Just to My Word in this, and all my other Speeches.

Not pleasing.

When this Answer was Read, there was a profound Silence in the House for some time after it : At last a Member Moved, That a Day might be Appointed to Consider of His Majesty's Answer to their late Address ; and named Friday next. Mr. C. stood up and Seconded that Motion, and said, I hope we are all English-men, and are not to be frighted out of our Duty, by a few High Words. Exception was immediately taken at those Words, as Reflecting on the King, and they were Writ down by the Clerk, and Mr. C. was Call'd upon to Explain them : And after much Debate, It was Ordered, That Mr. C. for his Indecent Speech, should be Sent to the Tower.

Supply Granted.

In the mean time, the Commons had made their Resolutions, to Give the King as much Money as could possibly Serve his Just Occasions, and be Consistent with their own Liberties and Rights. When the Question was put, That a Supply be Given to His Majesty ; It was Carry'd in the Affirmative : But these Words, Towards the Support of the Additional Forces (which one of the Members Moved might be added) were Rejected, and instead of them, it Passed, That the House be Moved to Bring in a Bill to make the Militia Useful. The Sum Demanded by the King's Agents, was One million two hundred thousand Pounds. Which Others thinking Exorbitant, said, That the Measure of their Supply was their Security : That the Use was to Direct the Quantum. That Four hundred thousand Pounds was Enough to Maintain the Additional Forces Two Years, till the Militia be made Serviceable. That they must not Give All at Once, but leave the Door open for coming thither another Time. Others proceeded to say, That they had that Session already Given Customs and Excises for His Majesty's Life, which amounted to Six Millions. That they ought to give Little now, to have Opportunity of Giving more another time : For if they Gave so Much at one Sitting, they should have Nothing left to Give ; Nay, and if Things proceeded thus, what they had, would be taken from them. But nevertheless, after a long Debate, the Question was put, for Seven hundred thousand Pounds, and no more, to be Given to His Majesty : Which Pass'd in the Affirmative ; and the House were entred upon Ways and Means for the Raising of it. And to make the King Easie in his Roman Catholick Officers in the Army, they not only offer'd a Bill to Indemnifie them from the Penalties they had already Incurr'd, but they were willing to Capacitate, by Act of Parliament, such a Number of those Officers as his Majesty should give a List of. But the King would Accept of nothing under a profound Submission and Obedience to all his Demands ; and therefore he not only gave the Commons his Marks of Displeasure, in his Answer to their Address, Nov. 18. but when they had appointed Nov. 20. to Consider of that Answer, he would not suffer them to enter upon any such Debate, but on that very Morning Prorogued the Parliament.

The King was not much better Pleas'd with the House of Lords : For when it was there Debated, Whether they should give the King Thanks for his Speech, or not ? some of the Peers were for it, while others warmly oppos'd it ; and the Marquess of Hallifax, a Man of sharp Wit, said, by way of Irony, They had now more Reason than ever to give Thanks to His Majesty, since He had dealt so plainly with them, and had Discover'd what He before Intended. What he meant for a Jest, was eagerly laid hold on, by the Courtiers, for Earnest ; so an Address of Thanks was Presented : And His Majesty made Answer, That He was very well satisfy'd that their Lordships were well pleas'd with what He said ; And that He would never offer any thing to their House, that He should not be convinc'd was for the Good and true Interest of the Kingdom. But the Lords gave greater Offence, by taking Notice of the Violent and Arbitrary Prosecution of the Lord Delamere and the Earl of Stamford, wherein they thought the Privileges of Peerage were Intrench'd upon. The same Day the King made his Speech, the Lord Delamere, in an humble Petition, represented to their Lordships, “ That His Majesty, by his Proclamation Dated the 19th of July last, did Require the Petitioner to Appear before him in Council within Ten Days, not for any manner of Treason, but for other less Matters therein contain'd. That accordingly, within Seven Days, he did Render himself to my Lord Sunderland : And that after being brought before His Majesty then sitting in Council, he was neither Confronted by any Person Person that Accused him, nor otherwise Charg'd with any manner of Treason, but only ask'd some Questions relating to Matters of a lesser Nature: And had he been Guilty of them, yet, by Law, he might and ought to be Bail'd. That yet the Lord Sunderland, by Warrant bearing Date the 26th of July last, did Commit the Petitioner to the Tower of London, (for High-Treason, in Levying War against the King) where he had remained ever since, under a very Close Restraint. And as he avowed himself to be altogether Innocent of any Evil Practice against the King or the Government, and had in all things behaved himself as became a good Subject: So he humbly Pray'd their Lordships to take his Case into their serious Consideration, and to do therein what should seem meet to their Lordships." After some Debate, the Question was put, Whether the Lords with White Staffs should Wait on His Majesty, to know the Reason why the Lord Delamere, a Member of their House, was Absent from his Attendance there? Which being carry'd in the Affirmative, the Earl of Rocheſter, Lord Treasurer, Reported the next Day, That he, with the other Lords, having Waited on His Majesty with their Message; His Majesty was pleas'd to Answer, That the Lord Delamere stood Committed for High-Treason, Testified upon Oath; and that His Majesty had already given Directions, That he should be Proceeded against according to Law. The Lords resumed this Debate on Nov. 16. when the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, by His Majesty's Command, gave this Account to their Lordships, of the Proceedings had and intended to be had against the Lord Delamere; says he, To shew your Lordships, That the King has given Orders for a speedy Prosecution of him, the Treason whereof he is Accused was Committed in Cheshire, and that being a County Palatine, the Prosecution must be there, and not in the Court of King's-Bench; as it might be, if the Treason had been Committed in any other County: And therefore His Majesty had given Orders for a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, in order to the Finding an Indictment against him. Which Commission is already Pass'd; and if the Indictment be not Found before the End of the Term, the Lord Delamere's Prayer being Entred in the King's-Bench, he may be Bailed. This Noble Lord was afterwards Tryed by his Peers, the Chancellor Jeffreys sitting as High-Steward, and was Honourably Acquitted; it manifestly appearing, That Thomas Saxon the Principal Evidence against his Lordship, was Guilty of Perjury; for which he Suffer'd Condign Punishment.

On the 11th of November, the Earl of Stamford did likewise put up a Petition to the Lords, importing, "That in July last he was taken in Custody at his own House in Leicestershire; and being brought to London, was, by the Earl of Sunderland's Warrant, Committed to the Tower, (for High-Treason, in Conspiring the Death of the Late King) where he Remained ever since, and was now a Close-Prisoner, and had not had the Use of Pen, Ink or Paper, except to Sign Petitions, in the Gentleman-Porter's or Warden's Presence: That he took Leave and Assent, That he was Innocent of the Crime laid to his Charge, and had endeavour'd to Behave himself with all Duty and Loyalty to the King, and His Royal Brother of Glorious Memory: That nevertheless, he heard there was an Indictment of High-Treason Found against him; but where, when, or how, or upon what Evidence, or upon what Matter, he knew not. Wherefore, He humbly Prayed, That their Lordships, according to the Ancient Course of Proceedings of this Most Honourable House, be Pleas'd to Order him to be brought before them in their House of Parliament, there to Hear the Matter Charg'd against him; And that thereupon such farther Proceedings might be had, as are agreeable to Justice, and the usual Course of Parliamentary Proceedings in Cases of the like Nature." Thereupon their Lordships Ordered the Lord-Mayor, and the rest of the Justices for the City of London, forthwith to return into that House, by Virtue of His Majesty's Writ of Certiorari, the Indictment Found before them against the Earl of Stamford. On Nov. 17. the said Earl, pursuant to their Lordships Order, was brought to their Bar, and the Indictment Found against him. And his Petition being Read, the Lord Chancellor Ask'd him, What he had to Say to the House? The Earl Answer'd, He Desir'd to Hear his Charge. And being Ask'd again, If he had any thing more to Say? His Lordship Reply'd, That he had been straightly Confin'd by Sixteen Weeks Imprisonment, and not allow'd the Liberty of Pen, Ink and Paper, or of Friends to come to him; and therefore he could say no more, till he knew his Charge. Whereupon the House Order'd, That the Earl of Stamford's Tryal should be in Westminster-Hall, on the First Day of December next: That in the mean time, he should be allow'd the Liberty of Pen, Ink and Paper, and Friends to come to him, in order for his Tryal; And that the Lords with White Staffs should Attend the King, to Desire His Majesty, on behalf of this House, That a Place should be Appointed in Westminster-Hall, and that His Majesty would give Order for a Commission to Appoint a Lord High-Steward, in order to the said Tryal. On Nov. 18. the Lords were acquainted, That the King had Comply'd with their Desire: But because, the next Day, their Lordships Appointed the 22d of that Month for the Reading and Considering His Majesty's speech, in a Full House; the King apprehending the Result of their Debates, and fearing the Jealousies which the Commons had express'd, he came to the House of Peers on Nov. 20. and the Commons Attending, He Commanded the Lord Chancellor to let Both Houses know, "That it was His Majesty's Pleasure, for many weighty Reasons, that this Parliament be Prorogued till the 10th Day of February next." Soon after, the Earl of Stamford, upon bringing his Habeas Corpus, was admitted to Bail; and in the Beginning of next Year, his Lordship, though Innocent, was obliged to accept of a Pardon, whereby his Bail was Discharg'd.

Tryal of Titus Oates.

Sever.

And indeed, besides the Butness in the West, this Year was fill'd with Prosecutions and Penalties, for Crimes and Offences against the State. On May the 8th and 9th, Titus Oates was Tryed at the King's-Bench-Bar, upon Two several Indictments of Perjury, said to be formerly Prefer'd against him by the Command and Direction of the Late King (of Ever-blessed Memory;) which should have been Tryed the last Term, had not His Majesty's Death prevented it. He was now Convicted of Perjury, on both the said Indictments; and being brought to the King's-Bench-Bar on the 18th of May, the Court awarded Judgment against him, as follows; "That he shall be Diverſited of his Canonical Habit for Ever: That on Monday next he be carry'd round Westminster-Hall with a Paper on his Head declaring his Offence, in these Words, TITUS OATES, Convicted upon Full Evidence, for Two Horrid Perjuries: And that afterwards he stand in the Pillory before Westminster-Hall-Gate, and on Tuesday before the Royal-Exchange; That on Wednesday he be Whipt from Aldgate to Newgate by the Common Hang-man, and on Friday following from Newgate to Tyburn; That he stand in the Pillory on every 24th of April, during his Life before Tyburn, on every 9th of August in the Palace-Yard at Westminster, on every 10th 1685.

“ August at Charing-Cross, on every 11th of August “ at Temple-Bar, and on every 2d of September “ before the Royal-Exchange, unless any of these “ Days happen to be Sunday, and then on the “ Day following; That he Pay a Fine of a “ Thousand Marks for each Perjury, and that “ he suffer Imprisonment during his Life.”
 There was no Remission of any part of this Sentence: That of Whipping was Executed with the utmost Severity, by Special Order from the Court, and with Rewards given beforehand to the Executioner by several Papists. The Stripes of the first Whipping were so fore and green upon the second, that it was Grievous to the Spectators, and much more to the Sufferer; who had perhaps committed some Mistakes in the Circumstances of Time and Place, but the Substance of his Evidence was undoubtedly True; for the Main of his Depositions was Demonstrated by the Papers of Coleman, and by a Concurrence of many other Acts and Deeds. And it is much to be fear'd, that the Truth of his Evidence had given more Offence to the Court, than any Mistakes in it.
 However, his Punishment look'd much the worse, for being Inflicted in a Popish Reign: And many imputed to His Majesty the Love of Revenge, as if the King of England could not forget the Injuries done to the Duke of York.

Tryal of Dangerfield.His Narrative.

On May 30. Thomas Dangerfield was Tryed at the King's-Bench-Bar, upon an Information, for Writing and Publishing a most Villainous and Scandalous Libel, call'd his Narrative; wherein, according to his Depositions before the Parliament in 1680. he did Reveal, “ That he was Employ'd “ by the Popish Party, and chiefly by the Lords “ in the Tower, and the Countess of Powys, to “ Invent a Meal-Tub Plot, which was to have “ thrown the Popish Plot upon the Presbyterians.” This Narrative was Ordered to be Printed by the House of Commons, on Nov. 10. 1680. But notwithstanding that Order, their Speaker Mr. Williams was afterwards Fined Ten thousand Pounds, for Licensing it to be Printed, and could not get off without Paying the greatest part of it. And Mr. Dangerfield being now found Guilty, receiv'd Judgment at the King's-Bench-Bar, “ That he should stand Twice “ in the Pillory; That he should be Whipt from “ Aldgate to Newgate, and from Newgate to Tyburn, “ and should Pay a Fine of Five hundred Pounds.”

He is Kill'd by Robert
Francis.

In his return from Tyburn towards Newgate, after his Whipping, being in a Coach, he had reproachful Words given him by one Robert Francis, a virulent Papist, and was run by him into the Eye with a Tuck at the end of a Cane; of which, together with the Pain of his Whipping, he Died soon after, and Francis was justly Executed for it.

Presbye-rian Plot.

It was indeed made the Fashion of the Court, to Disbelieve and Ridicule the whole Popish Plot, and to talk of nothing but the Plot of the Presbyterians; of which a late Writer speaks thus, “ This was call'd the Presbyterian or Protestant “ Plot; which most People look'd upon as the “ Contrivance of the Jesuits, in order to Baffle “ the Popish Plot; and to Crush the Ringleaders “ of that Party, who for several Years had so “ warmly endeavour'd to prevent King James's “ Accession to the Throne. Many of these Con“ spirators had already been Executed in King “ Charles's Reign; and the Court being now resolv'd “ to Prosecute the rest, the Eloquent Pen of “ Dr. Sp—t (not long before made B—p of “ R—ter) was industriously set to Work to “ Varnish over and Palliate the Flaws of Keeling “ and the other Witnesses Depositions. Accord“ ingly in the Beginning of June he Publish'd, “ An Account of the Horrid Conspiracy against the “ Late King, His Present Majesty, and the Govern“ ment; adorn'd with all those Flourishes of Oratory, which are so far from Persuading, 1685.

 “ that they rather give Truth an Air of Fiction:
 “ but however, as Affairs were then Managed, a “ Romance was as fit to serve the Court, as a “ True History.

Upon the same Day with Mr. Dangerfield's Tryal at Westminster, in the Afternoon, at the Nisi prius held at the Guildhall, Mr. Richard Baxter the Eminent Writer and Teacher was Convicted, upon an Information, For Writing and Publishing Scandalous and Seditious Notes upon the New Testament, (of which a larger Account shall be given in the State of Religion for this Year.

Baxter.

On June 25. William Disney Esq; was Tryed by a Special Commission of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Surrey, before the Lord Chief-Justice of England, and other His Majesty's Justices, upon an Indictment of High-Treason, “ For Printing “ and Publishing a most Vile and Traiterous Paper “ against His Majesty and his Government, Intitl'd, “ The Declaration of James Duke of Monmouth, &c.”
 Of which being found Guilty, he had Sentence Pass'd upon him, To be Drawn, Hang'd and Quarter'd on Monday next.

On Octob. 19. Henry Cornish Esq; late Sheriff, now Alderman of London, was brought to his Tryal at the Old-Bailey, (having been a Week before Committed Close Prisoner to Newgate) and was Indicted of High-Treason, For Conspiring with other False Traitors to raise a Rebellion within this Kingdom, and the Late King (of Ever-blessed Memory) to Death and final Destruction to bring, and the Ancient Government of this Kingdom to Alter and Subvert. The only Witnesses against him was Colonel Rumsey, a Loose and Wicked Evidence; there was another indeed Call'd, one Goodenough, but what he Deposed could not affect the Prisoner: However, Mr. Cornish was found Guilty, Condemn'd, and Executed in Cheap-side, much Lamented by his Fellow-Citizens, as a Man Unjustly Sacrificed; for they look'd upon the true Reason of this Proceeding against him to be, That Mr. Cornish, when Sheriff of London, had been very Active against the Popish Conspirators, so that now his Blood must Expiate his Zeal for the Protestant Religion.

On the same Day were likewise Tryed William Ring, “ For Harboursing and Concealing Joseph “ Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, who were in the “ late Rebellion in the West: John Fernely, For “ Harboursing and Concealing James Burton, a “ Person Outlawed for High-Treason: And “ Elizabeth Gaunt, For Succouring and Assisting “ the said Burton with Money, and helping him “ to a Passage beyond the Seas:” And were all Three found Guilty of High-Treason, and had Sentence of Death Pass'd upon them.

On Octob. 27. Richard Nelthorp and John Ayloffe were brought from Newgate to the King's-Bench-Bar, where being ask'd what they had to say, why Execution should not be Awarded against them, they standing Attainted by Outlawry of High-Treason, for Conspiring the Death of the Late King, of Ever-blessed Memory? &c. They not being able to say any thing that could avail them, the Court made a Rule, That they should be Executed on Friday; and accordingly they were then Hang'd, Mr. Nelthorp before Grays-Inn, and Mr. Ayloffe before the Temple-Gate.

Execution of Nelthorp

On Thursday Nov. 26. the Lord Brandon, by the Name of Charles Gerrard Esq; was brought to his Tryal at the King's-Bench-Bar, upon an Indictment of High-Treason, For Conspiring to raise a Rebellion, and Depose the Late King: Of which he was found Guilty; and being then Remanded to the Tower, he was on Nov. 28. brought again to the King's-Bench-Bar, where Sentence of Death Pass'd upon him, as in Cases of High-Treason; but he afterwards found Means to procure his Pardon.

State of Religion.

Though it was a great Surprize to the People of England to see the King so suddenly and so openly Declare himself a Roman Catholic, when he had never before publicly Profess'd that Faith, but had Prosecuted those who had call'd him a Papist, and had obtained exorbitant Fines, for giving him a Name in which he could now Glory: Yet, after all, the King might have enjoy'd his own Religion, if he could have confin'd that Liberty to Himself and his own Court, without obtruding it upon the rest of the Nation. Whether it was his own Zeal, or the Importunity of others, that carry'd him to the Arbitrary Measures of Promoting Popery, is not so easie to Determine; because there seems to be a Complexion of both; a Natural Bigottry in Himself, and a perpetual Solicitation of the Queen and the Jesuits. It is well Attested, That his Royal Brother had often, and particularly a little before his Death, advis'd him, Not to think of Introducing Popery into England, it being a Thing that was both Dangerous and Impracticable. And a very Eminent Politician, Don Pedro Ronquillo the Spanish Ambassador, at his first Audience after the Death of King Charles, is said to have ask'd leave to speak his Thoughts freely to His Majesty, and then made bold to tell him, That he saw several Priests about him, who he knew would Importune him to

Surprize, to see the King a Profess'd Papist:

More-especially to see him fond of Introducing Popery,

Contrary to the Advice of his best Friends.

Alter the Establish'd Religion in England; but he greatly fear'd, That if any such Attempt were made, His Majesty would have reason to Repent it.

His Majesty reported, that King James took this Liberty of the Spanish Ambassador very ill, and ask'd him in a Passion, Whether in Spain the Kings did not Advise with their Confessors? Yes, Sir, (reply'd the Ambassador) they do, and that's the reason our Affairs are so badly Managed. Nay, Pope Innocent XI. wrote a Letter to King James, upon his Accession to the Crown, to this effect, That he was highly pleas'd with His Majesty's Zeal for the Catholick Religion, but he was afraid His Majesty might push it too far; and then, instead of contributing to his own Greatness, and to the Advancement of the Catholick Church, he might come to the greatest Prejudice to the Cause, and Himself, by Attempting that, which His Holiness was well assur'd, by long Experience, could have no Success. These Things, together with the Dangers arising from Monmouth and Argyle, prevail'd a while with King James to Contain his immoderate Zeal for the Romish Religion; and yet there was an early Meaning betray'd of Drawing-in the Church-men to Sacrifice their Dissenting Brethren, and so to Unite and Advance the Strength of Popery. It was under this Management, that on May 27. the Committee for Religion, in the House of Commons, had Drawn up Two Votes: 1. "That it is the Opinion of the Committee, That this House will Stand by His Majesty, with their Lives and Fortunes, according to their bounden Duty and Allegiance, in Defence of the Reformed Religion of the Church of England, as it is now by Law Establish'd. 2. That an Humble Address be Presented to His Majesty, to Desire him to Issue forth his Royal Proclamation, to cause the Penal Laws to be put in Execution against all Dissenters from the Church of England whatsoever." Had the House fell in with this latter Vote, the King would have prefer'd the Persecution of Dissenters before his following Indulgence of them: But the previous Question being, Whether the Question should be then put, for the House to Agree with the Committee? It was carry'd in the Negative; And the House, with greater Wisdom, Resolved, Nemine Contradicente, "That this House doth Acquiesce and entirely Rely and rest wholly Satisfy'd on His Majesty's Gracious Word, and repeated Declaration to Support and Defend the Religion of the Church of England, as it is now by Law Establish'd, which is Dearer to us than our Lives.

The King made another early Attempt in favour of Popery, in the House of Lords, where, within three Days after the King's Speech, a Bill was brought in, For Reversing the Attainder of the Lord Viscount Stafford. The Lords, in a Grand Committee, made some Alteration in the Title, a considerable Amendment in the Preamble, and a small Amendment in the Enacting Clause, and then the Bill was Ingross'd: And the Reason of the Reversal was in these Words; Whereas it is now manifest, That the said William late Viscount Stafford was Innocent of the Treason laid to his Charge, and the Testimony whereupon he was found Guilty was False; Be it Enacted, &c. It is remarkable, That before the Question was put, for Ingrossing the Bill, the Earls of Anglesey and Radnor, and some other Lords, desired Leave to enter their Dissents: (1.) "Because the Assertion in the Bill, of its being now manifest, that the Lord Viscount Stafford Died Innocent, and that the Testimony by which he was Convicted was False, which were the sole Grounds and Reasons given to Support the Bill, were desituted of all Proof, Warrant, or Testimony of Witness, or Matter of Record before them. (2.) That the Record

Record of the King's-Bench, read at the Committee, concerning the Conviction, last Term, of one of the Witnesses for Perjury, in Collateral Points of the Proof of no affinity to the Lord Stafford's Tryal, and given several Years before, could be no Ground to Invalidate the Testimony upon which the said Viscount was Convicted; which could never Legally be by One Witness, and was in Fact by the Judgment of his Peers, on the Evidence of at least Three. (3.) Because the said Judgment in the King's-Bench, and the whole Proceeding, was Unprecedented, Illegal and Unwarranted, highly Derogatory to the Honour, Judicature and Authority of this Court, who have Power to Question and Punish Perjuries of Witnesses before them, and ought not to be Impos'd upon by the Judgment of inferior Courts, or this Attainder of a Peer Invalidated by Implication: And the Pepish Plot, so Confirm'd and Punished by his Late Majesty and Four Parliaments, after Publick Solemn Devotion through the whole Kingdom, by the Authority of the Church and State, to be Eluded, to the Arraignment and Scandal of the Government; and only for the Restoring the Family of one Pepish Lord, and all this being without any Matter Judicially appearing before their Lordships to introduce the same; and the Records of that Tryal not suffer'd to be Read, for the Information of the Truth, before the Passing of that Bill. (Lastly,) For many other weighty Reasons offer'd and given by divers Peers, in the two Days Debates of this Bill both in the Committees and in the House.

The next Day the Bill was Read the Third time, and Pass'd; but the fore-mention'd Lords repeated their Protestations against it, and were Seconded by the Earls of Stamford and Clare, and the Lord Evre, "Because the Preamble of it was not Amended, and no Defect in Point of Law alledged as a Reason for the Reversal of the Attainder." A late Author says, That the Court fearing a stronger Opposition to the Bill in the Lower House, did not think fit it should be sent thither: But it was certainly Sent down, and on Friday June 5. was Read a First time, and Ordered a Second Reading; and was accordingly the next Day Read a Second time, and Committed to a Committee of the Whole House, where it dropt, and was heard of no more: To the immortal Honour of the Commons, who, though very forward to Assist the King in all his Civil Interests, yet would by no means Comply with the Two first Projects of the Court, which were, the Persecution of the Dissenters, and Extinguishing the Belief of the Pepish Plot.

Before the next Meeting of the Parliament, the King was Elevated with his late Victories, and presum'd he could now bring the Commons more to his own Will and Pleasure, and therefore he began to cast off the Mask, and to Act without Disguise, what, till then, he had in some measure endeavour'd to Dissemble: And therefore, in his Speech, he told the Lords and Commons, "That He would Dispense with the Test Act, which was the greatest Legal Barrier against *Poper*y; That He would Keep up a Standing Army, to be Commanded by Pepish Officers, whom He expressly recommended, in approving the Loyalty of their Principles by their Practices.

But the Commons were sensible, that these Methods were the Counsels of *Poper*y, and were design'd to Weaken, and, by degrees, Alter the Establish'd Religion; and therefore the Majority would by no means Comply, and boldly Argued, "That to Employ Officers not taking the Test, was, in effect, a Dispensing with All the Laws at Once; That if those Men were Loyal or Good, it must proceed from their Generosity, more than their Principles; That they ought to remember, It was Treason for any Man to be Reconciled to the Church of Rome; and that the Pope, by Law, was Declared an Enemy to this Kingdom, &c.

The Prelates that were most in Favour with the King, because he thought them most Obsequious to his Will, were the Bishops of Durham, Ely, and Rocheſter; and yet hardly one of them would go in to all the following Measures of the Court: However, Encourag'd and Distinguish'd by the Favours of His Majesty, on Decemb. 29. the Lord Bishop of Durham was sworn Dean of His Majesty's Chapel-Royal, and within few Days after was admitted into the Privy-Council; and at the same time, the Lord Bishop of Rocheſter was sworn Clerk of the Closet to his Majesty.

The Dissenters thus represent their own Case; That the Rigorous Usage of the Dissenters in the foregoing Reign, was owing to Pepish Counsels they themselves never doubted. — They little expected better Treatment in this Reign, when bare-faced *Poper*y lifted up its Head among us. But (say they) Wise is that Providence which Governs the World, which serves its own Ends, even by those very Things whereby poor Mortals are most Disappointed. It is indeed enough to Amaze any One, to observe the Measures of this Reign, with their Consequences, whereby all Mankind were Disappointed. The Church Party not only expected to have the Dissenters wholly under their Feet, but depended so much upon their Merits in their Adherence to the Duke in his Distress, and his positive Assurances, that they were very secure, and thought they Dav their own: But, on a sudden, found their All in such Danger, that, without New Methods, their Religion and Liberty was gone. The Dissenters expected not only greater Rigours and Severities than before; but concluded, they should, if it were possible, be Extirpated: Whenas, to their Astonishment, they found themselves eas'd of their foregoing Hardships, and Courted and Caress'd by Those, who, they knew, would Rejoyce in their Ruine, and had left no Method unattempted in order to it. The Papists thought, by Raising those who had been so long Depress'd, to have inflam'd them with Revenge against their Brethren; to have widen'd the Animosities among Protestants, that they might All be thereby rendred the more sure and speedy Sacrifice to their Malice and Cruelty: And hereby they did but drive the Contending Parties the nearer to each other, and make them at last the more Vigorous in their United Effort, to avert that Common Ruine which hung over their Heads. So that all Parties were Surpris'd, and found themselves Misaken; but an Infinitely Wise GOD Over-rul'd All for Good.

There is some Disingenuity in this Way of the Dissenters representing their own Case; for they ought to have acknowledged, that the first Design of *Poper*y, was, to have set the Church upon a vigorous Suppression of all Conventicles, and a fierce Execution of all the Penal Laws. And had the Members of the Church of England in the House of Commons fell in with this Advice of the Court, Confirm'd by a Report from the Committee of Religion, the Dissenters had not only been grievously Oppress'd, but intirely Destroy'd; when the Rebellion of Monmouth had generally made them more Odious, and the King's Victory had made them more Obnoxious to the Court. And even the Dissenters, in the same History, confess the Displeasure of the Court against them, and a Disposition to Persecute them, in this Account of the Proceedings against their Great Leader, Mr. Baxter, (as follows:)

“ In the Reign of King James II. the same

“ Mr. Rotheram sitting down, Mr. Attwood began to shew, That not one of the Passages mention'd in the Information, ought to be strain'd to that Sence which was put upon them by the Innuendo's; they being more natural, when taken in a milder Sence: Nor could any one of them be apply'd to the Prelates of the Church of England, without a very forc'd Construction: To Evidence this, he would have read some of the Text; but Jeffreys cry'd out, You shan't draw me into a Conventicle with your Annotations, nor your Snivelling Parson neither. — My Lord, (says Mr. Attwood) I conceive this to be expressly within Roswell's Case, lately before your Lordship. — You Conceive! (says Jeffreys) You Conceive anifs; It is not. — My Lord, (says Attwood) that I may use the best Authority, permit me to repeat your Lordship's own Words in that Case. — No, you shan't, (says he;) You need not speak, for you are an Author already, though you Speak and Write Impertinently. — Says Attwood, I can't help that, my Lord, if my Talent be no better; but it is my Duty to do my best for my Client. — Jeffreys thereupon went on, Inveighing against what Attwood had Publish'd: And Attwood Justify'd it to be in Defence of the English Constitution; declaring, that he never Disown'd any Thing he had Written. Jeffreys several times Order'd him to Sit down, but he still Went on: My Lord (says he) I have Matters of Law to offer for my Client; and he proceeded to cite several Cases wherein it had been Adjudged, that Words ought to be taken in the milder Sence, and not in the strained, by Innuendo's. Well, (says Jeffreys, when he had done) You have had your Say. —

“ Mr. Williams and Mr. Phipps said nothing, for they saw it was to no purpose. At length, says Mr. Baxter himself, My Lord, I think I can clearly Answer all that is laid to my Charge, and I shall do it briefly: The Sum is contain'd in these few Papers, to which I shall add a little by Testimony. — But he would not hear a Word. At length the Chief-Justice Summ'd up the Matter in a long and fulsom Harangue; 'Tis notoriously known, (says he) There has been a Design to Ruine the King and Nation: The Old Game has been Renew'd, and This has been the Main Incendiary: He's as Modest now as can be; but Time was, when no Man was so ready at, Bind your Kings in Chains, and your Nobles in Fetters of Iron, and, Co your Cents, O Israel! Gentlemen, For God's sake, don't let us be Gull'd Twice in an Age, &c. And when he Concluded, he told the Jury, That if they in their Conscience believ'd he meant the Bishops and Clergy of the Church of England, in the Passages which the Information refer'd to, they must find him Guilty; And he could mean no Men else: If not, they must find him Not Guilty. — When he had done, says Mr. Baxter to him, Do's your Lordship think any Jury will pretend to Pass a Verdict upon me, upon such a Trval? — I'll Warrant you, Mr. Baxter, (says he) Don't you Trouble your self about That. — The Jury immediately laid their Heads together at the Bar, and found him Guilty.

“ He had Subpana'd several Clergy-men, who appear'd in Court, but were of no Use to him, through the Violence of the Chief-Justice.

“ The Trval being over, Sir Henry Ashburst led Mr. Baxter through the Crowd, (I mention it to his Honour) and convey'd him away in his Coach. On June 29. following he had Judgment given against him: He was Fined Five hundred Marks; to lie in Prison till he Paid it;

“ and be bound to his Good-Behaviour for Seven Years.

The King was now deep in the Measures of Popery, and Arbitrary Power; but he carry'd them on much faster in Scotland and Ireland, than he could yet do in England. He had laid a good Foundation in Scotland while he was Commissioner there for his Brother, and had settled the Ministry to his own Mind; and therefore immediately after his Accellion to the Throne he Call'd a Parliament at Edinburgh, on Apr. 23. 1685. when the Lord High-Chancellor branded the Presbyterians with this Character: We have a New Sect among us, sprung up from the Dung-hill, the very Dreags of the People, who Kill by pretended Inspiration; and instead of, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord, have nothing in their Mouths but the Word of God; Wrestling that blessed Conveyance of his Holy Will to us, to Justifie a Practice suggested to them by him who was a Murderer from the beginning; who having Modell'd themselves into a Commonwealth, (whose Idol is that accursed Paper the Covenant, and whose only Rule is to have none at all) have proceeded to Declare themselves no longer His Majesty's Subjects, to forfeit all of us who have the Honour to Serve Him in any Considerable Station, and will be sure, ere long, to do so by this Great and Honourable Court. It is how to rid our selves of these Men, and of all who incline to their Principles, that We are to offer to His Majesty our Advice, Concurrence, and utmost Assistance. These Monsters being a Publick Reproach upon the Nation, they render us Unquiet and Unsecure at Home: They bring Reproach upon our Religion, and are our great Plague, &c. Under this Fervour, the first Act Pass'd was for the Security of the Protestant Religion; by which they meant, an Extirpation of the Presbyterians; Entorcing it by another Act concerning Witnesses, wherein they Ordain, That such as being Cited to be Witnesses, in the Cases of Treason, Field or House-Conventicles, or Church Irregularities, do refuse to Depone, they shall be liable to be Punish'd, as Guilty of these Crimes respectively in which they Refuse to be Witnesses. And in another Act, containing a Tender of Duty, and Offer of the Excise to His Majesty, They do in the Preamble Declare, “ That they owe all their Blessings to the Sacred Race of their Glorious Kings, and to the Solid, Absolute Authority wherewith they were Invested by the first and Fundamental Law of their Monarchy: — And therefore they again Declare to the World, That they Abhor and Detest, not only the Authors and Actors of all preceding Rebellions against the Sovereign, but also all Principles and Positions which are Contrary or Derogatory to the King's Sacred, Supreme, Sovereign, Absolute Power and Authority, which None, whether Persons or Collective Bodies, can participate of any manner of way, or upon any pretext, but in Dependance on Him, and by Commission from Him, &c. — The same Parliament Pass'd Two other Acts; The first, “ To Forbid the Resorting to Conventicles, and the Preaching in them, under Pain of Death, and Confiscation of Goods:” — The other, “ Making it High-Treason to Give or Take the National Covenant, as explained in 1638. or to Write in Defence of it. — And the more effectually to Introduce a Despotick Power, They Pass'd another Act, “ To Confirm and Approve whatever had been done by His Majesty's Privy-Council, Justice-Court, and those Commissioned by them, in Banishing, Imprisoning or Fining such as Refused to Take and Swear the Oath of Allegiance; and to Assert the Royal Prerogative in the utmost Extent of them.

The King attempts to Repeal the Test and Penal Laws in Scotland.

The King presuming from these Advances, that the Scots would easily Comply with him in all things; it was amongst Them that He first attempted to Repeal the Penal Laws and Test made against Papists: And therefore having Summon'd the Parliament of that Kingdom to Re-assemble on the 29th of Apr. 1686. He wrote a Letter to them, wherein He recommends to their special Care his Innocent Roman Catholick Subjects, who had been always Assistant to the Crown, in the worst of Rebellions and Usurpations, though they lay under Discouragements hardly to be named: These He must heartily recommend to them; to the End, that as they had given good Experience of their True Loyalty, and Peaceable Behaviour, so, by their Assistance, they might have the Protection of his Laws, not suffering them to lie under Obligations which their Religion could not admit of; By doing of which, they would give a Demonstration of the Duty and Affection they had to him, and do Him most acceptable Service. And this Love He expected they would shew to their Brethren, as they saw Him an Indulgent Father to his People.

Ed. Commissioner's Speech.

To Engage the Parliament to Comply with this Desire of the King, the Earl of Murray, who was Appointed Lord High-Commissioner upon this Occasion, made them a Speech, with the finest Words and Promises; "That His Majesty would Open a free Intercourse of Trade with His Kingdom of England; and had fully Instructed his Envoy at the Court of France, to recover the Possession of the several Privileges of the Scots Merchants Trading with that Kingdom. And that His Majesty would Redress the Trouble which the Scotch Merchants met with in the Matter of the Staple and Trade with the Netherlands; and that He would remove the Prejudice which that Kingdom suffered, by the Importation of Irish Horses, Cattle and Victuals. And that the King was willing to Grant them an Open Mint; the want of which, was a sensible Prejudice to the Traffick of the Kingdom: And that He would not at this Time Demand any more Supplies or Impositions of any kind: And that He would give his Royal Consent to all such Laws and Regulations as might secure exact Payment to the Country from all his Officers and Soldiers in their Quarters. And, lastly, That He would Graciously Pass his full and ample Indemnity, with some few needful and necessary Exceptions, for all past Crimes and Misdemeanors whatsoever." — Concluding thus; — "And now, my Lords and Gentlemen, After so great and excellent Designs for promoting the Honour, the Ease and Wealth of this Kingdom; After his Resolution to Pardon so many Enemies, and to free so many of the Guilty from further severe, but Just Prosecutions; His Majesty believeth that None will wonder, if He Desire, by the Advice and Consent of His Great Council, to give Ease and Security to some of his good Subjects of the Roman Catholick Religion, who have been in all Times firm to the Monarchy, and ready to sacrifice their Lives and Fortunes for the Service and Security of the Crown. So that His Majesty, who so perfectly understands the Loyal and Dutiful Temper and Genius of Scotland, rests fully persuaded of your ready and cheerful Compliance with his Royal Desire and Inclination, tending so much to your own Security, and His Satisfaction; And that you will send me back to my Great and Royal Master, with the good Tydings of the Continued and Dutiful Loyalty of this his Ancient Kingdom: By which you will shew your selves the best and most affectionate Subjects, to the Best, the Incomparable, and Most Heroick Prince in the World.

As soon as the High-Commissioner had ended this Speech, the Creatures of the Court were for Passing an Act in Favour of the Papists, without looking farther than His Majesty's Desire. But the Wiser part prevailed to have a Committee Appointed to Inspect the Statutes Provided against the Roman Catholicks. After a full Examination of those Laws, the Committee Drew up a Bill, whereby "Papists were to be allow'd the Exercise of their Religion in Private, without Repealing those former Acts which made them liable to Penalties for Publickly Assembling together." The King would have been contented with this Step for the present, hoping to have gain'd more by degrees. But however, this Bill being Presented to the Parliament for their Approbation, they Divided upon it, and many warm Speeches were made against it. The King being inform'd of these Debates, and apprehending the Miscarriage of his Hopes, He dispatcht an Express to the Earl of Murray, with Orders to Dissolve, or at least to Prorogue the Parliament.

In February following, the King was Resolved to Accomplish, by His Sole Power and Authority, what He could not Effect with a National Consent: And therefore He sent a Letter, Dated Febr. 12. to His Privy-Council of Scotland:

Whereas by Our Letter of the 21st of August last past, We were Graciously Pleas'd to Inform you of Our Designs, in order to the Ease of Our Roman Catholick Subjects, (unto which We had your Dutiful Answer in some Days thereafter;) We have now thought fit to Publish these Our Royal Intentions, and to give an additional Ease to those of Tender Consciences: So to convince the World of our Inclinations to Moderation; and to evidence, that those of the Clergy who have been Regular, are Our most particular Care. And though We have given some Ease to those whose Principles We can with any safety trust; We have at the same time expressed Our highest Indignation against those Enemies of Christianity, as well as Government and Humane Society, the Field-Conventiclers, whom We recommend to you to Root out with all the Severity of our Laws, and with the most vigorous Prosecution of our Forces; it being equally Our and Our Peoples Concern to be rid of them, &c.

With this Letter, there was sent a Proclamation for Liberty of Conscience, and Suspension of the Laws against Papists, of the same Date, running thus: — "We have thought fit to Grant, and by Our Sovereign Authority, Prerogative Royal, and Absolute Power, which All Our Subjects are to Observe, without Reserve, Do hereby Give and Grant Our Royal Toleration to the several Professors of the Christian Religion after-named, with and under the several Conditions, Restrictions and Limitations after-mention'd. In the first place, We Allow and Tolerate the Moderate Presbyterians to Meet in their Private Houses, and there to Hear all such Ministers as either have or are willing to accept of Our Indulgence allanerly, and None other. — It is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, That Field-Conventiclers, and such as Preach or Exercise at them, or shall any-wise Assist or Connive at them, shall be Prosecuted according to the utmost Severity of our Laws. — In like manner, We do hereby Tolerate Quakers to Meet and Exercise in their Form, in any Place or Places appointed for their Worship. — And considering the Severe and Cruel Laws made against Roman Catholicks (therein call'd Papists) in the Minority of Our Royal Grand-Father (of glorious Memory,) without his Consent, and contrary to the Duty of good Subjects, by his Regents and other Enemies to their Lawful Sovereign Our Royal Great-Grand-Mother Queen Mary (of blessed and pious Memory,) wherein,

Most Persons who saw this Proclamation, could not but Observe, that this Toleration of Protestant Dissenters was purely for the sake of the Papish Recusants; and that the Moderate Presbyterians had not so great a Liberty allow'd them as the Quakers had; because this last Sect bore a nearer affinity to the Papists, and were found to be more dispos'd to the Will of a Papish Prince: And lastly, that the much greater Indulgence granted to the Roman Catholicks, was not only in Tendernefs to them, but with the highest Commendation of them; and the wholsom Laws made against them, not only Suspended, but Censur'd and Arraign'd, as Barbarous and Cruel. And yet the Lords of the Council in Scotland were inclin'd to Answer, " That His Majesty's Commands were " exactly Obey'd; and His Royal Proclamation " Printed and Publish'd, by which His Majesty " had given a further Evidence of his Favour and " Goodnefs to all his Subjects. — Concluding sion and Private Worship; And do conceive, That such of them as are or shall be Employ'd by Your Majesty in Offices of Trust, Civil or Military, are sufficiently Secured by Your Majesty's Authority and Commission for their Exercising the same. We return Your Majesty our most humble Thanks, for giving Us Your Royal Word, for Maintaining the Church and our Religion as it is now Establish'd by Law; and rest Satisfy'd, believing Your Majesty's Promise to be the best and greatest Security we can have.

But it was principally in Ireland, where the King's Designs of Establishing Popery and Arbitrary Power appeared without Disguise, from the very beginning of his Reign. The Duke of Ormond was Lord-Lieutenant of that Kingdom, a Person of unshaken Honour, and true Zeal for the Protestant Religion, and the English Interest; and therefore he was thought unfit to serve the present Government: So, about the End of March 1685. he received an Order from the Court, to Deliver the Sword of State to the Lord Primate of Ireland and to the Earl of Granard, Appointed by the King to be Lords-Justices. But before his Departure, the Duke labour'd with a generous Diligence to settle Things on such a Foundation, as that it might not be easie for the Papists to make a present Change, without a manifest Violation of the Laws and Constitutions of the Kingdom. There is a remarkable Passage that shews the Great Spirit of that Excellent Patriot; He Appointed a Dinner at the New Hospital (a stately Fabrick by him erected near Dublin for Poor Soldiers) and Invited the Officers of the Army then in and about that City: After Dinner, he took a large Glas in his Hand, bid them fill it to the Brim with Wine, then stood up and call'd thus to the Company; Look here, Gentlemen; They say at Court, I am become an Old Doating Fool: You see my Hand does not shake; nor does my Heart fail; Nor do I doubt that I shall make some of my Enemies see their Mistake: — And so Drank the King's Health.

The Duke, at his Arrival at the English Court, found himself in Displeasure with the King; and had such dismal Apprehensions of the Posture of Affairs in Ireland, that it is thought to have broke his Heart, for he Died soon after, of a great Age indeed; and yet, till this very Turn, he had enjoy'd such Health of Body, and Cheerfulness of Mind, that in the Course of Nature he might have Liv'd much longer.

Before His Grace left the Government, an Order came, for Regulating the Council; which he left for the Justices to do: So, upon his Departure the Privy-Council was immediately Dissolved, and most of the English that were Active in the Protestant Cause were Turn'd out; and though no Papists were immediately Put in, yet it was not long before they made up the Major-part; and those few Protestants that were left, seldom appear'd at the Board, as being unable to bear up against the strongest Side.

The Irish began now to appear in a National Body against the English, and daily charg'd them with Evil Designs against the King and Government. They were Countenanc'd by the Privy-Council, who prest the Lords-Justices for Orders to Impower Irish Papists, and other Creatures of theirs, to Commit, without Bail, any Person Accused. These Proceedings made the Lords-Justices soon weary of their Government, and the Lord Granard wrote to England to be Dismiss'd: But the Papists represented him as a Man fit to be kept in His Majesty's Interest, being very prevalent in the North, among the Scots Presbyterians, of which Persuasion his Lady was. So that King James wrote him a Letter with his own Hand, giving him Assurance, That Nothing should be acted Prejudicial to the Protestant Interest, for which his Lordship was at that time reputed to be very Zealous.

Monmouth's Rebellion gave a plausible Opportunity to the Irish, more than ever, to contrive Plots, and to fasten them upon the Protestants; and to make the King so Jealous of the Protestant Interest in that Kingdom, that He resolv'd now to keep a Standing Army of Irish Papists. This could not be well done, without Calling in all the Arms from the Hands of Protestants. To Carry on this Design, the King and Council wrote over to the Lords-Justices, That there was Reason to believe, that the Rebellion of Monmouth had been of that spreading Contagion, as to Insect many, and Delude more: It was not therefore safe for the Kingdom, to have the Arms of the Militia dispers'd abroad; but they would be in a greater Readiness, for the Use of the Militia, and the Defence of the Country, to have them deposited in the several Stores of each County.

Upon these Instructions, a Proclamation was Issued out; and the Lord-Primate prevailing with the City of Dublin to bring in their Arms, that Precedent was soon follow'd by all the Country. The Protestants being thus Disarm'd, the next Design was to New-model the Army, which at that time consisted of about 7000 Men, all Protestants, Zealous and Faithful in the King's Service. For this Purpose, they made Use of Colonel Richard Talbot, a Man of all others most Odious to the English Protestants, and one who had been named by Oates, in his Narrative some Years before, as design'd for this ill Service: So that many before who believed little of the Papish Plot, did now give the greater Credit to it, and said, That if Oates was an ill Evidence, he was certainly a good Prophet.— Talbot began with great Insolence to pursue a Method, which was said to have been design'd immediately before the Death of King Charles II. which was to Displace all Officers that had been in the Parliament or Oliver's Army, and the very Sons of all such. This the Duke of Ormond had Directions to Proceed in; but he made no progress in it, under pretence of gaining Time to find them out, but in reality, because he foresaw it was to make room for the Papists. Talbot having Cashier'd a great part of the Officers, came over into England, and brought with him one Neagle a Cunning Irish Lawyer, and Inveterate Papist, who was constantly with Father Petre, and the rest of the High Cabal. The Queen was altogether for their furious Counsels, but the King was not so violently inclin'd, being every Day advis'd by all his Papish Peers, not to proceed too fast in the Revolution of Ireland, lest thereby he should ruine the general Interest of the Catholicks. However, Talbot was made Earl of Tyrconnel, with a Design of his immediate Return to Ireland in Quality of Lord-Lieutenant: To which Office he had been recommended by Bishop Tyrrell, though with some Reserve, as being a Person confess'd to be Odious to the English, and therefore not proper to be brought upon the Stage till Matters were come to a greater Maturity. The Lord Ellis was propos'd; but he was infirm, and excus'd himself from what he thought would be a Hard Work. At last, in Decemb. 1685. it was Resolv'd, That Tyrconnel should return Lieutenant-General of the Army, and the Earl of Clarendon Lord-Lieutenant of that Kingdom.

Tyrconnel executed his Commission with great Fury, not only Displacing more Officers of the Army, but also Turning out the Private Soldiers. His Will was his Law, and that purely Martial: He brought over Blank Commissions, Sign'd by the King, for any Names that he pleas'd to insert; he did this in an Insulting Barbarous manner, turning off some Soldiers strip of their very Shirts, seizing the Horses of some Officers and Troopers, and giving them Notes and Bills for not above Half their Pay, and commonly loading them with hard Words, and vile Reproaches. The most Noted Officers that were turn'd out, were the Lord Shannon, Capt. Robert Fitz-Gerald, Capt. Richard Coote, and Sir George St. George, &c. In whose Places were put one Kernay that would have Murder'd King Charles II. Anderson an obscure Fellow, Sheldon a virulent Bigot, Graham, and others of the same Stamp. In short, Two or Three hundred English Gentlemen, who had hid-out their Fortunes in purchasing their Military Posts, were now Arbitrarily Disbanded, and Five or Six thousand Private Soldiers sent on Begging.

However, these Discouragements of the English were in some measure alleviated by the Integrity of the Lord-Lieutenant, who was very faithful to the Protestants, and endeavour'd to revive their Spirits, by telling them of the great Assurances the King had given him of Protecting their Religion. But indeed, that Noble Earl soon found himself not half a Governor, for Tyrconnel assum'd more than a Share in the Administration of all Affairs. This Passage is remarkable: Upon a Sunday Morning, His Lordship going to Church, perceiv'd an Irish Officer he never saw before Commanding his Guard of Battle-Axes, which very much surpriz'd him; whereupon he made a stop, demanding who he was, and who put him there?— The Irish-man, as much frighted as the Lord-Lieutenant was disturb'd, in broken Expressions told His Excellency, He was a Captain put in by the Lord Tyrconnel.— His Excellency demanding of him, When?— He reply'd, That Morning.— His Excellency bid 'em Call the former Captain, and Dismiss this of Tyrconnel's. The next Day the Lord-Lieutenant question'd Tyrconnel for this Action:— Who reply'd, He did nothing but by the King's Orders.— To which the Earl of Clarendon return'd, That whilst His Majesty intrusted him with the Government, he would not be Dispos'd by his Lieutenant-General.— Complaints on both Sides were made to the King, and the mutual Discontents grew every day greater; the Lord-Lieutenant thinking himself Supreme, and the Lieutenant-General daring to be Superior, who therefore went over into England, and Consulted with his Party how to obtain the sole Government of Ireland. The Queen, Father Petre, and the Earl of S—d very much Importun'd the King in his Favour; but the Papish Lords were still against it, and thought his Furioufness would ruine all, and yet they were extremely desirous to have Ireland in the Absolute Power of the Papists: For when some of the most Considerable of them, upon an apprehension of bringing a Storm upon themselves in England, were for Addressing the King to have liberty to Sell their Estates, and that His Majesty would Intercede with the King of France to Provide for them in his Dominions;— The King took Occasion to tell them, That before their Desires came to Him, He had often thought of them, and had provided a sure Sanctuary and Retreat for them in Ireland, if all those Endeavours should be blasted in England, which He had made for their Security, and of the Success whereof He had not yet reason to despair.

The Earl of Rochester having been by Accident inform'd of what was then in Agitation, he immediately acquainted the King with it; who absolutely deny'd that there was any Intention of Removing his Brother from the Government of Ireland; but, on the contrary, assur'd him, He was very well satisfy'd with his Conduct there. Within some few Days, the Lord-Treasurer receiv'd from his Brother the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland the same Intimations about his Removal. Upon which he again apply'd to His Majesty; who as positively deny'd the whole Matter as He had done before; and to remove the Jealousies of the Lord-Lieutenant, wrote a Letter to him, as was said, with his own Hand, assuring him, He had yet no Thoughts, and He believ'd never should have, whilst both of them liv'd, to Call him away from the Government of Ireland. However, about Christmas, it was by the King in Council Resolv'd, That the Earl of Tyrconnel should be made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland: And it was said, that the Lord-President Carry'd it for him, against a great Opposition of the Board.

The Confirmation of this dismal News, struck the Protestants in Ireland with great Damp and Terror: Many of them that had Patentee-Employments, obtain'd License, under the Broad-Seal, to Come away; and many of the Merchants Call'd in their Effects and left the Kingdom. His Excellency the Earl of Clarendon did all he could to assist the poor Protestants, in covering them from the impending Storm; and it was interpreted 1686. interpreted by many as a signal Act of Providence, that after Tyrconnel was come to Holyhead, he was there detain'd full Sixteen Days, by contrary Winds. But he at last arriv'd at Dublin on Febr. 6. And though his Appearance was with a sad Consternation to the Protestants, yet Care was taken to Publish, by Authority, That there never was seen so great a Concourse of People at any Chief-Governor's Landing, as at his; expressing their general Satisfaction by loud Acclamations as he pass'd through the Streets, by Ringing of Bells, and by Bonfires at Night throughout the City, together with all other Publick Demonstrations of Joy.

On Febr. 12. the Earl of Clarendon caused the Privy-Council to Meet at the Palace of the Lord Archbishop of Dublin, and did there Deliver up the Sword of State to the Earl of Tyrconnel, with a memorable Speech wherein he told him, "That the Misunderstandings and Feuds of that Kingdom were Things much to be Lamented, and he could wish the Occasion of them were remov'd, which was this; viz. That the English of that Kingdom had been represented as a Company of Disaffected and Fanatical People.— That this was a hard Charge, if it were true: But from what he had learn'd, both by his own Observation, and the Information of others, he believ'd them to be as Loyal Subjects, and generally as true Sons of the Church of England, as any it has. That it is a Church that can make it Her Brags, That in all the Conspiracies, Plots and Rebellions that ever have been against the King, not one Orthodox Member of Her Communion has been any way in 'em: That he profess'd himself to be of that Church, and counted it his greatest Happiness that he was so. That as for the Protestants of that Kingdom in particular, he could say in their favour, That when the Restoration of the King was oppos'd in England, they were the Men that us'd their indefatigable Industry to effect it. That he design'd to tell this to the King; and hop'd, by his Lordship's Prudence, these Calumnies and Aspersions that had lain upon them, would be removed; and that as they and the Roman Catholics were the Subjects of One Prince, so they would Unanimously Agree, in their Love of one another, and in Promoting his Honour and Happiness. He clos'd his Speech, with telling him, That as he Received the Sword in Peace, so he Deliver'd it up in Peace. —

Tyrconnel's Answer was to this effect: "That it was the King's Design, and consequently his Command to him, to Govern that Kingdom according to the Laws of it, without any Partiality; and therefore he Declar'd, That all Men should enjoy the Exercise of their Religion and Properties, according to Law. That he knew there were great Fears in the Kingdom; some Removing their Goods, others Calling in their Money: What the Reason of it was, he could not imagine; but for his own part, he would not have any Distrust the King's Protection. That the Lord Clarendon had hinted, That he would have no Distinction of Names, or any thing else that might breed Jealousies among the People.— Which he would make it his whole Business to prevent; for this was the Command of the King, who was both the Greatest and Justest Prince that Rul'd these Kingdoms, &c. — And further, to Suppress, if possible, the general Discontent of the English Protestants, the New Lord-Deputy Publish'd a Proclamation, on Febr. 21.

Tyrconnel Publishes a Proclamation. "Whereas We are Inform'd, That several Disaffected Persons within this His Majesty's Kingdom, have been of late very Industrious, by False Reports and Malicious Insinuations, to suggest to many of His Majesty's Loyal Subjects, as if We His Majesty's Chief-Governor intended to Govern, under His Majesty, here, otherwise than by the known Laws of this Land of Ireland; and as if some of His Majesty's Loyal Subjects should stand in hazard of being Disturb'd and Disquieted in their Just Liberties, Properties, and other Rights due to them by Law: Which Calumnies have been heightn'd and encourag'd by some few Fiery Spirits in the Pulpits, by taking upon them to Treat of Matters that do not lie within their Province, &c. We therefore Publish and Declare, That We will, by the Grace of God, apply all Our Care and Industry to yield and exact a perfect Obedience to His Majesty's Commands; and to take diligent Care, that all His Majesty's Subjects within this Kingdom, of what Persuasion in Religion soever they be, shall be Protected in their Just Rights and Properties due to them by Law, and in the free Exercise of their Religion; Provided they Persevere in their Duty and Allegiance to His Majesty, without giving any Occasion of Disturbance to the Peace of the Kingdom, &c. — But as this fair Pretension of Tyrconnel was not at all believ'd, so it was immediately confuted by his own Practice.

While Things were thus prepar'd and dispos'd in Scotland and Ireland, the like Measures were concerted for Reducing England to an Arbitrary Government. The King was resolv'd to have no Other Sitting Parliament, till He could form This or a New one to His Own Mind and Pleasure. And therefore, as on Nov. 20. the Parliament, under the King's Displeasure, had been Prorogued to Febr. 10. following; so it was on that Day, by Commission, farther Prorogued to the 10th Day of May 1686. and even then again Prorogued to the 22d of Nov. next; and from that time farther Prorogued to Febr. 15. and then Prorogued till the 28th of Apr. 1687. In the mean time, the King resolv'd to have Westminster-Hall intirely at his own Command, and fill'd only with those Judges who should assert his Dispensing Power, i.e. should execute or break the Laws, when and how His Majesty pleas'd. To this End, His Majesty Clos'd the Old Judges; and before He would make any New ones, He entred into a profess'd Bargain with them, That they should Maintain His Prerogative of Dispensing with the Penal Laws and Test. The first Man the King attempted to persuade, was Sir Thomas Jones, Lord Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, who shew'd a great Averseness, and at last told the King plainly, He could not do it. — The King answer'd, He would have Twelve Judges of his own Opinion. — To which Sir Thomas reply'd, That possibly He might find Twelve Judges of his Opinion, but He would scarce find Twelve Lawyers to be so. — Upon this Reluctancy of the Judges, on Apr. 21. Sir Thomas Jones Lord Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, William Mountague Esq; Lord Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, Sir Job Charlton One of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, and Sir Edward Nevill One of the Barons of the Exchequer, had all their Quietus: And in their Places, Sir Henry Bedingfield (One of Justices of the Common-Pleas) was sworn Lord Chief-Justice of the same Court, Sir Edward Atkins (One of the Barons of the Exchequer) was sworn Lord Chief-Baron, Sir Edward Lutwich (Chief-Justice of Chester) was sworn One of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, and Richard Heath Esq; (Serjeant at Law) was made One of the Barons of the Exchequer. Yet, upon the Humble Petition of Sir Job Charlton, so Displac'd, His Majesty was pleas'd to constitute him Chief-Justice of Chester.

Call of New Serjeants.

Two Days after, there was a Call of Serjeants at Law: Sir John Holt Recorder of London, Sir Ambrose Philips, Christopher Milton Esq; John Powell Esq; John Tate Esq; William Rawlinson, Esq; William Killingsworth Esq; Hugh Hodges Esq; Thomas Geers Esq; and George Hutchins Esq; who gave Rings with this Motto, Deus, Rex, Lex: And to give the Reputation of Law to the Court, Sir John Holt and Sir Ambrose Philips were made the King's Serjeants. But within few Days, Christopher Milton, a profess'd Papist, was Knighted, and made One of the Barons of the Exchequer; Sir John Powell One of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, and Sir Thomas Powys Solicitor-General, in the Place of Heneage Finch Esq; On Octob. 22. His Majesty was pleas'd to confer the Honour of of Knighthood upon another Popish Lawyer, Richard Allibone of Grays-Inn Esq; and to make him One of his Council at Law, and soon after a Judge.

The Privy-
New-mo-dell'd.

His Majesty was pleas'd to Model the Privy-Council, in much the same manner as he had the Benches in Westminster-Hall: For at Hampton-Court, on July 17. the Earl of Powys, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, the Lord Bellasis, and the Lord Dover, all known and zealous Papists, were sworn of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council, and accordingly took their Places at the Board; and on Octob. 8. the New Earl of Tyrconnel was admitted to the same Honour.

Severities on some Witnesses of the Popish Plt.

Though the King, for Popularity and Protection of the Papists, had resolv'd upon Indulgence to the Dissenters, and intended to make all Parties quiet, that the Popish Party might more easily prevail; yet some Severities were exercis'd, to create a continual Fear, of not Offending the Government. On May 14. Miles Prance was brought to the King's-Bench, upon an Information Exhibited against him, for Wilful and Malicious Perjury, in the Evidence he gave at the Tryals of Green, Berry and Hill, relating to the Murther of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey. He was persuaded to Plead Gilty: And being brought again to the King's-Bench on June 15. he was prevail'd on to declare his hearty Sorrow and Repentance for his heinous Offence, and then receiv'd this Judgment; "That he Pay a Fine of an Hundred Pounds; " That he be brought on Monday next to all the " Courts of Westminster with a Paper on his Head " declaring his Offence; And that he stand the " same Day in the Pillory before Westminster-Hall- " Gate, and on Wednesday following at the Royal- " Exchange, and on Monday following at Charing- " Cross; And that he be Whipt from Newgate to " Tyburn; And Committed in Execution until he " had Paid the Fine.

Mr. Edward Whitaker had been Convicted in Easter-Term, 1682. for Justifying the Rebellion of Forty One, and the Murther of King Charles I. and flying for the same, had Absconded ever since. Mr. Attorney-General, in Michaelmas-Term, moved for Judgment against him; and the Court Adjudged him, " To Pay a Fine of a Thousand " Marks, and remain in Prison (when Taken) till " the same be Paid.

Soon after, Mr. Attorney-General moved the Court of King's-Bench for Judgment against George Speake Esq; Convicted for a Riot, and for Rescuing John Trenchard Esq; from His Majesty's Messengers, who had a Warrant to Apprehend him for High-Treason. And the Court Adjudged him, " To Pay " a Fine of Two thousand Marks.

But it seems, the Man who most Provok'd the Government, was Mr. Samuel Johnson, a Minister of the Church of England, who had been Author of a very Rational Treatise against Passive Obedience, under the Title of [Julian the Apostate.] He had now the Courage to write An Address to the English Protestants in King James's Army, (as follows:)

GENTLEMEN;

1686.

Mr. Samuel Johnson's Addres to the English Soldiers.

NEXT to the Duty we owe to GOD, which ought to be the principal Care of Men of your Profession, who carry your Lives in your Hands, and often look Death in the Face, in the Service of your Native Country, wherein you drew your first Breaths, and breathe a free English Air: Now I desire you to Consider, how you will Comply with these two Main Points, by engaging in the Present Service. Is it, in the Name of GOD, for His Service, that you have join'd your selves with Papists? Who indeed must Fight for the Mas-Book, but will Burn the Bible; and who seek to Extirpate the Protestant Religion with Your Swords, because they cannot do it with their own. And will you be Aiding and Assisting to Set up Mas-Houses, to Erect that Kingdom of Darkneis and Desolation amongst us, and to train up all our Children in Popery! How can you do these Things, and call your selves Protestants!

What Service can you do your Country, by being under the Command of French and Irish Papists, and by bringing the Nation under a Foreign Yoke? Will you help them to make forcible Entry into the Houses of your Country-men, under the Name of Quartering; contrary to Magna Charta, and Petition of Right? Will you be Aiding and Assisting to all the Murther and Outrages which they shall commit by their Void Commissions, which were declared Illegal, and sufficiently Blasted by Both Houses of Parliament, if there had been any need of it? For it was very well known before, that a Papist cannot have a Commission, but by Law is utterly Disabled and Disarm'd. Will you exchange your Birthright of English Laws and Liberties, for Martial and Club-Law; and help to Destroy all Others, only at last to be Eaten up your Selves? If I know you well, As you are English-men, you Hate and Scorn these things. Therefore be not unequally Tok'd with Idolatrous and Bloody Papists: Be Valiant for the Truth, and shew your selves Men.

The same Considerations are humbly Offer'd to all English Sea-men, who have been the Bulwark of this Nation, against Popery and Slavery, ever since 1588.

Upon this, in Trinity-Term, an Information of High-Misdemeanor was brought against him in the King's-Bench, for Writing and Publishing Two most Scandalous and Seditious Libels, to Stir up His Majesty's Subjects to Rebellion. Of which he was Convicted: And in the next Term the Court Awarded this Judgment against him, " That he " stand in the Pillory on Monday next at West- " minster, on Wednesday following at Charing-Cross, " and the Monday after at the Royal-Exchange; " That he Pay a Fine of Five hundred Marks; " And that he be Whipt from Newgate to Tyburn. Before his Suffering, for a pretence of Respect to the Gown, he was to be Degraded; and accordingly, on Nov. 20. he was brought before the Lords the Bishops of Durham, Rocheſter and Peterborough, Commissioners appointed by His Majesty to Exercise all manner of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction within the Diocese of London, during the Suspension of the Lord Bishop of London, who were Met, with several of the City Divines, in the Chapter-House of St. Paul's; where the said Mr. Johnson is said, According to the Ecclesiastical Laws, in a Full Court, to have receiv'd Sentence of Degradation, and to have been Degraded and Divested accordingly; and Deliver'd over, as a meer Lay-Perſon, into the Hands of the Secular Officer, to Undergo the Punishments Adjudged to him.

Severe Sentence on Mr. Samuel Johnson.

The King did not only Cloſet his Judges and Officers, upon the Question of the Penal Laws and Test, but he solicted his Prime-Ministers to be reconcil'd 1686. reconcil'd to the Church of Rome. His Majesty first undertook to manage the Earl of Sun—d, who is said to have been very Obsequious to the King's Desire, and to have bowed low at the Papish Altar, though he did not care to be formally reconcil'd (as the Term was) to the Church of Rome. What the Tenor of that Discourse was which the King had with him, was never known; but however, Father Petre is said to have extremely manifested the Earl's Obedience, at a Meeting with the Jesuits; adding, That it was necessary for him as yet to appear a Protestant, for weighty Reasons of State.

The King's next Solicitation was to the Earl of Rochester, for whom the King had a particular Affection and Esteem, not only as his Brother-in-Law, but as his Faithful Servant, on whom He had therefore bestow'd the Place of Lord High-Treasurer of England, upon his first Advancement to the Throne: Yet it seems, nothing could maintain the Earl in this Post, without changing his Religion, and embracing the King's, which, by this time, was become almost the only Means of gaining or keeping Preferment. His Lordship being prest and fatigu'd by the King's Intreaties, told His Majesty, "That to let Him see it was not through any Prejudice of Education, or Obstinacy, that he persevered in his Religion, he would freely consent to hear some Protestant Divines Dispute with some Papish Priests, and promis'd to Side with the Conquerors." Thereupon the King appointed a Conference to be held at Whitehall, at which His Majesty and several Persons of Honour were present with the Earl of Rochester. The Protestant Champions were, Dr. Simon Patrick (now Lord Bishop of Ely;) and Dr. William Fane, Professor of Divinity in Oxford. Those on the Papish Side, were one Gifford, a Doctor of the Sorbonne; and Mr. Tilden, who having turn'd Roman Catholick at Lisbon, went under the Name of Dr. Godden: And the Subject of their Dispute was, The Rule of Faith, and The Proper Judge in Controversies. This Conference was very long; and at last the Romish Doctors were prest with so much Strength of Reason and Authority against them, that they were really put to Silence. Whereupon the Earl of Rochester openly declared, "That the Victory the Protestant Divines had gain'd, made no Alteration in his Mind, being before-hand convinc'd of the Truth of his Religion, and firmly resolv'd never to forsake it. — His Majesty going off abruptly, was heard to say, He never saw a Bad Cause so Well, nor a Good One so Ill Maintain'd. — And the Jesuits were so Exasperated against the Lord Treasurer for refusing to be a Convert, that one of them said, That Lord must be Anathematiz'd; And that the King could never Prosper while such a Heretick was near him. — Within few Days after, the King sent to the Earl for his Commission of High-Treasurer; which he presently resign'd: And in the Beginning of January, His Majesty was pleas'd to constitute John Lord Bel-lasis, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Henry Lord Dover, Sir John Ernie (Chancellor of the Exchequer;) and Sir Stephen Fox, Commissioners for Executing the Office of Lord High-Treasurer of England. But to alleviate the Loss of the Treasury, His Majesty assign'd to the Earl of Rochester an Annuity of Five thousand Pounds per Ann. upon the Post-Office. Which so Engag'd his Lordship, that he afterwards went over to Holland to take Care of the King's Interest there, and to do him the best Service he could. There was less Care taken of his Elder Brother the Earl of Clarendon, who not only lost his Government in Ireland, but his Privy-Seal in England; for on March 11. (at the End of this Year) His Majesty was pleas'd to constitute Henry Lord Arundel

The King endeavours to reconcile his Prime-Ministers to his own Religion.

A Conference, for Satisfying the Earl of Rochester.

And so Turn'd out of the Treasury.

New Commissioners Appointed.

Lord Clarendon loses the Privy-Seal.

of Wardour Keeper of the Privy-Seal, and he was that Day Sworn in Council. 1686.

As to other Honours and Preferments, they were most of them conferr'd with a like View upon the Roman Interest and Religion. On May 13. His Majesty was pleas'd, in Consideration of the good and faithful Services of John Lytcott Esq; to conferr upon him the Honour of Knighthood. And on May 28. His Majesty being in his Camp on Hounslow-Heath, after having declared his great Satisfaction with the Earl of Bath's Regiment of Cornish Men, was pleas'd to conferr, at the Head of the Regiment, the Honour of Knighthood upon Captain Beville Granvil, his Lordship's Nephew, and Grandson to Sir Beville who was slain in the Battle of Landsdown. On July 11. His Majesty, in his Bed-Chamber, Knighted Thomas Jefferys Esq; his Consul at Alicant. On Aug. 8. His Majesty conferr'd the same Honour of Knighthood upon Thomas Rawlinson Esq; One of the Aldermen of the City of London. Upon the Death of Sir William Stapleton (Governor and Captain-General of His Majesty's Leeward Islands in America) the King was pleas'd in August to conferr that Government upon Sir Nathanael Johnson, in Consideration of his many faithful Services, and approved Loyalty. On Aug. 22. at Windsor, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon Thomas Montgomery of the Middle-Temple Esq; On Sept. 26. His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Thomas Fowle Esq; One of the Aldermen of the City of London; and then Appointed him and Sir Thomas Rawlinson to be Sheriffs of London and Middlesex for the Year ensuing. On Oct. 22. William Bridgman Esq; was Sworn One of the Clerks of His Majesty's Privy-Council, in the Place of Sir Philip Floyd, decess'd. And at the same time William Blathwaite Esq; was Sworn One of the Clerks of the said Council in Ordinary. On Decemb. 1. His Majesty, in his Bed-Chamber, conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Edmund Gardiner Esq; Deputy-Recorder of the Town of Bedford. And near the same time His Majesty did the like Honour to Ric. Neale Esq; High-Sheriff of the County of Northumberland for the Year ensuing. Decemb. 18. His Majesty was pleas'd to constitute Dr. Richard Raines (Judge of the Prerogative-Court) Judge of His Majesty's High-Court of Admiralty, and at the same time to conferr upon him the Honour of Knighthood. Toward the End of the same Month, Sir Charles Cotterell having humbly Petition'd the King for Leave (by reason of his Age) to resign His Office of Master of the Ceremonies; His Majesty was graciously pleas'd, in Consideration of his faithful Services to his Royal Father, Brother, and Himself, to receive his Son Charles-Lodowick Cotterell Esq; into the said Office, and to constitute his Grandson John Dormer Esq; Assistant-Master of the Ceremonies, in his Place. On Jan. 21. His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon James Tillie of Pillaton in the County of Cornwall Esq; And about the same time, was pleas'd to constitute, by Commission under the Great-Seal of England, Sir Thomas Jefferys his Agent and Consul-General in the Kingdoms of Valencia and Murcia, and the Islands of Majorca, Minorca, Torca and Sardinia, in Consideration of his Loyalty, and the good Services perform'd by him. At the beginning of February His Majesty was pleas'd to constitute the Earl of Yarmouth Treasurer of his Household; and the Lord Waldegrave Comptroller; and soon after, Colonel James Porter Vice-Chamberlain of the same.

Other Honours and Preferments.

It is hard now to separate the Affairs of Religion from those of the State, because the whole Business of the King and Court was to pursue the Ways and Means of Introducing Popery. The Regular Clergy of State of Religion.

1686. of the Church of England thought it their Duty not to be Silent in the Common Danger, and therefore made their Sermons and Publick Discourses more expressly against the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome. The King was taught to believe, That whatever was said against his Religion, was a Reflection upon his Person and his Government: And therefore he was importun'd to Refrain the Liberty of the Pulpit; and to that Purpose he Order'd the Directions concerning Preachers, Publish'd in 1662. to be now Reprinted, and Reinforc'd by a Letter of the King, Directed to the Lords the Archbishops of Canterbury and Tork, given at Whitehall the 5th of March 1685. in the Second Year of his Reign, To Prohibit the Preaching upon Controversial Points.—

The King intent upon introducing Popery.

Would not bear the Clergy to Preach against it.

A late Author makes this proper Remark upon it: “An Order was Directed to the Protestant Bishops about Preaching: Which was, upon the Matter, forbidding them to Defend their Religion in the Pulpit; when it was at the same time Attackt by the Papish Priests with all the Vigour they were capable of, both in their Sermons and Books. This Order was taken from a Precedent in Queen Mary's Time; for the first step She made to Introduce Popery, (notwithstanding her Promises to the Gentlemen of Suffolk and Norfolk to the contrary, upon their Appearing first of any, upon the Death of her Brother) was to Issue out a Proclamation forbidding the Preaching upon Controverted Points of Religion, for fear, as was said, of raising Animosities among the People. But notwithstanding this ensnaring Letter of King James, the Clergy of the Church of England were not wanting in their Duty: For, to their Immortal Honour, they did more to Vindicate the Doctrine of their own Church, and Expose the Errors of the Church of Rome, both in their Sermons and Writings, than ever had been done, either at Home or Abroad, since the Reformation; and in such a Style, and with such an inimitable force of Reasoning, as will be a Standard of Writing to succeeding Ages.

Ecclesiastical Commission.

“To hasten on the Project against the Establish'd Church, a New Court of Inquisition was Erected, under the Name of a Commission for Ecclesiastical Affairs: And, to blind the People, there were some Bishops of the Church of England named Commissioners; whereof one refused to Act from the Beginning; and another Excus'd himself, after he came to see where the Design of it was Levell'd. This Commission was another manifest Violation of the Laws, and against an express Act of Parliament. And, as if that had not been enough to mortifie the Church of England, there were some Roman Catholics Appointed Commissioners; and consequently, the Enemies of the Protestant Religion were become the Judges and Directors of a Protestant Church, in its Doctrine and Discipline. —

[The Commission it self, because it is the Last of that Kind that we hope will be ever Given out, deserves to be here inserted.]

In Witness, &c.

Illegality of this Commission.

It must be Observed, That King Henry VIII. by Virtue of a full Supremacy, was Enabled not only to Delegate Commissioners, but to Appoint a Vicar-General to Act in Ecclesiastical Causes, after a manner too Absolute for any Prince. And by Virtue of a Branch of an Act in 1 Eliz. the Queen was again Impowered to Exercise the Ecclesiastical Supremacy, and did Set up a High-Commission-Court, to Restrain the Growth of Papery, and to Support the Establish'd Church of England. Now because the Commissioners had Proceeded in such Causes with too much Severity, and, as commonly thought, with too much Arbitrary Power, therefore there was another Act, 17 Car. I. cap. 11. for a Repeal of the Branch of a Stat. 1 Eliz. concerning Commissioners for Causes Ecclesiastical; Enacting, That the said Clause Impowering the Queen to Commission any Persons to Exercise Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, &c. shall be made Void for Ever; And that no New Court shall be Erected with the like Power, Jurisdiction or Authority, as the said High-Commission-Court hath, or pretendeth to 1686. have. The High-Commission-Court being thus Put down, some Papists and some Dissenters would have deny'd that there was any Power remaining in the Church; and did pretend, That all manner of Coercive Jurisdiction was taken from the Arch-Bishops and Bishops, and other Ordinaries. To Obviate this Objection, there was another Law made, 12 Car. II. cap. 12. Intituled, An Act for Explanation of a Clause contained in an Act of Parliament made in the 17th Year of the late King Charles, &c. Reciting, That upon the said Statute of 17 Car. I. some Doubt had been made, That all Ordinary Power of Coercion and Proceedings in Causes Ecclesiastical were Taken away, whereby the Ordinary Course of Justice in Causes Ecclesiastical had been Obstructed; It was therefore Enacted, That neither the said Act, nor any thing therein contained, doth or shall Take away any Ordinary Power or Authority from any of the said Arch-bishops, Bishops, or any other Person or Persons named, as aforesaid. — And further Enacting, That the aforesaid Act of Decimo septimo Caroli, and all the Matters and Clauses therein contained, (Excepting what concerns the High-Commission-Court, or the Erection of such like New Court by Commission, shall be, and is hereby Repealed. — Provided always, That neither this Act, nor any thing therein contained, shall extend or be construed to Revoke or give Force to the said Branch of the said Statute made in 1 Eliz. and mention'd in the Act 17 Car. I. but that the said Branch of the said Stat. 1 Eliz. shall Stand and be Repealed in such sort as if this Act had never been made.

This Act 12 Car. II. was now Interpreted, To restore to the Crown a Power of Erecting a High-Commission-Court, though with less Power of Fining, Imprisoning, &c. But it had been formerly thought to extinguish all such Extraordinary Courts, as therefore none such had been erected in the Reign of King Charles II. So that the very Granting of this New Commission, was by many of the best Lawyers thought Illegal. And the very Creatures of the Court seem'd to be very Conscious of it: For though it was Granted in the beginning of April, yet it was not Open'd till the beginning of August following: And then it was thought strange, That the Power of Excommunication, which is a pure Spiritual Act, should be Granted to meer Lay-men; for the Quorum in the Commission were, the Chancellor and any other Two. For these Reasons, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was first Named, refused to Act in it; and the Bishop of Chester was Put in, as a fitter Tool.

The Archbishop of Canterbury refuses to Act in this Commission.

These Commissioners thought fit to begin the Exercise of their New Power, with the Suspension of Dr. Compton, Bishop of London. This Noble Prelate, by a Conduct worthy of his Birth, and Station in the Church, had acquired the Love and Esteem of all the Protestant Churches at Home and Abroad; and was, for that Reason, the Mark of the Envy and Hatred of the Romish Party at Court. They had waited for an Occasion to Enoble their Ecclesiastical Commission with such an Illustrious Sacrifice; and such an Occasion was rather taken than given, in the Business of Dr. Sharp (now Archbishop of York.)

Suspension of the Bishop of London.

The Priests about the King, knowing how much it was their Interest that the Protestant Clergy should not have leave to Refute the Errors of the Church of Rome, in their Sermons, had advis'd him to send to the Bishops the Ensnaring Letter or Order before-mention'd, containing Directions about Preachers. The Learn'd Dr. Sharp, taking Occasion, in some of his Sermons, to Vindicate the Doctrine of the Church of England, in Opposition to Papery; this was, in the Court Dialect, understood to be, The endeavouring to beset in the Minds of his Hearers an ill Opinion of the King and Offence given by Dr. Sharp.

1686. and his Government, by insinuating Fears and Jealousies, to dispose them to Discontent, and to lead them into Disobedience and Rebellion; and consequently, a Contempt of the said Order about Preachers. Whereupon King James sent a Letter to the Bishop of London, which was deliver'd at Fulham on Thursday June 17. by Mr. Atterbury the Messenger, and was as followeth:

JAMES R.

RIGHT Reverend Father in GOD, We Greet you Well. — Whereas We have been Inform'd, and are fully Satisfied, That Dr. John Sharp, Rector of the Parish-Church of St. Giles in the Fields in the County of Middlesex, and in your Diocese, notwithstanding Our late Letter to the Most Reverend Fathers in GOD, the Arch-Bishops of Canterbury and York, and Our Directions concerning Preachers, Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 15th of March, 1685. in the Second Year of Our Reign; yet he the said Dr. John Sharp, in Contempt of the said Orders, hath, in some of his Sermons since Preached, presumed to make Unbecoming Reflections, and to utter such Expressions as were not fit or proper for him; endeavouring thereby to beget in the Minds of his Hearers, an evil Opinion of Us and Our Government, by insinuating Fears and Jealousies to dispose them to Discontent, and to lead them into Disobedience and Rebellion. These are therefore to Require and Command you, immediately upon Receipt hereof, forthwith to Suspend him from further Preaching in any Parish-Church or Chapel in your Diocese, until he has given Us Satisfaction, and Our further Pleasure be known herein: And for your so Doing, this shall be your Warrant. And so We bid you heartily Farewell.

Given at Our Court at Windsor, the 14th Day of June, 1686. In the Second Year of Our Reign.

By His MAJESTY'S Command.

SUNDERLAND.

The Bishop of London perceiv'd that the Design of this Letter was absolutely to forbid all Preaching against Popery, and the Effect of it might be to Suspend all the Eminent Preachers in England: His Lordship, however, endeavour'd to divert the Storm that threatned the Church and Clergy, and therefore wrote this submissive Letter to the Earl of Sunderland, to be communicated to the King, and made Dr. Sharp himself the Bearer of it to Hampton-Court, on Friday the 18th of June.

My LORD,

I Always have, and shall count it my Duty to Obey the King in whatever Commands He lays upon me, that I can perform with a safe Conscience; but in this, I humbly conceive, I am oblig'd to Proceed according to Law, and therefore it is impossible for me to Comply; because, though His Majesty Commands me only to Execute his Pleasure, yet, in the Capacity I am to do it, I must Act as a Judge: And Your Lordship knows, No Judge Condemns any Man, before He has Knowledge of the Cause, and has Cited the Party. However, I Sent to Mr. Dean, and Acquainted him with His Majesty's Displeasure; whom I find so ready to give all reasonable Satisfaction, that I have thought fit to make him the Bearer of this Answer; From Him that will never be Unfaithful to the King, nor otherwise than,

(My LORD)

Your Lordship's Most Humble Servant,

H. LONDON.

No Answer could be obtained to this Letter of the Bishop; And therefore, on the Sunday following, Dr. Sharp carry'd this Petition to Windsor.

To the KING'S Most Excellent Majesty.

The Humble PETITION of John Sharp, Clerk,

SHEWETH;

That nothing is so Afflictive to your Petitioner, as his Unhappines to have incurred Your Majesty's Displeasure: Which he is so sensible of, that ever since Your Majesty was pleas'd to give Notice of it, he hath forborne all Publick Exercise of his Function, and still continues so to do.

Your Petitioner can with great Sincerity affirm, That ever since he hath been a Preacher, he hath faithfully endeavour'd to do the best Service he could in his Place and Station, aswel to the Late King Your Royal Brother, as Your Majesty, both by Preaching, and otherwise.

And so far he hath always been from venting any thing in the Pulpit tending to Schism, or Faction, or any-way to the Disturbance of Your Majesty's Government, that he hath upon all Occasions, in his Sermons, to the utmost of his Power, set himself against all sorts of Doctrines and Principles that look that way: And this he is so well assur'd of, that he cannot but apprehend that his Sermons have been very much Mis-represented to Your Majesty.

But if in any Sermon of his, any Words or Expressions have uncearily slip't from him, that have been capable of such Constructions as to give Your Majesty Cause of Offence; as he solemnly professes he had no ill Intention in those Words or Expressions, so he is very Sorry for them, and resolves, for the future, to be careful in the Discharge of his Duty; that Your Majesty shall have reason to believe him to be Your most Faithful Subject.

And therefore he earnestly Prayeth, That Your Majesty, out of Your Royal Grace and Clemency, would be pleas'd to lay aside the Displeasure you have conceiv'd against your humble Petitioner, and restore him to that Favour which the rest of the Clergy enjoy, under Your Majesty's Gracious Government;

So Your Petitioner shall ever Pray, &c.

This Petition was not admitted to be Read; for a Resolution had been taken to Execute the Displeasure of the King upon the Bishop of London: And therefore, on Tuesday Aug. 2. the Commissioners Opened their Commission; and immediately sent a Citation to the Bishop of London, to Appear before them, in the Council-Chamber at Whitehall, on Aug. 9.

The Bishop did accordingly Appear: And the Commissioners then present, were the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord President, the Lord Bishop of Duresme, the Lord Bishop of Rochester, and the Lord Chief-Justice Herbert. The Lord Chancellor Charg'd the Bishop, with not Observing His Majesty's Commands, in the Case of Dr. Sharp. — The Bishop humbly begg'd a Copy of the Commission, and a Copy of his Charge; and insisting upon this Desire, he was bid to Withdraw: And after a short time, being Call'd in again, was told thus by the Lord Chancellor; Their Lordships have Consider'd of what Your Lordship Desir'd, and are of Opinion, That you shall neither have a Copy of, nor see the Commission; neither will they give a Copy of the Charge. — The Bishop then desir'd Time to Advise with Council, and to have them Plead. — The Lord Chancellor ask'd, What Time His Lordship desir'd? — His Lordship answer'd, Considering the Season of the Year, and that there is not one Civilian in the Commons, I hope you'll Give me till towards the Term. — But the Commissioners would Grant but a Week only; and so Adjourn'd to Aug. 15. On which Day the Bishop appear'd again, and desir'd longer Time; For (says he) I wrote to several considerable Council out of Town, none of which are come up; and those few that are here, the Thing is so new to them, that they could not thoroughly consider Matters in so short a Time. Then the Bishop Withdrew; and being Call'd in again, was told, Their Lordships were resolv'd to give no Time for Pleading to their Jurisdiction, but for any other Answer they would grant a Fortnight; — and so they Adjourn'd till Aug. 31. In the mean time, the Bishop sent his Proctor to their Register, for a Copy of what Orders and other Minutes they had Set down concerning his Business. But it was refus'd: Though his Council told him, it was never deny'd in any Court.

The Bishop's third Appearance.

On the said 31st of August the Bishop appear'd, and begg'd their Lordship's Leave to offer his Plea to their Jurisdiction; For (says he) I am told, It is a Right every One has to make Use of, when he finds it for his Advantage. I would not hazard being so Impertinent as to offer any thing upon my own head: Your Lordships gave me Time to Advise with Council; and they that are Learn'd in the Laws of the Land, Advise me to Plead to your Jurisdiction, and will be ready to Argue it. — The Commissioners refusing, the Bishop proceeded; I am far from Disowning any part of the King's Supremacy; I Acknowledge it, and am so bound to do, in its Just Extent over all Persons, and in all Causes: What I have to offer in Plea to your Jurisdiction, is, That I conceive, this Commission you Act by is not Good, as being contrary to an Act of Parliament: Upon which Point, I beg my Council may Argue. — The Bishop being Over-ru'd, Protested his Right to this Plea; which he would have given in, if the Lords Commissioners would have suffer'd it to be Argued.

The Bishop's Plea against their Jurisdiction.

HENRY Bishop of London do Declare and Acknowledge, That the King's Majesty is the only Supreme Head and Governor of this Realm, and all other His Majesty's Dominions and Countries, aswell in all Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Causes, as Temporal. Nevertheless, I the said Bishop, by Protestation, not Acknowledging any Just or Legal Authority in Your Lordships (otherwise than as by Law I am bound) to Question or Censure me in any Matter or Thing Ecclesiastical whatsoever; Do offer and shew to Your Lordships, That at the Parliament of King Charles I. (of blessed Memory) late King of England, holden on the 3d Day of November, in the Sixteenth Year of his Reign, a certain Act and Statute was made, Intituled, [A Repeal of the Branch of a Statute Primo Elizabethæ, concerning Commissioners for Causes Ecclesiastical;] Setting forth, That in the Parliament holden in the First Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, there was an Act Made and Establish'd, Intituled, [An Act Restoring to the Crown the Ancient Jurisdiction over the State Ecclesiastical and Spiritual;] And Abolishing all Foreign Power repugnant to the same. In which Act, among other things, there is contain'd one Clause, Branch, Article or Sentence, whereby it was Enacted to this Effect, namely, — That the said late Queen's Highness, Her Heirs and Successors, Kings or Queens of this Realm, should have full Power and Authority, by Virtue of that Act, by Letters-Patents under the Great-Seal of England, to Assign, Name and Authorize, when, and as often as Her Highness, Her Heirs or Successors, should think meet and convenient, and for such and so long Time as should please Her Highness, Her Heirs or Successors, such Person or Persons, being Natural-born Subjects

1686.

to Her Highness, Her Heirs or Successors, as Her Majesty, Her Heirs or Successors, should think meet, to Exercise, Use, Occupy and Execute, under Her Highness, Her Heirs and Successors, all manner of Jurisdictions, Privileges and Preeminences in any-wise touching or concerning any Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction within these Her Realms of England and Ireland, or any other Her Highness's Dominions and Countries; And to Visit, Reform, Redress, Order, Correct and Amend all such Errors, Heresies, Schisms, Abuses, Offences, Contempts and Enormities whatsoever, which by any manner of Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Power, Authority or Jurisdiction, can or may Lawfully be Reformed, Ordered, Redressed, Corrected, Restrained or Amended, to the Pleasure of Almighty God, the Encrease of Vertue, and the Conservation of the Peace and Unity of this Realm. And that such Person or Persons so to be Named, Assigned and Appointed by Her Highness, Her Heirs or Successors, after the said Letters-Patents to him or them made and delivered, as aforesaid, should have full Power and Authority, by Virtue of that Act, and of the said Letters-Patents under Her Highness, Her Heirs or Successors, to Exercise, Use and Execute all the Premises, according to the Tenor and Effect of the said Letters-Patents; Any Matter or Cause to the contrary in any-wise notwithstanding. — And Setting forth likewise, — That, by the colour of some Words in the foresaid Branch of the said Act, whereby Commissioners are Authorized to Execute their Commission, according to the Tenor and Effect of the King's Letters-Patents, and by Letters-Patents grounded thereupon; The said Commissioners have, to the great and unufferable Wrong and Oppression of the King's Subjects, used to Fine and Imprison them, and to Exercise other Authority not belonging to Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, Restor'd by that Act; and divers other great Mischiefs and Inconveniences have also ensued to the King's Subjects, by Occasion of the said Branch; and Commissions Issued thereupon, and the Executions thereof. And therefore, for the Repressing and Preventing of the aforesaid Abuses, Mischiefs and Inconveniences in Time to come, It was by the said Act made at the said Parliament of the said King Charles the First, Enacted, — That the aforesaid Branch, Clause, Article or Sentence contained in the said Act of Primo Elizabethæ, and every Word, Matter and Thing contain'd in that Branch, Clause, Article or Sentence, should from thenceforward be Repeal'd, Annul'd, Revok'd, Annihilated, and utterly made Void for ever; Any thing in the said Act to the contrary in any-wise notwithstanding. — And it was thereby also Enacted, by the Authority aforesaid, That no Arch-Bishop, Bishop, nor Vicar-General, nor any Ordinary whatsoever, nor any other Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Judge, Officer, or Minister of Justice, nor any other Person or Persons whatsoever Executing Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Power, Authority or Jurisdiction, by any Grant, License or Commission of the King's Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, or by any Power or Authority derived from the King, His Heirs or Successors, or otherwise, should from and after the First Day of August, in the Year of Our Lord, 1641. Award, Impose, or Inflict any Pain, Penalty, Fine, Amerciament or Imprisonment, or other Corporal Punishment upon any of the King's Subjects, for any Contempt, Misdemeanor, Crime, Offence, Matter or Thing whatsoever, belonging to Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Cognizance or Jurisdiction; or shall, ex Officio, or at the Instance or Promotion

tion of any other Person whatsoever, Urge, Inforce, Tender, Give, or Minister unto any Church-warden, Side-man, or other Person whatsoever, any Corporal Oath, whereby he or she shall or may be Charg'd or Oblig'd to make any Presentment of any Crime or Offence, or to Confess or Accuse himself or herself of any Crime, Offence, Delinquency or Misdemeanor, or any other Neglect, Matter or Thing, whereby, or by reason whereof, he or she shall or may be liable or expos'd to any Censure or Punishment whatsoever; Upon Pain and Penalty, That every Person that shall Offend, contrary to this Statute, shall Forfeit and Pay Treble Damages to every Person thereby grieved, and the Sum of an Hundred Pounds to him or them who shall first Demand and Sue for the same: Which said Treble Damages, and Sum of an Hundred Pounds, shall and may be Demanded and Receiv'd, and Urg'd by Action of Debt, Bill or Complaint, in any Court of Record; wherein no Privilege, Effoin, Protection or Wager of Law shall be admitted or allowed to the Defendant.— And it was thereby further Enacted, That every Person who should once be Convicted of any Act or Offence prohibited by that Statute, should, for such Act or Offence, be, from and after such Conviction, utterly Disabled to be or continue in any Office or Employment in any Court of Justice whatsoever, or to Exercise or Execute any Power, Authority or Jurisdiction, by Force of any Commission, or Letters-Patents of the King, His Heirs or Successors.— And it was also thereby Enacted, That from and after the First Day of August, No New Court should be Erected, Ordain'd or Appointed within this Realm of England, or Dominion of Wales, which should or might have the like Power, Jurisdiction or Authority as the said High-Commission-Court then had, or pretended to have: But that all and every such Letters-Patents, Commissions and Grants made or to be made by His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and all Powers and Authorities Granted thereby; and all Acts, Sentences and Decrees to be made by Virtue or Colour thereof, should be utterly Void and of none Effect. — Which said Act of Parliament, made at the said Parliament of the said King Charles the First, I the said Bishop of London do Plead, and Object to and against Your Lordship's Jurisdiction; And pray Your Lordships Judgment, Whether Your Lordships will think it fit, or ought to Proceed any further herein against me the said Bishop of London?

After the Rejecting of this Plea, the Bishop spoke thus; I have another thing to beg Your Lordship's Advice and Judgment in: I have Right, as a Bishop, by the most Authentick and Universal Ecclesiastical Laws, to be Tryed first before my Metropolitan, precedent to any other Court whatsoever. — The Court said, Still this was to Plead against their Jurisdiction.— And the Bishop went on thus; If I am Over-ru'd in this, I must beg Your Lordship's Patience in one Plea more. Your Lordships, in this Commission, after the general Words, are Directed to Proceed according to the Tenor of the Letters-Patents, &c. Now I conceive, in the Capacity I am in, you are only Warranted to Try me for Offences After the Date of the Commission. — But the Court Resolved, That they had Authority to Look back.— Then the Bishop put in his Answer in Writing, which was read by Mr. Bridgman, in this Form:

TO the Question which was Propos'd to me, by Your Lordships, (viz.) Why did you not Obey the King's Command, in his Letter concerning the Suspending Dr. Sharp? I Henry

The Bishop's Answer to the Charge

Bishop of London do Answer; That immediately upon Receipt of His Majesty's Letter from my Lord President, (the Tenor whereof follows, &c.) I took the best Advice I could get concerning Dr. Sharp; and was Inform'd, That the Letter being Directed to me, as Bishop of London, to Suspend a Person under my Jurisdiction; I was therein to Act as a Judge, it being a Judicial Act; and that no Person could, by Law, be Punish'd by Suspension, before he was Call'd, or without being admitted to make his Defence; I thought it therefore my Duty, forthwith humbly to represent so much to my Lord President, that so I might receive His Majesty's further Pleasure in that Matter. Nevertheless, That I might Obey His Majesty's Commands, as far as by Law I could, I did then send for Dr. Sharp, and acquainted him with His Majesty's Displeasure, and the Occasion of it, by shewing him His Majesty's Letter. But he having never been Call'd to Answer any such Matter, or make his Defence, and Protesting his Innocence, and likewise Declaring himself most ready to give His Majesty full Satisfaction therein; In order thereto, I advis'd him to forbear Preaching, till he had apply'd himself to His Majesty; And, at his Request, I made him the Bearer of my Letter to my Lord President; waiting for His Majesty's farther Orders to Proceed against him Judicially, in case he should not at that time give His Majesty the Satisfaction required: And the said Dr. Sharp hath not since Preach'd within my Diocese.

HENRY LONDON.

The Bishop being then ask'd by the Lord Chancellor, Whether he had any thing more to say? — He only said, That the Words of His Majesty's Letter were liable to two Constructions, upon a double Sense of the Word SUSPEND; either a Suspension ab Officio, which was a Judicial Act, and he could not do but in a Judicial manner. The other Sense of the Word SUSPEND, might be taken at large for SILENCING: And therefore he had Advis'd the Doctor not to Preach till he knew His Majesty's further Pleasure. Which Advice (says he) from a Judge, the Learn'd in the Law, tell me, is Tantamount to an Admonition; and that if he had not Submitted to it, I could have Censur'd him for his Disobedience. So that if this last was His Majesty's Meaning, I have, in effect, Obey'd the Letter: Which is all I shall say at present; and beg, my Council may be Heard, to Clear the Matter in Point of Law. — After this, the Bishop's Council, who were Dr. Oldys, Dr. Hedges, Dr. Brice, and Dr. Newton, Argued strenuously in behalf of the Bishop: And after their learned Pleadings, the Bishop spoke thus; I have but little more to say: I suppose my Council have Satisfy'd Your Lordships, that, in the severest Construction, Malice or Wilful Disobedience could not be imputed to me. But, as my Lord Chancellor has now explain'd it to Dr. Oldys, That the King's Meaning was, only to SILENCE; They have made plain to Your Lordships, That I have effectually Obey'd His Majesty's Commands: And if in any Circumstance I have been wanting, I am ready to make Reparation, by performing that likewise, and to beg His Majesty's Pardon. — After this, the Bishop was Appointed to Attend the Commissioners on Monday Sept. 6. when this Sentence was read against him:

The Bishop's further Plea.

By His MAJESTY'S Commissioner's for Ecclesiastical Causes.

WHEREAS Henry Lord Bishop of London hath been Convened before Us, for his Disobedience, and other his Contempts

Sentence against the Bishop.

1686. " mention'd in the Proceedings of this Cause ;
 " And the said Lord Bishop of London being fully " Heard hereupon : We have thought fit, after " mature Consideration of the Matter, to Proceed " to this our Definitive Sentence ; Declaring,
 " Decreeing and Pronouncing, That the said Lord " Bishop, shall, for the said Disobedience and " Contempts, be Suspended during His Majesty's " Pleasure. And accordingly We do, by these " Presents, Suspend him the said Henry Lord
 " Bishop of London ; Peremptorily Admonishing " and Requiring him hereby to Abstain from the " Function and Execution of his Episcopal Office,
 " and from all Episcopal and Ecclesiastical Ju" risdiction, during the said Suspension, under " Pain of Deprivation and Removal from his " Bishoprick.

Given under Our Seal, the Sixth Day of September, 1686.

The Bishop would have spoken, before the Sentence was read, to have Recapitulated the Heads of his CASE, and to have offered full Proof of his Compliance, in Silencing Doctor Sharp ; And to have desired, Since Their Lordships had hitherto been his Accusers and Judges, They would at last, according to the usual Custom, have been his Council, and Order'd their Advocate to lay down the Nature of the Crime, the Law it was founded, and the Law it was to be Punish'd by ;
 and he might have given in his Exceptions : But no Speaking was allowed, till the Sentence was read. And when, after the reading, the Bishop said, Have Your Lordships any farther Service to Command me ? — The Lord Chancellor an-swer'd, No. — And immediately after, the Bishops of Duresme, Rochester and Peterborough were Appointed Commissioners to Exercise all manner of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction within the Diocefe of London, during the Suspension of the Bishop.

Dr. Sharp was likewise judicially Suspended ; but, in pretended Mercy, was soon after Restored to the Exercise of his Function.

 Introducing Pepery.

There were many other Violent Attempts in Favour of Popery, and in Prejudice to the Establish'd Church ; which are thus well deliver'd in the Memoirs of a late Writer : — " King James
 " made haste to Accomplish the Grand Design,
 " which a Head-strong Party about him Push'd on,
 " as the certain Way, in their Opinion, to Eternize
 " his Name in This World, and to Merit an " Eternal Crown in the Other. They foresaw, " that this was the Critical Juncture, and the " only one that happen'd since the Days of " Queen Mary, to Restore their Religion in England :
 " And if they were wanting to themselves in " making Use of it, the Prospect of a Protestant
 " Successor would infallibly prevent their having " any such Opportunity for the future. King " James was pretty far advanc'd in Years ; and " what was to be done, requir'd Expedition ; for " all their Labour would be lost, if he should Die " before the Accomplishment. If he had been " Younger, or the next Presumptive-Heir had not " been a Protestant, there had been no such abso" lute necessity for Dispatch ; but the Uncertainty
 " of the King's Life, call'd for more than ordi" nary Diligence, in a Design that depended " merely upon it.

" The Party being resolv'd, for these Reasons,
 " to bring about, in the compass of one single
 " Life, and that already far spent, what seem'd
 " to be the Work of an whole Age ; they made " large Steps towards it. Roman Catholics were " not only Employ'd in the Army, but brought " into Places of greatest Trust in the State. The " Earl of Clarendon was forthwith remov'd from 1686. " the Office of Privy-Seal, and the Government " of Ireland, to make room for the Earl of Tyr- " connel in the one, and the Lord Arundel in the " other. Father Petre, a Jesuit, was Sworn of " the Privy-Council. And though, by the Laws,

 " it was High-Treason for any to assume the " Character of the Pope's Nuncio ; yet these were " become too slender Cobwebs to hinder a Roman
 " Prelate to appear Publickly at London in that " Quality : And one of the greatest Peers in " England was Disgrac'd, for not paying him " that Respect, which the Laws of the Land
 " made Criminal.

" To bear the Publick Character of Ambassador " to the Pope, was likewise an open Violation of " the Laws : But so fond was the Governing-Party
 " about King James to shew their New-acquir'd " Trophies at Rome, that the Earl of Castlemain
 " was Dispatch'd thither Extraordinary Ambaf-" sador, with a Magnificent Train, and a most " Sumptuous Equipage. What his Secret Instru- " ctions were, may be partly guess'd by his Pub" lick ones, which were, To Reconcile the Kingdoms
 " of England, Scotland and Ireland to the Holy " See ; from which they had, for more than an Age,
 " fallen off, by Heresie.

" Innocent XI. receiv'd this Ambassie, as One " that saw farther than those who sent it. The " Ambassador had but a Cold Reception of the " Holy Father ; and none of the Cardinals but " those of a particular Faction, and the good-natur'd
 " Cardinal of Norfolk, took any further Notice " of it, than Good-Manners oblig'd them. The " Court of Rome were too refin'd Politicians to be " impos'd upon with Shew and Noise ; and knew
 " the World too well, to expect great Matters " from such Hasty, Ill-tim'd Advances as were " made to them. Not only so, but Innocent
 " having an Aversion in his Nature to a Faction
 " he knew King James was embark'd in, which " he never took pains to dissemble, was not over-
 " fond of an Ambassie from a Prince who was in " an Interest he had long wish'd to see humbled.
 " King James met with nothing but Mortifications " at Rome, in the Person of his Ambassador ; which " occasion'd his making as short a Stay as was " possible. In which may be seen the vast " difference there was betwixt the Politicks of Italy,
 " and those of a Head-strong Party in England.
 " And however the World has been impos'd upon,
 " to believe, that the Pope's Nuncio at the English
 " Court, who is since made a Cardinal, was an " Instrument to push on Things to Extremities ;
 " yet certain it is, he had too much good Sense
 " to approve of all the Measures that were taken ;
 " and therefore desir'd often to be Recall'd, lest he " should be thought to have a Hand in them.

" Although the Earl of Castlemain was pleas'd,
 " upon his Examination before the Parliament,
 " to say, That his Ambassie to Rome, was only " such as is between Two Temporal Princes, about " Compliment and Commerce ; yet Father Warner,
 " in his Manuscript History, quoted by a learned " Author, gives us another Account of it, in " these Words ; Things being thus settled (says he)
 " within the Realm ; the next Care His Majesty had,
 " was to Unite his Countries to the Obedience of
 " the Bishop of Rome, and the Apostolick See ; which " had been cut off, by Heresie, about an Age and an " half before. To try the Pope's Inclination, in " the Year 1685. he sent Mr. Carryl thither ; who " succeeding according to his Wishes, and being re-
 " call'd, the Earl of Castlemain was sent the next " Year as Extraordinary Ambassador to the Pope,
 " in the Name of the King and the Catholics of " England, to make their Submission to the Holy " See.

" Castlemain had several Audiences of the Pope,
 " but to little Purposes ; for whenever he began
 " to 1686. " to talk of Business, the Pope was seasonably

 " attack'd with a Fit of Coughing, which broke off
 " the Ambassador's Discourse for that time, and " oblig'd him to retire. These Audiences and " Fits of Coughing continu'd from time to time, " while Castlemain continu'd at Rome, and were " the Subject of Diversion to all but a particular " Faction at that Court. At length he was advis'd " to come to Threats, and to give out, That he " would be gone, since he could not have an Op" portunity to Treat with the Pope about the " Business he came for. Innocent was so little " Concern'd for the Ambassador's Resentment, " that when they told him of it, he answer'd
 " with his ordinary Coldness, E bene, se vuol
 " andersene ditegli adonque che si levi di buon
 " matino al fresco e che a mezzo giorno si reposit,
 " per che in questi paesi non bisogna viaggiare al
 " ealdo del giorno. — i. e. Well! let him go;
 " And tell him, It were fit he rise early in the " Morning, that he may rest himself at Noon; for
 " in this Country it's dangerous to travel in the " Heat of the Day.

Ambassador Re-call'd from Rome.

" In the end, he was Recall'd; being able to " obtain of the Pope two trifling Requests only,
 " that could hardly be deny'd to an ordinary " Courier: The one was, a License for the " Marechal De Humier's Daughter to Marry her " Uncle: And the other, a Dispensation of the " Statutes of the Jesuits Order, to Eather Petre " to enjoy a Bishopricks: — The want of which,
 " (says my Author) was the reason that the " Archbishopricks of York was kept so long " Vacant.

Little Re-spect'd by the Pope,

" Though the Pope carry'd himself in this " manner towards the English Ambassador, yet the " Jesuits paid him the highest Respect imaginable;
 " which did him no Service with the Old Man,
 " for He and that Order were never hearty Friends.
 " They Entertain'd him in their Seminary with the " greatest Magnificence; and nothing was wanting " in Nature or Art, to grace his Reception. All " their Stores of Sculpture, Painting, Poetry and " Rhetorick seem to have been exhausted upon " this Entertainment. And though all the Inscrip" tions and Emblems did centre upon the Triumph " of the Romish Religion, and the Ruine of Heresie
 " in England; yet Care was taken, not to omit " such particular Trophies and Devises as were " adapted to their New-acquired Liberty of setting " up their Publick Schools at London. Among a " great many other Panegyricks upon King James,
 " the following Distich was plac'd below an Emblem
 " of England:

*Restituit Veterem tibi Religionis honorem,

[Thus English'd:]

English Noblemen were sent to other Kings, to acquaint them with King James's Accession to the Crown: But Charles first of all brought the News of it to Heaven.

It was but reasonable,

For Kings to send and receive Princes as Ambassadors:

But

It became God Almighty to receive, and James to send no Ambassador but Kings.

W. James, before his Accession to the Throne, had but little Interest at Rome.

" To see King James Neglected at Rome in the Pontifical of Innocent XI. was not so strange, considering what has been said of his Antipathy to a Faction wherein that Prince was concern'd: But that in the Time of Innocent's Predecessor, and when he was Duke of York, he should be deny'd a common Favour, which that Court seldom or never refuses to any one, was a Thing altogether unaccountable: Yet so it was, That he having sent the late Earl of Peterborough to Italy, to espouse the Princess of Modena in his Name; all the Interest he could make, was not able to obtain a Dispensation for the Marriage. The Account of this Matter being so little known, and that Earl's Book wherein he mentions it, being so rare, and, as I am told, but Twenty-four Copies Printed, I shall give it in the Earl's own Words: —

" But now from Rome there was Advice (says he) by the Abbot of Anagnino, of the great Difficulties that arose in the Consultations of this Affair, (meaning the Marriage.) The French Ambassador (the Duke d'Estrees) favour'd the Marriage, with all the Power of the French Faction; so did Cardinal Barberini, and all the other Friends and Allies of the House of Este. But His Holiness himself was very averse; and Cardinal Altieri, who was the Governing Nephew, a profess'd and violent Opposer. The main Pretext for this Obstinacy, was the Duke of York's not Declaring himself Publickly of the Romish Church, though they knew that he was of a long time reconcil'd to it.

" But now at last (continues the Earl of Peterborough) came from Rome the Abbot of Anagnino without the Dispensation, which he could by no means obtain, by reason that Cardinal Altieri was inflexible; and Threats of Excommunication were issued out against any that should undertake to Perform or Celebrate the Marriage. Whereupon we were all upon the Fears and Expectations of a total Rupture. The Dutchess of Modena herself, a Zealous, if not a Bigot Woman, was in great pain about the Part that might seem Offensive to His Holiness, or Neglective of his Authority: And the Young Princess took Occasion from hence to support her Unwillingness. But in truth, Cardinal Barberini, upon whom the Dutchess had great dependance, and all the other Adherents and Relations of the House of Este, being every day more and more possess'd of the Honour and Interest they were like to find in this Alliance, were scandaliz'd at the unreasonable Obstinacy of the Pope and his Nephew; and did frankly advise the Dutchess of Modena suddenly to Make up and Perfect the Marriage: The Peace and Excuse of the Thing being easier " to be had after it was done, than any present License to be obtain'd for doing it.

" The Bishop of Modena was then applied to (adds the Earl) for the Performance: But he refusing, a poor English Jacobine was found, Brother to Jerome White, that afterwards serv'd the Dutchess, who having nothing to lose, and on whom the Terror of Excommunication did not so much prevail, did Undertake it, and to he Perform'd the Ceremony. — (Thus for the Earl of Peterborough.)

But perhaps one of the most fatal Ways of Oppressing the Church of England, was by bringing New Bishops into it, for an Injury and Reproach to Religion. Thus, upon the Death of two of the most Eminent Prelates of the Church of England, who had best defended it, and grac'd it with Piety and Learning, Dr. John Pearson, Bishop of Chester, and Dr. John Fell, Bishop of Oxford; the King was pleas'd to pick out two Successors the most remote from the Character of those their Predecessors: For about the middle of August, the King nam'd Dr. Thomas Cartwright, Dean of Rippon, to be Bishop of Chester; and Dr. Samuel Parker, Archdeacon of Canterbury, to be Bishop of Oxford. And on Octob. 17. they were Consecrated at Lambeth, and soon after made the unhappy Tools of Popery and Arbitrary Power; but, as it pleas'd God, to their own Destruction, rather than to the intended Ruine of the Church.

It is very plain, That if King James could have got the Bishops and Clergy and Body of the Church of England to have Persecuted and Extirpated the Dissenters, he would have chose that Way of utmost Severity, much rather than that of Indulgence and Toleration. The Dissenters (by their own Confession) were this Year Prosecuted in the wonted manner. Their Meetings were frequently disturb'd both in City and Country: Fines were Levied upon them: The Informers broke in upon Mr. Fleetwood, Sir John Hartop, and some others, at Stoke-Newington, to Levy Distresses, for Conventiclers, to Six or Seven hundred Pounds; and many were Excommunicated, and had Capias's issued out against them: But particular Persons, upon their making Application to those Above, were more favour'd than had been usual.

" Injunctions went out from several of the Bishops, under the Seal of their Offices, to all Ministers in their Dioceses, strictly to Enjoin and Require all Churchwardens to Present those that did not come to Church, or that receiv'd not the Sacrament at Easter. These Injunctions were Publickly Read in Hertfordshire and Essex, and many other Places: And it seem'd to be a prevailing Opinion, That the Protestant Dissenters must be Prosecuted, or Popery could not be Suppressed. And therefore the Juries in some Places at the Assizes this Year, presented it as their Opinion, That unless the Dissenters were effectually Prosecuted, their Dangers could not be Prevented or Remedy'd. But the Unreasonableness of such Rigors, and the Scandalous Villanies and Perjuries of many of the most Noted Informers both in City and Country too, made sensible Men soon Weary.

" A Dispensation or License-Office was Set up this Year, where all Comers might have Dispensations, paying only Fifty Shillings for themselves and their Families. Many of those who were Prosecuted as Conventiclers, took out Dispensations; which not only stopt all Processes that were commenc'd, but gave them Liberty to keep Meetings for the future. Many were Released from their Imprisonment, and had their Fines Remitted, by the King's Pardon: Among the rest, Mr. Baxter obtain'd his Pardon.

Oppression to the Church, in making New Bishops.

Case of the Dissenters.

1686. " by the Mediation of the Lord Powis : His Fine was Remitted : And on Wednesday Nov. 24. Sir Samuel Astry sent his Warrant to the Keeper of the King's-Bench Prison to Discharge him. But he gave Sureties for his Good-Behaviour : His Majesty Declaring, (for his Satisfaction) That it should not, in him, be interpreted a Breach of the Good-Behaviour, for him to reside in London ; which was not allowable, according to the Oxford Act : And this was entred upon his Bail-piece, i. e. the Parchment in which his Bail was given. Notwithstanding this, he continu'd some time after in the Rules : And on Febr. 28. following, removed to a House he took in Charter-House-Yard.

1687. The King was now fully Resolv'd upon Repealing, if possible, the Penal Laws and Test, and upon Dispensing with them in the mean time. So that Father Petre himself was now of the Privy-Council : And most of the English Papists were put into Offices Military and Civil ; Popish Sheriffs, Popish Justices, without Oaths, or any other Qualification but that of the King's Religion. Some of the Protestant Gentlemen, when they found the Laws were to Bind them only, not the Roman Catholicks, they put in for an Exemption aswell as the others. It was pleasant enough to read, from Whitehall, March 1. 1688. " The Right-Honourable the Earl of Craven, Custos Rotulorum " for the County of Middlesex, this Day acquainted His Majesty, That the Bench of Justices of the Peace for the said County, had desir'd his Lordship (at their General Session of the Peace) in their Names, humbly to Beseech His Majesty to be Graciously Pleas'd to Grant the same Dispensation from taking the Oaths to the Protestant Justices, He has been pleas'd to Grant to the Catholicks ; but in such manner as His Majesty shall think fit. Which Method His Majesty was pleas'd to receive very Graciously ; and was pleas'd to say, He took kindly their putting their Confidence in Him, and He would certainly take Care of them.— And so, by this means, the Administration of Country Justice, and the Magistracy in Cities and other Corporations, were put into the worst of Hands, the most Bigotted Papists, and the Fiercest Fanaticks.

It is said, " King Charles II. was the first King of England that ever Aim'd at any thing like a Dispensing Power.— In the Year 1662. he was prevail'd upon, for some Reasons of State, to Issue out a Proclamation, Dispensing with some few things that related to the Act of Uniformity, but without the least Regard to Roman Catholicks. And though, in his Speech to the Parliament upon that Occasion, he did in a manner acknowledge that he had no such Power, by saying, That if the Dissenters would Demean themselves Peaceably and Modestly, He could heartily wish He had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion. Yet the Parliament were so jealous of this Innovation, that they Presented the King with an Address against the Proclamation, and plainly told him, That He had no Power to Dispense with the Laws, without an Act of Parliament.— Notwithstanding this Remonstrance, King Charles made another Attempt, in the Year 1672. and in a Speech to both Houses, did mention his Declaration of Indulgence, and acquainted them with the Reasons that induc'd him to it ; telling them withal, how little the Roman Catholicks should be the better for it.— Upon which the House of Commons made an Address to His Majesty, for Recalling this Declaration ; wherein they told him, That in Claiming a Power to Dispense with Penal Laws, His Majesty had been very much Mis-inform'd, since no such Power was ever Claim'd or Exercis'd by any of his Predecessors ; And if it should be admitted, might tend to the Interrupting of the Free Course of the Laws, and Altering the Legislative Power, which has always been acknowledged to reside in his Majesty, and his Two Houses of Parliament. King Charles was so far satisfy'd in the Matter contain'd in this Address, That he immediately cancell'd his Declaration of Indulgence, tore off the Seal himself, and acquainted both Houses that he had done so ; with this further Declaration, which was entred upon Record in the House of Lords, That it should never be drawn into Example or Consequence.

And yet such a Dispensing Power, and in a far larger Extent, King James would arrogate to himself ; though a very Loyal House of Commons had Protested against it, in their Address about the Popish Officers. The King had already carry'd this Point in Scotland with a High Hand ; and the Privy-Council there had not only obsequiously Submitted to it, but seem'd to Rejoice at it. For in a Letter to His Majesty, 14 Febr. 1688 they boast to His Majesty, That His Commands were exactly Obey'd, and that His Royal Proclamation for Liberty of Conscience was Printed and Publish'd ; And assur'd His Majesty, That they believ'd his Promise, to be the best and greatest Security they could have, That He would Maintain the Church and their Religion as it was Establish'd by Law.

This ready Compliance of the Scots, flatter'd the King into Hopes, that his English Subjects would be as Complaisant to his Will and Power. So on March 18. His Majesty having Assembled his Privy-Council, did open his Mind to them, by owning, " That He had Resolv'd to Issue out a Declaration for a General Liberty of Conscience to all Perions, of what Persuasion soever : Which He was moved to do, by having observed, That although an Uniformity in Religious Worship had been endeavour'd to be Establish'd with'in this Kingdom, in the successive Reigns of Four of his Predecessors, assist'd by their respective Parliaments ; yet it had prov'd altogether Ineffectual. That the Restraint upon the Consciences of Dissenters, in order thereunto, had been very Prejudicial to the Nation, as was sadly Experienc'd by the horrid Rebellion in the Time of His Majesty's Father. That the many Penal Laws made against Dissenters, had rather Encreas'd than Lessen'd the Numbers of them. And that nothing could more conduce to the Peace and Quiet of this Kingdom, and the Encrease of the Number aswell as of the Trade of his Subjects, than an intire Liberty of Conscience ; it having always been his Opinion, as most suitable to the Principles of Christianity, That no Man should be Persecuted for Conscience-sake : For he thought Conscience could not be forced ; and that it could never be the true Interest of a King of England to endeavour to do it.— In pursuance of this Speech, the King presently after Publish'd this Declaration.

His Majesty's Gracious DECLARATION to all His Loving Subjects, for Liberty of Conscience.

JAMES R.

IT having pleas'd Almighty GOD, not only to bring Us to the Imperial Crown of these Kingdoms, through the greatest Difficulties, but to Preserve Us, by a more than ordinary Providence, upon the Throne of Our Royal Ancestors ; there is Nothing now that We so earnestly Desire, as to Establish Our Government on such a Foundation, as may make Our Subjects Happy, and Unite them to Us, by Inclination 1687. K. James claims a more Absolute Dispensing Power.

The King Declares for Liberty of Conscience.

Publick Declaration for Liberty of Conscience.

The King resolv'd to Repeal the Penal Laws and Test,

And to Dispense with taking any Oaths.

The Beginnings of a Dispensing Power,

Under K. Charles II.

1687. " Inclination as well as Duty ; Which, We think,
 " can be done by no Means so effectually, as by " Granting to them the Free Exercise of their " Religion for the Time to come ; and add that " to the perfect Enjoyment of their Property, " which has never been in any Case invaded by " Us, since Our coming to the Crown : Which " being the Two Things Men value most, shall " ever be preserved in these Kingdoms, during " Our Reign over them ; as the truest Methods " of their Peace, and Our Glory. We cannot but " heartily Wish, as it will easily be believ'd, that " all the People of Our Dominions were Members " of the Catholick Church ; yet we humbly
 " Thank Almighty God, it is, and hath of long " time been Our constant Sense and Opinion, " (which upon divers Occasions We have Declared)
 " That Conscience ought not to be Constrained,
 " nor People Forced, in Matters of meer Religion :
 " It has ever been directly contrary to Our Inclination,
 " as We think it is to the Interest of " Government, which it Destroys, by Spoiling
 " Trade, Depopulating Countries, and Discouraging " Strangers ; and finally, that it never " obtain'd the End for which it was employ'd.
 " And in this We are the more confirm'd by the " Reflections We have made upon the Conduct of " the Four last Reigns : For aliter all the frequent " and pressing Endeavours that were us'd in each " of them, to reduce this Kingdom to an exact " Conformity in Religion, it is visible, the Success
 " has not answer'd the Design, and that the " Difficulty is Invincible. We therefore, out of " Our Princely Care and Affection unto all Our " Loving Subjects, that they may live at Ease and " Quiet, and for the Increase of Trade, and Encouragement " of Strangers, have thought fit, by " Virtue of Our Royal Prerogative, to Issue forth
 " this Our Declaration of Indulgence ; making no " doubt of the Concurrence of Our Two Houses " of Parliament, when We shall think it convenient " for them to Meet.

" In the First place, We do Declare, That We " will Protect and Maintain Our Arch-Bishops,
 " Bishops and Clergy, and all other Our Subjects
 " of the Church of England, in the free Exercise " of their Religion, as by Law Establish'd, and " in the quiet and full Enjoyment of all their " Possessions, without any Molestation or Disturbance " whatsoever.

" We do likewise Declare, That it is Our " Royal Will and Pleasure, That from henceforth,
 " the Execution of all and all manner of Penal " Laws in Matters Ecclesiastical, for not Coming " to Church, or not Receiving the Sacrament, or " for any other Non-conformity to the Religion
 " Establish'd, or for or by reason of the Exercise " of Religion in any manner whatsoever, be immediately " Suspended ; And the further Execution of the said
 " Penal Laws, and every of them, is hereby Suspended.

" And to the End, that by the Liberty hereby " Granted, the Peace and Security of Our Government " in the Practice thereof, may not be endangered ;
 " We have thought fit, and do hereby straightly
 " Charge and Command all Our Loving Subjects, " That as We do freely give them Leave to Meet
 " and Serve God after their Own Way and Manner,
 " be it in Private Houses, or Places purposely " hired or built for that Use ; so that they take " especial Care, That nothing be Preach'd or " Taught amongst them, which may any-ways " tend to Alienate the Hearts of Our People from " Us or Our Government ; And that their Meetings " and Assemblies be Peaceably, Openly and " Publickly held, and all Persons freely " Admitted to them ; And that they do signify " and make-known to some One or more of the " next Justices of the Peace, what Place or Places they set a-part for those Uses. 1687.

" And that all Our Subjects may enjoy such " their Religious Assemblies with greater Assurance " and Protection, We have thought it Requisite,
 " and do hereby Command, That no Disturbance
 " of any kind be made or given unto them, under " Pain of Our Displeasure, and to be further " Proceeded against with the utmost Severity.

" And forasmuch as We are Desirous to have " the Benefit of the Service of all Our Loving " Subjects, which, by the Law of Nature, is " inseparably Annexed to, and Inherent in Our " Royal Person ; And that none of Our Subjects
 " may, for the future, be under any Discouragement " or Disability (who are otherwise Well-inclined,
 " and fit to Serve Us) by reason of some " Oaths or Tests, that have been usually " Administred on such Occasions ; We do hereby " further Declare, That it is Our Royal Will and " Pleasure, That the Oaths commonly call'd,
 " The Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and also " the several Tests and Declarations mention'd " in the Acts of Parliament made in the 25th and " 20th Years of the Reign of Our late Royal " Brother, King Charles the Second ; shall not " at any time hereafter be Required to be Taken,
 " Declared or Subscribed by any Person or Persons " whatsoever, who is or shall be Employed in " any Office or Place of Trust, either Civil or " Military, under Us, or in Our Government.

" And We do farther Declare it to be Our " Pleasure and Intention, from Time to Time
 " hereafter, to Grant Our Royal Dispensations
 " under Our Great Seal, to all Our Loving " Subjects so to be Employed, who shall not " Take the said Oaths, or Subscribe or Declare the " said Tests or Declarations in the above-mention'd " Acts, and every of them.

" And to the End that all Our Loving " Subjects may receive and enjoy the full Benefit " and Advantage of Our Gracious Indulgence " hereby intended, and may be Acquitted and " Discharg'd from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures
 " and Disabilities by them, or any of them,
 " Incurred or Forfeited, or which they shall " or may at any time hereafter be liable to,
 " for or by reason of their Non-conformity,
 " or the Exercise of their Religion, and from " all Suits, Troubles or Disturbances for the " same ; We do hereby give Our Free and " Ample Pardon unto all Non-conformists, " Recufants, and other Our Loving Subjects,
 " for all Crimes and Things by them committed " or done contrary to the Penal Laws formerly " made, relating to Religion, and the Profession
 " or Exercise thereof. Hereby Declaring, That " this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity shall " be as Good and Effectual, to all Intents and " Purposes, as if every individual Person had " been therein particularly named, or had " particular Pardons under Our Great-Seal ; " which We do likewise Declare shall, from " Time to Time, be Granted unto any Person " or Persons desiring the same. Willing and " Requiring Our Judges, Justices, and other " Officers, to take Notice of, and Obey Our " Royal Will and Pleasure herein before " Declared.

" And although the Freedom and Assurance
 " We have hereby Given, in relation to Religion " and Property, might be sufficient to remove " from the Minds of Our Loving Subjects all " Fears and Jealousies in relation to either ;
 " yet We have thought fit further to " Declare, That We will Maintain them in " all their Properties and Possessions, as well
 " of Church and Abbey-Lands, as in any other
 " their Lands and Properties whatsoever.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the Fourth Day of April, 1687. In the Third Year of Our Reign.

1687.
The Dissenters naturally fond of this Indulgence.

Their Addresses of Thanks for it.

The Dissenters were generally fond and proud of this Declaration, and caught greedily at the Bait, without discerning the Hook in it. They were not content with a silent Acceptance of this Liberty, but were Drawn in to make Insults of Joy for it; and Presented Addresses of Thanks so flattering and so fulsome, that some of them were thought Offensive to the very Ears of the King.

The Anabaptists in and about London began the Official Course of Addressing, Apr. 14. telling the King; GREAT SIR! 'Tis the Sense of this Invaluable Favour and Benefit, derived to us from Your Royal Clemency, that compels us once more to Prostrate our selves at Your Majesty's Feet, with the tender of our most humble Thanks for Peace and Liberty. — Such Demonstrations as these, of Your Majesty's Tender Care of the Prosperity and Quiet of your Peaceable Subjects, will Absolutely Command the Hearts of them All, &c.

Then came the Quakers, and said; May it Please the KING! Though we are not the first in this Way, yet we hope we are not the least sensible of the great Favours we are come to Present the King our Humble, Open and Hearty Thanks for. — We Rejoyce to see the Day, that a King of England should from His Royal Seat so Universally Assert this Royal Principle, "That Conscience ought not to be Restrain'd, nor People Forc'd, for Matters of meer Religion, &c.

The Independents follow'd with a like Harangue; SIR! The great Calamity we have been a long time under, through the severe Execution of the Laws in Matters of Religion, has made us deeply sensible of Your Majesty's Princely Clemency towards us Your Dissenting Subjects; especially, since in the Indulgence vouchsafed, there are no Limitations hindring the Enjoyment of it with a good Conscience, &c.

The Presbyterians came not far behind the rest, and made their Grateful Acknowledgments, "That His Majesty's Princely Pity had now Rescued them from their long Sufferings; and by the same Royal Act, had Restored GOD to the Empire over Conscience; and Publish'd to the World his Royal Christian Judgment, "That Conscience may not be Forced; And his Resolution, "That such Force shall not be attempted in His Majesty's Kingdoms, during His Majesty's Reign; Which they therefore Pray may be long over them, &c.

And the Papists, as it was very proper, fell in with them; and in an Address of May 28. They testified their Thankfulness to Almighty God, and His Majesty, for so Happy an Expedient for the Ease and Comfort of all his Subjects: And though they were thought not to Desire the least Ease or Good to those that Differ'd from them in Opinion; yet they did not only Rejoyce in the Universality of His Majesty's Bounty, but that it flow'd from a Prince of their own Religion.

A late Author observes, "The Presbyterians, Quakers, Anabaptists, and other Dissenters, had lately been so Harass'd and Persecuted, that 'tis no wonder they were so Eager to lay hold of this Opportunity of sheltring themselves from Oppression. And indeed, 'tis Natural for People that labour under violent and racking Pains, greedily and thankfully to receive any Remedies that are offer'd them for present Ease, without considering whether it is a Friendly or Unfriendly Hand that administers the quieting Potion: But then again, as soon as the treacherous Effects of a Pulliative Medicine are over, and the old Distemper returns with redoubled Fury, Men are apt to Curse the Authors of their additional Torments, and have recourse to more effectual, though perhaps more violent Remedies. Thus the Presbyterians being released from their Prisons, and allow'd the Free and Publick Exercise of their Religion, thought no Praises too great to express their Gratitude, no Blessings sufficient to Reward their Deliverer and Benefactor: Nay, so extravagantly Thankful were some of them, in their Addresses, as to fill them with Acknowledgments that nearly border'd upon Blasphemy.

"But at last they open'd their Eyes: They perceiv'd the Venom that lay hid in those Indulgent Declarations; and plainly saw, that though the King had Granted a General Toleration to his Subjects, yet the Papists only were design'd to receive the Benefit of it; and that all the Places of Trust, both Civil and Military, wou'd soon devolve into their Hands. And as the sudden Favours we receive from an inveterate Enemy, are always suspicious; they likewise discover'd, that the reason of this seeming-Kindness of the Court, was only, because their Efforts to Engage the Church of England in their sinistrous Designs had prov'd ineffectual. Then reflecting on this fundamental Maxim of the Roman Catholicks, "That they are not bound to keep Faith with Hereticks, but may use all manner of Equivocations and Retractions, either to Convert or Exterminate them; — left they should be Accessory to their own Ruine, they held private Conferences with the Episcopal Party, about the most proper Means to dispel the Storm that threatn'd them. To this End, a Reconcilement in Point of Religious Worship, was chiefly thought necessary: And some Presbyterian Teachers prest it so much in their Pulpits, that the Dissenters of Canterbury, Rochester, and some other Places in Kent, Declared, they were ready to Join in Communion with the Church of England.

"On the other hand, The Church of England saw presently through this Jesuitical Contrivance, and dreaded the Consequences: They look'd upon it as a Just Judgment from Heaven, for the Rigour they had exercis'd against the Non-conformists in King Charles II's time; they began to blame the Over-strain'd and Indiscreet Zeal of some of their Ambitious Prelates, which had reduc'd the Dissenters, both in England, Scotland and Ireland, to the necessity not only of Accepting of, but even of Suing for this General Indulgence. In short, They were now made sensible, that Those who put them upon Executing the Penal Laws, did but make them Properties to hinder the Dissenters from Uniting with the Church of England, and play them against One Another; that their Divisions might add Strength to the Papists, to Destroy them Both. Thus, by the Liberty of Conscience, King James lost his Episcopal Party, who had set the Crown upon his Head, without winning the Presbyterians, that had endeavour'd to Exclude Him. And both Churchmen and Dissenters perceiving their Common Danger, forgot, at least suspended their old Animosities, and join'd Counsel, to prevent their imminent Ruine.

The best Apology for the Moderate Non-conformists in the Use of this Liberty, is thus given by an Author of their own: "The Dissenters were not so fond of Hard-Usage, as to refuse a Liberty so freely offer'd them; nor did they think it Good-Manners to enquire too narrowly how that Indulgence came about, so long as they were shelter'd by it from Oppression. A Letter of Advice was hereupon Publish'd, by that Accomplish'd States-man the Marquess of Halifax, though without his Name. The Letter was written with a great deal of Artifice, with design to insinuate a two-fold Caution; That

Dissenters, by degrees, perceiv'd the ill Design,

And began to come to a better understanding with the Church of England.

Behaviour of the Members of the Church of England.

Dissenters Apology for themselves.

1687. " their New Friends were to be Suspected ; And, it would neither be Christianity nor Prudence to hazard the Publick Safety, either by desire of Ease, or Revenge. — His Cautions were regarded by the Wiser part of them, notwithstanding the Uncertainty with what Design this Application was made to them. As Thankful as they were for their Ease and Liberty, they were yet fearful of the Issue ; neither can any Number of them, of any Consideration, be charg'd with hazarding the Publick Safety, by falling in with the Measures of the Court, of which they had as great a Dread as their Neighbours. And as for Revenge, though they had a fair Opportunity for it, yet could they not think it a thing desirable, either as Men, or as Christians. If they Over-did it in their Addresses, they thought the High-Church Party, who had been so us'd to topping Flights of Compliment, when returning Thanks for Dissolving one of the best of Parliaments, had little reason to Reflect on them. But they were not many that could be Charg'd : Among the rest, Mr. Baxter had no Concern in Addressing ; but set himself at Rutland-House in Charter-House-Yard, where he Exercis'd his Ministry, in Conjunction with Mr. Sylvester, to make a Peaceable Improvement of the Liberty afforded, so as to do all the Good he could, without Offence to any : The like did his Brethren in other Places. And therefore they waited in Expectation of seeing the Effects of the Marquess's Declaration on behalf of the Church Party ; That all their former Haughtiness (they are his own Words) towards the Dissenters, was for ever extinguish'd ; and that the Spirit of Persecution was turn'd into a Spirit of Peace, Charity and Condescension : That the Church of England was Convinc'd of its Error, in being Severe to them ; and all Thinking Men were come to a General Agreement, No more to Cut our selves off from the Protestants Abroad, but rather Inlarge the Foundations upon which we are to Build our Defences against the Common Enemy.

Designs of getting a Parliament to Repeal the Penal Laws and Test,

And yet, after all, this Declaration, however founded on an Arbitrary Dispensing Power, had kept things soft and smooth enough, if the King had gone no farther. But it soon appear'd, that this Liberty was to serve and facilitate a greater Design, that of Compounding a Parliament to Take off the Penal Laws and Test. For this Purpose, the Magistrates, Officers, and Private Gentlemen were meanly Closeted by the King himself, and were Continued in, or Dismiss'd from their Places, accordingly as they shew'd a sordid Compliance, or a generous Reluctancy to the private Test put by the King. Nay, the Judges, in their Circuit, had secret Instructions from Above, to feel the Pulse of the Gentry Commission'd in the Militia, or in the Peace ; and where they found any Averse to the King's Intention, to Turn them out of all Offices and Employments. And as if it were a Judgment on the King, to court an Opposition to this Project of Repealing the Laws, He must needs attempt to Invite the Prince and Princess of Orange to join in it by their Assent and Approbation.

And to Draw in the Approbation of the Prince and Princess of Orange,

On May 20. the Heer Van-Dyckvelt, an Agent from the Dutch, had his Audience of Leave of the King and Queen. The King told him, That He doubted not but that he should have the Prince of Orange's Approbation for Taking off the Penal Laws, and Test ; and would have him acquaint the Prince therewith. — Dyckvelt replied, That he was bound to acquaint the Prince with His Majesty's Command, and would do so ; but he understood so much of the Prince's Sense, that He was bold to say, His Highness was not of that Opinion. — The King would not be satisfy'd with the freedom 1687. of Dyckvelt's Reply, but resolv'd to sollicite the Prince and Princess with the utmost Importunity : For they were then Presumptive-Heirs of the Crown, and their Concurrence would look like a Sanction to the Law, of Repeal at Home and Abroad, to the present Age, and to Posterity. But however, the King would not directly Write upon this Subject to Their Highnesses, but he employ'd Mr. James Stewart a Lawyer (whom He had Pardon'd, and receiv'd into Favour, after a long Exile, and who pretended to be intimately Acquainted with Monf. Fagel the Pensionary of Holland) in whom the Prince repos'd an intire Confidence. So Mr. Stewart Wrote to him on this Subject. But the Prince and Princess were so cautious in meddling with so Nice an Affair, and so unwilling to allow Monf. Fagel to return an Answer, which they knew would not be Pleasing ; that Mr. Stewart was several times obliged to repeat his pressing Requests, owning in his Letters, That he Wrote them by the King's immediate Direction.

By means of Monf. Fagel.

Upon this Denurr, the Papists industriously spread it abroad, That the Prince and Princess of Orange had fully Agreed with His Majesty's Design of Taking off the Penal Laws, and Test. And the Marquess of Albyville (the King's Minister in Holland) sent over several Letters, intimating, That the Prince had told him the same thing ; and the chief of these Letters was also made publick.

And therefore, to dissipate these false Reports, Their Highnesses were obliged to direct Monfieur Fagel to Write to Mr. Stewart to this Effect : —

That since he earnestly desired to know of him, what the Prince and Princess of Orange's Thoughts were, concerning the Repeal of the Penal Laws, and more particularly of the Test ; he would deal very plainly with him in that Matter, since Mr. Stewart had said, in his Letters, That they were Written by the King's Knowledge and Allowance. — First, He most positively assured him, That their Highnesses had often Declared, as they did in a particular manner to the Marquess of Albyville, That it was their Opinion, That no Christian ought to be Punish'd for his Conscience, or be ill Us'd, because he Differed from the Publick and Establish'd Religion ; and therefore, That They could Consent, that the Roman Catholics in England, Scotland and Ireland should be suffer'd to Continue in their Religion, with as much Liberty as Allowed them in the United Provinces, where it could not be denied but that they enjoy'd full Liberty of Conscience. And as to the Nonconformists, Their Highnesses did not only Consent, but heartily Approved of their having an Intire Liberty of Conscience for the Exercise of their Religion, without any Trouble, Hindrance or Molestation upon that score. And, That Their Highnesses were ready to Concurr at any time with His Majesty, in the Settling and Confirming that Liberty, and to Protect and Maintain it, as far as in Them lay, according to the Language and usual Form of Treaties, and likewise to Confirm it with Their Guarantee, as Mr. Stewart had mention'd in his Letters. And if His Majesty thought fit to have Their Concurrence in Repealing the Penal Laws, Their Highnesses were ready to give it ; Provided those Laws still remained in their full Rigour, whereby the Roman Catholics were shut out of both Houses of Parliament, and out of all Publick Employments both Civil and Military ; as likewise all those other Laws which Confirmed the Protestant Religion, and Secured it against all the Attempts of the Roman Catholics : — But Their Highnesses could by no means Agree to the Repeal of the Test, and

“ and those other Penal Laws last mention'd, that “ tended to the Security of the Protestant Religion; “ since the Roman Catholicks received no other “ Prejudices from these, than their being Excluded “ from Parliament, and Publick Employments; “ and that, by them, the Protestant Religion was “ sheltred from all the Designs of the Roman Catho- “ licks against it, or against the Publick Safety.
 “ That neither the Test, nor those other Laws, “ could be said to carry any Severity in them “ against the Roman Catholicks, upon Account of “ their Consciences, being only Provisions quali“ fying Men to be Members of Parliament, or to “ be capable of bearing Office; by which they “ must Declare before God and Men, that they “ were for the Protestant Religion. So that indeed, “ all this amounted to no more than a Securing “ of the Protestant Religion from any Prejudice “ it might receive from the Roman Catholicks.

“ More than this, (added the Pensionary) “ Their Highnesses have thought, and do still “ think, it ought not to be ask'd or expected from “ them; since, by that Means, the Roman Catholicks
 “ and their Posterity would be for ever secured “ in their Persons or Estates, or in the Exercise of “ their Religion: And they thought the Roman “ Catholicks ought to be satisfy'd with that, and “ and not disturb the Quiet of the Kingdom, “ under pretence, that they were shut out of Par“ liament and Employments; and because those “ Laws wherein the Security of the Protestant “ Religion chiefly consisted, were not Repealed, by “ which they might be put into a Condition to “ Overturn it.

“ As Mr. Stewart had writ, That the “ Roman Catholicks in Holland were not excluded “ from Employments and Places of Trust; he “ was grossly mistaken: For their Laws were “ exprefs in that Point, excluding Roman Catho- “ licks by Name from all Share in the Govern“ ment, and from all Employments whatsoever.
 “ It was true, he did not know any exprefs Law “ that excluded them from Military Employ“ ments: That had been hard indeed; since, in “ the first Foundation of their State, they joined “ with them in asserting the Publick Liberty, “ and did them eminent Service during the “ Wars, therefore they were not excluded from “ Military Employments. For the Publick Safety “ was no ways endangered by that, both because “ the Numbers of those of their Religion that “ served in their Troops were but small, and be“ cause the States would easily prevent any Incon-“ veniency that might arise from thence; which “ could not have been so easily done, if the Roman “ Catholicks had been admitted to a Share in the “ Government, and in the Policy and Justice of “ their State.

“ He said, “ He was assured of this Truth, and “ could give undeniable Proof of it, That Their “ Highnesses desired nothing more earnestly, than “ that His Majesty might Reign happily, and in “ a perfect good Intelligence with his Subjects; “ And that his Subjects, being persuaded of His “ Majesty's Paternal Affection towards them, “ might upon all Occasions make suitable Returns “ to his Goodness, by all possible Demonstrations “ of Duty and Loyalty: But Their Highnesses “ were convinced in their Consciences, That both “ the Protestant Religion, and the Safety of the “ Nation, would be exposed to most certain Dan“ gers, if either the Tests, or those other Penal “ Laws, of which he had made frequent mention, “ should be Repealed; Therefore They could not “ Concurr with His Majesty in those Matters; for “ They believ'd they should have much to Answer “ to God, if the Consideration of any present “ Advantage should induce them to Consent to “ Things which they believ'd would not only “ be very Dangerous, but Prejudicial to the “ Protestant Religion.

“ Lastly, (he Concluded), That Their High“ nesses ever had, and were resolv'd ever to pre“ serve a profound Submission to His Majesty, as “ they thought themselves in Duty bound by the “ Laws of God, and Nature: But since the Matter “ that was then in hand related not to the making “ of New Laws, but to the total Abrogation of “ those already made both by King and Parlia“ ment; Their Highnesses did not see how it “ could be expected of Them, that They should “ Consent to such an Abrogation, to which they “ had so just an Aversion; as being a thing that “ was contrary to all the Laws and Customs of “ all Christian States, whether Protestants or “ Papists, who admitted none to a Share in the “ Government, or Publick Employments, but “ those who profess'd the Publick and Establish'd “ Religion, and endeavour'd to secure it against “ all Attempts whatsoever.

This Letter was communicated by Stewart to the Earls of Sunderland and Melfort, and even to King James himself; and he also let Monfieur Fagel know as much, without communicating to him whether the Court desired it should be kept secret, or made publick. In the mean time, it was Printed in England; and a Pamphlet having been soon after Publish'd in England, Intituled, Parliamentum Pacificum; or, The Happy Union of King and People in an Healing Parliament, &c. wherein it was affirmed, That the Letter written to Mr. Stewart, was not only Supposititious, but also, that the Author mis-represented the Sentiments of the Prince and Princess of Orange, concerning the Repeal of the Test, and Penal Laws. Monfieur Fagel thought himself oblig'd to prevent the World's being Impos'd upon by that Imposture, and to that Purpose he not only Printed some of Mr. Stewart's Letters, but Wrote also to the Marquess of Albyville the following Letter; which he likewise caused to be made Publick.

My LORD;

“ WE have seen here a Pamphlet in English, Monfieur Fagel's Letter to M. d'Albyville.
 “ call'd Parliamentum Pacificum, Printed “ this Year in London, with the Earl of Sunder- “ land's Allowance; of which I cannot forbear “ Complaining, how averse soever I am to make “ Expofulations: The Author of it maintains, “ That the Letter I wrote on the 4th of November “ last, relating to the Test, and Penal Laws, is “ either a Forgery, or that I wrote it without “ the Order of Their Highnesses, or at least of “ Her Royal Highness. Not that I pretend to “ enter into the Particulars of that Pamphlet, “ with design to Confute any thing in it, being “ little agreeable to my Character, and Inclination “ to meddle with Publick Disputes of that nature.
 “ But you must not think it strange, if I put “ you in mind, That it was not of my own self “ that I engaged in Writing the said Letter, but “ rather, after I had been powerfully pressed to it “ for some Months together, from or in the Name “ of His Majesty; and when at last I was pre“ vailed upon to Write it, I did it with all the “ Precaution which so Nice an Affair seem'd to “ require; insomuch, that in all that Letter, “ there is not one Period which I ought to fear “ might Displease His Majesty: Nevertheless, “ I see that in a Writing Printed by Publick Au“ thority, that Letter is branded as Supposititious; “ although His Majesty, and even all the Court, “ know the Truth of the Business: And besides “ that, I have Owned it here to Your Lordship “ as the King's Minister, and to all those that “ have spoken to me of it. But what is most 1687.

“ Injurious to me, is, That I am Charg'd therein “ with having abused Their Highnesses Names, “ particularly that of Her Royal Highness; as “ if I were a Person capable of so infamous a “ Cheat, and of a Falstity so unworthy of all “ Men of Honour, and that too in an Affair of “ the highest Importance.

“ You will not take it ill, My LORD, if in “ this Matter I referr my self to the Knowledge “ you have of it, and to what you have often “ told me your self, to wit, That Their Highnesses, “ and in particular Her Royal Highness the “ Princess had declared her Thoughts to you “ concerning the Test, and Penal Laws, in the “ same manner as I had represented them; That “ you had acquainted the Court with it a long “ time before I wrote my Letter; And that you “ could not conceive what Reason there was for “ pressing me to Write to Mr. Stewart. I do “ assure you, That I would not be much offended “ at that Pamphlet, nor at any other of that “ nature, having already foreseen I should not “ fail being attackt on that score, wherein I “ could easily have allow'd every-body the liberty “ of pleasing themselves; but that Writing being “ Publish'd under the Authority of the President “ of the King's Council, and Secretary of State, “ my Honour is concern'd to Clear my self to “ the World, of so unjust an Accufation as is “ laid to my Charge.

“ Therefore I thought I could not do better “ than to Address my self to you, My LORD, as “ being His Majesty's Minister, and a Person “ perfectly-well Inform'd of the Business in “ Question, desiring you wou'd be pleas'd to Write “ to the Earl of Sunderland about it. I believe “ he has neither seen nor examin'd the Passages “ of that Pamphlet which reflected upon me; “ and I am also perswaded, that if he had, he “ would not have Signed the Printing Allowance: “ For the said Earl of Sunderland knows aswell “ as any-body, that the said Letter of Mr. Stewart “ is no Supposition, since he has seen the Letter “ it self, or the English Copy of it, which I had “ sent along with it. He ought also to be no less “ assured by your Letters, and by what you “ have related by Word-of-Mouth, that Their “ Highnesses, and particularly Her Royal High“ nesses the Princess, have several times told you “ their Opinion concerning the Test, and Penal “ Laws, as I have express'd it in my Letter to “ Mr. Stewart. Therefore I do promise my self “ from the Justice and Goodness of the Earl of “ Sunderland, that he will take Care that the “ Allowance which was surreptitiously gained for “ the Printing of that Pamphlet may be recall'd, “ and the Author of so manifest and outrageous “ a Calumny brought to Condign Punishment.
 “ Neither will I conceal from you, that I design “ to Publish what has pass'd in this Affair, aswell “ as what I now take the liberty to Write to “ you; not with design to enage any farther in “ the Main Business, much less to gratifie any“ body, but solely to shelter my Honour from so “ false and heinous an Imputation.

Some old Laws revived and executed.

The King was not more ready to Annul some Laws of present force and necessity, than he was to Reinforce others that were obsolete and dead, and to Revive them with a sharper Edge than had been at first set upon them. Hence, because there was found an old Act of Parliament, that made it Death for any Soldier taking Pay in the King's Service, in his Wars Abroad, or on the High Sea, or in Scotland, to Desert from his Colours; the King would have this Law executed in time of perfect Peace, upon the Soldiers in his Standing Army, for a Terror to Hounslow-Heath.
 And because the Worthy Recorder of London, Sir John Holt, would not expound that Law according to the King's Desire, he was put out of his Place; and so was Sir Edward Herbert from being Chief-Justice of the King's-Bench, to make way for Sir Robert Wright, who ventur'd to Hang two or three poor Soldiers upon that antiquated Statute, that, if in full Force and Virtue, would not have come up to the present Case.

And though the Courts in Westminster-Hall had been before sufficiently purg'd of the stout Old Lawyers, and fill'd with New Men of Weakness or Wilful Compliance; yet a further Regulation was still to be made, that the King and his Judges might be perfectly Unanimous. So in the beginning of this Easter-Term, His Majesty was pleas'd to Constitute Sir Robert Wright (one of the Justices of the King's-Bench) Lord Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas; and Mr. Justice Powell was thereupon removed from the Court of Common-Pleas to the King's-Bench; and Mr. Baron Milton from the Exchequer to the Common-Pleas. And in the same Term, to serve the Design before-mention'd, His Majesty thought fit to remove the Lord Chief-Justice Herbert to the Common-Pleas, and the Lord Chief-Justice Wright to the King's-Bench: And Sir Francis Wythens (one of the Justices of the King's-Bench) had his Quietus. On Apr. 28.
 Sir Richard Allibone (one of His Majesty's Council at Law) an angry Papist, and Charles Ingleby Esq; both of Grays-Inn, were Call'd by the King's Writ to the State and Degree of Serjants at Law, and gave Kings with this triumphant Motto, A Rege Lex: And the same Day, Sir Richard Allibone was Sworn before my Lord Chancellor, One of the Justices of the King's-Bench; and Mr. Serjeant Powell One of the Barons of the Exchequer. So that Legal Innocence might be now a Crime; and what was Treason by the Law, might be now a Merit and a Reward.

And therefore, as an Ambassador had been the last Year humbly sent to Rome; so a Nuntio from thence was this Year to be gloriously received. Signior Ferdinando d'Adda, Domestick Prelate and Assistant to the Pope, who was the Queen's Favourite, had follow'd the English Court ever since the King's Accession to the Crown: He had been privately Commission'd to be Nuntio of the Apostolick See; and to fill up the Character with more Pomp and Lustre, he had been Consecrated Arch-Bishop of Amasia, in the Royal Chapel at Whitehall, by Bishop Layburn Vicar-Apostolical in England, assisted by two other Irish Bishops. He was now to make his Publick Entry as a Foreign Minister, and the Government it self was to glory in this Account of it: “ The 2d of “ July, Monsignor Ferdinand d'Adda, Arch-Bishop “ of Amasia, Domestick Prelate and Assistant to “ His Holiness the Pope, and Apostolick Nuntio, “ had Publick Audience of Their Majesties at “ Windsor, being Conducted by His Grace the “ Duke of Grafton, and Sir Charles Cotterell One “ of the Masters of the Ceremonies, in one of “ His Majesty's Coaches, with all the Honours “ and Ceremonies usually Observed on the like “ Occasions. And on July 5th, he had Audience “ of the Queen-Dowager at Somerfet-House, being “ Conducted by the said Sir Charles Cotterell in “ one of Her Majesty's Coaches, in the usual “ Manner.

There having been no such Sight in England for about an Hundred and fifty Years before, the Concourse of People was extraordinary great upon this Occasion: Yet their Surprize at the Pomp and Magnificence of this Solemnity was much less, than their Indignation to behold a Representative of the Pope in all his Pontificalibus, preceded by a Cross-Bearer, and attended by a flock of Priests and Monks in the Habits of their respective Orders. This Ceremony occasion'd the Disgrace

1687. Disgrace of that Illustrious Patriot the Duke of Somerset, First Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to the King: For His Grace being then in Waiting, His Majesty Ordered him to Attend the Nuntio to his Audience; but he desir'd His Majesty to Excuse him from Countenancing any Act which the Laws of the Land made Criminal. The King reiterated his Orders; and the Duke was constant in his Refusal of them: Upon which His Majesty told him in a Passion, "That he would trouble him no more with any Commands, and therefore expected he should Resign his Places of Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber, and Colonel of Dragoons." The Duke immediately did so, without the least Concern; as being abundantly satisfy'd that he kept his Conscience and his Honour, while he lost nothing but his Places. And yet a Bishop of the Church (or rather of the Court) is said to have made no scruple in this Matter, but to have made up part of the Nuntio's Train, as if he had been One of the Roman Retinue: But however, his Lordship's Coach-man was a stout Protestant, and would not Drive his Master that Way; and if the Man Suffer'd, no doubt he meant it for his Master's Honour.

A Protestant Coach-man.

The Nuntio entertain'd by the City.

Character of him.

The Parliament Prorogued, because the Members would not Comply,

And then Dissolv'd;

And the King to Reign without a Parliament.

The Nuntio wanted an Opportunity to Appear Publicly in London; and therefore it was contriv'd, that he should be Invited to come with the King himself to Dine at Guildhall on the Lord-Mayor's-Day: And he was accordingly Receiv'd at Temple-Bar by Sir John Parsons and Sir Basil Firebrass the Two Sheriffs; and was Complimented by Sir John Shorter the Lord-Mayor. And when a Publick Account was given of the City Entertainment, there was special Care taken to express, that among the Foreign Ministers who were Invited, there were Present the Pope's Nuntio, and the French Ambassador.

Some were of Opinion, That the Nuntio was an Instrument of pushing things to the fatal Extremities that were now upon the Anvil. Others again say, "Tis certain that he had a greater share in the Intrigues of the Ruelle, than in those of the Cabinet, and had too much Sense to approve of all the Measures that were taken: And therefore he often desir'd to be Recall'd, lest he should be thought to have a Hand in them.

As to the Parliament now in being, the King intended they should Sit again, if, by Closeting and Tampering with Favours and Disgraces, he could have bought up a Majority to be his Servants and Creatures in Repealing the Penal Laws, and Test: But when His Majesty saw that by all his Endeavours, he made but a slow Progress in Captivating the Judgment and Conscience of the Chief Members of Both Houses, he resolv'd to take a longer Time. So when on Apr. 28. the Parliament Met at Westminster, in pursuance of their last Prorogation; it was, by Commission, further Prorogued till the 22d of November. But before that Day, by Proclamation Given at Hampton-Court, Jul. 2. The King's Most Excellent Majesty, for weighty Reasons, hath thought fit to Dissolve this present Parliament; And doth, by this His Royal Proclamation, Dissolve the same accordingly. Nor was any Promise made of a New Parliament: This was to be lodg'd in the King's Breast, and was to depend on the Success of the same Intrigues. Unless a Parliament could be form'd to Confirm and Sanctifie the Measures of the Court, it could be to no purpose but to break, or at least to retard those Measures. And therefore some of the Ministry were against running the hazard of referring their Proceedings to the Approbation of the Two Houses; and judg'd it more expedient, to trust to a Set of Judges, and a Standing Army. "Yet, (says a late Writer) as Men who follow wrong Measures, are always fluctuating in their Counsels, it was not long before they consider'd, that the Superstructure they were erecting upon an Illegal Foundation, would tumble to the Ground as soon as the Legal Power should take place: That the Army and Fleet encreasing every Day, the King's Necessities would at last inevitably oblige him to Call a Parliament: And that the longer the Meetings of that August Assembly were put off, and their Authority disregarded, the more fatal to the King's Design their Resolutions would prove." These Reflexions made the Popish Party sensible of the necessity of Calling a Parliament; and therefore all the Methods and Artifices imaginable were used to procure such a Lower House, as would Confirm all the King's Proceedings. In order to that, Writs of Quo Warranto were again Issued out against Corporations; and the Magistrates thereof terrify'd with His Majesty's Displeasure, if they dared to insist upon their Legal Rights, and contend with Him at Law. Besides that, Judges were prepared to Over-rule the Pleas of all such Cities and Towns as would stand upon their Franchises and Privileges; witness the Cities of Oxford and Winchester, which were declar'd to be Dissolv'd at the King's Pleasure. In short, by a Decree of the Court of King's-Bench, most Cities and Boroughs were Ordered to Surrender their Charters; which reduced them to that Condition, as to have no Magistrates or Officers but at His Majesty's Will.

To Carry on this Servile Humour, many of the officious Addressers did expressly promise to Chuse such Representatives as should be ready to Obey the King's Desire. Thus the Dissenters in the County of Oxon: — When Your Sacred Majesty, in Your great Wisdom, shall think fit to Summon another Parliament, we will use our utmost Endeavours to Elect such Persons as may Abrogate and Abolish such Laws as have impeded the free Exercise of Religion. And even the High-Sheriff, with the Grand-Jury and Justices of the Peace for the County of Hereford, were so Packt together, as to express their great Hopes, That whenever Your Majesty shall please to Call another Parliament, All Places will Concurr to Elect such Members as will be Ready and Disposed to Second your Clement Inclinations to Abolish the Test, and Penal Laws.

Servile Promises of Chusing Members grateful to the Court.

It was to solicit this Cause, that the King took a large Progress this Summer; and One of his closest Attendants was his Loyal Friend William Penn the Reputed Quaker. His Majesty's Intention in this Journey, was given out to be, the taking a View of his Ports and Harbours, and particularly of the Haven and Fortifications of Portsmouth; but the secret Design was plainly, to Influence and Prepare the Electors of every Corporation through which he passed. And as the Presence of a Sovereign, strikes an Awful and Commanding Veneration on the Minds of those who seldom approach Majesty; it can hardly be express'd with what Joyful Acclamations He was receiv'd, and what Dutiful Acknowledgments were paid him at Portsmouth, Bath, Glocester, Worcester, Ludlow, Shrewsbury, Chester, Newport, Lichfield, Coventry, Banbury, Bristol and Winchester. The Univeristy of Oxford distinguisht themselves upon this Occasion, endeavouring by all possible Demonstrations of Duty and Respect to remove the King's Prepossessions against them: But all their Elegance of Speeches and Entertainment were not able to atone for the Opposition given to the King's Command at Magdalen-College; so that the King left Oxford very much Dissatisfied.

The King takes a Progress.

After His Majesty's Return from this elaborate Progress, he was resolv'd to make a more Open Declaration, That He would have the Penal Laws Repealed; And that He would endure None in any 1687. any Place of Authority, but such as would Concurr with Him. This Resolution He publickly Declar'd in Council at Whitehall, on Sunday Dec. 11. and then sent it abroad by Authority, in these words : " His Majesty having by His Gracious Declaration of the 4th Day of April last,

 " Granted a Liberty of Conscience to all his Sub- " jects ; And Resolving not only to Maintain the " same, but to use His utmost Endeavours that " it may Pass into a Law, and become an " Establish'd Security to After-Ages ; hath thought " fit to review the Lists of the Deputy-Lieutenants
 " and Justices of the Peace in the several Coun" ties, that those may be Continued, who shall be " ready to contribute what in them lies towards " the Accomplishment of so good and necessary a " Work ; And such Others added to them, from " Whom His Majesty may reasonably expect the " like Concurrence and Assistance.

The Lord Lieutenants, upon this New Model, were Order'd by the King, to Summon, in His Name, the Chief Officers and Gentlemen in their respective Counties, and to lay the Case before them, so as to flatter or terrifie them out of their Freedom in the Election of Parliament-Men.
 Another sort of People, call'd Regulators, were Commission'd to the same Purpose, being sent all over England, to Delude the People, either by fair Promises or Menaces, into a total Compliance with the King. But notwithstanding all these Wiles and Weapons, His Majesty found himself disappointed of his hopes of having a Parliament at his own devotion. In some Counties, almost all the Gentry disappear'd on a sudden, to avoid the Summons of the Lords Lieutenants. The Gentlemen of Dorsetshire being Asssembled by the Earl of Bristol, were no sooner Acquainted with the King's Intentions, but they Answer'd, That an Affair of so great Importance deserv'd to be discuss'd in the Great Council of the Nation ; to which they would send their Representatives, when His Majesty should think fit to Call a Free Parliament. The like Answer was made in several other Counties : And in Chester, of about Seven hundred Persons, there were only Seventeen who could be made to promise a Consent to the Repealing of the Penal Laws and Toll.

And yet the King had all the Advantage in the world on his side, by filling his Privy-Council and his Court with Creatures of his own making, and by dispensing all his Honours, as so many Pledges of Obedience to his Will and Pleasure.
 On the Death of George Duke of Buckingham, who Died in a most inglorious state of Poverty at a mean House in Yorkshire, on Apr. 16. His Majesty, out of his Royal Favour to the Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland (Lord President of the Council, and His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State) was pleas'd to give him the Garb, on Apr. 26. and he was Install'd at Windsor on May the 22d. The Duke of Berwick (the King's Natural Son) was design'd for General of the Standing Forces ; and to qualifie him with more Experience and better Reputation, he was sent over into Hungary to pass a Campaign in the Imperial Army : And His Majesty Knighted Edward Vandrey Esq; who was to Attend His Grace in that Campaign. Capt. William Phipps being on June 28. presented to the King by the Duke of Albemarle ; His Majesty receiv'd him very graciously, and was pleas'd to conferr upon him the Honour of Knighthood, in Consideration of his Loyalty and good Services in a late Expedition, having brought home a very considerable Treasure which was taken out of the Sea, after it had lain there Forty four Years. On Jul. 2.
 His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon John Sparrow Esq; Clerk-Comptroller of His Majesty's Board of Green-Cloth. The Lord Spencer was Apointed, in August, to go over Envoy Extraordinary, to make the Compliments of Condolence, in Their Majesty's Names, with His Highness the Duke of Modena, upon the Death of the late Dutchess of Modena the Queen's Mother.

 Within the same Month, His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr upon Sir Francis Ratcliff of Drifflon in the County of Northumberland Bar^o the Dignity of an Earl of this Kingdom, Creating him Baron of Tindale, Viscount Ratcliff and Langley, and Earl of Derwentwater. On Sept. 25. Roger Earl of Castlemain (His Majesty's late Ambassador Extraordinary to the Pope) was Sworn of His Majesty's Privy-Council, and took his Place at the Board.
 On Octob. 14. His Grace William Duke of Hamilton, and Sir Nicholas Butler (One of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Customs) were Sworn, and took their Places at the same Board. On Octob. 25.
 His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood on Charles Carteret Esq; And at the Feast in Guildhall, Octob. 30. His Majesty conferr'd the same Honour upon Two of the Aldermen then present, John Boden and William Ashburst Esqrs. On Nov. 11. the Famous Political Jesuit, under the Title of the Honourable and Reverend Father Edicard Petre (Clerk of the Closet to His Majesty) was Sworn of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council, and accordingly took his Place at the Board. On March 6. His Majesty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood, as a Mark of his Favour, on Wil- liam Hedges Esq; His Grace the Duke of Albe- marle was this Year sent over Governor of Jamaica.

There seem'd now to be but One Restraint upon the Papists, which was, a Sense of the King's Declining Age, and the Prospect of a Protestant Successor. They had but One thing therefore for the Subject of their Prayers and their Plots, which was, that the Queen might have a Son. And therefore, at this very Juncture, they began the Whispers of the Queen's being with Child. Which was not much credited, till His Majesty Proclaim'd it to all the Nation, That it had pleas'd Almighty God, (who (in Signal Manner) had bless'd His Majesty and this Kingdom, under His Majesty's Government, with great Prosperity, Peace and Plenty) to give His Majesty also apparent Hopes and good Assurance of having Issue by His Royal Consort the Queen, who, through God's great Goodness, was now with Child. Wherefore, His Majesty Appoints, That on the Fifteenth of January next, within the Cities of London and Westminster, and upon the Twenty ninth in all other Places, Publick Thanksgiving and Solemn Prayer should be offer'd up to GOD, on this Occasion, in a Form of Prayer and Religious Service, to be Prepared by the Lords the Bishops of Durham, Rocheſter and Peterborough.

The Papists, who seem'd already to Triumph over the Protestants, were still more Elevated upon this News : Nay, some of them had the Impudence to assert, That though the Child should prove a Daughter, yet it would cut off the Princesses of Orange and Denmark from the Succession ; upon a foolish Supposal, That a Daughter born since the King's Advancement to the Throne, ought to take Place before any Others born while he was but Duke of York : But others of them chose rather to be confident that it would certainly be a Son. And because the Queen's Breeding was in a manner Miraculous, the Jesuits gave out, That either it was the Effect of a Petition which the lately deceas'd Dutchess of Modena had put up in Heaven to the Blessed Virgin Mary ; or of a Vow the Queen had made to Our Lady of Loretto, with the Present of a Golden Image enrich'd with Precious-Stones.

The Protestants suspect this Matter.

These fabulous Stories relating to the Queen's Conception, after she had intermitted Breeding for several Years; the more credible Reports of her Physicians, and Domefticks, that they were not yet fatisfied in the Signs of it; the Impatience of the Popish Party, in presuming and prophesying the Birth of a Son; and several other concurring Reasons, made the Protestants suspect a pious Fraud; and they were confirm'd in their Suspicion, by reflecting, that a-like Deceit had been put upon the People in the Reign of Queen Mary: For then, to relieve themselves from the Fears of a Protestant Princess in Succellion, the Romish Priests gave it out, That the Queen was with Child; and Prayers were Order'd for her Safe-Delivery; and a Popish Preacher at St. Paul's pretended to tell of the Birth, and to Describe the Boy: When, after all the Sham was carry'd no farther on; because (as verily believ'd) King Philip was too Just and Generous to Consent to any such Imposture. The Remembrance of that former Fact, gave now a Natural Application of it; and the Story of that Mock-Conception (as deliver'd by Mr. Fox in his Acts and Monuments) was now Reprinted and dispers'd with the Title of Idem Iterum, or, Queen Mary's Big-Belly. — Let this Matter conclude with the Words of a late Writer of Memoirs: "The Fears of a Protestant Successor, had been the only Allay that rendred the Prosperity of the Roman Catholicks less perfect. Now the Happiness of having an Heir to the Crown to be bred up in their own Religion, quasht all those Fears, and aton'd for the Uncertainty of the King's Life. It was so much their Interest to have One, and there were so many Circumstances that seem'd to render his Birth suspicious, that the Nation in general were inclinable to believe, that this was the last Effort of the Party to Accomplish our Ruine.

If this were design'd to divert the People of England from fixing their Eyes and Hearts upon a Protestant Successor, it had not that effect. But, on the contrary, the Nation look'd more and more toward the Court in Holland, and the Princess Anne at Home. The King was sensible of it, and found the Prince and Princess of Orange to be more Popular, for refusing to approve of the Repeal of the Penal Laws and Test. Under this Apprehension, the King began to give out Commissions for the Raising of new Troops, and was Preparing a better Fleet with extraordinary Diligence, as foreboding, That on the Birth of a Son, he should have occasion to assert his Title by Force of Arms. Hence, on Jan. 17. His Majesty wrote a Letter to the States of Holland, to Demand the Six English and Scotch Regiments that were in their Service: And on the 2d of March, His Majesty Issued out a Proclamation, forbidding his Natural-born Subjects to Enter or List themselves in the Service of any Foreign Prince or State, either by Sea or Land.

The States return'd a Civil Answer to His Majesty's Letter, but excus'd themselves for not Complying with his Desire. They Declar'd, by a Resolution taken in their Assembly, Febr. 2. That having examin'd all the Treaties of Alliance, and all that had pass'd thereupon, when those Regiments were form'd, they could find no Agreement or Capitulation, that could oblige them to Grant His Majesty's Demand, especially in that Juncture of Time. They own'd indeed, That by the Treaties Concluded between England and the States-General, it was Agreed, That in Case that Crown should have War with any Neighbouring Prince, or suffer under any Intestine Rebellion, the States should be then obliged to Send back the Six Regiments into England, as they did in 1685. upon the Rebellion of Monmouth: But that now

His Britannick Majesty was in Peace with his Neighbours, and had no Troubles at Home; and therefore they saw no Reason that could oblige them to Send back those Troops. However, to preserve a good Correspondence with His Majesty, they offer'd Passes to all the Officers of the Six Regiments, that were willing to return Home; which about Forty of them accepted. The Marquess of Albyville presented a Memorial to the States, to press them to Comply with His Majesty's Desire: But they persisting in their Resolution, a Proclamation was Issued out, Commanding a Return of all the King's Subjects, who had taken Arms under, and were then in the Service of the States-General of the United Provinces either by Sea or Land; though upon no other Allegation, than that the King thought it fit for his Service. This Proclamation caus'd a Debate among the States-General; the Result of which seem'd to be an Unwillingness to let the English and Scotch Regiments Return; alledging, besides what has been already mention'd, That there was nothing so agreeable to Nature, as that he who is Born Free, should have the Right and Liberty to Settle himself wheresoever he shall think it most Advantageous for him, and that it is in his Power to be Naturaliz'd, and become a Subject to them under whose Sovereignty he submits his Person: And that any Government receiving such, does thereby acquire over him the same Right it has over its own proper and Natural Subjects. The Marquess of Albyville, by express Orders from his Master, deliver'd a Second Memorial to the States, peremptorily Demanding the Dismission of the said Troops; — for that pretended Natural Liberty could not subsist, after that Dominion and Obedience had been introduced; so that the Right of Sovereignty and Subjection were now only to be consider'd: And that by virtue of these Rights, it had been the Common Opinion, in all Times, That no Natural Subject can withdraw himself from the Obedience he owes to his Lawful Prince; and therefore he insist'd upon his Demand, as a Right the King would never depart from. But, it seems, few or none were willing to Return; which Justify'd the Resolutions of the States-General, and rendred the Instances of His Majesty's Envoy ineffectual.

These mutual Jealousies between the King and the States of Holland had another Foundation in them. The King was apparently in the Interests and Counsels of France; which the States had reason to hate and oppose. A late Author has deliver'd this good Account: "While King James was thus Pusht on by a Head-strong Party to Enslave his Subjects, the other Princes and States of Europe look'd on with quite different Sentiments, according as their own Interests and Safety mov'd them. The greater part did commiserate the Fate of these Three Kingdoms, and wish'd for their Deliverance. The Protestants saw, with Regret, that themselves were within an immediate Prospect of losing the most considerable Support of their Religion; and both They and the Roman Catholicks were equally convinc'd, that it was their Common Interest to have England continue in a Condition to be the Arbitrer of Christendom, especially at a Time when they saw they most needed it. On the other hand, It was the Interest of another Prince, that not only the King of England should be his Friend, but the Kingdom of England should become Inconsiderable Abroad, which it could not fail to be when Enslav'd at Home.

"King James had been again and again solicited, not only by Protestant Princes, but those of his own Religion, to Enter into other Measures, for the Common Safety of Europe; at least, not to contribute to its Ruine, by espousing an Interest which they judg'd was opposite to it.

1687.

The King very Imporunate with the States, to no purpose.

The States of Holland thought the King of England in the French Interest.

The People set their Hearts the more on the Pr. of Orange and Pr. Anne.

The King begins to Encrease his Army,

And calls back his Forces from Holland.

The States refuse to lead them.

1687.

“ The Emperor, among others, had, by his Ambassador, made repeated Instances to him to this Purpose; but with no better Success than the rest, as appears by a Letter he wrote to him after his Abdication, which has been Printed in several Languages, and was conceiv'd in Elegant Latin, as all the Publick Dispatches of that Court are. But all these Remonstrances had no weight with King James; though they had this good Effect in the End, as to put those Princes and States upon such Measures as secur'd to them the Friendship of England in another way.

“ The Power of France was by this time become the Terror and Envy of the rest of Europe; and that Crown had upon all sides extended its Conquests. The Empire, Spain and Holland seem'd to enjoy a precarious Peace, while the Common Enemy of the Christian Name was making War with the Emperer and the State of Venice, and was once very near being Master of the Imperial Seat, whereby he might have carry'd the War into the Bowels of Germany. The main Strength of the Empire being turn'd against the Turks, and that with various Success, there was another War Declar'd against the Emperer by France: So that it came to be absolutely necessary for Spain and Holland to interpose; not as Mediators, for that they were not to hope for, but as Allies and Partners in the War. These last, as well as the other Princes and States that lay nearest the Rhine, were expos'd to the Mercy of a Prince whom they were not able to resist, if England should Look on as Neuters, or Take part against them; the last of which they had reason to fear.

“ Thus it happen'd, that the Fortune of England and that of the greatest part of Christendom came to be link'd together, and their Common Liberties must of necessity have undergone one and the same Fate. The latter, from a Natural Principle of Self-Preservation, were resolv'd to make the last Effort to break the Fetters which they saw were ready to be impos'd upon them; And the other, animated by the Example of their Ancestors, and the Constitution of their Country, which is diametrically opposite to Tyranny, were resolv'd to venture All, to retrieve themselves and their Posterity from the Chains that were already put upon them.

“ Both the one and the other might have struggl'd in vain till this day with the Ruine that threatned them, if Heaven, in pity to their Condition, had not provided, in the Person of the Prince of Orange, the only Sanctuary that was left them to shelter their sinking State. This Prince, by his Mother, was a Nephew of England, and, in Right of the Princess his Wife, the Presumptive-Heir of the Crown. By his Father's side he was Heir of an illustrious Family, that Eterniz'd their Name, by Delivering their Country from Slavery, and laying the Foundation of a Mighty Commonwealth, which has since prov'd the Greatest Bulwark of the Protestant Religion, and the Chief Support of the Liberty of Christendom. A Family Born for the Good of Mankind, to be the Scourge of Tyrants, and Deliverers of the Oppress'd.

Persecution of the Protestants in France.

“ The Persecution of the Protestants in France, was as Effectual as Wit and Tyranny could make it. Vast Numbers of those Distress'd People were glad to flee for Refuge to other more Merciful States and Kingdoms, till their very Flight was made Criminal, as well as their Profession. Many of them came over into England, of whom some few brought or had privately sent over sufficient Effects with them; but far greater 1687.

Numbers came in a true State of Persecution, Empty and Naked, to depend on the Hospitality and Charity of this Good-Natur'd Kingdom. And indeed, Divine Providence made Things and Persons work here together for their Good. The King was the more bountiful to them, that he might seem to condemn their Persecution for Conscience; the Liberty whereof, He profess'd to be his Principle and Practice. And the People of England were more-espacially Liberal on this Occasion; because they began to think, it might be their own Case, and must be every-where the Effect of Popery and Arbitrary Power.

“ But though these miserable French Refugees met with a Kind Reception from the King and his Subjects: Yet their own Monarch pursu'd them, as it were, into England; and by his Ambassador in our Court, restrain'd them from Complaining of the Hardships they had Suffer'd. So that here in their Place of Refuge, they were to undergo another grievous Persecution; which was, To be Afflicted, without daring to Bemoan themselves. An Instance of this new Mortification to them, is thus related by Authority: — Whitehall, May 8. 1686. The French Ambassador having by a Memorial Complained to His Majesty, That a Book, Intituled, [Les Plaintes des Protestans Cruellement Opprimes dans le Royaume de France] was Sold and Dispers'd in this Kingdom, in which Book are many Falsities and scandalous Reflections upon the Most Christian King; And that the said Book was likewise Translated into English, and Printed here: His Majesty was pleas'd to Order, That diligent Enquiry should be made after the Translator and Printer of the same, that they may be Prosecuted according to Law. And that a Printed Copy of the said Book in French, and another in English, should be Publickly Burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman: Which was accordingly put in Execution on Wednesday last before the Royal Exchange.

Not sufficient to Complains of their Persecution.

“ It is some Justice to set down what a late Historian observes: “ At the same time that King James advanced Popery, it cannot be denied, but that his Generosity extended, in a particular manner, to the Distress'd Protestants who had lately fled from France upon Account of Religion; for he not only Granted them Briefs, but Gave them also large Sums out of his Privy-Purse, to Excite the Charity of his Subjects, by his Royal Example. Nevertheless, those Briefs had not all the good Effect which was intended by His Majesty: Many People refusing to contribute towards those Charitable Collections, upon an ill-grounded Suspicion, That they were Design'd by the Court for the Maintenance of French Papists that were Invited over to Serve the King's Designs. — Others endeavour'd to lessen King James's Bounty, by saying, It was but a Piece of Policy, in order to curry Favour with his own Protestant Subjects. — All that an Historian can say in this Matter, is, That where the Benefit is Real, 'tis a kind of Ingratitude too nicely to enquire into the Motive of it.

Generosity of King James, in Relieving them.

“ Some of the French Refugees had a better Sense of the King's Favours: For Monf. Daillon, one of their Ministers, to Compliment the Court upon their beloved Project of Liberty of Conscience, solicited a Patent for the Erecting a Non-conforming and Independent French Church in Soboe-Fields; which was readily Granted: And from hence it is that the French call that Meeting-house La Patente to this very Day.

“ The Ministers of the French Church in the Savoy were not wanting in expressing their Gratitude to His Majesty, but yet they did it with more Reserve and Circumspection; as appear'd upon the following Occasion: The Jesuits, ever since their Settlement in the Savoy, had a Design

1687. " Design upon the French Chapel there ; and " Mr. Pulton, their Rector or Principal, tamper'd " with Dr. Dubourdiou, in order to engage him " to Resign that Church ; promising, as from the
 " the King, to Build them another on any Ground
 " they should think most convenient between White-
 " hall and Temple-Bar, with a large Sum of Money
 " into the Bargain.— Monsieur Dubourdiou
 " made Answer, That being but One, he desir'd " Time to communicate his Proposal to the Other " Ministers, and Church-wardens of the Savoy.—
 " These being Met upon this Critical Affair, it " was Agreed, That before they should give the " Jesuits a positive Answer, they should consult " with such Lords who were most Conspicuous " for their Wisdom, and their Affection to the " Protestant Interest.— Accordingly Monsieur
 " Dubourdiou waited upon the Lords Hallifax, " Danby, Nottingham, and some few others ; who " all, as it were by Consent, advis'd 'em after " this manner : Never hearken to any Terms with
 " the Jesuits ; Let them pursue their violent
 " Measures : Suffer not your selves to be thrust
 " out of your Church ; for by that Means you'll do
 " your own Business, and the Nations.

The State of Ireland, under King James, is Fully and Justly deliver'd by Dr. King, at the of time Writing it Bishop of London-Derry ; and a later Author has thus Abridg'd His Lordship's Account : — " Ireland was the Inexhaustible Source
 " whence England was to be furnish'd with a " Romish Army ; and an Irish Roman Catholick was " the most Welcome Guest at Whitehall. They " came over in Shoals to take Possession of the " Promis'd Land ; and had already swallow'd " up, in their Hopes, the best Estates of the " Hereticks in England. Over-and-above com" plet Regiments of them, there was scarce a " Troop or Company wherein some of them were " not plac'd, by exprefs Order from Court.
 " Several Protestants that had Serv'd well and " long, were Turn'd out, to make Room for " them ; and Seven Considerable Officers were " Cashier'd in one Day, meerly for refusing to " Admit them. The chief Forts, and particularly " Portsmouth and Hull, the two Keys of England,
 " were put into Popish Hands ; and the Garrisons
 " so Modell'd, that the Majority were Papists.

" As Ireland was remarkable for having fur-" nish'd King James with Romish Troops sent into " England, so was it much more for the bare-
 " fac'd and open Invasions that were made there,
 " upon the Liberties and Rights of the Protestants.
 " That Kingdom was the most proper Field to " ripen their Projects in ; considering, that the " Protestants were much Out-numbered by the " Papists, and had been for some Ages the con" stant Object of their Rancour and Envy ; which " had been more than once exprefs'd in Letters of " Blood.

" King James did Recall the Earl of Clarendon " from the Government of Ireland, soon after he " was Sent thither ; and Appointed the Earl of " Tyrconnel to Succeed him, who was a Gentleman " had signaliz'd himself for his Bigottry to the " Church of Rome, and his Hatred to the Pro" testants. The Roman Catholick had recommended
 " him to King James for that Post, in a Letter, " As One that did first espouse, and chiefly main" tain the Cause of the Catholick Clergy, against their " many and Powerful Enemies for the last Five and " twenty Years ; and was then the only Person under " whose Fortitude and Popularity in that Kingdom
 " they durst with Cheerfulness and Assurance own " their Loyalty, and assert his Majesty's Interest.
 " Making it therefore their humble Request, That " His Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to lodge his Authority " in his Hands, to the Terror of the Factious, and 1687. " Encouragement of His Majesty's most Faithful " Subjects in Ireland ; promising to receive him

 " with such Acclamations as the long Captiv'd Jews
 " did their Redeemer Mordecai.— Which Letter
 " shew'd they were no less mistaken in their History " of the Bible, than in their Advice to the King ;
 " for it does not appear by the Story of Mordecai
 " in the Scripture, that he was ever sent to the " Jews, or remov'd from the City of Susa, after " he came into Favour with Abasuerus.

" However, Tyrconnel fully answer'd the Hopes " and Expectations of the Papists, and the Fears " of the Protestants of Ireland ; for by the " Ministry of this Ridgid Man, was the Ruine
 " of the Protestant English Interest in that King" dom in a great measure compleated.

" At King James's Accession to the Crown,
 " the Army of Ireland consisted of above Seven thou" sand Men, all Protestants, and zealous to the " Service : These were in a little time all Turn'd-
 " out, and the whole Army made up of Papists,
 " most of them the Sons, or Descendants, or near " Relations of those that were Attainted for the " Rebellion in 1641. or others that had distin" guish'd themselves since that time, by their " notorious Villanies, and implacable Hatred to " the English and Protestant Interest.

" Though in King Charles's time, by the " Influence of the Duke of York, there had been " Grounds of Complaint against some of the " Judges in Ireland, upon the Account of their " Partiality to the Papists ; yet when King James " came to the Crown, these very Judges were not " thought fit enough for the Work that was de" sign'd. It was judg'd necessary to employ the " most Zealous of the Party, those that from In" terest and Inclination were the most deeply " engag'd to destroy the Protestant Interest ; and " accordingly such were pick'd out to Sit in every " Court of Justice.

" The Custody of the King's Conscience and " Great Seal, was given to Sir Alexander Fitten,
 " a Person Convicted of Forgery, not only at " Westminster-Hall and at Chester, but Fined for " it by the Lords in Parliament. This Man was " taken out of Jail, to discharge the Trust of " Lord High-Chancellor ; and had no other Qua" lities to recommend him, besides his being a " Convert to the Romish Church, and a Renegado " to his Religion and Country. To him were " added, as Masters of Chancery, one Stafford a " Popish Priest, and O-Neal the Son of one of " the most Notorious Murtherers in the Massacre
 " in 1641.

" In the King's-Bench, Care was taken to place
 " one Nugent, whose Father had lost his Honour " and Estate, for being a Principal Actor in the same " Rebellion : This Man, who had never made any " Figure at the Bar, was pitch'd upon to Judge
 " whether the Outlawries against his Father and " Fellow-Rebels ought to be Revers'd ; and whether " the Settlements that were made in Ireland
 " upon these Outlawries, ought to stand good.

" The next Court is that of Exchequer, from " which only, of all the Courts in Ireland, there " lies no Appeal, or Writ of Error, in England.
 " It was thought fit, that one Rice, a Profligate " Fellow, and Noted for nothing but Gaming,
 " and a mortal Inveteracy against the Protestants,
 " should fill the Place of the Lord Chief-Baron :
 " This Man was often heard to say, before he " came to be a Judge, That he would drive a " Coach and Six Horses through the Act of Settle" ment. And before that Law was actually " Repeal'd in King James's Parliament, he declar'd " upon the Bench, That it was against Natural " Equity, and did not Oblige. It was before him, " that all the Charters in the Kingdom were " damn'd in the space of a Term or two ; so 1687. " much was he for Dispatch. A Learned Prelate (from whose Book all the Things that here relate to that Country are taken) does Observe, That if this Judge had been left alone, 'twas believ'd, in a few Years, he would, by some Contrivance or other, have Given away most of the Protestants Estates in Ireland, without troubling a Parliament to Attaint them.

In the Court of Common-Pleas, it was thought adviseable, that a Protestant Chief-Justice should Continue; yet so, as to Pinion him with Two of their own Sort, that might Out-Vote him, upon Occasion.

The Administration of Justice and the Laws being in such Hands, it was no wonder that the poor Protestants in Ireland wou'd rather to have had no Laws at all, and be left to their Natural Defence, than be cheated into the necessity of submitting to Laws that were executed only to Punish, and not to Protect them. Under such Judges the Roman Catholics had a glorious Time; and be their Cause never so Unjust, they were sure to Carry it: When the Lord Chancellor did not stick on all Occasions, and sometimes upon the Bench, to declare, That the Protestants were all Rogues! And that among Forty thousand of them, there was not One that was not a Traiter, a Rebel, and a Villain!

The Supreme Courts being thus fill'd up, it was but reasonable all other Courts should keep pace with them. In the Year 1687. there was not a Protestant Sheriff in the whole Kingdom, except one, and he put in by mistake, for another of the same Name that was a Roman Catholic. Some few Protestants were Continu'd in the Commission of the Peace; but they were rendred useles and insignificant, being Overpower'd in every thing by the great Number of Papists join'd in Commillion with them, and those, for the most part, of the very Scum of the People, and a great many whose Fathers had been Executed for Theft, Robbery or Murther.

The Privy-Council of Ireland is a great part of the Constitution, and has considerable Privileges and Powers annexed to it: This was likewise so Modell'd, that the Papists made the Majority; and those few that were Protestants chose for the most part to decline appearing at the Board, since they could do those of their Religion no Service.

The great Barrier of the Peoples Liberties, both in England and Ireland, being their Right to Chuse their own Representatives in Parliament, which being once taken away, they become Slaves to the Will of their Prince; The Protestants in Ireland finding a necessity of securing this Right in their own Hands, had procur'd many Corporations to be founded, and had built many Corporate-Towns at their own Charges; from all which, the Roman Catholics were by their Charters excluded. This Barrier was broken through at one stroke, by Dissolving all the Corporations in the Kingdom, upon Quo Warranto's brought into the Exchequer-Court, and that without so much as the least shadow of Law. Hereupon New Charters were Granted, and fill'd up chiefly with Papists, and Men of desperate or no Fortunes: And a Clause was insert'd in every one of them, which subjected them to the Absolute Will of the King; by which it was put in the Power of the Chief-Governor to Turn out and Put in whom he pleas'd, without shewing a Reason, or any formal Tryal at Law.

The Protestant Clergy felt, upon all Occasions, the weight of Tyrconnel's Wrath. The Priests began to declare openly, That the Tythes belong'd to them, and forbad their People, 1687. " under Pain of Damnation, to pay them to the Protestant Incumbents. This Pass'd afterwards into an Act of Parliament; by which not only all Tythes payable by Papists were given to their own Priests, but likewise a Way was found out to make the Popish Clergy capable of enjoying the Protestants Tythes: Which was thus, If a Protestant happen'd to be possess'd of a Bishoprick, a Dignity, or other Living, he might not by this New Act demand any Tythes or Ecclesiastical Dues from any Roman Catholic; and as soon as his Preferment became Void by Death, Cession, or Absence, a Popish Bishop or Clergy-man was put into his Place. And the Act was so express, that there needed no more to oblige all Men to repute and deem a Man to be a Roman Catholic Bishop or Dean of any Place, but the King's signifying him to be so, under his Privy-Signet, or Sign-Manual. As soon as any One came to be thus Intitled to a Bishoprick, Deanery, or Living, immediately all the Tythes, as well of Protestants as Papists, became Due to him, with all the Glebes and Ecclesiastical Dues.

The only great Nursery of Learning in Ireland, is the University of Dublin, consisting of a Provost, Seven Senior, and Nine Junior Fellows, and Seventy Scholars, who are partly Maintain'd by a Yearly Salary out of the Exchequer. This Salary the Earl of Tyrconnel stopt, merely for their not Admitting into a Vacant Fellowship, contrary to their Statutes and Oaths, a Vicious Ignorant Person, who was a New-Convert. Nor could he be prevail'd with, by any Intercession or Intreaty, to remove the Stop; by which, in effect, he dissolv'd the Foundation, and shut up the Fountain of Learning and Religion. This appear'd more plainly afterwards to have been his Design: For it was not thought enough, upon King James's Arrival, to take away their Maintenance, but they were further Proceeded against, and the Vice-President, Fellows and Scholars all turn'd out, their Furniture, Library and Communion-Plate seiz'd, and every thing that belong'd to the College, and to the private Fellows and Scholars, taken way. All this was done, notwithstanding that when they Waited upon King James at his first Arrival at Dublin, he was pleas'd to promise them, That he would preserve them in their Liberties and Properties, and rather Augment than Diminish the Privileges and Immunities that had been Granted them by his Predecessors. In the House they plac'd a Garrison, and turn'd the Chapel into a Magazine, and the Chambers into Prisons for the Protestants. One Moore, a Popish Priest, was made Provost; and One Mackarry, also a Priest, was made Library-Keeper; and the Whole design'd for them and their Fraternity.

One Arch-Bishoprick, and several Bishopricks, and a great many other Dignities and *Living*s of the Church, were design'dly kept Vacant, and the Revenues first paid into the Exchequer, and afterwards dispos'd of to Titular Bishops and Priests, while in the mean time the Cures lay neglected; so that it appear'd plainly, that the Design was to Destroy the Succession of Protestant Clergy-men. At length Things came to that height, after King James was in Ireland, that most of the Churches in and about Dublin were Seiz'd upon by the Government; and at last Latterell, Governor of Dublin, issued out his Order, Forbidding more than Five Protestants to Meet together, under Pain of Death. Being ask'd, Whether this was design'd to hinder Meeting in Churches? He answer'd, It was design'd to hinder their Meeting there, as well as in other Places: And accordingly all

1687. " the Churches were shut up, and all Religious " Assemblies through the whole Kingdom for-" bidden, under Pain of Death.

" It were endless to enumerate all the Miseries " that Reverend Author mentions, which the " Protestants of Ireland Suffer'd in the Reign of " King James : But to give a Decisive Blow,
" there was Act of Attainder Pass'd in Parliament ;
" in order to which, every Member of the House " of Commons Return'd the Names of all such " Protestant Gentlemen as liv'd near them, or " in the County or Borough for which he Serv'd ;
" and if he was a Stranger to any of them, he " sent to the Country for Information about " them. When this Bill was Presented to the " King, for His Assent, the Speaker of the House " of Commons told him, That many were Attainted
" in that Act, upon such Evidence as Satisfy'd the " House ; and the rest upon Common Fame.

" In this Act there were no fewer Attainted,
" than Two Arch-Bishops, One Duke, Seventeen
" Earls, Seven Counsellors, Twenty eight Viscounts,
" Two Viscountesses, Seven Bishops, Eighteen Barons, " Thirty three Baronets, Fifty one Knights, Eighty-" three Clergy-men, Two thousand one hundred " eighty two Esquires and Gentlemen : And All " of them (Unhear'd) Declared and Adjudged " Traitors, Convicted and Attainted of High-Treason,
" and Adjudg'd to suffer the Pains of Death, and
" Forfeiture. The famous Proscription of Rome,
" during the last Triumvirate, came not up, in " some respects, to the Horror of this ; for there " were Condemn'd in this little Kingdom, more " than Double the Number that were Proscrib'd
" through the vast Bounds of the Roman Empire.
" And to make this of Ireland yet the more " Terrible, and to put the Persons Attainted out " of a possibility of Escaping, the Act it self was " conceal'd, and no Protestant allow'd a Copy " of it till Four Months after it was Pass'd. Whereas " in that of Rome, the Names of the Persons
" Proscrib'd were affix'd upon all the Publick " Places of the City, the very Day the Proscription
" was concerted ; and thereby Opportunity was " given to many of the Noblest Families in " Rome to preserve themselves, by a speedy " Flight, for better Times.

State of Religion. The Proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commis- sioners this Year, are thus faithfully Abridg'd by a late Writer : " The Thunderbolts of the Ec- clesiastical Commission fell next on both the " Universities, and first of all upon Dr. Peachet
" the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, for refusing " to Admit one Alban Francis a Benedictine Monk,
" to the Degree of Master of Arts, without taking
" the Oaths, according to the King's Mandate, " wherein His Majesty dispens'd with Francis, though " not having that necessary Qualification. This " Mandate being read in the Consistory, it was " unanimously Agreed, That they could not " Admit the Monk to a Degree, without taking " the usual Oaths, unless they broke their own ;
" and thereupon Appointed Two of their Body
" to wait upon His Majesty, and acquaint him,
" how ready they were to Obey all his Com" mands, where their Compliance did not clash " with their Consciences : humbly hoping His " Majesty would not force them to Wilful Perjury ;
" of which, by the Statutes of the University,
" they must be Guilty, if they should Admit
" Alban Francis, thus Unqualify'd, to that Degree.
" When the Two Fellows came to London, they " first made their Application to the Duke of " Albemarle their Chancellor, who us'd his Interest " to serve them, though to little purpose ; for at " length they received this Answer from the " Secretary of State, That His Majesty had seen
" the Vice-Chancellor's Letter ; was offended at the 1687. " Proceedings of the University ; and would take " Order, shortly, to give them a further Answer. " What this Answer was, appear'd in a little " time ; for Atterbury the Messenger came to " Cambridge, to Summon the Vice-Chancellor to " Appear before the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, " and Answer to such Things as should be Objected " against him, on His Majesty's behalf. — The " Vice-Chancellor, and Eight more of that Body,

" Appear'd, and put in their Answer in Writing,
" in the Name of the University ; alledging
" Three Acts of Parliament in their Justification, " with many unanswerable Arguments against " the Illegality of this New Court : Which being " read, the Court took some Time to Consider " of the Matter, and Adjourn'd till Saturday the " 7th of May, 1687. That Day being come, and " the Vice-Chancellor and Delegates Appear" ing, after some trifling Questions propounded
" by Chancellor Jeffreys, they were Commanded " to Withdraw ; and being call'd in again, Jeffreys
" told the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, That he " being Guilty of great Disobedience to the King's " Commands, and other Crimes and Contempts,
" the Court had Sentenc'd him, To be Depriv'd of " his Office of Vice-Chancellor, and Suspended him
" ab Officio & Beneficio of his Headship of Mag-

" The Storm which soon after broke out upon " the whole College of St. Mary Magdalen in " Oxford, as it was a longer Time a Gathering,
" so it prov'd more Furious and Disinal in its " Effects. And because the holdest Strokes of " that Arbitrary Spirit, by which King James's " Counsels were animated, were seen in a parti" cular manner through the Course of this Affair,
" a full Relation of the Whole cannot be thought " foreign to this History. — St. Mary Magdalen's " College is one of the Noblest Foundations that " perhaps was ever erected for Learning in the " World ; and 'twas no wonder the Papish Clergy
" look'd with an envious and greedy Eye upon " this rich Prize, and made their utmost Efforts " to snatch it from the Hands of those they " call'd Hereticks. This Illustrious Society, from " repeated Grants of Kings, Confirm'd by several " Acts of Parliament, and from their own Statutes,
" were in an uninterrupted, as well as uncontested
" Possession of a Right to Elect their own Pre" sident. That Place being Vacant, by the Death " of Dr. Clarke ; the Vice-President, Dr. Aldworth, " gave Notice to all the Fellows present in the " Chapel to proceed to the Election of another,
" on the 13th of April following, to fill up the " Vacancy. But before the Day of Election, " being inform'd that His Majesty had Granted
" his Letters-Mandatory in behalf of Mr. Anthony " Farmer a Man of an ill Reputation, who had " promis'd to declare himself a Papist ; They most " humbly represented to His Majesty, in their " Petition, That the said Mr. Farmer was a Person
" in several respects incapable of that Character,
" according to their Founder's Statutes ; and did
" most earnestly Beseech His Majesty, either to leave " them to their Duty and Consciences, according to " His Majesty's late most Gracious Toleration, and

" deliver'd to the Earl of S——d, President of " the Council, by Doctor Thomas Smith, and " Captain Bagshaw ; and lay four Days in His " Lordship's Hands, with a Promise of his Favour ;
" but at last his Answer was, That the King must " be Obey'd. On Monday Apr. 11. His Majesty's " Mandate was deliver'd by Mr. Robert Charnock,

“ New Convert, and a Man wholly devoted to “ the Court, directed to the Vice-President and “ Fellows, requiring them forthwith to Elect the “ said Mr. Farmer, and Admit him President.
 “ This Mandate the Vice-President read, with “ decent Respect, in the Chapel of the College, “ before the Fellows there present, and ask'd “ them, Whether they, in Obedience to His Ma“ jesty's Letters, would forthwith Elect Mr. Farmer “ President? They all agreed to deferr their “ Answers till Wednesday following. All the “ Fellows being then Met, the Vice-President “ read the Statute concerning the Choise of a “ President; and another against Corrupt and “ Irregular Elections: Then he read the King's “ Letter in behalf of Mr. Farmer, and a second “ time demanded their Answer, which was to “ this effect; That having a Petition lying at that “ time before His Majesty, they ought not to “ proceed to Election, till they had receiv'd His Ma- “ jesty's Answer to the same. And thereupon “ they all Agreed, (except Mr. Charnock) That “ the Election should be deferr'd till the next “ Day. On Thursday in the Morning, the “ Vice-President told them, That the Choise of a “ President had been put off upon Account of “ their Petition to His Majesty; in Answer to “ which, They had not then receiv'd His Ma“ jesty's Pleasure: That the next Day was the “ usual Time they had Power to Prorogue the “ Election to, by the Statutes, and therefore it “ was necessary they should come to some Resolu“ tion. He told them further, That the King “ had Commanded them to Elect Mr. Farmer; “ and ask'd their Sense therein? Which was “ Unanimous, (except Mr. Charnock) That the “ Election should be deferr'd till the next Morning.
 “ Accordingly, Friday Apr. 15. at Eight a Clock “ in the Morning, the Vice-President and Fellows “ being Met, Dr. Tho. Smith and Capt. Bagshaw, “ two of the Fellows acquainted the rest, from “ the Lord President of the Council, That in “ Answer to their Petition, His Majesty having “ sent His Letter to the College, expected to be “ Obedy'd. After which, the Vice-President read “ again the King's Mandate, and ask'd them “ whether they would Comply with it? They “ desir'd they might proceed to an Election.
 “ And the Vice-President having propos'd, whe“ ther they would make any further Address to “ His Majesty? The Vice-President, Dr. Fairfax, “ Dr. Palfey, and Dr. Tho. Smith were for a “ second Address, but all the rest declar'd im“ mediately for proceeding to an Election. Then “ the Vice-President propos'd, whether they would “ go to an Election Viva voce, or by Scrutiny?
 “ The Vice-President, Mr. Thomson, and Mr. Char-“ nock were for proceeding in Viva voce; but “ all the rest were for a Scrutiny, (except Doctor “ Thomas Smith, who was for deferring the “ Election till they had once more Petition'd “ the King.) Therefore it being the Sense of “ the Majority, That they ought to proceed to “ the Election of a President, according to the “ Statutes, and this the last Day limited; in “ order to it, the Holy Sacrament was solemnly “ taken by all, (except Charnock.) Then the “ Statutes relating to the Choise of a President, “ and against Corrupt Election, were read by “ the Vice-President. Every one took the Oath “ prescribed in the Statutes, (except Mr. Thomp“ son and Mr. Charnock, who refus'd it) and the “ Two Senior Fellows were Sworn Scrutators in “ the Scrutiny of the whole Society. For the “ Nomination of a President, Dr. Hough and “ Mr. Maynard had each of them the Major-“ part of the Voices. And then the Thirteen “ Senior Fellows being Met to Elect One of these “ Two; Dr. Hough had Eleven Voices, and was 1687.

“ accordingly pronounc'd President by the Senior “ Scrutator; And Mr. Maynard was Appointed “ by the Thirteen Senior Fellows to Present him “ as President-Elect to the Visitor, in order to his “ Admission. After this, Mr. Charnock and “ Mr. Thompson declar'd Viva voce for Mr. Farmer, “ according to His Majesty's Letter. The next “ Day, Dr. Hough being presented to the Visitor, “ was Sworn, and Admitted President by his “ Lordship, according to the Statutes; and on “ the Sunday next following he took the same “ Oath again before the Society; and afterwards, “ as President, took his Seat in the Chapel.

“ The King being inform'd of it, Ordered the “ Lord Sunderland to Write to the Fellows; which “ he did in the following Terms: Gentlemen, The “ King being inform'd, That notwithstanding his “ late Mandate, sent to you for Electing Mr. Farmer “ to be President of your College, you have made Choise “ of another Person; His Majesty Commands me to “ let you know, He is much surpris'd at these “ Proceedings, and expects you should send me an “ Account of what pass'd on that Occasion, and whe- “ ther you did receive His Majesty's said Mandate “ before you chose Dr. Hough.

“ Thereupon the Vice-President and Fellows “ draw up their Case relating to the late Election “ of a President; which was presented to the “ Duke of Ormond, Chancellor of the University “ of Oxford, with a Letter wherein they humbly “ begg'd His Grace to Interpose with His most Sacred “ Majesty for them; that they might not lie under “ the Weight of His Displeasure, for not being in a “ Capacity of Obeying His Commands. This Sub“ mission not being satisfactory, and the Duke of “ Ormond's Interposition little regarded, the Vice-“ President and Fellows were Cited to Appear “ before the Ecclesiastical Commissioners at White“ hall.

“ On June 6. the Vice-President and Dr. Fair“ fax, Dr. F. Smith, Mr. Hammond, Mr. Dobson “ and Mr. Fairer, Deputed Fellows, Appear'd be“ fore the Lords Commissioners, according to the “ above-mention'd Citation. And it being de“ manded of them, Why they refus'd to Obeey the “ King's Mandate? They desir'd Time to Con“ sider of it: Which was Granted to the 13th; “ at which time Appearing, the Vice-President “ deliver'd in their Answer; which was read by “ Mr. Bridgman, and wherein they alledg'd; “ That the College of St. Mary Magdalen in Oxon
 “ is a Body-Corporate, Govern'd by Loyal Statutes, “ Granted and Confirm'd to them by His Majesty's

“ and Ordinances of the College; and that he will not procure any Dispensation, contrary to his aforesaid Oath, or any part thereof, nor contrary to the Statutes and Ordinances to which it relates: And if it shall happen that any Dispensation of this sort, of whatsoever Authority it shall be, be Granted; that he will neither make use of it, nor in any sort Consent thereunto. That on the 11th of April they receiv'd His Majesty's Letters Mandatory, to Elect and Admit Mr. Anthony Farmer President of the said College: But forasmuch as the Vice-President and Fellows apprehended the Right of Election to be in them, and believ'd His Majesty never intended to dispossess them of their Rights; and forasmuch as the said Mr. Farmer had never been Fellow either of Magdalen or New-College in Oxon, and had not those Qualifications which by the said Statutes of the College are requir'd in the Character of a President; and in regard that they could not Comply with his Majesty's Letter, without the Violation of their Oaths, and Hazard of their Legal Interest and Property, wherewith they were by their Statutes possess'd, and which by their Oaths they are bound to maintain; They represented the same, by their humble Petition, to His Majesty: And that having deferr'd the Election to the last Day limited by their Statutes, then they had made Choise of the Reverend Mr. John Hough, B. D. one of the Fellows of their College, and a Person every way qualified to be President; who had been since Confirm'd by the Bishop of Winton their Visitor, as the Statutes of the said College direct. And that they might not lie under His Majesty's Displeasure by their Proceedings, they did make an humble Representation thereof to His Majesty, by His Grace the Duke of Ormond, Chancellor of the University of Oxon, setting forth their indispensible Obligations to Observe their Founder's Statutes. All which Matters they humbly offer'd to their Lordships, and pray'd to be dismiss'd with their Lordship's Favour.

“ This Answer was Sign'd but by Five of the Delegates, Dr. Fairfax not Consenting to it; and therefore he desir'd their Lordships to Hear him a-part, and take his Reasons why he could not Subscribe. After the reading of the Answer, the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys being in hopes he would submit, gave him leave to speak, saying; Ay, this looks like a Man of Sense, and a good Subject; Let's hear what he will say:— But finding his Mistake, and that Dr. Fairfax chiefly insist'd, That in Ecclesiastical Courts there should be a Libel given to the Party Appeal'd, that he may know what he is Accus'd of; that he desir'd that Libel, and did not know what he was Call'd there for; and that the Matter did not lie in that Court, but in Westminster-Hall. The Chancellor endeavour'd to baffle his Plea, by telling him, He was a Doctor of Divinity, but not of Law. To this the Doctor reply'd, That he desir'd to know by what Commission and Authority they Sate? Which put Jeffreys into such excessive Passion, as made him cry out; Pray, what Commission have you to be so Impudent in Court?— This Man ought to keep in a Dark Room; Why do you suffer him without a Guardian?— Why did you not bring him to me, to beg him?— Pray let the Officers seize him.— Then the Delegates were Order'd to Withdraw; and after a whole Hour's Debate, the Vice-President was Call'd in alone, and Order'd to Attend the Court, with the rest of the Deputed Fellows, on Wednesday the 22d of the same Month.

“ On the Appointed Day the Delegates appear'd again, according to the Commissioner's Order, and Gave in their Allegations against

“ Mr. Farmer; the most material of which were, That he had Mis-behav'd himself in Trinity-College in Cambridge, and had there receiv'd Admonition from the Master, in order to his Expulsion:— That having left Cambridge, he taught School at Chippenham in Wiltshire, under a Non-conformist Minister without License:— That in Septemb. 1683. he was Admitted of St. Mary Magdalen Hall in Oxon; where such frequent Complaints were brought against him to the Principal, for his troublesome Humour and unquiet Temper, that, to preserve the Peace of the Society, he was desir'd to leave the said Hall:— That after his leaving Magdalen-Hall, he was admitted into Magdalen-College, where discoursing about Religion, he declar'd, That there was no Protestant but would Cut the King's Throat:— Though at other times he said, That whatsoever he pretended, he was really a Member of the Church of England; and that he made an Interest with some Roman Catholicks, only to get Preferment by their Means, and for that reason was willing to be thought of their Religion:— And that, in general, The said Mr. Farmer had had the unhappiness to lie under an ill Fame, as to his Life and Conversation. — These Allegations were Confirm'd by several Letters and Certificates produced in Court; which Mr. Farmer vainly endeavour'd to confute: But nevertheless, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Depriv'd Dr. Hough of his Presidentship, and Suspended Dr. Alderich and Dr. Fairfax, and Order'd the Fellows of the College to cause their Sentence to be executed, and affixed to the Gates of their College. Which they neglecting to do, they were Cited to Appear before the Commissioners at Whitehall, upon the 29th of June, to Answer the said Contempt.

“ The Court, by this time, finding that Farmer was a Man of so profligate a Life, that though he had promis'd to advance the Interest of the Papists, and even to declare himself one of them, upon his Promotion to that Place; yet they began to be ashamed of him: And therefore, instead of insisting on the former Mandate in his favour, the King Granted another, in behalf of Dr. Parker, then Bishop of Oxford, and one of the Court Creatures. The Place of President being already, in a Legal manner, fill'd up by Dr. Hough, (which though it had not been, yet the Bishop of Oxford was likewise incapable, by the Statutes of the College, of being Chosen) the Fellows did not think themselves oblig'd to proceed to a second Election.

“ The King was so Incens'd at this fresh Contempt of his Orders, that he came to Oxford in Person; and having Commanded the Fellows of Magdalen-College to attend him at Christ-Church, he ask'd Dr. Pudsey, the Senior of the Fellows that appear'd before him, Whether they did receive his Letter? When the Doctor answer'd, They did; the King, in an angry Tone, reply'd, Then you have done very Uncivilly by Me, and Undutifully. — Here they all Kneel'd; and Dr. Pudsey offer'd a Petition, wherein they humbly shew'd, It was an inexpressible Affliction to them, to find themselves reduced to such an Extremity, that either they must Disobey His Majesty's Command, contrary to their Inclinations, and that constant Course of Loyalty which they had shewn upon all Occasions; or else Break their Founder's Statutes, and deliberately Perjure themselves. — Then they mention'd the Statutes, and the Oaths that every one of them had taken at their Admission to their Fellowships; and Concluded with an humble Prayer to His Majesty, To give them leave to lay their Case and Themselves at His Majesty's Feet, earnestly beseeching

 “ Tenderness which he vouchsafed to all his other “ Subjects. But their submissive Posture did not “ appease the King, who refusing to receive their “ ate Words; Ye have been a Stubborn, Turbulent

 “ Get you gone! — Know, I am your King! — “ I will be Obey'd; and I Command you to be gone! — “ Go, and Admit the Bishop of Oxon Head, Principal, “ What d'ye call it? of your College; (One that “ stood by said, President) I mean, President of

 “ They shall feel the Weight of their Sovereign's

 “ Petition on their Knees, the King said to them; “ Get you gone! I will receive nothing from you, “ till you have Obey'd Me, and Admitted the Bishop

desir'd their Lordships that this Declaration might be Recorded. The next Question the Bishop put to him, was, Whether they Observ'd all those Statutes? — And the President answering, He hop'd they did: — You have a Statute there for Mafs, (reply'd he) Why don't you read Mafs? — This Question from a Bishop was a little Surprising; but the President soon satisfy'd it, by telling him, That the Matter of that Oath was Unlawful; and in such a Case, no Man was oblig'd to Observe an Oath; and besides, that that Statute was taken away by the Laws of the Land. — After several other frivolous Expostulations, the Bishop of Chester Demanded, First, All their Registers. Secondly, The Revenues of their College, with an Account of their Benefactors; to what Use the Money was assign'd, how employ'd, and how far converted to other Uses; or, in plain English, how far it was design'd for Hospitality? And, Thirdly, A Copy of all the Leases they had Lett for Two Years last past.

On Saturday Morning, Dr. Hough was several times requir'd to Deliver up the Keys, and quiet Possession of the Lodgings, to the Person whom His Majesty had Appointed President: Which the Doctor refusing to Obey, alledging the Legality of his Election, the King's Proctor stood up, and accus'd him of Contumacy: And then the Bishop of Chester Admonish'd him Three times, To Depart peaceably out of the Lodgings, and to Act no longer as President, or pretended President of his College. The same Day in the Afternoon, the Bishop of Chester ask'd the Fellows, Whether they wou'd Admit the Bishop of Oxon President; since Dr. Hough's Place was declared Void? To which the greater part answer'd, They cou'd not do it, without premeditated Perjury, and therefore wou'd not do it.

During this Examination, Dr. Hough came into Court, without any Attendance; and having waited till it was ended, and the Commissioners at a Pause, he desir'd Leave to speak a few Words: Which being Granted, he said, That they having been pleas'd to Deprive him of his Place of President of that College, he did Protest against all their Proceedings in Prejudice of him and his Right, as Illegal, Unjust, and Null; And therefore he Appeal'd to his Sovereign Lord the King, in his Courts of Justice. Upon which the Strangers and Young Scholars in the Room gave a Hum — Which so Incens'd their Lordships, that notwithstanding all the Protestations the President and Fellows cou'd make, the President in particular offering to purge himself, by Oath, that he was no ways accessory to it; yet the Lord Chief-Justice was not to be pacify'd, but charging it upon Dr. Hough, bound him in a Bond of a Thousand Pounds, and Security to the like Value, to make his Appearance at the King's-Bench-Bar the Term following. Moreover, the Lord Chief-Justice said, They had met with nothing but Affronts from the College: That as for himself, he valu'd not what People said of him, but was resolv'd to Vindicate the Honour of his Master, to the last drop of his Blood; And if the Civil Power could not keep 'em in Order, the Military shou'd. — Baron Fenner likewise shew'd his Resentment upon this Occasion, by punning on the late President's Name, and saying to him, Sir, You must not think to Huff (Hough) us. About which time, several Officers, then in Town, came into the Room.

On Tuesday, the Court being Met, Dr. Stafford, one of the Fellows, offer'd a Paper in Answer to what was Objected the Friday before, That the King's Mandate in favour of Mr. Farmer, implied an Inhibition. Which their Lordships having perus'd, would not suffer to be read publickly, but ask'd the Fellows whether they wou'd Sign it? bidding them to do it at their Peril. The Fellows being Withdrawn, and not thinking it was necessary to Sign a Plea which the Commissioners refus'd to have Argu'd, they return'd the Paper into the Court, Subscrib'd only by Dr. Fairfax and Dr. Stafford. Their Lordships taking no further Notice of that Paper, the Bishop of Chester ask'd the Fellows, Whether they wou'd Install the Bishop of Oxford President, or Assist at the Installing of him? — To this they answer'd, as before, That as they could not do it, without deliberate Perjury; so it was not in their Power to do it. — Therupon Mr. Wiggins, Chaplain to the Bishop of Oxford, Impower'd as a Proxy to be Install'd President, for his Lord, (then confin'd to his Chamber, by some Indisposition) was put into the President's Stall by the Bishop of Chester, none of the Fellows being present but Mr. Charnock, and took the Oaths which the Statutes enjoin the President at his Admission, and the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy. Then their Lordships conducted him to the President's Lodgings; where knocking three times, and the Door not being open'd, a Smith was sent for to force it open, and Mr. Wiggins took Possession of the Lodgings.

Immediately after, the Bishop of Chester ask'd the Fellows, Whether they would Obey the Bishop of Oxon, as now Install'd President, by Virtue of the King's Mandate? — Doctor Fairfax answer'd, He neither cou'd nor wou'd Obey him, having already a Lawful and Statutable President. — Others Comply'd with His Majesty's Pleasure; and others again desir'd Time to Consider on so weighty a Question: Which was Granted; the Bishop of Chester bidding them go and Consult about it among themselves. In the Afternoon, this Answer was given in by the Society, (except Dr. Fairfax) That whereas His Majesty had been pleas'd, by his Royal Authority, to cause the Bishop of Oxon to be Install'd President, they did Submit, as far as was Lawful, and Agreeable to the Statutes of the College, and no way prejudicial to the Right and Title of Dr. Hough. — This Answer was accepted, except the last Clause, which the Lord Chief-Justice, and Baron Fenner, declar'd, as Judges, to be insignificant; since nothing they could do, cou'd any-way invalidate Dr. Hough's Title, but left them still at liberty to be Witnesses for him, or to be any other way serviceable to him in the Recovery of his Right: And upon this Assurance, the Society was prevail'd with to leave out the last Clause. Dr. Fairfax persisting in his former Answer, receiv'd Sentence of Expulsion: Against which he Protested, as Null, Unjust and Unlawful. This Protestation was Over-ru'd by the Commissioners; and a Copy of the Sentence deny'd, though most earnestly desir'd at the Instance of Dr. Hedges and Mr. Vice-Chancellor. Two Days after, their Lordships thinking they had gain'd their Point, declar'd, That they were well satisfy'd with the Answer the Society had given them; And though before they had laid a Libel to their Charge, yet that Night, they declar'd they had met with nothing but Civility, and that they shou'd receive the same from them: That they had shewn themselves Men of excellent Tempers, and that they would represent it faithfully Above, to their Advantage; — (and immediately dispatcht an Express to Court, with an Account of their Proceedings.)

On Wednesday Morning, the Fellows having been Order'd the Day before to bring in their Answer

“ Answer to the following Questions : 1. What Gifts and Provisions they had, for the Entertainment of Strangers? 2. What was the Value of them? 3. How they were Apply'd? 4. And where was the Place of Entertainment? They made it appear very satisfactorily, That one Year with another, they gave almost a Hundred Pounds in Charity-Money, Over-and-above what by their Statutes they were obliged to give. Upon which their Lordships expatiated upon their generous Bounty and Liberality, saying, The Complaint on this Account was groundless, and that it would induce His Majesty to entertain better Thoughts of them in all other Matters.

“ On Thursday, the Fellows having presented to the Commissioners a List of Leases, which had been Renew'd for Two Years last past; Mr. Charnock (the New-Convert) ask'd their Lordships, whether these Leases stood good, which had been Seal'd since Dr. Hough's Election? The Lord Chief-Justice answer'd, Yes; for Corporations always speak by their Seals. Then their Lordships perus'd the College Registers; and finding nothing in them to Object against, they were Return'd, and the Court Adjourn'd.

“ On Friday Morning, the Commissioners acquainted the Fellows, They had represented them fairly to the King, but that His Majesty expected some farther Submission; which they Advis'd them to make, by acknowledging their Contempt to His Sacred Majesty in Person, and to his Letters; That they should promise to behave themselves Loyally for the future; That they should own the Proceedings and Legality of the Court, implore His Majesty's Pardon, and lay themselves at his Feet; And that they should declare their intire Submission to the Bishop of Oxon, as their President. The Fellows Answer'd, in Writing, That they had endeavour'd, in all their Actions, to express their Duty to His Majesty; and being conscious to themselves, that in the whole Conduct of the Business before their Lordships, they had done nothing but what their Oaths and Statutes had indispensably oblig'd them to; they could not make any Declaration, whereby to acknowledge they had done any thing amiss; having acted according to the Principles of Loyalty and Obedience, so far as they cou'd, without doing Violence to their Consciences, or Prejudice to their Rights, (one of which, they conceiv'd the Electing a President to be) from which they were Sworn upon no Account to depart. — Upon the perusal of this Answer, their Lordships express'd their Dislike of it, saying, It did not come up to the Address sent to His Majesty at Bath, nor to the Paper they deliver'd in on Tuesday. Whereupon a fresh Question being put to the Fellows, Whether they would Obey the Bishop of Oxon as their President? All, except one or two, answer'd, They cou'd not do it. — Then Mr. Fulham being particularly Interrogated; he alleg'd, That the Bishop of Oxon had not Possession in due Form of Law, nor by proper Officers; And that he was inform'd, that the proper Officers to give Possession of a Freehold, was the Sheriff, with a Posse Comitatus. — To this the Lord Chief-Justice reply'd, in a Passion, Pray, who's the best Lawyer, you or I? Your Oxford Law is no better than your Oxford Divinity: If you've a mind to a Posse Comitatus, you may have one soon enough. — Mr. Fulham endeavour'd to make an Excuse for what he had said: Which their Lordships reject'd; and having thought fit to Suspend him from the Profits of his Fellowship, for his Contempt, and Opprobrious Language, they Adjourn'd till the 16th of November, and immediately went for London.

“ The King having seen an Account of the Proceedings of the Visitors, His Majesty Order'd them, That at their Return to the College, they should Summons all the Fellows to Appear before them, and endeavour to make them sensible of their Offences; and if they shou'd refuse to Subscribe the above-mention'd Submission, immediately to Expell them, for their Obstinacy. Pursuant to these Instructions, the Lords Commissioners return'd to Oxford; and being Sate, the first thing they did, was to send for the Buttery-Book; then they call'd for Mr. Joyner and Mr. Allbone, two Roman Catholics, whom they Entred actual Fellows; all Oaths being dispens'd with, besides that of the College. That done, the Bishop of Chester made a Speech to the Fellows, wherein he told them, That their many Contempts and wilful Disobedience had occasion'd this Visitation, which would end at last in their Ruine: That their Society had been long exercis'd in the Method of Quarrelling; had always been troubled with Factions Spirits, and resty Mutineers, ever since the Restauration of the late King: That they had encourag'd Quarrels among themselves; Quarrels, between themselves and President; Quarrels, at length, between themselves and Visitor. That by these Steps, from Quarrelling with the President and Visitor, they had at last advanced to the highest pitch of Insolence, to Quarrel with their Prince, and Affront His Sacred Majesty. Then he endeavour'd to make them sensible of their irregular Conduct, and heinous Offences, from their first Disobeying the King's Mandate, to that Day: He told them, They urg'd the Observance of their Statutes; of which they had not been so constant Observers, when their own Humour prompted them to a Dispensation; Witness (said he) that of being Serv'd per Manculus; by which great Scandals have come to this Society, by reason of Bastards. — His Majesty (added he) was extremely amaz'd, that his Clemency should be despis'd; but yet, to your Comforts be it spoken, his Patience and Goodness extend as far as your Provocations can: But if you still persist in your Obstinacy, those that are too Tall to Stand, and too Stubborn to Bend, deserve to be Broken. And now I think I have said enough to let you know, That the Fig-leaves you have so artificially slitch't together, are not sufficient to cover your Nakedness. I wish to God you had the same Tenderness for your own Concern, as His Majesty's Commissioners have for you. But if you still persist to Oppose the Royal Power of the King; We who are come to Vindicate the Right and Honour of His Majesty, resolve to discharge our Consciences, and Duties to God and the King, without any respect of Popularity; that's but the Paradise of Fools, and Scorn of Wise Men; and therefore, as for Us, We have no more regard to Peoples Dislike, than what they Dream. By reason therefore of your late Hypocritical Submission, the Commissioners have thought fit to Draw up an Instrument; to which if you shall immediately Subscribe, before you leave the Room, We shall leave you to His Majesty's Pardon: And this We expect from you All, except Mr. Thomas Smith and Mr. Charnock, with whose Behaviour the King is so well satisfy'd, that He expects no more from them.

“ The above-mention'd Submission being read to the Fellows; All (except Dr. Tho. Smith and Mr. Charnock) refus'd to Sign it. Mr. Thompson being Call'd in his Turn, alleg'd, He had always been Obedient to the King's Commands; That he was not Concern'd in the Election of Dr. Hough; That he Voted for Mr. Farmer, and was ready to Submit to the Bishop of Oxon; and so he was excus'd. After a short time, all who

“ who refus'd to Sign the Submission, being “ Twenty-five in Number, were call'd in, and “ by Sentence of their Lordships were depriv'd, “ and expell'd from their Fellowships, for their “ Disobedience to His Majesty's Command, and “ obstinately Contemning his Royal Authority; “ against which they all protested, Declaring “ they would use all Just and Legal Ways of “ being relieved. This Sentence was confirm'd “ by a Decree made at Whitehall by the Eccle“ siastical Commissioners, Declaring, That Dr.
 “ Hough, who had been depriv'd before, and the “ said Twenty-five Fellows should be incapable of “ receiving, or being admitted into any Ecclesiastical “ Dignity, Benefice or Promotion; and such of “ them who are not yet in Holy Orders, they ad- “ judged incapable of receiving, or being admitted “ into the same. Thus by a Sentence of an Il“ legal Court were a Society of Learned and “ Worthy Protestants turn'd out of their Free“ holds, to make Room for a Papists Seminary; “ and thus was King James prevail'd with by “ his Evil Ministers to assume a Power, not oiu-“ ly to Dispense with Laws, but with Oaths “ also. After the Expulsion of the Fellows most “ of the Demy's were likewise turn'd out of Mag- “ dalen-College by the Bishop of Oxford, and “ Mr. Charnock his Vice-President, and Roman- “ Catholicks put in their Places. To acknowledge “ the King's Favours, the Bishop of Oxford Pub“ lish'd a Book containing Reasons for abrogating “ the Test and Penal Laws, and His Majesty “ commanded the Stationers not to Print any “ Answer to the same.

Not only the Church-of-England-Men were abundantly satisfied that the King's Declaration of Indulgence was to prepare the Way to Popery, but the very Dissenters themselves began to be convinc'd that this alone was the Design of it. Nay the King Himself was now conscious that his Protestant Subjects generally understood his Meaning, and expected no Liberty, either to the Church or to separate Congregations, any longer than till the Papists were able to exercise their full and absolute Will and Power. To take away this Jealousy of the People, the King repeated and confirm'd his former Declaration in a manner that did but increase the Fears of Popery. This New Declaration was in this Form.

JAMES R.

“ OUR Conduct has been such in all Times “ as ought to have perswaded the World, “ That we are Firm and Constant in our Reso“ lutions: Yet that easie People may not be a-“ bus'd by the Malice of crafty wicked Men, “ We think fit to Declare, That our Intentions “ are not changed since the 4th of April, 1687.
 “ when We Issued out Our Declaration for Li“ berty of Conscience in the following Terms.
 “[Here the Declaration was recited, and then it “ follows.] “ Ever since We granted this Indul“ gence We have made it Our Principal Care to “ see it preserv'd without Distinction, as we are “ encourag'd to do daily by Multitudes of Ad“ dresses, and many other Assurances We receive “ from our Subjects of all Perswasions, as Testi“ monies of their Satisfaction and Duty; the “ Effects of which We doubt not, but the next Par“ liament will plainly shew; and that it will not “ be in vain, That We have resolv'd to use Our “ utmost Endeavours to establish Liberty of Con“ science, on such just and equal Foundations as “ will render it unalterable, and secure to all “ People the Free Exercise of their Religion for “ ever; by which future Ages may reap the Be“ nefit; of what is so undoubtedly for the general

New Declaration for Liberty of Conscience.

“ Good of the whole Kingdom. It is such a Se“ curity We desire without the Burthen of Oaths “ and Tests, which have been unhappily made by “ some Governments, but could never support any: “ Nor should Men be advanced by such Means “ to Offices and Employments, which ought to “ be the Reward of Services, Fidelity, and Merit “ We must Conclude, That not only good Christians “ will joy'n this, but whoever is concerned for the “ Increase of the Wealth and Power of the Na“ tion. It would perhaps prejudice some of our “ Neighbours, who might lose Part of those Ad“ vantages they now enjoy, if Liberty of Con“ science were settled in these Kingdoms, which “ are above all others most capable of Improve“ ments, and of commanding the Trade of the “ World. In Pursuance of this great Work, We “ have been forced to make many Changes both of “ Civil and Military Officers throughout our Do“ minions, not thinking any ought to be em“ ploy'd in Our Service who will not contribute “ towards the Establisshing the Peace and Great“ ness of their Country, which We most earnestly “ desire, as unbyas'd Men may see by the “ whole Conduct of Our Government; and by the “ Condition of Our Fleet and Armies, which “ with good Management, shall be constantly “ the same, and greater if the Safety or Honour “ of the Nation require it. We recommend these “ Considerations to all Our Subjects, and that “ they will reflect on their present Ease and “ Happiness, how far above Three Years that it “ has pleas'd God to permit Us to Reign over “ these Kingdoms, We have not appear'd to be “ that Prince Our Enemies would have made “ the World afraid of; Our chief Aim having “ been, not to be the Oppressour, but the Father “ of Our People, of which We can give no bet“ ter Evidence, than by conjuring them to lay a“ side all private Animosities, as well as ground“ less jealousies, and to choose such Members of “ Parliament as may do their Parts to finish “ what we have begun for the Advantage of “ the Monarchy, over which Almighty God hath “ plac'd Us, being Resolv'd to call a Parliament “ that shall Meet in November next at farthest.

Given at our Court at Whitehall, the Twenty-Seventh Day of April, 1688. In the Fourth Year of Our Reign.

The King was not contented to have this Declaration Publish'd in the usual Manner, but he was Resolv'd to have it solemnly Read in all Churches, as the Political Gospel of his Reign. The Bishops and Clergy were of all others the most averse to the Subject-Matter of the Declaration, as being most sensible of the ill Design and ill Effects of it; and therefore the Court seem'd the more willing to mortify these their Enemies, and make them become Accessary to their own Ruin; and even to eat their own Dung, as Father Petres proudly Threatned, and therefore this Order of Council was Made and Publish'd at the Court at Whitehall, the 4th of May, 1688.

This Declaration ordered to be Read in all Churches. The Bishops and Clergy generally refuse to do it.

By the KING's Most Excellent Majesty, and the Lords of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council.

“ IT is this Day Order'd by His Majesty in “ Council, That His Majesty's late Gracious “ Declaration, bearing Date the 27th of April last, “ be read at the usual Time of Divine Service, “ upon the 20th and 27th of this Month, in all “ Churches and Chapels within the Cities of Lon- “ dun and Westminster, and Ten Miles therea“ bouts: And upon the 3d and 10th of June next “ in all other Churches and Chapels throughout

Order of Council for it.

 " der'd, That the Right Reverend the Bishops,

 " stributed throughout their several and respective " Diocesses, to be Read accordingly.

The Bishops and whole Clergy of the Church of England were not so much surpriz'd, as they were troubled at this Imperious Order, which they had Reason to take as the greatest Hardship and Oppression that could be put upon them. On this Occasion there was a Meeting in the Arch-Bishop's Palace at Lambeth, to Consult what ought to be done upon such an extraordinary Juncture. After Prayers and mature Deliberation, It was Agreed, That the " Matter of the Declaration was alto" gether Illegal, the Foot upon which it stood be" ing a Power not only to Dispense in contingent
 " and particular Cases, which, if the Lawgivers
 " could have foreseen, they would have provided " a Dispensation for them, but it was to Dispense " with all sorts of Laws in Cases contrary to the " very Design and End of making them : That " this was not properly a Dispensing but a Dis-
 " annulling Power, highly prejudicial to the King " Himself, because it took away that Faith and " Trust which the People repose in him when a " Law is made, which they look upon as their " Security : That 'twas true, each Bishop or Mi" nister was not a capable Judge in such Cases ;
 " but however he was a Judge for his own pri" vate Conscience, against which he must not go :
 " That this Case was publicly adjudg'd in Par" liament, 1672 ; That the general Forbearance " of Addressees, grounded upon the Illegality of
 " of that Dispensing Power, shew'd this to have " been the Judgment of the greatest Part of the " Clergy and others : That the Declaration of the " present Judges, went no farther than the partic" ular Military Case of Sir Edward Hales, which,
 " in whatsoever Words it was expres'd, yet never " came Legally to the Cognizance of the Subject :
 " That an unlawful Matter was not to be Publish'd
 " if he who Publish'd it, thought the Matter un" lawful ; for it cannot come to him, being Il" legal, by any Authority, for the King can do " no Illegal Thing, and if his Officers do it, they " do it not by the King's Authority, and therefore " the refusing of it is no Disobedience, being no
 " Illegal Refusal : That if then, the Bishops Pub" lish'd the Declaration, they did it voluntarily
 " as their own Act, and consequently Publish'd " an Illegal Thing without Legal Authority, and " were punishable for it : That many and great
 " were the ill Consequences of Reading the Decla- " ration : First, That many would justly judge
 " the Clergy either Cowards or Hypocritical " Time-servers, in Publishing what they thought " Illegal, and Illegally sent to them. Secondly,
 " That many who had Votes for Parliament-Men,
 " would take this for the Consent of the Pub" lishers, and be strenghtened in the Chusing such " Men, as should be Friends not only to the Indul- " gence, but to the Foundation of it, the Dispensing
 " Power. Thirdly, That the World would have " Reason to take this Publication for an Appro" bation, because there could be no other In" tention in ordering it to be Publish'd, but " to make the Clergy Parties to it ; for it was " as much known before it was Read as it would " be after the Reading of it ; and therefore the " making it known was not the only Thing in" tended. And Fourthly, That after this they " must expect further Things to be Publish'd
 " by them, at which they must make a Stand ;
 " and their making a Stand when they had lost " their Reputation would be of no Force : That 1688. " therefore in Prudence as well as Conscience, " they ought not to Publish a Declaration, which " they knew to be against Law, and which in " its Nature and Design was levell'd against " their own Interest, and that of their Religion.

 " Some objected, That their Refusal would be in" terpreted by the Papists, as a Failure in the " great Principles of Loyalty, to which the " Church of England made Pretence ; others said, " That Dissenters would construe it, as a Decla" ration against all Tenderness to them ; and o" thers again, That Suspension or Deprivation " of the Refusers might follow, whereby the Peo" ple of their Church might be left as Sheep " without a Shepherd. To the First Objection
 " it was answer'd, That their Non-Addressing " had been reflected on in Books as well as Dis" courses, but had no Effect to blast their Loy" alty, tho' the Clergy refus'd to Address even " in a Branch that made for themselves, because " of that one Foundation, on which that Clause
 " stood with the rest, of the Dispensing Power :
 " That Loyalty being Obedience according to " Law, they were the Loyal Men who acted not " contrary thereunto ; That the best Friends to " the Crown are those who support the Law,
 " and that they still maintain'd the Principle " of Suffering without any unchristian Opposi" tion. To the Second, That the Dissenters " had never such Assurances from Church-Men
 " of their Inclination to Tenderness to them, as " they then receiv'd ; That they could not but " see, that this Refusal was not to hinder any " Favours to them by this Indulgence, but the " Dispensing Power ; which, if it took Place,
 " they could not but discern, that a New Magna " Charta for Liberty of Conscience would be of " no Validity to them, for a New Declaration
 " might dispense with it at Pleasure : And that " the wisest and best of them would look upon " their Refusal as a Testimony of their Sincer" ity to the Protestant Religion, and not of " any Disaffection to them. To the Last Ob" jection it was answer'd, That the Church " and their Religion would suffer less by the " Conscioufness of their Suspended Prelates or " Ministers, than it would by their Illegal Com" pliance in so great and Fundamental a Point :
 " That they have better Thoughts of the King's " Clemency and Justice, when he should be in-" form'd by Men of Conscience, against the " Counsels of Men of Interest ; for how could " the King, at the very Time he Proclaim'd en" tire Liberty of Conscience to all, even those " who formerly were look'd upon as his Ene" mies, do an open Violence to the Consciences " of those who had ever been acknowledg'd to " be his Friends ? And in short, That they " ought to perform their Duty, and leave the " Event to God ; and that a certain Evil must not " be done to avoid a Contingent one.

Upon this Consultation the Arch-Bishop and Bishops, considering how great a Penalty was falling upon the whole Clergy of England, if they should be Suspended for not Reading the Declaration, and being unwilling to lay them under so great a Temptation, as to save themselves from Ruin by a sinful Compliance, chose rather to take the Blame and the Punishment upon themselves, in refusing to send the Declaration to their Clergy. An Heroical Act becoming the Character of Bishops of the Church of England, who dar'd to be Confessors, as their Predecessors had been Martyrs, for the Protestant Religion. And therefore, before they parted they drew up an Humble Petition, Agreed to and Subscrib'd by all the Prelates who were then present, Dr. Sancrest, Lord Arch-Bishop of Can- 1688. terbury; Dr. Lloyd, Bishop of St. Asaph; Dr. Kenn, Bishop of Bath and Wells; Dr. Turner, Bishop of Ely; Dr. Lake, Bishop of Chichester; Dr. White, Bishop of Peterborough; and Sir Jonathan Trelowney, Bishop of Bristol, in this Form.

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

The Humble PETITION of William, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and divers of the Suffragan-Bishops of that Province (now present with him) in Behalf of themselves, and others of their absent Brethren, and of the Inferiour Clergy of their respective Diocesses,

HUMBLY SHEWETH,

THAT the great Averseness they find in themselves to the Distributing and Publishing in all their Churches Your Majesty's late Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, proceeds neither from any Want of Duty and Obedience to Your Majesty (Our Holy Mother, the Church of England, being both in her Principles and in her constant Practice unquestionably Loyal, and having to her great Honour been more than once publickly acknowledged to be so, by Your Gracious Majesty;) Nor yet from any Want of Tenderness to Dissenters, in Relation to whom We are willing to come to such a Temper as shall be thought fit, when the Matter shall be Considered and Settled in Parliament and Convocation: But among many other Considerations, from this especially, because that Declaration is founded upon such a Dispensing Power, as hath been often declared Illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672. and in the Beginning of Your Majesty's Reign; And is a Matter of so great Moment and Consequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State, that Your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour or Conscience, so far make themselves Parties to it, as the Distribution of it all over the Nation, and the Solemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's House and in the Time of his Divine Service, must amount to in common and reasonable Construction.

Your Petitioners therefore Most Humbly and Earnestly Beseech Your Majesty, That You will be Pleased not to insist upon their Distributing and Reading Your Majesty's said Declaration;

And Your Petitioners, as in Duty bound, shall ever Pray, &c.

The same Evening, May 18th. the Six Suffragan-Bishops went over directly to Whitehall, and being introduc'd by the Earl of Sunderland, deliver'd their Petition to the King, none but themselves and their Metropolitan being Privy to it. Upon the Reading of it the King startled, and shew'd himself to be very much incens'd, and made this Answer in a very angry Manner:

I have heard of this before, but did not believe it. I did not expect this from the Church of England, especially from some of You. If I change my Mind, you shall hear from Me; If not, I expect my Command shall be Obey'd. The Bishops reply'd, We resign our selves to the Will of God; and then immediately retir'd.

The King's Threatning Answer could not but strike a kind of Terror into the Minds of those Reverend Prelates, yet it was not able to make them forget their Duty, or to depart from their worthy Resolution. Indeed the New Bishops made by King James, and Two or Three other of his Creatures and Commissioners, did for Love or Fear disperse the Declaration, and yet even in those Diocesses few of the Clergy would submit to the Reading of it: Nay, and in those Parish-Churches where the Ministers comply'd with the Orders of their Superiours, the greatest Part of their Congregation run out as soon as they began to Read the said Declaration.

This Affair of the Bishops made a great deal of Noise throughout the Kingdom; The Church of England was alarm'd, and upon the Ferment; The Dissenters stood gazing at a Distance, and the Court was both uneasie, and unresolv'd what Course to steer in so Critical a Juncture. Some thought the King would now exert his Arbitrary Power, and Deprive those Prelates of their Dignities, by his sole Dispensing Authority; others, That he would be contented to deliver them to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and cause them to be Suspended: And others again, That He would refer the Matter to the Ensuing Parliament: But the Popish Party had other Methods in View.

And therefore the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury and the Six Bishops were Summon'd before the Council on June 8. and having made their Appearance, they were asked, Whether they owned the Petition? They immediately Answer'd, They humbly hop'd, That if they stood there as Criminals, His Majesty would not take Advantage of them, for they were always ready to Obey his Just Commands. Thereupon they were Order'd to withdraw, and being called in a Second Time, they made the same Answer to the same Question: But the Chancellor pressing them to own or disown the Paper at the Third Coming in, the Arch-Bishop confess'd that it was Written with his Own Hand, and the rest acknowledg'd that They had Sign'd it and Deliver'd it, adding withal, That they had done nothing but what they were ready to Justifie. The Lord-Chancellor fell into Anger and Reproaches, and pretended to endeavour to make them sensible of the ill Consequences of their Disobedience, which tended to diminish the King's Authority, and to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom; and then at last ask'd them, Whether they would give their Recognizances to appear before the Court of Kings-Bench to Answer this High Misdemeanour? This they all refus'd to do, insisting on the Privilege of their Peerage which they were Resolved to maintain, as well as the Rights of the Church, being equally bound by their Callings to oppose all Innovations both in Government and Religion. This bold Answer put the whole Council into some Amazement, and the Chancellor Jefferies threatned to send them to the Tower, unless they did immediately Recant, and withdraw their Petition. They unanimously Answer'd, That they were ready to go whithersoever His Majesty would please to send them, They hop'd the King of Kings would be their Protector and their Judge; They fear'd Nothing from Men, for having Acted according to Law, and their own Consciences, no Punishment should ever be able to shake their Resolutions. Thereupon a Warrant was drawn, and Subscrib'd by Chancellor Jefferies, the Earl of Sunderland, the Lord Arundel, the Marquess of Posis, and others, to Commit them to the Tower. 'Tis said some of the Judges there present refused to set their Hands to that Warrant: But however, it was immediately put in Execution; but for fear the People should be too much affected with such a moving Sight, they were sent away by Water. And yet for all this Caution, the Notice of their Commitment flew about the Town, and the People flockt in Shoals to the River-side, and with loud Acclamations extol'd the Constancy and Courage of the Bishops, and crav'd their Benedictions. They were no sooner Land'd at the Tower, but most of the Officers and Soldiers fell on their Knees, to beg their Blessings. Their Lordships were suffer'd to go immediately to the Chappel, to Evening-Prayer, where the Second Lesson was, by the Course of the Church, extremely well-adapted to their Condition, 2 Cor. vi. Giving no Offence in any thing, that the Ministry be not blamed: but in all things approving our selves as the Ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, &c.

The Court, to put a Colour upon this Arbitrary Action, thus represented it to the World: "Whitehall, June 8. The Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of St. Asaph, Ely, Chichester, Bath and Wells, Peterborough, and Bristol, being Summon'd to Appear before His Majesty in Council, to Answer to such Matters of Misdemeanor as should be Objected against them; they accordingly Appear'd this Day: And the Petition they lately presented to His Majesty being owned by them, they were required to enter into Recognizance for their Appearance at the King's-Bench, the First Day of the next Term. Which they refusing to do, they were, by Warrant Signed by the Lords of the Council, Committed to the Tower, for Contriving, Making and Publishing a Seditious Libel against His Majesty and His Government. And Mr. Attorney and Solicitor-General were Ordered to Prosecute them for the same the next Term.

It was now high-Time for the Jesuit's Prophecy of the Birth of a Prince of Wales, to be accomplish'd. It had been for some Months uncertain, whether Windsor, Hampton-Court or Whitehall, was to be the Place where the Queen design'd to Lie in: But on the sudden, Her Majesty had this Week given Orders for the Fitting up of an Apartment for that Purpose in St. James's-House; and sent many repeated Commands, That it must be Finish'd by Saturday-night. Accordingly Her Majesty, on Saturday June 9. was carry'd in a Chair to St. James's, after she had play'd at Cards at Whitehall till Eleven a Clock at Night: And the next Morning between the Hours of Nine and Ten, People were not a little surpriz'd, to hear that she was Brought-to-Bed of a Prince. Nay, the News was told with as much Confidence before the Delivery, as after it: As if it were a Secret committed to some People who could not keep it. An Eminent Citizen now living, Sir S. E. is ready to Attest it upon Oath, That he was Call'd up early that Morning to come to an Irish Agent of the King's, and while he was with him, a Messenger came to him from the Court, in very great haste and joy, and told him in a great Rapture, That they had got a Prince of Wales: Which was some Hours before the Time that was afterwards given out. In short, The former Suspicions concerning Her Majesty's Big-Belly, were now strengthen'd by the Circumstances of her Delivery, at a time when most Protestant Ladies were at Church, the Bishops Imprison'd, the Princess Anne of Denmark at Bath, and the Dutch Ambassador never Call'd to be a Witness in behalf of the Princess of Orange. However, this Account was Publish'd by Authority:

Whitehall, June 10. 1688. "This Day, between Nine and Ten in the Morning, the Queen was safely Deliver'd of a Prince at St. James's; His Majesty, the Queen-Dowager, most of the Lords of the Privy-Council, and divers Ladies of Quality being present: And about Noon, the Council being Met, it was Order'd, That there should be a General Thanksgiving, to be Observ'd within the Cities of London and Westminster, and Parts adjacent, on Sunday the 17th Instant; and Fourteen Days after, in all other Parts of this Kingdom: And that Notice should be given of the Birth of the Prince, to the Lord-Mayor of London, that Bonfires and Publick Rejoycings might be made. Which was accordingly perform'd, after Firing of the Cannon of the Tower, with all the Demonstrations of the Extraordinary Joy, with which so great a Blessing bestow'd upon Their Majesties, and all His Majesty's Dominions, has fill'd the Hearts of all his Subjects." On the same Day, His Majesty publish'd a Proclamation, "That it having pleas'd Almighty God, of his great and continu'd Mercy to His Majesty and his Kingdoms, to bless Him and His Royal Consort the Queen with a Son, and these his Kingdoms and Dominions with a Prince; His Majesty thought fit to Appoint a Time of Publick Thanksgiving for so great a Blessing, on Sunday June 17. within the Cities of London and Westminster; and on July 1. in all other Places. And for this Purpose, His Majesty had signified his Royal Pleasure to Thomas Lord Bishop of Rochester, to Prepare a Form of Religious Service and Publick Thanksgiving suitable to this Occasion, &c." These Days were Solemniz'd with extraordinary Rejoycings by the Popish Party; but the Protestants were generally Silent and Reserv'd, as doubting the Fact, and dreading the Consequence. His Majesty, to express his Satisfaction, was pleas'd, by the Queen's Bed-side, soon after her Delivery, to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon Doctor William Walgrave, Her Majesty's Physician, for his Skill and particular Services to Her Majesty: And the King, farther to show his Exultation, bestow'd great Presents upon several of his Ministers, and gave considerable Charities to the Poor.

On June 15. came on the Bishops Tryal, the most Important, perhaps, that was ever known before in Westminster-Hall; not only Seven Prelates Contending for the Rights of the Anglican Church, but Seven Peers of the Realm Standing up for the Liberties of England. The Court of King's-Bench being Sat, His Majesty's Attorney-General mov'd for a Habeas Corpus, directed to Sir Edward Hales Lieutenant of the Tower, to bring up His Grace the Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and the Six Bishops; which was granted, and the Prisoners were accordingly brought up by Water. At their Landing, they were receiv'd by several Divines, and Persons of Quality, and by a vast Concourse of People, who with repeated Acclamations uttered Wishes for their Deliverance. On the Bench sat Sir Robert Wright Lord Chief-Justice, and Mr. Justice Holloway, two of the King's Creatures; Mr. Justice Powell a Protestant of great Integrity, and Mr. Justice Allbone a profess'd Papist. The Council for the King, was Sir Thomas Poole's Attorney-General, Sir William Williams Solicitor-General, Sir Bartholomew Shower Recorder of London, Serjeant Trinder a Papist, &c. And for the Prisoners, Sir Robert Sawyer, Mr. Finch, Mr. Pollexfen, Sir George Treby, Serjeant Pemberton, Serjeant Levinz, and the last and greatest, Mr. Somers. The Court was extremely fill'd, and with Persons of the Highest Quality, as if they interpos'd in the last Tryal for the Liberties of the Church and Nation; The Marquesses of Halifax and Worcester, the Earls of Shrewsbury, Kent, Bedford, Dorset, Bullingbrooke, Manchester, Burlington, Carlisle, Danby, Radner and Nottingham; Viscount Falkenberg, and the Lords Grey of Ruthyn, Pager, Shandefs, Vaughan, and Carberry. The Return and Warrant being read, the Attorney-General mov'd, That the Information might be read 1688. read to the Prisoners, and that they might immediately Plead to it. This Motion the Bishops Council opposed; Objecting, First, That the Prisoners were Committed by the Lord Chancellor, and some other of the Privy-Council, without expressing in the Warrant, That it was by Order of the Privy-Council; And therefore, That the Commitment was Illegal, and that the Prisoners were not Legally in Court. And, Secondly, That the Fact for which they were Committed, was such, as they ought not to have been Imprison'd for; because a Peer ought not to be Committed, in the first Instance, for a Misdemeanor. Judge Powel refused to deliver his Opinion, before he had consulted Books: But the Lord Chief-Justice, Judge Allibone and Judge Holloway Agreed, That the Fact charg'd in the Warrant, was such a Misdemeanor, as was Breach of the Peace; And therefore, That the Information ought to be read, and the Bishops must Plead to it. After the reading the Information, the Bishops Council desir'd that they might have an Impar lance till the next Term, to Consider what they had to Plead. Sir Samuel Astry Clerk of the Crown, being ask'd what was the Course of the Court? Answer'd, That of late Years, if a Man Appear'd upon a Recognizance, or was a Person in Custody, he ought to Plead at the first Instance; but that he had known it to be at the Discretion of the Court to grant what Time they pleas'd. After this Answer, the Lord Chief-Justice declar'd, That the Bishops should now Plead to the Information. Thereupon the Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury offer'd a Plea, in behalf of himself and his Brethren the other Defendants, alledging, That they were Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, and ought not to be compell'd to Answer instantly, for the Misdemeanor mention'd in the Information; but that they ought to be requir'd to Appear by due Process of Law; and upon their Appearance, to have a Copy of the said Information, and reasonable Time given them to imparle thereupon. The King's Council labour'd hard to have the Plea rejected. After a long Debate, Judge Powel said, He was for receiving the Plea, and Considering of it; but the rest of the Judges declar'd for Rejecting of it: So the Prisoners at last Plead, Not Guilty. The King's Council pray'd, the Clerk might join Issue on behalf of the King; and desir'd the Defendants to take Notice, That they intended to Try this Cause on that Day Fortnight; adding, That they wereailable, if they pleas'd. Sir Robert Sawyer desir'd, that their own Recognizance might be taken; which was readily granted.

On June 29. the Bishops Appcar'd before the Court of King's-Bench, according to their Recognizance, the Appearance being still greater than a Fortnight before; for there were now present the Marquesses of Hullifax and Worcester, the Earls of Shrewsbury, Kent, Bedford, Pembroke, Dorset, Bullenbrooke, Manchester, Rivers, Stamford, Carnarvon, Chesterfield, Searsdale, Clarendon, Danby, Suffex, Radnor, Nottingham, and Abington, Viscount Falconberg, and the Lords Newport, Grey of Ruthyn, Paget, Shandois, Vaughan, Carberry, Lumley, Carteret, and Ossulston. This Splendid Appearance was chiefly owing to the indefatigable Care and Solicitation of the Clergy, and especially of the Reverend Dr. Tennison. And indeed, the making such a Figure in the Court, had possibly some good Effect upon the Jury, if not upon the Bench: And it was afterwards observ'd, by way of Jest upon Words, That the Bishops were Deliver'd by the Nobilee before, and the Mobilee behind. The Information being Read, and Open'd to the Jury; the Attorney-General, to take off the Odium of this Prosecution, and in some measure to pacifie the People, who could not forbear showing their Resentments, even in the face of the Court, began with Observing, First, That the Bishops were not Prosecuted as Bishops, much less for any Point or Matter of Religion, but as Subjects of this Kingdom, and only for a Temporal Crime, as having Censur'd and Affronted the King to his very Face. Secondly, That they were not Prosecuted for Omitting to do any thing; but as they were Actors in Accusing, and, in effect, of Arraigning His Majesty, and his Government, &c. A great deal of Time was spent in Proving, That the Petition produc'd in Court, was the Hand-Writing of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; That it was Sign'd by him and the Six Bishops; And that it was the same which was Presented to His Majesty. After an Elaborate Proof of these Particulars, by the Depositions of Sir John Nicholas, Mr. Bridgman, Mr. Musgrave and Mr. Blaythwait, and by the Earl of Sunderland, who in Court affirm'd, That he Introduc'd the Bishops, and was in the Room when they deliver'd the said Petition to His Majesty. The Fact being Prov'd, the Bishops Council were very Learned and Eloquent in Defence of their Clients: Mr. Somers spoke last, and mention'd the great Case of Thomas and Serrel in the Exchequer-Chamber, upon the Validity of a Dispensation; urging, That there it was the Opinion of every one of the Judges, That there never could be an Abrogation, or a Suspension (which is a Temporary Abrogation) of an Act of Parliament, but by the Legislative Power: That indeed it was Disputed, how far the King might Dispense with the Penalties in such a particular Law, as to particular Persons; but that it was Agreed by all, That the King had no Power to Suspend any Law: That by the Law of all Civiliz'd Nations, If the Prince does require something to be done, which the Person who is to do it takes to be Unlawful; it is not only Lawful, but his Duty, Rescribere Principi; which is all the Bishops had done here, and that in the most humble manner: That as to Matters of Fact alledg'd in the said Petition, there cou'd be no Design to Diminish the Prerogative, because the King has no such Prerogative: That the Petition cou'd not be Seditious, because it was Presented to the King in Private, and Alone; Nor False, because the Matter of it was True; Nor Malicious, for the Occasion was not sought, the Thing was press'd upon them; Nor, in short, a Libel, because the Intent was Innocent, and they kept within the Bounds set by the Act of Parliament, that gives the Subject leave to apply to his Prince by Petition, when he is aggriev'd.

When the Council on both sides had done, Chief-Justice Wright Summ'd up the Evidence, and told the Jury, That sometimes the Dispensing Power had been allow'd, as in Richard II's time, and sometimes deny'd; but that it was a Question out of the present Case: If they believ'd the Petition to be the same that was Presented by the Bishops to the King, then the Publication was sufficiently Prov'd: And whatever tended to Disturb the Government, or make a Stir among the People, was certainly within the Name of Libellus Famosus; and his Opinion, in short, was, That the Bishops Petition was a Libel.

Mr. Justice Holloway declar'd, That the End and Intention of every Action was to be Consider'd: That the Bishops were Charg'd with Delivering a Petition, which, according to their Defence, was done with all the Humility and Decency imaginable: That the Delivering of a Petition could be no fault, it being the Right of every Subject to Petition: Therefore, if the Jury were satisfy'd, They did it with no Ill Intention, but only to shew the Reasons of their Disobedience to the King's Command, he cou'd not think it to be a Libel.

Mr. Justice Powel more plainly declar'd, That He could discern no Sedition or any other Crime fix'd upon the Bishops, since there was nothing offer'd by the King's Council to render the Petition False, Seditious or Malicious. He admonish'd the Jury to Consider that the Contents of the Petition were, That the Bishops Apprehended the Declaration to be Illegal, as being founded upon a Dispensing Power claim'd by the King; And that for his Part he did not remember in any Case in all the Law, that there was any such Power in the King, and if not, the Petition could not be a Libel. He concluded with telling them, That he could see no Difference between the King's Power to Dispense with the Laws Ecclesiastical, and his Power to Dispense with any other Laws whatsoever: That if this was once allow'd of, there would be no need of Parliaments, and all the Legislature would be in the King, and so he left the Issue to God and their Consciences.

Mr. Justice Allibone was prepossess'd against Protestant Bishops, and to deliver his Opinion of their Guilt, he laid down Two odd Positions; 1. That no Man can take upon him to Write against the Actual Exercise of the Government, unless he have Leave from the Government, but he makes a Libel by what he Writes, whether True or False. 2. That no private Man can take upon him to Write concerning the Government, and therefore if he intrudes himself into the Affairs of the Publick, he is a Libeller for so doing. These Positions he back'd by a Resolution of the Judges in King James III's Time; That to frame a Petition to the King to put the Penal Laws in Execution, was next Door to Treason; which was a gross Misquotation, in stead of a Petition against the Penal Laws, and for which, being taken up by Justice Powel and Serjeant Pemberton, little Heed was given to any thing that he said afterwards. Whereupon the Jury withdrew, sat up all Night, and next Morning brought in the Reverend Prelates, Not Guilty.

The Jury bring in their Verdict Not Guilty.

Great Rejoycings.

There were immediately very Loud Acclamations thro' Westminster-Hall, and the Words Not Guilty, Not Guilty, went round with such Shouts and Huzza's, that the King's Solicitor mov'd very earnestly that such as had Shouted in the Court might be Committed; whereupon a Gentleman of Grey's-Inn was laid hold on, but soon discharg'd with this short Reproof from the Chief-Justice; Sir, I am as glad as you can be that Lords the Bishops are Acquitted, but your Manner of Rejoycing here is Indecent, you might Rejoice in your Chamber, or elsewhere, and not here. But the Shouts were carry'd on through the Cities of Westminster and London, and flew presently to Hounslow-Heath, where the Soldiers in the Camp Echo'd them so Loud that it Startled the King, who was that Day Entertain'd in the Earl of Feversham's Tent: Insomuch that His Majesty sent him out to know what was the Matter. The Earl came back and told the King, It was nothing but the Soldiers Shouting upon the News of the Bishops being Acquitted. The King reply'd, And do you call that Nothing? but so much the worse for them. What His Majesty meant by the last Words he had not much Time to Interpret: He could only shew some Indignation, That the Bishops had escap'd a Legal Penalty, and He Threatned to deliver them up to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. And for the Two Judges, Holloway and Powel, He immediately turn'd them out, and would have meditated some further Severity, if his following Reign would have allow'd it.

This Acquittment of the Bishops encouraged the Clergy in their Honest Resolutions of not Reading the Declaration; but the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were Instructed to call them to an Account for it, for which Purpose on July 12. they Met in the Council-Chamber and made an Order, That whereas they had received Information that divers Rectors, Vicars and Curates had omitted or neglected to Read the said Declaration, to the manifest Contempt of His Majesty's Authority-Royal, They do hereby Command and Require all Chancellors, Arch-Deacons, Commissaries and Officials, to inquire strictly within their respective Jurisdictions, in what Churches and Chapels His Majesty's said Declaration was Read, and in what Churches and Chapels the same was Omitted, and to transmit an Account thereof upon the 16th Day of August next. The Commissioners Met again on that Day, and finding that little or no Inquiry had been made, they were much divided what to do in the Matter. After a long Consultation they were content to give longer Time, and therefore Publish'd another Order, Commanding all Chancellors, Arch-Deacons, Commissaries, Officials, and others having Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, strictly to inquire of the Church-Wardens, as one of their Articles of Inquiry, at their respective Visitations, (which Visitations they were requir'd to hold and keep before the 15th Day of November next) in what Churches and Chapels His Majesty's said Declaration was Read, and in what the same was Omitted, and to transmit an Account thereof to them on the 6th Day of December next: But Providence prevented a Return to this Inquiry. The Bishop of Rockester finding by this Time the Drift of the Ecclesiastical Commission, thought it inconsistent with his Profession and Character to Act any longer in it, and therefore he wrote a Letter to his Colleagues, desiring to be excus'd from Sitting amongst them.

1688. Ecclesiastical Commissioners proceed against the Inferiour Clergy.

The King continu'd to make his Honours and Preferments subservient to his Religion and his Power. Upon the Day of the Birth of the Prince of Wales, the Lady Marchioness of Powis, was Sworn by the Lord-Chamberlain of His Majesty's Household, Lady-Governess of their Majesty's Children, and the Lady Strickland, Under-Governess. On June the 29th His Majesty was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon Thomas Jefford, Esq; Mayor of Exeter, in Consideration of his Faithful Services. After the Discharge of the Arch-Bishop and Bishops, the King, to condemn those Judges who had spoke in Favour of their Lordships, was pleas'd to remove Sir Richard Holloway and Sir John Powel, from being Justices of the King's-Bench; and to Place in their Stead, Sir Thomas Pevel, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and Sir Robert Baldock, one of His Majesty's Serjants at Law. His Majesty was also pleas'd, in Consideration of the great Age and Infirmities of Sir Christopher Milton, one of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, to permit him to have his Writ of Ease, and put in his Place Sir Thomas Jenner, one of the Barons of the Exchequer; and in the Stead of Mr. Baron Jenner and Mr. Baron Powel, His Majesty was pleas'd to Place Mr. Serjeant Bingley and Mr. Serjeant Rotheram in the Exchequer. And to prepare for a Succession of Judges, in Trinity-Term, William Le Hunt, John Rotheram, Vincent Denn, S. Labiel Lovel of Grey's-Inn, Esqrs; Sir Henry Chaucey, of the Middle-Temple, Kt. William Moses, of Grays-Inn; Henry Trinder, and Francis Fuller, of the Inner-Temper; and William Thompson, of the Middle-Temple, Esqrs; were called by the King's Writ, to take upon them the State and Degree of Serjants at Law, and they gave Rings with this Courtly Motto, Rex, Princeps, & Christiana Libertas. On July 6th. Sir John Trevor, Kt. Master of the Rolls; Christopher Lane, Esq; and Silas Titus, Esq; were by His Majesty's Command

Honours and Preferments.

1688. Command Sworn of the Privy-Council, and accordingly took their Places at the Board; and on July 13th, Sir Thomas Strickland, Kt. was admitted to the same Honour. On July 14th, His Majesty being graciously pleased to bestow a Mark of his Royal Favour upon Thomas Elmes, of Lilford, in the County of Northampton, Esq; for his many Faithful Services, conferr'd upon him the Honour of Knighthood. Tho' the Duke of Ormond had been long out of Favour, yet upon his Death this Publick Commendation was given of him, That on Saturday, July 21, at Kingston-Hall in Dorsetshire, in the Seventy Ninth Year of his Age, Died His Grace, James, Duke of Ormond, Lord-Steward of His Majesty's Household, One of the Lords of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council, and Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. He Serv'd the Crown as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland several Times, as well under King Charles the First of Blessed Memory, as since the Restauration of His Late Majesty, whom he faithfully followed during his Exile, ever behaving himself at all Times with great Fidelity and Honour. In August His Majesty was graciously pleased to Constitute Sir Encas Mackberjon, of Inverness, Kt. to be Lieutenant-Governour of Nevis, in America, in the Place of Sir James Russel, Deceas'd. On August 12th, Sir Gilbert Gerrard Colfine, Bar. and Samuel Gerrard, Esq; were to pay their Duties to His Majesty at Windsor, before they went into the Country, who, as a particular Mark of his Royal Favour, was graciously pleased, in his Bed-Chamber, to Confer on the said Samuel Gerrard, Esq; the Honour of Knighthood. On Tuesday Sept. 4th, Died the Right Honourable Sir John Sherter, Kt. Lord-Mayor of London, about Eleven a Clock in the Morning; and on Sept. 8th, Sir John Eyles, Kt. being Appointed Lord-Mayor for the remaining Part of this Year, and the next ensuing, was Sworn at the Guild-Hall, according to the Custom of the City.

Death of the Duke of Ormond.

The King endeavours to New-Model his Army.

to their great Dissatisfaction.

But the Royal Favours so bestow'd did but help a general Defection in the People of England. The King found he could depend on nothing but his Army; Nor could he be fully satisfied in their Fidelity. Therefore, to try how far he might depend upon them, He endeavour'd to make both Officers and Common Soldiers subscribe a Writing, whereby they should engage themselves to Contribute, as far as in them lay, towards the Repeal of the Test and Penal Laws. To effect this, it was thought fit to propose the Thing to all the Regiments one by one, not doubting but that it Two or Three submitted, the rest would follow their Example. Accordingly the Major of the Earl of Litchfield's Regiment was order'd to open His Majesty's Desire to that Battalion, and to command all such as would not instantly comply therewith, to lay down their Arms: But he was not a little surpriz'd to find, That except Two Captains and some few Popish Soldiers, the whole Regiment obey'd the latter Part of his Command. The King himself who saw it was in great Astonishment, and after some deep Silence He commanded them to take up their Arms again, adding with a sullen discontented Look, That for the future He would not do them the Honour to ask their Advice. Upon this the King found He must New-Model His Army before He could put any Confidence in them, and therefore upon some little Pretence or other, He cashier'd several Protestant Officers and Soldiers, and fill'd them up with as many Popists as He could possibly procure. But this Regulation of his Troops was so far from a Security, that it brought on New Discontents and Dangers. For when several Popish Irish were put into the Duke of Berwick's Regiment, it was vigorously opposed by the Lieutenant-Colonel Beaumont and other Officers; the former in the Name of the rest, declaring to the Duke, That he was desir'd by those Gentlemen (with whose Sense he concurr'd) to inform his Grace, That they did not think it consistent with their Honours, to have Foreigners imposed upon them, without being complain'd of, that their Companies were weak, or Orders had been sent to recruit them; not doubting, but if such Orders had been given, they that first, in very ill Times, rais'd them Hundreds, could easily now have made them, according to the King's Compliment. Therefore they humbly Petition'd they might have Leave to fill up their Companies with such Men of this Nation, as they should judge most suitable for the King's Service, and to support their Honours; or otherwise, that they might be permitted with all imaginable Duty and Respect, to lay down their Commissions. An Account of this (as also of a Serjeant and 18 private Centinels, leaving their Colours upon the same Score) was forthwith transmitted to His Majesty then at Windsor, who, fearing the spreading of this Example, immediately commanded a Party of Horse down to Portsmouth, to bring up into Custody, Lieutenant-Colonel Beaumont, Captain Paston, and Four other Captains; and a Court-Martial was appointed to proceed against 'em as Mutineers. If the French Ambassador's Memorial had not come in that Morning, to shew the Danger the Popish Party was in, some of these Officers would in all Probability have lost their Lives: But now the Court was content to cashier 'em. About a Month before, another Captain who was Quartered at Scarborough, caus'd the Mayor of that Town, tho' a Man devoted to the Court, to be Toss'd in a Blanket by his Soldiers, for being Saucy to him; which Indignity the King did not think fit to punish at this Juncture. Nor were the Sea-Forces more favourable to Popery, for the King having caus'd Mess to be said on Board his Men of War, there happen'd so great a Disorder and Mutiny in the Fleet, that the Officers had much a-do to keep the Priests from being thrown over Board.

Under this Disposition of the King to Popery, and of the People to a Self-Defence, this Memorial of the Church of England was Presented to their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princesses of Orange.

People of
 cast their Eyes and Hearts on Holland.

At this Juncture, all the Protestant Eyes and Hearts in England were cast and fix’d on Holland ; and many of the Nobility and Gentry were Soliciting the Prince, for the Redemption of their Country. The Earl of Macclesfield had withdrawn into Holland, whilst the Duke of Monmouth was preparing for his unfortunate Expedition ; and lest he should have the same Fate in Holland with Sir Thomas Armstrong, he had retir’d into Germany ; from whence he now came back to the Hague, to Negotiate the Common Cause. Dr. Gilbert Burnet, whom the Papists had maliciously accus’d of High-Treason in Scotland, had fled, for Protection, to the Prince’s Court, where he had Married a Lady of great Fortune and Interest, and had kept a secret Correspondence with many of the Great Families in England ; and by his extraordinary Parts, and Zeal to the Protestant Religion, became One of the Prime Instruments in the following Revolution. The Lord Wharton, though advanc’d in Years, took a Journey through Holland to Germany ; and Colonel Sidney, afterward Earl of Romney, and some others, went over to the Spaw, giving out, That it was only for the Benefit of the Waters. The Earl of Devon- shire (who had an Indignity put upon him by Colonel Culpeper, and who, out of Generosity, had Pardon’d the Colonel, upon Condition, That he shou’d never appear in Whitehall ; having afterwards met him in the King’s Presence-Chamber, contrary to Agreement, cou’d not forbear striking him on the Face ; for which he was Adjudg’d to Pay a Fine of Thirty thousand Pounds to His Majesty) was zealously dispos’d to Invite the Prince of Orange ; and, by degrees, the greatest part of the Lords implor’d His Highness’s Assistance, to prevent their Ruine. Some zealous Gentlemen, particularly Mr. Howden and his Son, and even some of the Ladies, especially the Countess of Sunderland, a Woman of subtil Wit, and admirable Address, were privy to the whole Design. The Earl of Shrewsbury having quitted his Regiment of Horse, and Mortgag’d his Estate for Forty thousand Pounds, went over to the Prince, to offer him both his Sword and his Purse. He was soon after follow’d by Admiral Herbert (afterward Earl of Torrington.) Mr. Herbert (afterward Lord Herbert of Cherbury.) Mr. Ruffel (now Earl of Orford.) the Lord Mordant (now Earl of Peterborough.) the Marquess of Winchester (afterwards Duke of Bolton.) and several other Persons of Honour.

The Prince of Orange, finding by this time a general Concurrence in the English Nation to favour his Design, prevail’d with the States to join with him, and to prepare a good Fleet, and sufficient Forces for a Descent upon England. Sir Bevil Skelton, whilst he was at the Hague, had intercepted a Letter, intimating, That a great Project was secretly Carry’d on against the King ; of which he immediately gave an Account to His Majesty : But it was either not well-represented, or not at all regarded ; and Skelton, being sent soon after Envoy Extraordinary to Paris, entred there into a Correspondence with one Monsieur De Veracc, who was lately gone from Holland to Geneva, and there offer’d to reveal the whole Intrigue ; and upon his Advices, Skelton is said to have sent over several Letters to the Court of England. But the King, in a Supine Negligence, gave little heed to them, though they were confirm’d with many of the like Conjectures from the Marquess of Al- beville, the English Envoy at the Hague. Count D’Avaux, the French Ambassador in Holland, discover’d, from many convincing Circumstances, That their great Preparations were Intended against England, and gave Notice of it to his Master at Paris, from whom King James had the first certain and positive Intelligence. But the Heer Van Citters, the Dutch Ambassador in England, is said to have assur’d His Majesty, That the States were indeed Preparing for some Considerable Action, but France had most reason to be Alarm’d at it. The French King thought he could not meet with a fairer Opportunity to Engage King James in an Offensive and Defensive League, than the present Dangerous Condition of his Affairs ; and therefore he immediately dispatch to him Monsieur De ben Repose, to offer him Thirty thousand of his Men. This gave a Jealousy to the Spanish Ambassador Don Pedro Ronquillo, who, in a Closet-Conference with the King, assur’d him, The Dutch could have no Design upon England ; and then represented to him, the fatal Consequences of His entring into Alliances with France ; and how ill it wou’d found in the Nation, That whilst He pretended to Call a free Parliament, He shou’d Introduce Foreign Troops into the Kingdom. But it is certain, the Earl of Sunderland contributed much more to the Refusal of the French King’s Offers ; which some of the Popish Cabal were for accepting, and which perhaps Providence alone prevented.

During this Amusement, the English Envoy at the Hague was Order’d to Demand of the States- General, what they meant by their great and surprising Warlike Preparations both by Sea and Land, at that Time of the Year when no Expedition, especially at Sea, cou’d be thought seasonable ? To which the States made Answer, That they Arm’d, in Imitation of His Britanick Majesty ; and might with more reason Demand a better Satisfaction about the Alliances into which His Majesty was lately entred. This Bold Answer, which at another time might have occasion’d a Rupture, was now left without Reply. The King of France seem’d impatient, that his Brother of England wou’d not accept his Assistance, nor his Advice : But to shew himself still heartily Concern’d for him, he Commanded his Ambassador Count D’Avaux to deliver a Memorial to the States ; which he did 1688. on Septemb. 9. to this effect; "That many "Circumstances inclin'd the King his Master,

 "with Reason, to believe that their Preparations
 "threatned England: Therefore His Majesty had "Commanded him to declare to them, That the "Ties of Friendship and Alliance between Him "and the King of Great-Britain wou'd oblige
 "Him not only to Assist Him, but also to look "on the first Act of Hostility that should be "committed by their Troops or their Fleet "against His Majesty of Great-Britain, to be "a manifest Rupture of the Peace with His "Crown.

The States-General return'd no Answer to this French-Memorial, but charg'd the Heer Van-Citters to Complain thereof to the Court of England. Whereupon a Council was held, wherein it was Resolv'd to Disown the Proceedings of Count D'Avaux. This Resolution the Earl of Middleton (Secretary of State) immediately communicated to Van-Citters; and the English Ministers at the Hague, Brussels, and Madrid, were Order'd to Declare, That the French-Memorial was Presented without His Majesty's Knowledge or Approbation: And more effectually to Pacifie the Dutch, Skelton was Recall'd from France; and upon his Arrival, was Committed Prisoner to the Tower, for going beyond his Instructions, and Discovering his Master's Secrets: Yet he was set at Liberty a few Days after, and made Colonel of a Regiment; nay, and shortly after was made Governor of his late Prison the Tower. Which was indeed too quick a way of revealing the Secret of feigning Anger and Punishment.

After all these Discouragements, Monsieur Barillon the French Ambassador made another Proposal to the English Court, That France shou'd abandon the Design of Besieging Philipsburgh, and carry the War into Holland. Four or Five of the Council highly Approv'd the Overture; but Others warmly oppos'd it, alledging, That such a Violation of former Treaties with Holland, wou'd be sufficient to raise the Clamours of the whole Nation, and to alienate the Minds of all the English Protestants from His Majesty. It was again very Providential, that this Offer was likewise Rejected; for the Acceptance of it, must have prevented, or at least retarded the Designs of the Prince of Orange.

King James was too late convinc'd of the Truth of an Intended Invasion; and therefore He now (too late) began to soften Matters, and, if possible, to reconcile the Hearts of his People to him.
 To this Purpose, after having Declar'd in Council, on Aug. 24th, That He had Resolv'd to Call a Parliament to Meet on the 27th of November next; He Publish'd a Declaration on Septemb. 21. That it was His Royal Purpose, to endeavour a Legal Establishment of an Universal Liberty of Conscience for all His Subjects. That it was also His Resolution, Inviolably to Preserve the Church of England; and that He shou'd be willing the Roman-Catholicks shou'd remain Incapable to be Members of the House of Commons. And He did likewise assure all his Loving Subjects, That he shou'd be ready to do every thing else, for their Safety and Advantage, that becomes a King who will always take Care of His People.

On Septemb. 26. He was pleas'd farther to Declare, That He had Authoriz'd and Impower'd the Lords-Lieutenants of the several Counties, to Grant Deputations to such Gentlemen as had been lately Removed from being Deputy-Lieutenants: And that He had farther given Directions to the Right-Honourable the Lord-Chancellor of England to put into the Commission of the Peace, such Gentlemen as had been laid aside. And on Septemb. 28.
 the King Publish'd a Proclamation, That He had receiv'd undoubted Advice, That a great and sudden Invasion from Holland, with an Arm'd Force of Foreigners and Strangers, wou'd speedily be made, in an Hostile manner, upon this His Kingdom; and that no less Matter, by this Invasion, was propos'd and purpos'd, than an absolute Conquest of these His Kingdoms, and the utter Subduing and Subjecting Him and all His People to a Foreign Power; which was promoted (although it may seem almost incredible) by some of His Subjects, being Persons of Wicked and Restless Spirits, Implacable Malice, and Desperate Designs. — That although He had Notice some time since, That a Foreign Force was Preparing against Him; yet He had always declin'd any Foreign Succours, but rather had chosen, next under God, to rely upon the true and ancient Courage, Faith and Allegiance of His Own People. — That He had intended to have Met His Parliament in November next; but in regard of this strange and unreasonable Attempt from his neighbouring Country, (without any manner of Provocation) He found it necessary to Recall His said Writs. And forasmuch as the approaching Danger, now at hand, wou'd require a great and vigorous Defence, He do's strictly Charge and Command all His Loving Subjects, both by Sea and Land, to be Prepared to Defend their Country, &c.

On Septemb. 30th, the King gave this farther Satisfaction, in these words, from Whitehall:
 "Several of my Lords the Bishops having At"tended the King on Friday last, His Majesty
 "was pleas'd, among other Gracious Expressions, "to let them know, That He wou'd signify His "Pleasure for Taking off the Suspension of the Lord
 "Bishop of London, which is done accordingly.

And because there had been a confident Report,
 That there was a Secret League between the Kings of England and France, in prejudice to the Interest of Holland, and the Common Liberties of Europe; Therefore, on Octob. 6th, N. S. the Marquess D'Al-byville (Envoy-Extraordinary from His Majesty) had a Conference with Eight Deputies of the States-General, and deliver'd them the following Memorial.

THE under-written Envoy-Extraordinary from the King of Great-Britain, has receiv'd Order to represent to Your Lordships, "That al"though His Majesty had believ'd, that what he had "already declar'd to your Ambassador in England, "and the Orders he had given to His said Envoy-"Extraordinary upon the same Subject, might "have satisfy'd Your Lordships, That there is "no other Treaty between His Majesty and the "Most Christian King, than those that are Pub"lick, and in Print: Yet since a great deal of "Artifice and Industry has been made use of, to "make the World believe that the King's Master "is entred into other Treaties and Alliances with "the Most Christian King; His Majesty, to shew the "great Regard he has to the Friendship and Al"liances which are between Him and Your Lord"ships, and His Desire to Continue the same,
 "has Commanded the said Envoy-Extraordinary,
 "in His Name, to assure Your Lordships, That "there is no other Treaty between His Majesty "and the Most Christian King, than those that "are Publick, and in Print. And farther, That "as His Majesty extremely desires the Preserva"tion of the Peace and Repose of Christendom,
 "so He will be also glad to take such Measures
 "with Your Lordships, as may be most conven"ient for maintaining the Peace of Nimeguen,
 "and the Truce of Twenty Years, Concluded
 "in 1684.

 A Memorial to the States, concerning the Treaty betwixt England and France.

1688. And yet this Memorial was suspected to be another Blind, at a Juncture when every thing was thought Lawful that could gain a Point. There was afterward Publish'd An Account of the Private League betwixt the late King James II. and the French King, In a Letter from a Gentleman in London to a Gentleman in the Country.

Offer of Services to the King.

To Encourage the Principal Nobility and Gentry to come in to the King's Assistance; it was Publish'd, Sept. 30. "That his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, the Earl of Lindsey, the Earl of Derby, the Lord Germaine, and others of the Nobility, had, upon the News of the intended Invasion, humbly offer'd their Services to His Majesty, who received very graciously that Tender of their Duty, and had sent Commissions to several of them to raise Men in their Countries". And within Two or Three Days Publick Notice was further given, "That several of the Nobility and Gentry had daily offer'd their Service to the King, and were raising Men: And that His Majesty had been pleas'd to give a Commission to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, to raise a Regiment of Foot; to the Lord Brandon, and the Marquess de Miremont, Nephew to the Earl of Feversham, each a Regiment of Horse; to Colonel Henry Gage and Colonel Solomon Richards, Regiments of Foot, and many Independent Troops and Companies to several of the Nobility and Gentry". And after this other Advertisements were given, "That among several of the Nobility and Gentry who continued to offer their Services to His Majesty, were, the Lord-Marquess of Winchester, the Earls of Pembroke, Westmoreland and Denbigh, and the Lord Huntingtower.

Other Arts of Sweetning the People.

To Sweeten, and, if possible, to Secure the City of London, Information was given, Oct. 2. "That the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs, with several other Eminent Citizens had Attended the King that Evening, and His Majesty was pleas'd to tell them, That out of his Concern for the Peace and Welfare of the City, and, as a Mark of the great Confidence He had in them at this Time, that the Kingdom is threatned with an Invasion, He had resolv'd to Restore them to their Ancient Charter and Privileges, and to put them into the same Condition they were at the Time of the Judgment pronounced against them upon the Quo Warranto; That so they might be the better enabled to Serve him with that Duty and Loyalty which they had given the King his Brother, and Himself so many Testimonies of, and upon which His Majesty would now depend. Accordingly within Four Days after, the Lord-Chancellor himself carried into the City, the Instrument of Restitution and Confirmation under the Great Seal of England, and Sir John Chapman thereby Constituted Lord-Mayor, was Sworn in the Guild-Hall with the usual Solemnity, and the Aldermen then in being, that were, at the Time of the said Judgment, took their former Places, and the Vacancies were to be supply'd by the Election of the Citizens according to the ancient Custom of the City.

The King advices with the Arch-Bishop and Bishops.

On Wednesday Oct. 3. the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of London, Winchester, St. Asaph, Ely, Chichester, Rochester, Bath and Wells, and Peterborough, waited upon the King according to an Invitation and Encouragement of His Majesty, who had lately told them, That He desir'd the Assistance of their Counsels in this present Exigency, assuring them, That He was ready to do whatever they should think necessary for the Security of the Protestant Religion, and of his Peoples Rights, without derogating from his own Preroga- tives. And therefore He desir'd them to Consult together, and bring their Opinions to Him; They came therefore now with the Arch-Bishop at the Head of them, who Address'd himself to his Majesty in this Manner.

May it Please Your MAJESTY;

“WHEN I had lately the Honour to wait upon You, You were pleas'd briefly to Acquaint me with what had pass'd Two Days before between Your Majesty and these my Reverend Brethren: By which, and by the Account which they themselves gave me, I perceiv'd that in Truth, there pass'd nothing; but in very general Terms and Expressions of Your Majesty's Gracious and Favourable Inclinations to the Church of England, and of our reciprocal Duty and Loyalty to Your Majesty: Both which were sufficiently understood and declared before; and, (as one of my Brethren then told You) would have been in the same State, if the Bishops had not stirr'd one Foot out of their Diocesses. SIR, I found it Griev'd my Lords, the Bishops, to have come so far, and to have done so little; and I am assur'd they came then prepar'd to have given Your Majesty some more particular Instances of their Duty and Zeal for Your Service, had they not apprehended from some Words which fell from Your Majesty, That You were not then at Leisure to receive them. It was for this Reason that I then besought Your Majesty, to Command us once more to Attend You all together, which Your Majesty was pleas'd Graciously to Allow and Encourage. We therefore are here now before You with all Humility to beg Your Permission, That we may Suggest to Your Majesty such Advices as we think proper at this Season, and conducing to your Service, and so leave them to your Princely Consideration. Which the King being graciously pleas'd to permit, the Arch-Bishop proceeded as followeth.

“1. Our First Humble Advice is, That Your Majesty will be graciously pleas'd to put the Management of your Government in the several Counties, into the Hands of such of the Nobility and Gentry there, as are Legally qualified for it.

“2. That Your Majesty will be graciously pleas'd to annul your Commission for Ecclesiastical Affairs, and that no such Court, as that Commission sets up, may be erected for the future.

“3. That Your Majesty will graciously be pleas'd, That no Dispensation may be granted or continued, by Virtue whereof, any Person not duely qualified by Law, hath been, or may be put into any Place, Office or Preferment, in Church or State, or in the Universities, or continu'd in the same, especially such as have Cure of Souls annexed to them; and in particular, That You will be graciously pleas'd to restore the President and Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen-College in Oxford.

“4. That Your Majesty will graciously be pleas'd to set aside all Licences or Faculties already Granted, by which any Persons of the Romish Communion may pretend to be Enabled to Teach Publick Schools; and that no such be Granted for the future.

“5. That Your Majesty will be graciously pleas'd to desist from the Exercise of such a Dispensing Power, as hath of late been us'd; and to permit that Point to be freely and calmly Debated and Argued, and finally Settled in Parliament.

“6. That

Their Answer to His Majesty.

“ 6. That Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to inhibit the Four Foreign Bishops, who stile themselves Vicars-Apostolical, from further invading the Ecclesiastical-Jurisdiction, which is by Law Vested in the Bishops of this Church.

“ 7. That Your Majesty will be pleased graciously to fill the vacant Bishopricks, and other Ecclesiastical-Promotions within your Gift, both in England and Ireland, with Men of Learning and Piety; and in particular, (which I must own to be my peculiar Boldness, for 'tis done without the Privy of my Brethren) That You will be graciously pleased forthwith to fill the Arch-Episcopal Chair of York (which has so long stood empty, and upon which a whole Province depends) with some very worthy Person: For which (Pardon me, SIR, if I am bold to say) you have now here before you a very fair Choice.

8. “ That Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to Supercede all further Prosecution of Quo Warranto's against Corporations, and to restore to them their ancient Charters, Privileges and Franchises, as we hear God hath put into Your Majesty's Heart to do for the City of London, which we intended to have made otherwise one of our Principal Requests.

“ 9. That if it please Your Majesty Writs may be issued out with convenient Speed, for the calling of a Free and Regular Parliament, in which the Church of England may be Secured according to the Acts of Uniformity; Provision may be made for a due Liberty of Conscience, and for Securing the Liberties and Properties of all Your Subjects; and a mutual Confidence and good Understanding may be Established between Your Majesty and all Your People.

“ 10. Above all, That Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to permit Your Bishops to offer You such Motives and Arguments as (we trust) may, by God's Grace, be effectual to persuade Your Majesty to return to the Communion of the Church of England, into whose Most Holy Catholick Faith You were Baptized, and in which You were Educated, and to which it is our Daily Earnest Prayer to God, that You may be Re-united.

“ These, SIR, are the Humble Advices, which out of Conscience of the Duty we owe to God, to Your Majesty, and to our Country, We think fit at this Time to offer to Your Majesty, as suitable to the present State of Your Affairs, and most conducing to Your Service; and so to leave them to Your Princely-Consideration. And we heartily Beseech Almighty God, in whose Hand the Hearts of all Kings are, so to dispose and govern Yours, that in all Your Thoughts, Words and Works, You may ever seek his Honour and Glory, and study to preserve the People committed to Your Charge, in Wealth, Peace and Godliness, to Your own both Temporal and Eternal Happiness. Amen.

We do heartily Concur.

These Proposals would at another Time have rais'd the King's Indignation, but the Necessity of his Affairs obliged him now to Thank their Lordships, and to promise that He would comply with them. Accordingly on Oct. 5. “ His Majesty was graciously pleased to Declare in Council, “ That in Pursuance of his Resolution and Intentions to Protect the Church of England, “ and that all Suspicions and Jealousies to the “ contrary may be removed, He had thought fit to Dissolve the Commission for Causes-Ecclesiastical, and accordingly did give Directions to the Lord-Chancellor to cause the same to be forthwith done”. And on Oct. 10. It was farther Declared, “ That His Majesty having received “ several Complaints of great Abuses and Irregularities committed in the late Regulations of the Corporations, has thought fit to Authorize and Require the Lords-Lieutenants of the several Counties, to Inform themselves of all such Abuses and Irregularities within their Lieutenancies, and to make forthwith Report thereof to His Majesty, together with what they conceive fit to be done for redressing the same; Whereupon His Majesty will give such farther Orders as shall be requisite”. On Oct. 12. It was again Publish'd from Whitehall, “ That the King having Declared His Resolution to Preserve the Church of England in all its Rights and Immunities, His Majesty, as an Evidence of it, has signify'd his Pleasure to the Right Reverend Father in God, the Lord Bishop of Winchester, as Visitor of St. Mary Magdalen-College in Oxford, to Settle that Society Regularly and Statutably.

On Oct. 17. the King Publish'd a Proclamation for restoring Corporations to their ancient Charters, Liberties, Rights and Franchises. And Orders of the Council were the same Day made for Removing and Displacing all Mayors, Sheriffs, Recorders, Town-Clerks, Aldermen, Common-Council-Men, &c. which had been put in by the Late King, or His present Majesty ever since the Year 1679.

It soon appear'd how little the Nation was to depend upon these hasty and forc'd Concessions of the King. On Oct. 16. the Bishop of Winchester caused a Citation to be fix'd on the Gate of Magdalen-College, to recall Dr. Hough, and the former Fellows of that Society, by the Second of November following; but an Account coming that very Post, that the Dutch Fleet had suffered very much in a Storm, and that they would hardly be able to put to Sea again till the Spring, the Bishop upon a frivolous Pretence was recall'd to London, and the Restoration of the College deferr'd. Yet soon after, that News being contradicted, and the Dutch Fleet reported to be in a Sailing-Posture, the Affection to the Church of England reviv'd, and so the Business of the College was effected on the 24th of that Month. This Passage is the more remarkable, because it lost King James many Friends, and lessened him in his Character and Interest, as if his Politicks were to change with the Wind, and as News varied He was playing Fast and Loose with his Subjects.

In the mean Time some Things were done that were not at all Popular. Upon the Death of Dr. Samuel Parker, Bishop of Oxford, and the Illegal-President of Magdalen-College, His Majesty gave the Bishoprick to Mr. Timothy Hall, one of the meanest and most obscure of the City-Divines, who had taken no other Degree than that of Batchelor of Arts, and had indeed no Merit but that of Reading the King's Declaration in his Church, when all his Brethren of Conscience and Honour did refuse it. The Advancement of such a Person to the See of Oxford could be nothing but a Despite to the University, and a Contempt upon the Church of England. Yet this Unworthy Bishop Elect, was on Sunday Oct. 7. Consecrated at Lambeth, by his Grace the Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishops of Chichester and Cheller. It was another unpopular thing to Baptize the Prince of Wales into the Roman Communion, and make the Pope his God-father, as if it were done with a design'd Insult

He Dissolves the Ecclesiastical Commission.

And seems to restore the Corporations,

And Magdalen College in Oxford.

And actually restored Corporations to their ancient Charters.

And yet no depending on these Favours.

Some Things done not Popular.

1688. upon the Protestant Religion; and to give this Publick Account of it:

Whitehall, Octob. 15. "This Day, in the Chappel of St. James's, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, being before Christen'd, was solemnly Named (amidst the Ceremonies and Rites of Baptism) James-Francis-Edward: His Holiness, represented by his Nuncio, God-Father, and the Queen-Dowager God-Mother. The King and Queen Assisted at the Solemnity, with a great Attendance of Nobility and Gentry, and Concourse of People, all expressing their Joy and Satisfaction, which was suitable to the Place and Occasion.

General Belief of an Imposture, in the Prince of Wales.

This Triumph of Popery, did but serve to encrease the General Suspicion and Report of an Imposture; and a Common Fame was spread, That the Mother of the Prince of Wales was to be brought over in the Dutch Fleet. To stifle this News, the Privy-Council was Asssembled; where were likewise present, by His Majesty's Desire and Appointment, the Queen-Dowager, and such of the Peers, both Spiritual and Temporal, as were in Town, as also the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, and the Judges, and several of Their Majesties Council Learn'd in the Law; and then the Ladies, Lords, and Others that were present at the Queen's Labour, did Appear there, and Declar'd upon Oath, what they knew of the Birth of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales: Of all which, a full and particular Relation was made Publick, and was Inroll'd in Chancery, to very little Purpose.

The King labours to wipe off the Suspicion.

Places and Honours.

Under this Affrightment, His Majesty was pleas'd to make the Earl of Derby Lord-Lieutenant of the Counties of Chester and Lancaster, the Earl of Oxford Lord-Lieutenant of Essex, and the Earl of Feversham Lord-Lieutenant of Kent: The Duke of Berwick and the Duke of Ormond were Honour'd with Garters; and the former, who was a little discontented because he did not Command the Fleet, was made Governor of the Tower, in the room of Sir Edward Hales a Roman-Catholic: And on Octob. 28 His Majesty was pleas'd to Constitute the Right-Honourable the Lord Viscount Preston One of His Principal-Secretaries of State, upon the Removal of the Earl of Sunderland from that Office, whom the King discover'd (as He did other things) too late, to be inclinable to the expected Revolution.

Prince of Orange prepares for England;

While King James was under these Distractions at Home and Abroad, the Prince of Orange was Embarking his Troops with extraordinary Diligence; and to justify His Undertaking to the whole World, He Publish'd a Declaration, Dated Octob. 10. N. S. divided into Six and twenty Articles, which may be reduc'd to Three Principal Heads.

Publishes a Declaration.

"The First contain'd an Enumeration of the Grievances of the English Nation, particularly His Majesty's Arrogating to Himself a Dispensing Power; His Advancing Papists to Civil, Ecclesiastical and Military Employments, and allowing them to Sit in the Privy-Council: His Setting up an Illegal Commission for Ecclesiastical Affairs, (in which there was one of His Majesty's Ministers of State, who made Publick Profession of the Popish Religion, and who, at the time of his first Professing it, declar'd, That for a great while before, he had believ'd that to be the only True Religion;) and by which not only the Bishop of London was Suspended, but the President and Fellows of Magdalen-College Arbitrarily Turn'd out of their Free-holds, contrary to that express Provision in Magna Charta, That no Man shall lose Life, or Goods, but by the Law of the Land: His Allowing Popish Monasteries, and Colleges of Jesuits, to be Created: His Turning out of Publick Employments, all such as would not Concur with

1688. His Majesty, in the Repeal of the Test, and Penal Laws: His Invading the Privileges, and Seizing on the Charters of most Corporations, and Placing Popish Magistrates in some of them: His Subjecting the Courts of Judicature to His Arbitrary and Despotick Power, and putting the Administration of Justice into the Hands of Papists: His not only Arming the Papists, in Contempt of the Laws, but likewise raising them up to the greatest Military Trust, both by Sea and Land, Strangers aswell as Natives, and Irish aswell as English, that He might be in a Capacity to Enslave the Nation: His putting the whole Government of Ireland into the Hands of Papists: His Assuming an Absolute and Arbitrary Power in the Kingdom of Scotland; from which it was apparent, what was to be look'd for in England. Secondly, His Highness allעד'd, That those great and insufferable Oppressions, and the open Contempt of all Law, together with the Apprehensions of the sad Consequences that must certainly follow upon it, had made the Subjects to look after such Remedies as are allow'd of in all Nations, and in the most Absolute Monarchies; all which had been without Effect: His Majesty's Evil-Counsellors having endeavour'd to make all Men apprehend the Loss of their Lives, Liberties, Honours and Estates, if they shou'd go about to preserve themselves from this Oppression, by Petitions and Representations; an Instance of which, was the Prosecution of the Seven Bishops: That a Peer of the Realm was treated as a Criminal, only because he said, That the Subjects were not bound to Obey the Orders of a Popish Justice of Peace; though 'tis evident, That they being by Law render'd Incapable of all such Trusts, no Regard is due to their Orders: That both He, and His Consort the Princess, had endeavour'd to signify, with Terms full of Respect to the King, the just and deep Regret which all these Proceedings had given Them, and declar'd what their Thoughts were, touching the Repealing of the Tests, and Penal Laws; but that these Evil-Counsellors had put such Ill Constructions on their Good Intentions, that they had endeavour'd to alienate the King more and more from them. That the last and great Remedy for all these Evils, was, the Calling of a Parliament; which cou'd not yet be compass'd, nor cou'd be easily brought about: For those Men apprehending, that a Lawful Parliament wou'd bring them to Account for all their open Violations of Law, and for their Conspiracies against the Protestant Religion, and the Lives and Liberties of the Subjects; they had endeavour'd, under the specious Pretence of Liberty of Conscience, first to sow Divisions between those of the Church of England and Dissenters, with Design to Engage Protestants, who are equally concern'd to preserve themselves from Popish Oppression, into mutual Quarrellings; that so, by these, some Advantages might be given to them to bring about their Designs; and that, both in Elections of Members of Parliament, and afterwards in the Parliament itself: That they had also made such Regulations as they thought fit and necessary, for Securing all the Members that were to be Chosen by the Corporations; by which means, they hop'd to avoid the Punishment they had deserv'd; though it was apparent, that all Acts made by Popish Magistrates, were Null and Void of themselves: So that no Parliament cou'd be Lawful, for which the Elections and Returns were made by Popish Magistrates, Sheriffs and Mayors of Towns; and therefore as long as the Magistracy was in such Hands, it was not possible to have a Free Parliament, Legally Call'd and Chosen. That there were great and violent Presumptions, inducing

1688. " inducing His Highness to believe, that those " Evil-Counsellors, in order to the gaining the " more Time for the Effecting of their Ill Designs, " had Publish'd, That the Queen had brought-
 " forth a Son; though there had appear'd, both " during the Queen's pretended Bigness, and in " the Manner wherein the Birth was managed, so " many just and visible Grounds of Suspicion, that " not only He Himself, but all the good Subjects " of this Kingdom, did vehemently suspect, That " the pretended Prince of Wales was not born of " the Queen. And though many both doubted " of the Queen's Bigness, and of the Birth of the " Child; yet there was not any one thing done
 " to satisfie them, or put an end to their Doubts.
 " That since His Consort the Princess, and like" wise He Himself, had so great an Interest in " this Matter, and such a Right as all the World
 " knew to the Succession of the Crown; since all " the English did in the Year 1672, when Holland
 " was Invaded with a most Unjust War, use their " utmost Endeavours to put an End to that War,
 " and that in Opposition to those who were then " in the Government; since the English Nation had " ever testify'd a most particular Affection and " Esteem both to His Highness's Dearest Consort,
 " and to Himself, He could not excuse Himself " from espousing that Interest, in a Matter of " such high Consequence, and from contributing " all that in Him lay, for the Maintaining both " of the Protestant Religion, and of the Laws and " Liberties of these Kingdoms: To the doing of " which, His Highness was most earnestly Solicited by " a great-many Lords, both Spiritual and Temporal,
 " and by many Gentlemen, and other Subjects of " all Ranks.

Lastly, " His Highness Declar'd, That for the " foremention'd Reasons, He has thought fit to " Go over to England, and to Carry with Him " a Force sufficient to Defend Him from the " Violence of those Evil-Counsellors: That His " Expedition was intended for no other Design,
 " but to have a Free and Lawful Parliament
 " Assembled, as soon as it was possible; and that " in order to this, all the late Charters, by which " the Elections of Burgesses were Limited, contrary " to the Ancient Custom, shou'd be consider'd as " Null, and of no Force. That to this Parliament, " He wou'd refer the Enquiry into the Birth of the " pretended Prince of Wales, and of all Things " relating thereto, and to the Right of Succession.
 " That He wou'd Concur in every thing that " might procure the Peace and Happiness of the " Nation, under a Just and Legal Government.
 " That He wou'd keep the Forces under His Com" mand, under all the Strictness of Martial Disci" pline; and promis'd, that He would send-back
 " all those Foreign Forces, as soon as the State of " the Nation wou'd admit of it. That therefore,
 " He Invited and Required all Persons whatsoever
 " to Come and Assist Him, in order to the Execu" ting his Design, against all such as shou'd en" deavour to Oppose Him. That He wou'd like" wise take Care that a Parliament shou'd be Call'd
 " in Scotland, for Restoring the Ancient Constitution
 " of that Kingdom, and for bringing the Matters " of Religion to such a Settlement, that the People " might live Easie and Happy. That He wou'd " also study to bring the Kingdom of Ireland to " such a State, that the Settlement there might be " Religiously Observ'd, and that the Protestant
 " and British Interest there might be Secured.
 " And Concludes thus; " That He wou'd endeavour,
 " by all possible Means, to procure such an " Establishment throughout all the Three Kingdoms, " that they might all Live in a Happy Union
 " and Correspondence together; and that the " Protestant Religion, and the Peace, Honour and " Happiness of these Nations might be Establish'd " upon Lasting Foundations.

This Declaration was ready to be sent-over to 1688.
 " England, with another to the same Purpose for " Scotland; when His Highness being inform'd, that " King James, by Granting most of the Bishops De" mands, had taken Measures to render it ineffectual,
 " caus'd the following Addition to be made to it.

" After We had Prepar'd and Printed Our " Declaration, We have understood, that the Sub-" verters of the Religion and Laws of these King" doms, hearing of Our Preparations to Assist " the People against them, have begun to retract
 " some of the Arbitrary and Despotick Powers that " they had assum'd, and to vacate some of their " Unjust Judgments and Decrees: The Sense of " their Guilt, and the Distrust of their Force, " have induc'd them to offer to the City of London,
 " some seeming Relief from their great Oppressions;
 " hoping thereby to quiet the People, and to divert " them from demanding a Re-establishment of " their Religion and Laws, under the Shelter of " Our Arms: They did also give out, That We " do intend to Conquer and Enslave the Nations;
 " And therefore it is We have thought fit to add
 " a few Words to Our Declaration.

" We are confident, that no Persons can have " such hard Thoughts of Us, as to imagine We " have any other Design in this Our Undertaking,
 " than to procure a Settlement of the Religion,
 " and of the Liberties and Properties of the Sub" jects, upon so sure a Foundation, that there may " be no Danger of the Nation's relapsing into the " like Miseries at any time hereafter. And as " the Forces We have brought along with Us, are " utterly Disproportion'd to that Wicked Design " of Conquering the Nation, if We were capable " of Intending it; so the great Numbers of the " Principal Nobility and Gentry, that are Men " of Eminent Qualities and Estates, and Persons " of known Integrity and Zeal both for the Reli- " gion and Government of England, many of them " being also Distinguish'd by their constant Fide" lity to the Crown, who do both Accompany Us
 " in this Expedition, and have earnestly Solicited
 " Us to it, will cover Us from all such malicious " Insinuations: For it is not to be imagin'd, that " either Those who have Invited Us, or Those " who are already come to Assist Us, can join " in a Wicked Attempt of Conquest, to make void
 " their own Lawful Titles to their Honours.
 " Estates and Interests.

" We are also confident, that all Men see how " little weight there is to be laid on all Promises
 " and Engagements that can be now made, since " there has been so little Regard had in the time " past to the most solemn Promises. And as that " imperfect Redress that is now offer'd, is a plain
 " Confession of those Violences of the Government
 " that we have set-forth; so the Defectiveness of " it is no less apparent: For they lay-down no" thing which they may not take-up at Pleasure;
 " and they reserve entire, and not so-much as " mention their Claims and Pretences to an " Arbitrary and Despotick Power; which has been " the Root of all their Oppression, and of the " total Subversion of the Government. And it " is plain, that there can be no Redress, no " Remedy offer'd, but in Parliament, by a Decla- " ration of the Rights of the Subjects that have " been Invaded, and not by any pretended Acts of " Grace, to which the Extremity of their Affairs " has driven them. Therefore it is that We have " thought fit to Declare, That We will refer All
 " to a Free Assembly of this Nation, in a Lawful " Parliament.

King James, by a Proclamation Dated Nov. 2d, K. James's
 " endeavour'd to keep the Prince's Declaration from Proclama-
 " the knowledge of the People; but it was the more " industriously spread: So that the Court itself
 " thought

1688. thought fit it shou'd be Printed, with some specious Animadversions upon it. And about the sametime, this Letter of the Prince to the English Army was likewise Printed.

Gentlemen and Friends,

The Prince of Orange's Letter to the English Army.

WE have given you so full and true an Account of Our Intentions in this Expedition, in Our Declaration; that as We can add nothing to it, so We assure Our Selves you can desire nothing more of Us. We are come to Preserve your Religion, and to Restore and Establish your Liberties and Properties: And therefore We cannot suffer Our Selves to doubt, but that all true English-Men will come to Concur with Us, in Our Desire to secure these Nations from Popery and Slavery. You must all plainly see, that you are only made use of, as Instruments to Enslave the Nation, and Ruine the Protestant Religion: And when that is done, you may judge, what your selves ought to expect, both from the Cashiering of all the Protestants, both English Officers and Soldiers in Ireland, and by the Irish Soldiers being brought over to be put in your Places; and of which you have seen so fresh an Instance, that We need not put you in mind of it. You know how Ill many of your Fellow-Officers have been used, for their standing Firm for the Protestant Religion, and to the Laws of England; and you cannot flatter Your Selves so far, as to expect to be better used, if those who have broke their Word so often, shou'd, by your Means, be brought out of those Straits to which they are reduc'd at present. We hope likewise you will not suffer your selves to be abus'd, by a false-Notion of Honour; but that you will, in the first place, consider what you owe to Almighty GOD, and your Religion, to your Country; to your Selves, and to your Posterity; which you, as Men of Honour, ought to prefer to all private Considerations and Engagements whatsoever. We do therefore expect, that you will consider the Honour that is now set before you, of being the Instruments of Serving your Country, and Securing your Religion: And We will ever Remember the Service you will do Us upon this Occasion; and will Promise unto you, That We shall place such particular Marks of Our Favour on every one of you, as your Behaviour at this time shall deserve of Us, and the Nation. In which We will make a great Distinction of those that shall seasonably Join their Arms with Ours: And you shall find Us to be,

Your Well-wishing and Assured Friend,

W. H. P. O.

This Letter was spread (under-hand) through the whole Army and Militia, and had a strange Effect upon the Minds of them; for they now at least Resolv'd never to Draw their Swords against His Highness, till the Religion and Liberties of England were Secured: And Admiral Herbert, from on-board the Leyden at the Goree, wrote a Letter to the English Fleet, that had the like Influence upon the Sea-men, Concluding thus; I, as a True English-man, and your Friend, Exhort you to Join your Arms to the Prince, for the Defence of the Common-Cause, the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties of your Country. It is, what I am well-assur'd, the major and best-part of the Army as well as the Nation will do, as soon as Conveniencies offer. Prevent them, in so good an Action, whilst it is in your Power; and may it appear, That as the Kingdom hath always Depend'd on the Navy for its Defence; so you will yet go farther by making it as much as in you lies, the Protection of her Religion and Liberties; and then you may assure your selves of all Marks of Favour and Honour suitable to the Merits of so great and glorious an Action. 1688.

Letter of Admiral Herbert to the English Fleet.

The Prince was now ready to Embark, and therefore on the 26th of Oct. N. S. He went into the Assembly of the States-General to take his Leave of them, and deliver'd himself to this Effect; "That He was infinitely oblig'd to them, and was sorry He had no Opportunity to shew his Inclination, Love and Affection unto Them as They had done to Him: That He had hitherto been Encouraged and Supported by their Assistance, which they had so abundantly contributed to him, both by Counsel and otherwise: That it was needless for him to Re-capitulate the Reasons which induced Him to leave his Native Country: That He Hop'd and Pray'd, That God would endue him with Wisdom, Foresight and Courage, and not withdraw his Arm from him in Time of Need: That He called God to Witness He did not undertake such an Arduous Affair, but for his Glory: That his only Aim was for the Honour of God, the Welfare of their Country, and of the Christian Religion; and that therefore He hoped God would bestow his Blessing on it, and if by the Blessing of God He should attain his Ends, to let the States at greater Liberty, and Free them from the Fear of their Neighbours, and the haughty Tyranny of those that would enslave them: That He had left the Care of the Army to Prince Waldeck, and earnestly desir'd the States to Assist him, and to be Unanimous among themselves". Here He seem'd to stop, and after some Pause He passionately recommended one Thing more to them, "That as He did not know how God might dispose of him since He had put on his Sword, and knew not when He should put it off; But in Case God should let that befall him which had happened to many others, and that he should lose his Life in the Expedition, They would then take the Princess, his Wife, under their Protection, who was as well-affected to that Country and the Protestant Religion, as He himself was; and He was satisfy'd She could no-where find such a Secure Place as under the Wings of the States: That He had but One Thing more to desire, which was, That they would always remember him in their Publick and Private Prayers, as in his own he should have the same Regard for them". With which the Tears ran down his Face, and the Pensionary return'd him an Answer in a very affectionate Manner.

Speech of the Prince of Orange to the States-General.

On Oct. 20th, the Dutch Fleet, consisting of 52 Men of War, 25 Frigots, as many Fire-ships, with near 400 Victuallers and other Vessels for Transportation of 3560 Horse, and 10692 Foot, Sail'd from the Flats near the Brill, with the Wind S.W.S. The Prince Embark'd on a Frigot of about 30 Guns, and with him Count Nassau, General of the Horse; Colonel De Soames, Colonel of his Foot-Guards; Count Stirum, Monsieur Auverquerque, Monsieur Bentink, and Monsieur Zeulestein. In the other Ships were many of the Nobility and Gentry of England, of which the Chief were, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Macclesfield, Viscount Mordant, the Earl of Argile, the Lord Wiltshire, the Lord Pawlet, the Lord Elan, Son to the Marquess of Halifax, and the Lord Dunblaine, Admiral Herbert, Mr. Henry Herbert, Mr. Sidney, Mr. Russel, Sir Rowland Gwyn, Major Wildman, Mr. Harbord, Dr. Burnet, Mr. Lister, and many others. And among Foreigners were the Great-Marschal Schomberg, with his Son, Count

The Prince Embarks.

1688. Count Charles Schonberg; Monsieur Calimote, Son to the Marquis De Ruwign, and Two or Three Hundred French-Officers, who had left their Country for their Religion. Admiral Herbert had the Van of the Fleet, Vice-Admiral Everfon brought up the Rear, and the Prince placed himself in the Main-Body, carrying a Flag with English Colours, and their Highnesses Arms with this Motto, The Protestant Religion and the Liberties of England. And underneath it the Motto of the House of Nassau, Je maintiendrai. The Fleet were all under Sail, when the Wind coming more Westwardly, there arose such a Violent Storm in the Night, which continu'd with so much Fury for Twelve Hours, That they were forced to return to Helvoet-sluice, or put into other Harbours.

The Dutch Fleet driven back by a Storm.

This a great Joy to the English Court.

The King questions the Arch-Bishop and Bishops.

Their Answer. He requires a Paper under their Hands.

They refuse to give it.

This Disaster was a mighty Joy to the Papists, and Care was taken to aggravate the Loss in the English Gazette; That 400 Horses had been thrown over Board, and several dead Men, One of their Men of War Stranded, and another Disabled. And then again, That the Damage sustain'd by the Dutch Fleet did appear to be much greater than was at first reported: That there were 1500 Horses dead and unserviceable; the Prince of Orange had lost most of his own, and the Marechal Schonberg the best of his Horses; his Son, Count Charles, was in great Danger, the Ship he was in having spent her Main-Mast; a Captain of Horse in the Sieur Bentinck's Regiment was missing, with his whole Troop; and Two Captains of the Foot-Guards were likewise missing, with their Companies, &c. The same aggravating Reports were industriously spread in Holland, with a different Design for to make the English Court more remiss in their Preparations; the Harlem and Amsterdam Gazettes were order'd to make a Lamentable Relation of the great Damages the Dutch-Fleet and the Army a-board them, had sustain'd. Nine of the Men of War lost, besides others of less Value; 1000 Horses cast over-board; Dr. Burnet and several English Gentlemen drown'd; what an ill Opinion the States-General had of the Expedition; and that it was next to an Impossibility, that the Prince could be in a Condition to pursue his Design till the next Spring.

In the mean Time Captain Langham, who belong'd to one of the English Regiments in Holland, and was just arriv'd from thence, was Seized upon Suspicion, and in his Portmanteau were found a Bundle of the Prince of Orange's Declarations, which were the first that were brought over. When that Expression came to be read, That the Prince was most earnestly invited hither by divers of the Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, and by many Gentlemen and others; The King sent for the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and Two or Three more who were then in Town, and asked them, whether the Contents of the Prince's Declaration relating to their inviting Him hither were true? The Bishops were Cautious in their Answer, and would only promise their faithful Allegiance to His Majesty, and that they would own no other King. His Majesty then required a Paper under their Hands, in Abhorrence of the Prince's intended Invasion, which they seem'd readily to comply with, after they had Consulted with their other Brethren, and therefore desir'd Time to Consider of it, which His Majesty allowed. Some few Days after the Prince's Landing, the Bishops were call'd upon to perform what the King call'd their Promise; They answer'd, "That the Prince of Orange had in his Declaration given out that He was Invited by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and therefore They being but Five or Six in Number, could not Sign a Paper which concern'd not only the whole Episcopal-Order, but also all the Peers in England; and therefore desir'd His Majesty to refer that "Matter to a Free-Parliament". The King was highly dissatisfied with this Answer, and the Lord Preston, who was then with the King, told the Bishops, His Majesty expected more from their Loyalty, and from the Principles of their Church. The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, who came only with the Bishops of London, Rochester and Peterborough, seeing the Bishops of Chester and St. David's in the King's Chamber, told the Lord Preston, that if His Majesty would have him speak, He should be pleas'd to command those Two of their Brethren to withdraw; which being granted, the King asked them again, if they had brought their Declaration of Abhorrence, according to Promise? They answer'd, they had never promised any such thing positively, but only to consider of it, which the Lord Preston confirm'd. They proceeded to say, That it was contrary to their Peerage and their Profession, to promote War against a Prince so nearly Allied to the Crown; however if their Verbal Disowning of the Allegations of the Prince of Orange, relating to the Spiritual Lords, could be of any Service to His Majesty, they consented it should be Printed, tho' they could not give it under their Hands for the Reasons above-mention'd. The King reply'd, That People would never give Credit to any such Printed Declaration without Names; but perceiving they continu'd firm in their Refusal to Subscribe, His Majesty with some Indignation, left them abruptly, and told them, He would trust to his Army. From this Time the Bishop of Durham would appear no more at the Council-Board, but is said to have told the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, That He was sorry for having so long concurr'd with the Court, and desir'd now to be reconcil'd to his Grace and the other Bishops.

1688. The King is Angry.

Their further Answer.

Bishop of Durham comes over.

The King expected the Prince should Land in the North.

And expected that his English Fleet should attack the Dutch.

The Duke of Berwick is sent to Portsmouth.

The Prince of Orange represented as Contemptible.

The King expected that the Prince of Orange would have Landed at Burlington-Bay, or at least at some other Part in the North of England, and therefore He had sent a strong Detachment of his Army that way. He was the more surpris'd to hear by several Expresses that the Dutch-Fleet was seen off of Dover on the 3d of November, Steering their Course Westward: That on the 4th they lay near Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight, and that on the 5th they Landed at Torbay. His Majesty likewise expected that the Lord Dartmouth, his Admiral, would have Attack'd the Dutch-Fleet according to his Orders, and therefore was the more concern'd to hear, that he never stirr'd from the Gun-Fleet near Hartwich, where he rode with 37 Men of War and 17 Fire-ships. Whether a Fog interpos'd between the English and Dutch Navy, or whether the Lord Dartmouth found his Officers and Seamen ready to desert him, or whether his Lordship himself was unwilling to hinder the Deliverance of his Country, is yet unknown. Whatever it was, there was a particular Providence, that the Prince of Orange found no Interruption at Sea, and lost but Three little Vessels of all his Prodigious Fleet.

Upon this Alarm of the Prince's Landing, the Duke of Berwick was sent down to Portsmouth, with several Troops to secure that Important Place, and to prevent, if possible, the People's running in to the Prince; and the rest of the Forces just before encreas'd by the coming over of 4000 Irish, were order'd to March with all Speed towards Salisbury-Plain, where the King propos'd to have an Army of 30000 Men, and to Command 'em in Person. At the same time all Endeavours were us'd to represent the Prince and his Army Contemptible in the Sight of the People, by Printing a false List, and giving out that but Nine of the Nobility and Gentry, and a few of the Rabble appear'd for him; and the King himself did appear so confident of his own Strength, 1688. Strength, that when He was inform'd that the City of London, and the Counties of York and Kent design'd to Address Him for some Accommodation with the Prince of Orange; His Majesty Declar'd in Council, That He look'd upon all those as His Enemies, who shou'd pretend to Advise Him to Treat with the Invader of His Kingdoms: And thereupon He caus'd a Proclamation to be Issued out, on Novemb. 6th, Declaring, "That He cou'd not Call a Parliament, till His Kingdoms were Deliver'd from this Invasion; and that He cou'd no-ways doubt but that all His Faithful and Loving Subjects wou'd readily and heartily Concur and Join with Him, in the entire Suppression and Repelling of those His Enemies, and Rebellious Subjects, who have so Injuriouly and Disloyally Invaded and Disturb'd the Peace and Tranquillity of these His Kingdoms.

The Prince, upon Landing, went to the House of Sir William Courtney, and rested there two or three Nights, and then March'd with his Army towards Exeter, whither Dr. Burnet was sent before, to prepare Quarters for His Highness in the Deanery. On Friday Novemb. 9th, His Highness Enter'd the City of Exeter in a Glorious and Triumphant manner, and went directly to the Cathedral-Church, to Thank God for His Safe Arrival. After Prayers, Dr. Burnet began to read His Highness's Declaration: At which some of the Choir were so afraid, that they immediately left their Seats, and went out with some bustle; however, the Doctor continu'd reading, and at the Conclusion, said, God save the Prince of Orange. To which the major-part of the Congregation answer'd, Amen, Amen. As for the Bishop, Dr. Lamplugh, as soon as he heard that the Prince was Marching toward that City, he thought fit to leave his Palace, and to go directly for London, to pay his Duty to the King, and to receive His Majesty's farther Commands. Which Prudence, or Timorousness, the King took for Loyalty, and immediately gave him the Arch-Bishoprick of York, which had been long kept Vacant for a very ill Design.

While His Highness was at Exeter, the Noblemen and Gentlemen there with him, enter'd into this Engagement: "We do Engage to Almighty God, and to His Highness the Prince of Orange, and with One Another, to stick Firm to this Cause, and to One Another, in the Defence of it, and never to Depart from it, until our Religion, Laws and Liberties are so far secured to us in a Free-Parliament, that they shall be no more in Danger of falling under Popery and Slavery. And whereas we are Engaged in the Common-Cause, under the Protection of the Prince of Orange, by which means his Person is expos'd to Danger, and to the Desperate and Cursed Designs of Papists, and other bloody Men; We do therefore solemnly Engage to God, and to One Another, That if any such Attempts be made upon Him, we will pursue not only those that made them, but all their Adherents, and all we find in Arms against us, with the utmost Severity of Just Revenge, in their Ruine and Destruction: And that the executing any such Attempt, (which God, of his Infinite Mercy, forbid) shall not deprive us from Pursuing this Cause which we do now Undertake, but it shall encourage us to Carry it on with all the Vigour that so Barbarous an Attempt shall deserve.

The Prince expected, that upon his first Landing, all the Gentlemen of the West wou'd Join Him; but he found, that for Nine Days together, scarce any Person of Note had dar'd to Come in; and He perceiv'd that the Mayor and Aldermen of Exeter came to Visit Him rather out of Fear than Affection; that He wanted 1688. Recruits, and began more to want Money, and therefore He was under some melancholy Doubts for the Success of His Expedition. He held a Council of War, and suffer'd it to be Propos'd to Him to Re-imbarque for Holland. But by this time, the Gentlemen of Somersetshire and Dorsetshire, in considerable Numbers, found the way to Exeter. The Prince, on Novemb. 15th, receiv'd them in a Body, and spoke thus to 'em:

"Though We know not all your Persons, yet We have a Catalogue of your Names, and remember the Character of your Worth and Interest in your Country. You see, We are Come according to your Invitation, and Our Promise. Our Duty to God, obliges Us to Protect the Protestant Religion; and Our Love to Mankind, your Liberties and Properties. We expected, you that dwelt so near the Place of Our Landing, wou'd have Join'd Us sooner: Not that it is now too late, nor that we want your Military Assistance so much, as your Countenance and Presence, to Justifie Our Declared Pretensions, rather than to Accomplish Our Good and Gracious Designs. Though We have brought both a good Fleet, and a good Army, to render these Kingdoms Happy, by Rescuing all Protestants from Popery and Slavery, and Arbitrary Power; by Restoring them to their Rights and Properties Establish'd by Law, and by Promoting of Peace and Trade, which is the Soul of Government, and the very Life and Blood of a Nation: yet We rely more on the Goodness of God, and the Justice of Our Cause, than on any Humane Force and Power whatsoever. Yet since God is pleas'd We shall make Use of Humane Means, and not expect Miracles for Our Preservation and Happiness; Let Us not neglect making Use of this Gracious Opportunity, but with Prudence and Courage put in Execution Our so-Honourable Purposes. Therefore, Gentlemen, Friends, and Fellow-Protestants, We bid You and all your Followers most heartily Welcome to Our Court and Camp. Let the whole World now judge if Our Pretensions are not Just, Generous, Sincere, and above Price; since We might have ev'n a Bridge of Gold to return Back: But it is Our Principle and Resolution, rather to Die in a Good Cause, than Live in a Bad one; well knowing, that Vertue and True Honour is its own Reward; and the Happiness of Mankind, Our Great and Only Design.

These Gentlemen having broken the Ice, were soon follow'd by several other Persons of Greater Note; The Lord Colchester (Son to the Earl of Rivers, Lieutenant to the Lord Dover's Troop of Guards) waited upon His Highness, accompany'd by Thomas Wharton Esq; Colonel Godfrey, James Howe Esq; some Life-Guards of his Troop, and about Threescore more on Horse-back. The Lord Cornbury (Colonel of the Royal-Regiment of Dragoons) pretending an Order from the King to go and Beat-up one of the Enemies Advanc'd-Posts, Carry'd off with him his own Regiment, and the Royal-Regiment of Horse, and the Duke of St. Alban's Regiment, Commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Langhton, and with the major-part of them Went in to the Prince at Exeter; where, the Day before, Came in the Lord Abington, Mr. Russel, Captain Cargis, and many others: And indeed, most of the Nobility and Gentry were forming themselves into Parties in every County of England, to be ready for the Prince's Service, as soon as they cou'd have Opportunity to Join Him. The Lord Lovelace was the only Person Intercepted, he was going with that Design with about 60 or 70 Horse-men, who too boldly took their Lodging

The Court was extremely pleas'd with this Apprehension of the Lord Lovelace; but so mortify'd presently upon it, with the News of my Lord Cornbury's Desertion, that at first the Trains of Artillery, the King's Equipage, and the rest of the Troops that were moving towards Salisbury, had Orders to stop their March, it being now uncertain whether the King wou'd go to the Army or not: However, after several Consultations, which the Earl of Feversham held with the General-Officers, and at which the Count De Roy Assisted, it was thought necessary, That the King shou'd hasten his Departure, that He might, by His Presence, keep those firm who began to stagger.

At this Juncture, most of the Protestant Lords who were then in London, (viz.) the Arch-Bishops of Canterbury and of York, the Bishops of St. Asaph, Ely, Rochester, Peterborough, and ev'n of Oxford, the Dukes of Grafton and Ormond, the Earls of Clare, Clarendon, Burlington, Anglesey and Rochester, Viscount Newport, and the Lords Paget, Shandois and Ossulston, Drew up a Petition; wherein they told the King, "That in the deep Sense of the Miseries of a War, now breaking-out in the Bowels of this Kingdom, &c. they did think themselves bound in Conscience, and out of the Duty they ow'd to GOD, their Holy Religion, His Majesty, and their Country, most humbly to offer to His Majesty, That, in their Opinions, the only visible Way to Preserve His Majesty and His Kingdom, wou'd be, the Calling of a Parliament, Regular and Free in all respects: That therefore they did most earnestly Beseech His Majesty, That He wou'd be pleas'd, with all speed, to Call such a Parliament, wherein they shou'd be most ready to Promote such Counsels and Resolutions of Peace and Settlement in Church and State, as might conduce to His Majesty's Honour and Safety, and to the Quieting the Minds of his People; and likewise, they did most humbly Beseech His Majesty, in the mean-time, to use such Means for preventing the Effusion of Christian Blood, as to His Majesty shou'd seem most meet and proper."

The Duke of Norfolk, the Marquess of Halifax, the Earls of Oxford and Nottingham, and the Lord Carbury, who were at the Drawing-up of this Petition, wou'd have a Clause inserted, That the Peers who had Join'd the Prince, might Sit in that Free Parliament for which they Petition'd His Majesty; but the other Lords thought this Clause needless. This Petition was Presented to the King on Saturday Novemb. 17th, by the Two Arch-Bishops, and the Bishops of Ely and Rochester. His Majesty, who was Advis'd by the Popish Lords about Him, to rely on His Army, rather than trust Himself with a Parliament, gave 'em this Answer; That what they ask'd of Him, He Himself most passionately desir'd: That therefore, He promis'd them, on the Faith of a King, that He wou'd have a Parliament, and such an One as they ask'd for, as soon as ever the Prince of Orange had quitted this Realm; but, in the mean-time, it was not possible a Parliament shou'd be Free, whilst an Enemy was in the Kingdom, and cou'd make a Return of near an Hundred Voices. By this Answer, however plausible it was, the King entirely ruin'd his Interest; for the least-discerning Person cou'd not but perceive, that the Prince of Orange's Army, was the only Humane Security the Nation had for the Calling of a Free Parliament; and that if King James shou'd force His Highness to leave the Kingdom, all their Laws and Liberties must become precarious, and lie at the Mercy of the Conqueror.

On the same Day, Nov. 17. the King began his Journey towards Salisbury, and just before his setting-out, He call'd some of the Officers who were then about him, the Duke of Grafton, the Lord Churchill, Colonel Trelawney, and Colonel Kirk, and spoke to 'em in this Manner; According to the Lords Petition I have engaged my Royal Word to call a Free-Parliament, as soon as ever the Prince of Orange has quitted the Kingdom, and am Resolved to do all that lies in my Power, to quiet the Minds of my People, by securing their Religion, Laws and Liberties. If you desire any thing more, I am ready to grant it: But if after all this any of you is not Satisfied, let him declare himself; I am willing to grant Passes to all such as have a Mind to go over to the Prince of Orange, and spare them the Shame of deserting their Lawful Sovereign. At the same Time His Majesty recommended the Care of the City to the Lord-Mayor, telling him, He left a sufficient Number of Troops for their Defence: That upon any Exigence He should Apply himself to the Privy-Council, assuring him, That if He return'd Victorious, He would punctually perform what He had already promised, for the security of their Religion and Liberties. The King committed the Administration of Affairs in his Absence to the Lord-Chancellor, the Lords Arundel, Bellasis, Preston and Godolphin, which was not at all to the People's Satisfaction. In the mean-time Father Petre, who had been the great Author of these Dangers to the King, run away from them and went over to France, under the Protection of the Lord Walgrave, who was sent thither in the Room of Colonel Skelton.

The King arriv'd at Salisbury on Monday-Night, Nov. 19. and took up his Lodging in the Bishop's Palace the next Day. He was going out to View Part of his Army, when his Nose fell a-Bleeding in so violent a Manner, that nothing could stop it but the Breathing a Vein, which hinder'd His Majesty from going the next Day to Westminster, the most Advanc'd Post of his Army. Upon this little Interruption most of the Chief-Officers apply'd themselves to the Earl of Feversham, desiring him to assure His Majesty, That upon any Occasion they would be ready to spill the last drop of their Blood in his Service, yet they could not in Conscience fight against a Prince, who was come over with no other Design than to procure the Calling of a Free-Parliament, for the Security of their Religion and Liberties. By this the King might very well perceive how little he was to depend upon his Army; and the General, the Lord Feversham, might well understand that none of the Chief-Officers would stand by him. The Lord Churchill was more-especially suspected by the General, who conjur'd His Majesty to have him secur'd for a Terror to the rest, but could not prevail with His Majesty to do it; so the next Day the Lord Churchill went over to the Prince, with as many as were willing to follow him, amongst whom were the Duke of Grafton, Colonel Berkeley, and Four or Five Captains of his Regiment of Dragoons. Upon his going-off the Lord Churchill sent this Letter to the King.

Upon the News of King James's being come March of to Salisbury, the Prince of Orange March'd out of the Prince of Exeter with his Army, leaving only Sir John of Orange, Gay with his New-raisd Regiment to Guard that City. On Nov. 20. there was a Skirmish at Win- anton, between a Detachment of 70 Horse, and 50 Dragoons and Granadiers commanded by Gle- ford, Sarsfield, and Webb, and 25 of the Prince of Orange's Men, commanded by one Campbel, a Lieutenant in Mackay's Regiment. These latter, tho' so unequal in Number, Fought with such undaunted Bravery, that they maintain'd their Ground for a considerable time; and when they were like to be Over-power'd, a Miller coming accidentally that way, Alarm'd the King's Party, by telling 'em, he had over-taken a strong Detachment of the Prince's Army, who were just entering the Town, whereupon they Retreated in great Confusion, leaving several of their Men Kill'd, and Cornet Webb Wounded. This small Action struck a Terror into the Minds of King James's Army, who were otherwise little inclin'd to Fighting.
 And besides, it was every-where Magnify'd, so much above the real Truth, that it clearly shew'd how much the whole Nation were for the Success of the Prince of Orange, who was soon after in-form'd of His Majesty's retiring to London, and the broken Remains of his Army to Reading; which being confirm'd by Prince George, and the Duke of Ormond, who joyn'd him at Sherborn-Castle, His Highness March'd with a Numerous Attendance into Salisbury, where He was receiv'd with much more Joy than the King had lately been.

The King came to Whitehall on Monday Night, The King Nov. 26. where his first Step again was very tall at White- and fatal to him; for he appointed Colonel Bevil hall.
Skelton to be Lieutenant of the Tower of London.
 But to do a more popular Thing, on Nov. 28. His Majesty gave Order to the Lord-Chancellor for issuing out Writs for Summoning a Parliament to meet at Westminster, the 15th Day of Jan. next; and on Nov. 30. the King Publish'd a Proclamation Calls a for the speedy Calling of a Parliament, ending Parlia- with these good Words: And for the Security of ment.
all Persons both in their Elections and Service in Parliament, We do hereby Publish and Declare, That all our Subjects shall have free Liberty to Elect, and all our Peers, and such as shall be Elected Members of our House of Commons, shall have full Liberty and Freedom to Serve and Sit in Parliament, notwithstanding they have taken up Arms, or committed any Act of Hostility, or been any way Aiding or Assisting therein. And for the better Assurance hereof, We have Graciously directed a General Pardon to all our Subjects, to be forthwith prepar'd to Pass our Great Seal; And for the Reconciling all Publick Breaches, and Obliterating the Memory of all past Miscarriages, We do hereby Exhort, and kindly Admonish all our Subjects to Dispose themselves to Elect such Persons for their Representatives in Parliament, as may not be Biass'd by Prejudice or Passion, but Qualify'd with Parts, Experience and Prudence, proper for this Conjuncture, and agreeable to the Ends and Purposes of this Our Gracious Proclamation. But see the 1688. Effect of ill-timing Things: Had this been done before the King went down to Salisbury, it had been Acceptable, and in all probability Successful. But it was now too late; besides, it was Extorted from His Majesty by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal then in London, who being Summon'd to give their Counsel about the present Exigencies, did Agree in these following Advices. First, To Grant a General Pardon to all those, that were either come over with the Prince of Orange, or had joyn'd with him since his Landing: Secondly, To Depute some of the Lords to Attend the Prince, and to Treat with him about a Suspension of Arms, and to Endeavour to bring Matters to an Accommodation: Thirdly, To turn immediately all Papists out of their Employments, to Convince the World, that His Majesty Acted a Sincere Part. His Majesty took that Night to consider of their Advice, and the next Day Resolv'd in Council to Call a Parliament; and further declar'd, That He would Grant a Pardon, and Name Commissioners to Treat with the Prince of Orange; But as to that Part of the Lord's Advice, relating to the Roman-Cathelicks; His Majesty was unwilling to Grant it, and only said, He would leave that Matter to be Debated in Parliament.

Advice of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal.

The Princess of Denmark Retires.

When the King came back to London, He found his Daughter the Princess Anne of Denmark gone away the Night before; and when she was first Missing, the People were so Enrag'd, that they would have Torn the Papish Party to Pieces, upon a Surmise, that they had either made away with her, or Confin'd her to the Tower, if this Letter of her Royal Highness to the Queen had not been produc'd.

M A D A M,

Writes a Letter to the Queen. I Beg Your Pardon, if I am so deeply Affected with the surprizing News of the Prince's being gone, as not to be able to see you, but to leave this Paper to Express my humble Duty to the King, and Your Self; and to let you know that I am gone to Absent my Self, to avoid the King's Displeasure, which I am not able to Bear, either against the Prince, or my Self; and I shall stay at so great a Distance, as not to Return before I hear the happy News of a Reconciliation. And as I am Confident the Prince did not leave the King with any other Design, than to use all possible Means for his Preservation; so I hope you will do me the Justice to believe, that I am not capable of following him for any other End. Never was any One in such an unhappy Condition, so divided between Duty and Affection to a Father and a Husband, and therefore I know not what to do, but to follow One, to preserve the Other. I see the general falling-off of the Nobility and Gentry, who Avow to have no other End, than to Prevail with the King to Secure their Religion, which they saw so much in Danger by the violent Counsels of the Priests; who, to promote their own Religion, did not care to what Danger they Expos'd the King. I am fully perswaded that the Prince of Orange designs the King's Safety and Preservation, and hope all Things may be Compos'd without more Bloodshed, by the Calling of a Parliament. God grant a happy End to these Troubles, that the King's Reign may be Prosperous, and that I may shortly meet You in Peace and Safety: Till when, let Me beg You to continue the same favourable Opinion that You hitherto had of, &c.

Journey of Her Royal Highness.

The King was soon after inform'd, That Her Royal Highness, with the Lady Churchill, and the Lady Berkley, had privately taken Coach at the Bishop of London's House in Aldersgate-Street; from whence they went directly to Nottingham, attended by that Prelate, the Earl of Derfet, and about Forty Horsemen. At Nottingham, the Earl of Devonshire gave Her a Guard of Two Hundred Men, by whom She was safely Conducted to Oxford, where Prince George soon after met Her, with a Detachment of the Prince of Orange's Forces.

1688

The Persons Appointed to Treat with the Prince of Orange, were the Marquess of Hallifax, the Earl of Nottingham, and the Lord Gedolphin, all Men of Address and Application; the Earl of Rochester was propos'd to be One of that Number, but his Lordship, and the Marquess of Hallifax not being able to Act together with any right Understanding, he got himself Excus'd. A Trumpeter was immediately dispatch'd by the Earl of Faversham, with a Letter to His Highness, to demand the necessary Passes. On Sunday, Decemb. 2. The Commissioners began their Journey, and came the next Day to Reading, where they met the Trumpeter, with the Passes desir'd from the Prince. The Day before the Departure of the Commissioners, the Earl of Clarendon went over to the Prince of Orange, which gave many occasion to think, that he was gone before 'em, either to Baffle the Negotiation, or at least to give the Prince a Jealousie of the Marquess of Hallifax, whom he thought an irreconcilable Enemy to his Family. On Dec. 6. The Three Commissioners acquainted the King, that they were to meet the Prince of Orange that Night at Avesbury: But the next Day, they inform'd His Majesty, that His Highness had made a new Appointment to meet at Hungerford, and had sent to them the Earls of Oxford and Clarendon, to desire 'em to make their Proposals in Writing. This Message of the Prince of Orange was thought an Evasion of all manner of Treaty, and the King began now to think it high time to provide for the Safety of His Person, and his Family. Upon the News of the Prince's Forces advancing towards Reading, the King's Army that Quarter'd there, was Order'd to March nearer London, and to fix their Head-Quarters at Colebrook; but on Dec. 8. the Court being inform'd that it was only a Detachment of His Highness's Horse that was advanc'd to Newberry, the Royal Forces were Re-manded to their old Post, and the same Day the Earl of Faversham return'd to Maidenhead, his Head-Quarters. The People of Reading, who had very much suffer'd by the King's Army Quartering amongst them, had upon their first with-drawing, invited some of the Prince of Orange's Forces that lay not far off, to take Possession of that Post, to secure themselves against the Universal Alarm of the Irish. Upon the unexpected Return of the King's Forces, Colonel Lamier, who commanded the Royal Detachment, taking a Re-possession of the Town, posted some Companies of Irish Dragoons to defend a Bridge, over which, His Highness's Troops were to Pass, and drew up in Battalia in the Market-Place, a Scotch Regiment of Horse: Upon the Approach of a small Party of the Prince's Cavalry, the Irish Fir'd, and run away; the Scotch, who had no Inclination to Fight, fled likewise in Disorder, and complain'd that the Town's-People Shot at 'em behind from their Windows, whilst the Prince's Horse Charg'd them before. Maidenhead-Bridge was also Fortify'd, and its Defence committed to the Irish, but some of the Town's-Men Beating a Dutch March in the Night, in order to Alarm them, this Stratagem took so well, that the Irish abandon'd their Post in Confusion, leaving their Cannon behind 'em.

Motions of the Two Armies.

Skirmish at Reading.

Things being come to this desperate pass, the Papish Cabal, and particularly Monsieur Barillon the French Ambassador, and Count Lansun, prest the King to send away the Queen and Prince 1688. into France, and to follow her as soon as possible. Upon this Resolution, on Dec. 10th, the Queen in Disguise, with the Prince of Wales, and his Governours the Marchioness of Perth, with her Husband the Marquess, the Countess of Devon, Seigneur Montecuculi, Seigneur Torini, under the Conduct of Riva an Italian, and Labidi a French-man, the Wet and Dry-Nurses, and a Woman or two more, stole by the Priory-Stairs to the Water-side, cross'd the Thames in a Dark Stormy Night, and being got on the other Side, waited under a Wall till the Coaches were got ready in the next Inn. When the Queen and Her Retinue had taken Coach, She was attended by a strong Guard to Greenwich, and so to Gravesend, where She was to Embarque in a Yacht that lay ready to carry Count Lanszun to France. Mrs. Labidi, who was acquainted with the Captain, amus'd him for a while, till the Queen (who pass'd for an Italian Lady, returning to her Native-Country, with all her Family) was got into the Cabbin which was prepar'd for her. Three Irish Captains embarkt at the same time, being Appointed by the King to have an Eye upon the Captain, in Case of Discovery, or Suspicion: But without any Danger, they had a very quick Passage, and Landed safely at Calais.

Immediately after the Queen's Departure, His Majesty, to cover His Design of following Her, said publickly, That He would return to the Head of His Forces, and Fight the Prince of Orange: But He privately Order'd the Broad Seal to be thrown into the Thames, and the Parliament-Writs to be burnt, and a Covenant to be Enter'd against making Use of those few that were Sent out already; and then He wrote this Letter to the Earl of Feversham.

My LORD,

He Writes to His General. " Things being come to that Extremity, that I have been forc'd to Send away the Queen, and my Son the Prince of Wales, that they might not fall into the Enemy's Hands, which they must have done, if they had stay'd; I am oblig'd to do the same thing, in hopes it will please God, of His Infinite Mercy to this Unhappy Nation, to touch their Hearts again with true Loyalty and Honour. If I cou'd have rely'd on all my Troops, I might not have been put to the Extremity I now am in; and wou'd, at least, have had one Blow for it: But though I know there are many Valiant and Brave Men among you, both Officers and Soldiers; yet you know, that both you, and several of the General-Officers and Soldiers, and Men of the Army, told Me, It was no-ways adviseable for Me, to venture My Self at their Head, or think to fight the Prince of Orange with 'em.

" And now there remains only for Me, to Thank you, and all those, both Officers and Soldiers, who have Stuck to Me, and been truly Loyal; I hope you will still retain the same Fidelity to Me. And though I do not expect you shall expose your-selves, by resisting a Foreign Army, and a Poison'd Nation; yet I hope your former Principles are so in-rooted in you, that you will keep your-selves free from Associations, and such pernicious Things. Time presseth, so that I can add no more.

JAMES REX.

The King Goes away privately. After Writing this Letter, on Monday-Evening, Dec. 10th, the Life-Guards were Order'd to be Ready, to attend His Majesty to Uxbridge; but in stead of going to the Army, the King took Water at Whitehall Priory-Stairs, at Two of the Clock in the Morning, accompany'd only by Sir Edward Hales, Mr. Sheldon, and Labidi. As soon as the King's Departure was publickly known, the Duke of Northumberland, with his Troop of Guards, Declar'd for the Prince: And his Example was follow'd by the Marquess of Miremont; and the other Principal-Officers of the Army about Town, who Met at Whitehall, and sent an Express to the Prince of Orange, to Acquaint Him with the King's Going away, and to Assure Him, That they wou'd Assist the Lord-Mayor to keep the City quiet, till His Highness's Arrival.

Upon this Inter-Regnum, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, Met at Guildhall; where having Sent for the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, they Drew up a Declaration, in this Form and Title:

The Declaration of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, Assembled at Guildhall, Dec. 11. 1688.

" WE doubt not but the World believes, That in this Great and Dangerous Conjunction, we are heartily and zealously Concern'd for the Protestant Religion, the Laws of the Land, and the Liberties and Properties of the Subject: And we did reasonably hope, that the King having Issued His Proclamation and Writs for a Free-Parliament, we might have rested Secure, under the Expectation of that Meeting: But His Majesty having Withdrawn Himself, and, as we apprehend, in order to His Departure out of this Kingdom, by the Pernicious Councils of Persons Ill-affected to Our Nation and Religion; we cannot, without being wanting to our Duty, be silent under these Calamities, wherein the Popish Councils which so long prevail'd, have miserably involv'd these Realms: We do therefore Unanimously Resolve to Apply our-selves to His Highness the Prince of Orange, who with so great Kindness to these Kingdoms, so vast Expence, and so much Hazard to His own Person, hath Undertaken, by endeavouring to procure a Free-Parliament, to Rescue Us, with as little Effusion as possible of Christian Blood, from the imminent Dangers of Popery and Slavery.

" And we do hereby Declare, That we will, with our utmost Endeavours, Assist His Highness in the obtaining such a Parliament with all speed, wherein our Laws, our Liberties and Properties, may be Secured, the Church of England in particular, with a due Liberty to Protestant Dissenters, and, in general, the Protestant Religion and Interest over the whole World may be Supported and Encourag'd, to the Glory of God, the Happiness of the Establish'd Government in these Kingdoms, and the Advantage of all Princes and States in Christendom, that may be herein concern'd.

" In the mean time, we will endeavour to preserve, as much as in us lies, the Peace and Security of these Great and Populous Cities of London and Westminster, and the Parts adjacent, by taking Care to Disarm all Papists, and Secure all Jesuits and Romish Priests who are in and about the same.

" And if there be any thing more to be perform'd by us, for promoting His Highness's Generous Intentions for the Publick Good, we shall be ready to do it as Occasion shall require.

“ Whereas His Majesty hath privately this Morning Withdrawn Himself; We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, whose Names are Subscribed, being Assembled at Guildhall in London, having Agreed upon and Sign'd a Declaration, Entituled, [The Declaration of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, Assembled at Guildhall Dec. 11. 1688.] Do Desire the Right-Honourable the Earl of Pembroke, the Right-Honourable the Lord-Viscount Weymouth, the Right-Reverend Father in God, the Lord Bishop of Ely, and the Right-Honourable the Lord Culpeper, forthwith to Attend His Highness, the Prince of Orange, with the said Declaration; and at the same time to acquaint His Highness with what we have further done at that Meeting.

Dated at Guildhall, Decemb. 11th, 1688.

The Lords commit the Government of the Tower to the Lord Lucas.

The Lords, at the same time, sent for Colonel Skelton, Lieutenant of the Tower, and demanded the Keys of him; which he willingly resigning, they bestow'd the Government of it upon the Lord Lucas, a Man of Honour, and a Lover of his Country; which Choice was afterwards Confirm'd by the Prince of Orange. The same Day, the Lieutenant of the City of London made an Address to the Prince of Orange, to Thank Him for Exposing His Person to so many Dangers, by Sea and Land, for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom; without which Unparallel'd Undertaking, they must probably have suffer'd all the Miseries that Popery and Slavery could have brought upon them; They therefore humbly Desire, That His Highness would please to repair to this City, with what convenient speed He can, for the Perfecting the Great Work which His Highness had so happily begun, to the General Joy and Satisfaction of them All.

Address of the Lieutenant of the City of London to the Prince of Orange.

With this Address, Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Basil Firebrace, Sir William Russel, and Charles Duncomb Esq; were Order'd to Attend His Highness. At the same time, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the City of London, Drew up also the following Address, which was Presented to the Prince of Orange by Four Aldermen, and Eight Common-Council-Men, Concluding thus, We presume to make Your Highness our Refuge, and do, in the Name of this Capital-City, implore Your Highness's Protection, and most humbly beseech Your Highness to vouchsafe to repair to this City, where Your Highness will be receiv'd with Universal Joy and Satisfaction. Though the Train'd-Bands were now in Arms, yet the Mob of the City was presently up, and pull'd-down the Meas-Houses in the City and Suburbs; and yet were so well Dispos'd and so well Commanded by their Leader, that they did no Mischief to any but the Papists.

Address of the Lord-Mayor, &c.

The King's Commissioners returning to London, the same Day His Majesty had left His Palace, were much surpriz'd to hear of his sudden Departure; because they had brought with 'em such an Answer from the Prince, as might have encourag'd Him to stay, and of which they had already inform'd His Majesty, by an Express He receiv'd two or three Hours before He left Whitehall. The Proposals deliver'd to His Highness at Hungerford, Dec. 8th, by the Commissioners, were these:

Proceedings of the Commissioners:

S I R,

“ THE King Commanded us to acquaint you, That He observeth, All the Differences and Causes of Complaint, alledged by Your Highness, seem to be referr'd to a Free-Parliament.

our Proposals to the Prince.

“ His Majesty, as He hath already Declar'd, was Resolv'd, before this, to Call one; but thought, that in the present State of Affairs, it was adviseable to defer it till Things were more compos'd; yet seeing that His People still continue to desire it, he hath Put forth His Proclamation in order to it, and hath Issued His Writs for the Calling of it.

“ And to prevent any Cause of Interruption, in it He will Consent to every thing that can be reasonably Required, for the Security of all those that come to it.

“ His Majesty hath therefore sent us to Attend Your Highness, for the Adjusting of all Matters that shall be Agreed to be necessary to the Freedom of Elections, and the Security of Sitting; and is ready to Enter immediately into a Treaty in order to it.

“ His Majesty Propos'd, That in the mean time, the respective Armies may be return'd within such Limits, and at such Distance from London, as may prevent the Apprehensions that the Parliament may be in any kind Disturb'd; being desirous that the Meeting may be no longer delay'd, than it must be by the usual and necessary Forms.

Hallifax, Nottingham, Godolpin.

The Prince having receiv'd this Paper, continu'd His March towards London; and being arriv'd at Littlecot, did the next Day, with the Advice of the Lords and Gentlemen with Him, make these following Proposals, in Answer to them.

The Prince's Answer.

“ WE, with the Advice of the Lords and Gentlemen Assembled with Us, have, in Answer, made these following Proposals.

1. “ That all Papists, and such Persons as are not qualify'd by Law, be Disarm'd, Disbanded, and Remov'd from all Employments Civil and Military.
2. “ That all Proclamations that reflect upon Us, or any that have come to Us, be Recall'd: And if any Persons, for having Alisted Us, have been Committed, that they be forthwith Set at Liberty.
3. “ That for the Security and Safety of the City of London, the Custody and Government of the Tower be immediately put into the Hands of the said City.
4. “ But if His Majesty shou'd think fit to be in London, during the Sitting of the Parliament, that We may be there also, with an equal Number of Our Guards: And if His Majesty shall be pleas'd to be in any Place from London, whatever Distance He thinks fit, that We may be at the same Distance; and that the respective Armies be from London Forty Miles; and that no further Forces be brought into the Kingdom.
5. “ And that, for the Security of the City of London, and their Trade, Tilbury-Fort be put into the Hands of the City.
6. “ That a sufficient part of the Publick Revenue be assign'd Us, for the Support and Maintenance of Our Troops, until the Sitting of a Free-Parliament.
7. “ That, to prevent the Landing of the French, or other Foreign Troops, Portsmouth may be put into such Hands, as by His Majesty and Us shall be Agreed on.

The Earl of Feversham, and the other General-Officers, going to Uxbridge to Attend the King's pretended coming thither, receiv'd His Majesty's Letter, which was the same Day Read aloud to the Troops, and drew Tears from most of 'em. Hereupon they held a Council of War, and concluded from the Words of the Letter, That since the King did not expect they should resist a Foreign Army, His Intention was, That the rest of the Army should be Disbanded; and accordingly 4000 Men, the Earl of Feversham Disbands the Army.

1688. the Earl had then with him, were immediately Dismiss'd: after which he sent the following Letter to the Prince of Orange, Subscrib'd by himself and Three General Officers.

S I R,

The Earl of Feversham writes to the Prince.

“ HAVING receiv'd this Morning a Letter from His Majesty with the Unfortunate News of his Resolution to go out of England, I thought my self oblig'd, (being at the Head of his Army, and having receiv'd his Orders, to make no Opposition against any-body,) to let Your Highness know it, with the Advice of the Officers here, so soon as was possible, to hinder the Effusion of Blood. I have Order'd already to that Purpose all the Troops that are under my Command, which shall be the last Order, they shall receive from Feversham, Lanier, Fenwick, Oglethorp.

Censures on the Earl of Feversham.

The Trumpeter sent to the Prince with this Letter return'd without an Answer, which shew'd his Highness did not approve of that Conduct; and indeed most of the Lords in London, look'd upon that hasty Disbanding, to be a rash and unadvised Action. A Panick Fear which next Day Alarm'd the City of London, contributed much to the Censure paid on the Earl of Feversham; for some Country-Fellows, arriving about Midnight at Westminster, caused a sudden Uproar, by Reporting that the Irish in a desperate Rage were advancing to London, and putting all before 'em to Fire and Sword. This not only rais'd the Train-Bands and Regular-Troops, but most People left their Beds, placed Lights in the Windows, and stood to their Arms; and what's very strange, this Universal Terror spread itself that very Night over the whole Kingdom. An effectual Stratagem, commonly ascribed to the Duke of Schomberg.

Panick Fear thro'gh-out England.

The Day before this Consternation, Dec. 12. Chancellor Jefferyes, whom every-body thought to have been gone with the King, having disguis'd and absconded himself in a Little House at Wapping, in order to his Escape beyond-Sea, as he was looking out of the Window in a Seaman's Cap, was discover'd by a Clerk in Chancery, that accidentally passed by. Whereupon he was immediately Apprehended, and after a fair Deliverance from the Mob, that would have torn him to Pieces, he was carried before the Lord-Mayer, who fell into a Fit of an Apoplexy, whilst he was asking him some Questions, and Died soon after. On the same Day the Peers, Assembled at Whitehall with some of the Privy-Council, Committed him to the Tower, where, to drown the Conscience of his Crimes, or the Cowardice of his Nature, He fell to Intemperate Drinking, which put him into a Fever that took away his Life. In the mean while the Prince of Orange was advanc'd as far as Henly with the greatest Part of his Army, and finding the King's Troops now without an Head, committing many Disorders, He put out this Declaration.

Lord-Chancellor Jefferyes Apprehended at Wapping.

Declaration of the Prince of Orange.

“ WHEREAS We are Informed, That divers Regiments, Troops and Companies have been Encourag'd to disperse themselves in an unusual and unwarrantable Manner, whereby the Publick Peace is very much disturbed; We have thought fit hereby to Require all Colonels and Commanders in Chief of such Regiments, Troops and Companies, by Beat of Drum or otherwise to call together the several Officers and Soldiers belonging to their respective Regiments, Troops and Companies, in such Places as they shall find most convenient for their Rendezvous, and there to keep them in good Order and Discipline. And we do likewise Direct and Require all such Officers and Soldiers forthwith to repair to such Places as be appointed for that Purpose, by the respective Colonels and Commanders in Chief, whereof speedy Notice is to be given unto us for our further Orders.

Given at our Court at Henly, Dec. 13. 1688.

Prince of Orange.

At the same Time the Prince sent a Letter to the Earl of Denby, to desire him to come to him, and order'd the Secretary of War, Mr. Blathwaite, to bring him an Account of the King's Army. He also dispatch'd the Lord Churchill to London, to Re-assemble his Troop of Horse-Guards, and directed the Duke of Grafton to go and take Possession of Tilbury-Fort, with his Regiment of Foot-Guards. And the next Day the Peers and Privy-Council, in Pursuance of the Prince's Directions, made this Order.

“ WE the PEERS of this Realm, Assembled with some of the Lords of the Privy-Council, do hereby Require all Irish Officers and Soldiers to repair forthwith to their Respective Bodies to which they do or did lately belong; and do hereby Declare, that behaving themselves peaceably, they shall have Subsistence Paid them, till they shall be otherwise Provided for or Employed. And the said Officers and Soldiers are to deliver up their Arms to some of the Officers of the Ordnance, who are to dispose the same in their Stores in the Tower of London. And we do Require and Command all Justices of the Peace, Constables, and other Officers whom it may concern, that they Apprehend and Seize all such Soldiers as shall not repair to their respective Bodies, and that they be dealt with as Vagabonds.

This was all on Supposition, That His Majesty had left the Kingdom; but it so happen'd, that the King with his Three Followers, having cross'd the Thames at Whitehall, went by Land to a certain Place near Feversham, where he Embark'd a-board a Smack Commanded by Captain Sanders, who was to carry him to a Frigot Commanded by Mackdonnel, an Irish Captain, who by Concert waited for His Majesty at Margate. Whilst they were waiting to go on Board, Hales sent his Footman to the Post-Office in Feversham; a Gunner belonging to the Dover-Castle, whom Hales had formerly Cashier'd, knew the Footman by his Livery, and dogging him to the River-side, He saw him make Signs to some People that were a-board a Smack. Hereupon he got a Rabble together, and carry'd them to the Water-side, and immediately Boarded the Vessel, and soon discover'd Sir Edward Hales, who was well known and much hated in that Country. As for the King, who was in a Plain Suit and a Bob-Wig, they took him to be a Popish Priest, and supposed Him to be Hales's Chaplain, for which Reason they put many gross Indignities upon Him, and searching Him they found 400 Guinea's, several Valuable Seals, and other Jewels about Him. But several other People crowding into the Vessel, there was amongst the rest a Constable who knew the King's Face, and fell presently at His Feet, begging his Majesty to forgive the Rudeness of the Mob, and bidding the Fellows return what they had taken from Him; but the King would only receive 1688. ceive the Jewels, and gave the Gold amongst them. His Majesty then told the Constable, He hoped he would use Him well; and when He saw every-body paying the Respect due to Him, He earnestly endeavoured to be gone: But the People brought him by a sort of a Force to a Publick Inn in the Town, from whence His Majesty sent for the Earl of Winchelsea, whom He made Lord-Lieutenant of the County, and Governour of Dover-Castle, who prevail'd with His Majesty to return toward London. This strange Adventure did variously affect the Prince of Orange, and the People of England. The Prince seems to have desir'd that he should not have been stopt nor brought back, but most of the People were rather glad of an Opportunity, to convince the King that there was no ill Design against his Person. The Peers and Privy-Council Met, and after some Debates, They appointed Four of their Members, viz. the Earls of Middleton, Aylesbury, Yarmouth and Feversham, to wait upon His Majesty, and Invite him to his Palace at Whitehall; To which, tho' at first He shew'd some Reluctance, yet at last He condescended. The Peers also dispatch'd an Express to the Prince of Orange, to acquaint him that the King was still in England: Whereupon His Highness came to Windsor, Dec. 14. and Lodged in the Prince of Denmark's Apartment, which was prepared for his Reception; where He held a Consultation with the Chief of the Nobility and Gentry about Him, and by their Advice He dispatch'd Monsieur de Zuylewstein to the King, to desire him to continue at Rochester, but he mis'd him by the Way; for His Majesty left that Place on Sunday-Morning, Dec. 16. And about Four in the Afternoon Enter'd the City of London, as it were in Triumph, and went on to Whitehall with great Acclamations, Ringings of Bells, and Bonfires, with all other Proofs, that the People who hated Papery loved the King. The Night before the King left Rochester, He dispatch'd the Earl of Feversham with a Letter to the Prince, to Invite him to St. James's, with what Number of Guards and Troops His Highness should think convenient to bring along with him, That they might Personally and Amicably Confer together about the Means of Redressing the Publick Grievances, The Earl arrived on Sunday-Morning at Windsor, and having deliver'd his Message to the Prince, he was Surpriz'd, when instead of an Answer Monsieur Bentinck Demanded his Sword, being Order'd by His Highness to Arrest him and Secure him, for his Late Act of Disbanding the Army, without Orders. Then the Prince referred the Consideration of the King's Letter to the Peers about him, who concluded that the Royal Palace of Whitehall being still crowded with Irish Papists, Priests and Jesuits, His Highness could not be Safe at St. James's, unless His Majesty was remov'd within a reasonable Distance from London. Several Places were propos'd, but at last Ham, a House belonging to the Dutchess of Lauderdale, was pitch'd upon, and by their Advice, His Highness Subscribed a Paper in these Words.

When His Majesty came to Whitehall, He Assembled his Council that Night, and made this Order, as the Last Publick Act of his Royal Authority. 1688.

At the Court at Whitehall, the 16th Day of December, 1688.

PRESENT,

The KING's Most Excellent Majesty, Duke of Hamilton, Lord Viscount Preston, Earl of Craven, Lord Godolphin, Earl of Berkley, Master of the Rolls, Earl of Middleton, Mr. Titus.

" HIS Majesty being given to understand, That divers Outrages and Disorders are committed in several Parts of the Kingdom, by Burning, Pulling-down, and otherwise Defacing Houses and other Buildings, and Raising and Plundering the same, to the great Terror of His Majesty's Subjects, and manifest Breach of the Peace; His Majesty in Council is Pleas'd to Direct and Command all Lords-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Justices of the Peace, Mayers, Constables, and all other Officers whom it may concern, to use their utmost Endeavours for the preventing all such Outrages and Disorders for the future, and for the Suppressing all Riotous and Tumultuous Meetings and Assemblies whatsoever.

Last Orders of Council.

W. BRIDGEMAN.

The King had heard on Sunday-Night, That the Earl of Feversham, his Messenger to the Prince, was put under Confinement at Windsor; upon which His Majesty was full of Perplexity and Irresolution: Yet on Monday-Morning, Dec. 17. He sent the Earl of Mussgrave with another Complement to the Prince of Orange, who was by this Time advanc'd as far as Sion-House, and his Guards were come as far as Kensington and Chelsea, where they were Order'd to Quarter that Night; but soon after, they received fresh Orders to March, and take Possession of all the Posts about Whitehall and St. James's, either by fair Means or open Force. Count Solmes, who Commanded 'em, being come for that Purpose, His Majesty sent for him about Nine a-Clock at Night, and desir'd him to let Him have his own Guard at Whitehall only for that Night; but the Count alledging his Positive Orders to Relieve all the Posts, His Majesty bade him do his Office. At Ten of the Clock the Dutch-Guards entred into St. James's Palace, and towards Eleven those who were Commanded to Whitehall, mov'd thither through the Park. The Lord Craven, who was directed by the Prince to Order the King's Guards to retire upon Approach of His Highness's Troops, supposing this was not to be executed till the next Day, had given no Orders for that Purpose; And the English, seeming unwilling to Dislodge, the Prince's Guards March'd up to 'em with Lighted-Match, and in a Fighting-Posture; but at last the King's Guards were perswaded to withdraw.

The King sends the Earl of Mussgrave to the Prince.

The Prince Orders his own Guards at St. James's and Whitehall.

The Dutch being thus Posted at Whitehall, the Three Lords, who came from the Prince, sent in this Note to Secretary Middleton; My Lords, There is a Message to be deliver'd to His Majesty from the Prince, which is of so great Importance, that We, who are Charg'd with it, desire We may be immediately admitted; and therefore desire to know, where we may find your Lordship, that you may introduce, my Lord, your——Hallifax, Shrewsbury, Delamere. The King was before this in Bed, but the Earl of Middleton introduc'd them to His Majesty's Bed-side, about One in the Morning. And after a short Apology, for breaking in upon His Majesty's Repose at so unseasonable an Hour, They deliver'd Him the Prince's Paper, which the King Read,

Message to the King.

1688. Read, and said, He would Comply with it. Whereupon the Lords Humbly desir'd, He would Remove so Early, as to be at Ham-House by Noon, to prevent Meeting the Prince in his Way to London, where He was to come the same Day. His Majesty readily Agreed to this too, and ask'd, Whether He might not Appoint what Servants should Attend Him? To which the Lords reply'd, That it was left to His Majesty to give Order in that as He pleas'd, and so took their Leave. When they were gone as far as the Privy-Chamber, the King sent for 'em again, and told 'em, He had forgot to Acquaint 'em, with his Resolutions before the Message came, to send my Lord Godolphin next Morning to the Prince, to propose his going-back to Rochester; He finding by the Message Monsieur Zuytlestein was Charg'd with, that the Prince had no Mind he should be at London, and therefore He now desir'd He might rather return to Rochester, than go to any other Place. The Lords reply'd, that they would immediately Acquaint the Prince, with His Majesty's Desire, not doubting of such an Answer, as would be to His Majesty's Satisfaction. Accordingly they sent to the Prince, who was then at Sion-House, who yielding to the King's Design of leaving the Realm, order'd Monsieur Bentneck to write a Letter, which came before Eight a Clock next Morning, Agreeing to His Majesty's Proposals of returning to Rochester. Thereupon the King having taken his Leave of the Lords, the Ambassador of Spain, and other Persons there present, His Majesty went into his Charge, attended by the Earls of Ailesbury, Litchfield, Arran, and Dunbarton, Six of his own Yeomen of the Guard, and about One Hundred of the Prince's Forces, and Arriv'd about Nine a-Clock at Night at Gravesend, where He met some Troops of Horse, who, the next Day, Guarded Him by Land to Rochester.

Conference between the King and Messengers from the Prince.

The King desires to return to Rochester,

Which is granted by the Prince.

The Prince comes to St. James's.

Foreign Ministers Address the Prince.

The same Day, Dec. 18. about Three in the Afternoon, the Prince, with a Magnificent Equipage, and a Noble and Numerous Retinue came to St. James's, where He receiv'd the Congratulations of the Nobility and Gentry, and the Acclamations of the People in a very extraordinary Manner. On the 20th, the Aldermen, and Common-Council of the City of London, waited on the Prince; and the Lord Mayor being Indispos'd, the Recorder, Sir George Treby, made an Eloquent Speech to His Highness, concluding thus: Great Sir, when We look back to the last Month, and Contemplate the Swiftness and Fulness of our present Deliverance, Astonish'd, We think it Miraculous. Your Highness, led by the Hand of Heaven, and called by the Voice of the People, has preserv'd our dearest Interests; The Protestant Religion, which is Primitive Christianity restor'd; Our Laws, which are our Ancient Title to our Lives, Liberties and Estates, and, without which, this World were a Wilderness. But what Retribution can we make to Your Highness? Our Thoughts are full-charg'd with Gratitude. Your Highness has a lasting Monument in the Hearts, in the Prayers, and in the Praises of all good Men amongst us. And late Posterity will Celebrate your Ever-Glorious Name, till Time shall be no more. The Ambassador of Spain, and the Resident of Venice, did likewise Complement his Highness in Private, and desir'd Protection to Themselves, and other Foreigners, who were in great Danger of being Insulted by the Mob, upon which the Privy-Council issu'd out an Order, That all Foreigners should be allow'd to leave the Kingdom, and the Prince sent his Passes to the Pope's Nuncio, and to the Envoys of Poland, Savoy, and Moldavia. The Lords Langdon and Montgomery were set at Liberty, but the Earls of Peterborough and Salisbury, were kept in Custody, with a great many Papish Priests and Jesuits.

On Dec. 21. The Lords Spiritual and Temporal, about Seventy in Number, waited on the Prince at St. James's, who desir'd them to consider of the best Methods, to call a Free Parliament, and to pursue the Ends of His Declaration, which He left to be pursu'd by their Lordships, and so withdrew from 'em. After the Reading of the Declaration, the Lords Voted their Thanks to his Highness for coming over: And the better to consider of the most effectual Means, to obtain the Ends of his Highness's Declaration, and to settle a Form of Government; They Resolv'd to Assemble for the future in the Parliament-House at Westminster, where They met accordingly the next Day, and first made an Order to Appoint Francis Gwyn, Esq; to Sign and Subscribe such Orders as should be from Time to Time made by 'em. Then they came to a Resolution, That Five of the most able Lawyers, Sir John Maynard, Mr. Holt, Mr. Polluxfen, Mr. Bradford, and Mr. Atkinson, should Assist 'em in their important Consultations, in the Room of the Judges, who were most of 'em Absent from London. It was afterwards propos'd, That the whole Assembly should Sign the same Engagement or Association, which the Nobility and Gentry had already Subscrib'd at Exeter, to which all the Lords Agreed, excepting Four or Five.

The King at Rochester soon heard of these Proceedings, and was the more determin'd by 'em, to pursue his former Resolution of going over to France. And therefore, on Sunday, Dec. 23. about Three in the Morning, His Majesty privately withdrew Himself, without Communicating his Design to any Body; No, not to the Earl of Dunbarton, who lay in the King's Chamber, and who did not awake till after His Majesty was gone. This Forlorn Prince, taking only with him the Duke of Berwick, Mr. Sheldon, and Monsieur Labidi, went on Horse-Back, as far as the Place appointed at the River-side, where Captain Mackdonnel waited to receive him in a small Frigate; and having immediately put to Sea with a favourable Wind, they soon Landed at Ambletense in France, from whence His Majesty took Post for St. Germain. The Earl of Middleton, who had come down to Rochester to resign his Seal, found the next Day upon the Table, One of His Majesty's Letters, desiring him to Gratify the Captains of the Prince's Troops that were appointed to Guard Him, with an 100 Guinea's a-piece, the Lieutenants and Ensigns with Fifty; and to Reward some others that had attended Him in Proportion. The King left also behind Him a Paper Wrote with his own Hand, and afterwards Printed by his Order in this Form.

His Majesty's Reasons for Withdrawing Himself from Rochester.

THE World cannot Wonder at my Withdrawing my Self now this second Time. I might have expected somewhat better Usage after what I Writ to the Prince of Orange, by my Lord Feversham, and the Instructions I gave him. But in stead of an Answer, such as I might have hop'd for, what was I to expect, after the Usage I receiv'd, by the making the said Earl a Prisoner, against the Practice and Law of Nations; The sending his own Guards at Eleven at Night, to take Possession of the Posts at Whitehall, without Advertisiing me in the least manner of it; The sending to me at One of the Clock at Midnight, when I was in Bed, a kind of Order, by Three Lords, to be gone out of my Palace before Twelve the same Morning. After all this, how could I hope to be Safe, so long as I was in the Power of One, who had not only done this to me, and invaded my Kingdoms, without any just Occasion given him for it; but that did, by his own Declaration lay “ lay the greatest Asperſion on Me that Malice could invent, in the Clause of it which concerns My Son? I Appeal to all that know Me, nay, even to Himſelf, that in their Conſciences, neither He, nor they, can believe Me in the leaſt capable of ſo Unnatural a Villany, nor of ſo little Common Senſe, to be Impos'd on in a Thing of ſuch a Nature as that. What had I then to expect; from One, who, by all Arts, hath taken ſuch Pains to make Me as Black as Hell to My People, as well as to all the World beſides? What Effect that hath had at Home, all Mankind hath ſeen, by ſo general a Deſection in my Army, as well as in the Nation, amongſt all ſorts of People.

“ I was Born Free, and deſire to Continue ſo: And though I have ventur'd my Life very frankly, on ſeveral Occaſions, for the Good and Honour of my Country; and am as free to do it again, (and, which I hope I ſhall yet do, as Old as I am, to redeem it from the Slavery it is like to fall under) yet I think it not convenient to expoſe My Self to be ſo Secured, as not to be at Liberty to Effect it; and for that Reaſon, to Withdraw, but ſo as to be within Call, whenſoever the Nation's Eyes ſhall be open'd, ſo as to ſee how they have been impos'd upon, by the ſpecious Pretences of Liberty and Property. I hope it will pleaſe GOD to touch their Hearts, out of His Infinite Mercy, and to make them ſenſible of the Ill-Condition they are in, and bring them to ſuch a Temper, that a Legal Parliament may be Call'd; and that, amongſt other Things which may be neceſſary to be done, they will Agree to Liberty of Conſcience for all Proteſtant Diſſenters; and that thoſe of My Own Persuaſion may be ſo far Conſider'd, and have ſuch a ſhare of it, as they may live peaceably, and quietly, as Engliſh-men and Chriſtians ought to do, and not be oblig'd to tranſplant themſelves; which wou'd be very grievous, eſpecially to ſuch who love their Country. And I appeal to all Men, who are Conſidering Men, and have had Experience, whether any thing can make this Nation ſo Great and Flouriſhing, as Liberty of Conſcience: Some of Our Neighbours dread it.

“ I cou'd add much more, to confirm what I have ſaid, but now it is not the proper Time.

Rochefter,
Dec. 22. 1688.

When the Prince was inform'd of His Majeſty's Departure, He reſolv'd not to Act without a Concurrence of the Lords and Commons; and therefore He Publish'd this Order, ſuitable to the preſent Exigence:

“ WHereas the Neceſſity of Affairs does require ſpeedy Advice; We do Deſire all ſuch Perſons as have Serv'd as Knights, Citizens or Burgeſſes in any of the Parliaments that were held during the Reign of the late King Charles II. to Meet us at St. James's, upon Wednesday the 26th of this Instant December, by Ten of the Clock in the Morning. And We do likewiſe Deſire, That the Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen of the City of London wou'd be preſent at the ſame time: And that the Common-Council wou'd Appoint Fifty of their Number to be there likewiſe. And hereof We Deſire 'em not to fail.

All which, We make our Requeſt to Your Highneſs to Undertake and Exercise, till the Meeting of the intended Convention, the 22d of January next. In which, We doubt not, ſuch proper Methods will be taken, as will conduce to the Eſta bliſhment of theſe Things upon ſuch Sure and Legal Foundations, that they may not be in Danger of being again Subverted.

Dated at the Houſe of Lords, Westm. Dec. 25. 1688.

Then Their Lordſhips proceeded to Conſider of the moſt-eſſectual Way for Summoning the ſaid Convention, and Drew up their Opinions, in this other Address to the Prince:

“ WE the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Aſſembled at Westminſter in this Extraordinary Conjunction, do humbly Deſire Your Highneſs to cauſe Letters to be written, Subſcribed by Your Self, to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal (being Proteſtants;) and to the ſeveral Counties, Universities, Cities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports of England, Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweede. Notice of the intended Elections for the Counties, to be Publish'd in the Churches, immediately after the Time of Divine-Service, and in all Market-Towns within the reſpective Counties: And Notice of the intended Elections for the Cities, Universities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports, to be Publish'd within the ſaid reſpective Places. The ſaid Letters, and the Execution thereof, to be Return'd, by ſuch Officer and Officers who ſhall Execute the ſame, to the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of Chancery; ſo as the Perſons ſo to be Chofen, may Meet and Sit at Westminſter, on the Two and twentieth Day of January next.

Dated at the Houſe of Lords, Westm. Dec. 25. 1688.

Both theſe Addreſſes were Sign'd by all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal then Aſſembled; and Preſented to His Highneſs the Prince of Orange, the ſame Day, at St. James's: Who ſuſpended His Answer, till He had heard whether the Commoners, who were to Meet the next Day, wou'd Concur in the ſame Advice.

The Prince
his Speech to the Commons.

“ YOU Gentlemen that have been Members of the late Parliaments, I have Desir'd you to Meet Me here, to Advise the best Manner how to pursue the Ends of My Declaration, in Calling a Free-Parliament, for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, and the Restoring the Rights and Liberties of the Kingdom, and Settling the same, that they may not be in Danger of being again Subverted.
“ And You the Aldermen and Members of the Common-Council of the City of London, I Desire the same of You. And in regard your Numbers are like to be great, you may, if you think fit, divide your-selves, and Sit in several Places.

They form themselves into an House.

Upon which, they immediately Agreed to go to the Commons-House at Westminster; where being Seated, they Chose Henry Peckle Esq; their Chairman. The first Question they Debated, was, What Authority they had to Assemble? Upon which, it was Agreed, That the Request of His Highness, was a sufficient Warrant. Then a Question was started by Sir Robert S—, How His Highness could take upon Him the Administration of Affairs, without a Distinguishing Name or Title? To which Mr. Serjeant Maynard Answer'd, That the Assembly would lose a great deal of Time, if they waited till Sir Robert could conceive how that was possible: And so that Question dropt. Then one Member Propos'd, To offer the Government to His Highness, for a Month; and another, for a whole Year: But it was Answer'd, That it would be Time enough for the Convention to Consider of that Matter. After this, it was Mov'd, That the Association, that had been Sign'd by the Lords, might likewise be Subscrib'd by this Assembly: But it was Carry'd, That the said Association should be left upon the Table, and Every-one be at liberty to Sign it, or not. After these previous Debates, they Resolv'd upon Heads for an Address to be made to His Highness, and Appointed Persons to Draw up and Prepare the same; and in the Afternoon it was done accordingly, and Read, and Approv'd, in this Form:

Address of the Commons to
the Prince.

“ WE who have Serv'd as Members of the late King Charles II. together with the Court of Aldermen, and Members of the Common-Council of the City of London, Asssembled at Your Highness's Desire (in this Extraordinary Conjunction,) Do, with an Unanimous Consent, tender to Your Highness our humble and hearty Thanks, for Your Coming into this Kingdom, and Exposing Your Person to so great Hazards, for the Preservation of our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and Rescuing us from the Miseries of Popery and Slavery: And Desire Your Highness, That (in pursuance of those Ends, and for the Preservation of the Peace of the Nation) Your Highness will take upon You the Administration of Publick Affairs, both Civil and Military, and the Disposal of the Publick Revenue.
“ We do also Desire, That Your Highness will take into Your particular Care, the present Condition of Ireland; and endeavour, by the most-speedy and effectual Means, to prevent the Dangers threatening that Kingdom.

“ All which, We Desire Your Highness to Undertake and Execute, until the Meeting of the intended Convention, the 22d Day of January next.

“ We do likewise Desire Your Highness, to cause Letters to be Written, and Subscrib'd by Your Highness, to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal (being Protestants;) and to the several Counties, Universities, Cities, Boroughs and Cinque-

Ports of England, Wales, and to the Town of Berwick upon Tweede.

“ The Letters for the Counties, to be Directed to the Coroners of their respective Counties, or any One of them; and in Default of Coroners, to the Clerk of the Peace of the respective Counties: And the Letters to the Universities, to be Directed to the respective Vice-Chancellors: And the Letters to the several Cities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports, to be Directed to the Chief-Magistrate of each respective City, Borough and Cinque-Port; containing Directions for the Chusing, in all such Counties, Cities, Universities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports, within Ten Days after the Receipt of the said respective Letters, such a Number of Persons to Represent them, as are of Right to be Sent to Parliament. That for such Elections, and the Times and Places thereof, the respective Officer shall give Notice, in Manner following: (That is to say,) As to the Elections of the Counties, Notice to be Publish'd in all Market-Towns in the respective Counties, by the space of Five Days at least before such Election: And Notice of the Elections for the Cities, Universities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports, to be Publish'd in the respective Places, by the space of Three Days before at the least.

“ That the said Letters, and the Execution thereof, be Return'd, by such Officer and Officers who shall Execute the same, to the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of Chancery; so as the Persons so to be Chosen, may Meet and Sit at Westminster, on the Twenty-second Day of January next.

“ This We humbly offer Your Highness, as our best Advice, in this Exigency of Affairs, for attaining the Ends of Your Highness's Declaration; and as the best Means tending to such an Establishment, as that our Religion, Laws and Liberties, may not be in Danger of being again Subverted:

His Highness having Appointed to receive this Address the next Morning, He was then Attended by a Body of them; and the Address was Presented, and Read by Mr. Peckle, to His Highness: Who was pleas'd to Declare, That it being a Matter of Weight, He would Consider thereof, and give His Answer the next Day.

Accordingly, on Friday-Morning, Dec. 28th; His Highness gave the following Answer to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, at St. James.

My LORDS,

“ I Have Consider'd of Your Advice; and, as far as I am able, I will endeavour to Secure the Peace of the Nation, until the Meeting of the Convention in January next; for the Election whereof, I will forthwith Issue out Letters, according to Your Desire. I will also take Care to apply the Publick Revenue to the most proper Uses that the present Affairs require: And likewise endeavour to put Ireland into such a Condition, as that the Protestant Religion, and the English Interest, may be Maintain'd in that Kingdom. And I further Assure you, That as I Came hither for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of these Kingdoms; so I shall always be ready to Expose My Self to any Hazard, for the Defence of the same.

Answer of the Prince
to the Lords.

And in the Afternoon, His Highness was pleas'd to give the same Answer to the Commoners.

On Sunday Dec. 30th, His Highness receiv'd the Holy Sacrament in the Royal Chappel of St. James's, from the Hands of the Bishop of London, and had the whole Service Read by Dr. Burnet, and an Excellent Sermon Preach'd by the Bishop of St. Asaph; 1688. St. Asaph, with open professing Himself a Member of the Church of England, gain'd Him the Tongues and Hearts of many People. On Monday Morning, his Highness Publish'd a Declaration (being the first Act of his Administration of Publick Affairs) for Authorizing all Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, and other Officers and Ministers, not being Papists that were in such Offices, on the first Day of December last, to Act in their respective Places, till the Meeting of the said Convention, or other Order to the contrary. The same Monday Evening, his Highness paid a Visit to the Queen Dowager, and amongst other Questions, ask'd Her Majesty, How She pass'd her Time, and whether She Play'd at Basset. The Queen took this Opportunity to speak at a distance, in Favour of the Earl of Feversham, and answer'd his Highness, That She had not Play'd at it since the Absence of her Chamberlain, who us'd to keep the Bank. The Prince of Orange took the Hint, and assur'd Her Majesty, That he would not by any means Divert Her Majesties Diversions, and would therefore Order the Earl to be set at Liberty, which was done the next Day.

The Prince having dispatch'd his Circular Letters for the Meeting of the Convention, he Publish'd an Order, Jan. 5. strictly Charging and Requiring all Regiments, Troops or Companies, to March out of the Quarters, where any Election was to be made (the several Garrisons only excepted) the Day before the same be made, That such Elections might be carry'd on with the greater Freedom, and without any Colour of Force or Restraint. And because the Prince was inform'd, That divers Soldiers, contrary to his Intention, and the Laws of the Land, were Quarter'd in Private Houses, he sent out an Order, dated Jan. 8. That none of the Forces of what Nation or Quality soever, should presume to Quarter in any Private House, without the free and voluntary Consent of the Owner. The same Day, the Court of Aldermen, and Common-Council being Assembled, a Letter was deliver'd unto 'em from his Highness the Prince of Orange, setting forth the great Occasion there was for an immediate Supply of Money, beyond what the present Condition of the Revenue could furnish, for supporting the Charge of the Navy, paying off a Part of the Army, and sending a speedy Relief for the Defence of the Protestant Interest in Ireland; and proposing that for the Answering these great Ends, such a Sum of Money should be Advanc'd by way of Loan, as they could conveniently Spare, which should be secur'd in the best Manner that could be Advis'd, and Re-paid with full Interest at the End of Six Months: Whereupon a Vote immediately Pass'd with all Chearfulness and Unanimity, That they would Supply his Highness with Two Hundred Thousand Pounds. The next Day, a Committee of the said Court, attended his Highness, and gave him an Account of their Compliance with his Desire, and the whole Sum was Rais'd in Four Days, One single Man having Subscrib'd Sixty Thousand Pounds towards it.

On Jan. 16. The Prince Publish'd a Declaration to Satisfie the Seamen, That as well their Arrears, as their growing Wages should be fully made good to 'em, according to the known Methods of the Navy, so soon as the Ships should be brought in, and laid up. And on Jan. 19. The Prince Publish'd another Order for the Satisfying and making Good to every Officer and Soldier their full Pay and Arrears due to 'em until the first Day of this Instant January, and for the making Constant and Punctual Payment of the Subsistence-Money, and Clearings of the Army in the usual Method, without any the least Diminution of the former Pay.

On Tuesday, Jan. 22. The Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons Assembl'd at Westminster:

The Lord Marquess of Hallifax, Executed the Place of Speaker in the House of Lords, and the Commons Chose Henry Powle, Esq; to be their Speaker. After which, this Letter from the Prince of Orange, was Read in Both Houses on the Occasion of their Meeting,

My Lords and Gentlemen;

I Have Endeavour'd to the utmost of my Power to Perform what was desir'd from Me, in order to the publick Peace and Safety, and I do not know that any Thing hath been emitted, which might tend to the Preservation of them, since the Administration of Affairs was put into my Hands. It now lieth upon you to lay the Foundations of a firm Security for your Religion, your Laws, and your Liberties.

The Prince's Speech to them.

I do not doubt, but that by such a Fall and Free-Representative of the Nation, as is now Met, the Ends of my Declaration will be attained: And since it hath pleas'd God hitherto to bless My good Intentions with so-good Success; I trust in him, that he will compleat his own Work, by sending a Spirit of Peace and Union, to Influence your Counsels, that no Interruption may be given to an happy and lasting Settlement.

The dangerous Condition of the Protestants in Ireland, requiring a large and speedy Succour; and the present State of Things Abroad, Oblige me to tell you, That next to the Danger of unseasonable Divisions amongst your Selves, nothing can be so fatal, as too great a Delay in your Consultations. The States, by whom I have been enabl'd to Rescue this Nation, may suddenly feel the ill Effects of it, both by being too long depriv'd of the Service of their Troops, which are now here, and of your early Assistance against a powerful Enemy, who hath declar'd War against them. And as England is by Treaty already Engag'd to help them upon such Exigencies, so I am Confident, that their chearful Concurrence to preserve this Kingdom with so much Hazard to themselves, will meet with all the Returns of Friendship and Assistance, which may be expected from you as Protestants and English Men, whenever their Condition shall require it.

After the Reading this Letter in the House of Commons, the Speaker represented to the Assembly, The dangerous State of the Nation, and the fatal Consequences of Anarchy, the deplorable Condition of the Protestants in Ireland, and how much England might be affected by the Loss of that Kingdom: And lastly, the Growth of the Exorbitant Power of France, and the vast Designs of that aspiring and turbulent Monarch, not only the Persecutor of the Protestant Religion, but the Sworn-Enemy of England, &c. This Speech was receiv'd with universal Applause, and was seconded by several Members. Then Both Houses resolv'd upon an Address to be presented to his Highness, and agreed that Thursday, the 31st of Jan. should be Appointed for a Day of Publick Thanksgiving to Almighty God, in the Cities of London and Westminster, and Ten Miles distant, for having made his Highness the Prince of Orange the Glorious Instrument of the great Deliverance of this Kingdom from Popery and Arbitrary Power, and that Thursday, the 14th of February, should be Appointed for a Day of like Publick Thanksgiving throughout the rest of the Kingdom. Then the Lords and Commons went in a Body to present the foremention'd Address to his Highness in these Words.

Day of Thanksgiving.

 " good Foundation, but for the Safety of Europe.

On Monday, Jan. 28. the Commons Resolved themselves into a Committee of the whole House, to take into Consideration the State and Condition of the Nation, and Mr. Hamden took the Chair. Mr.
 Dolben began in a Speech to prove that the Throne was Vacant, because King James, both by his Voluntary Desertion of the Laws, and his Voluntary Deserting these Kingdoms, had forfeited his Right and Abdicated the Government. Several Members Argued against the Throne being Vacant, as a Position New and Unknown to the English Constitution.
 Sir Richard Temple ask'd, If the Throne were not Vacant, what Business they had in that Place, and what Need or what Power there was for Calling this Convention ? and then proceeded to confirm Mr. Dolben's Assertion. After Four Hours Debate, Mr.
 Hamden reported this Resolue of the Committee, to which the House Agreed.

Resolved,
 " That King James the Second, having en-" deavour'd to Subvert the Constitution of the " Kingdom, by breaking the Original Contract " between King and People : And by the Advice " of Jesuits and other wicked Persons, having " Violated the Fundamental-Laws, and withdrawn " Himself out of the Kingdom, hath Abdicated the " Government, and that the Throne is thereby
 " Vacant.

Mr. Hamden, by Order of the House, carried up this Resolution to the Lords for their Concurrence ; and on Saturday, Feb. 2. this Message was brought from the Lords. Mr. SPEAKER, The Lords have Considered of the Vote of this House of the 28th of January last, to which they Concur with Amendments, unto which Amendments they desire the Concurrence of this House. The Two Amendments were, 1. 8. in stead of the Word Abdicated, read Deserted. 1. 9. leave out these Words, 1688. " And that the Throne is thereby Vacant. The Commons having Consider'd these Amendments, Disagreed by a great Majority, and Appointed a Committee, who drew up these Reasons why the House could not Concur with their Lordships.

Their Reasons. " To the First Amendment Propos'd by the " Lords, instead of the Word Abdicated, to insert
 " the Word Deserted, the Commons do not Agree ;
 " because the Word Deserted doth not fully ex" press the Conclusion necessarily infer'd from " the Premises, which your Lordships have A" greed to : For your Lordships have Agreed, That " King James the Second hath endeavour'd to Sub" vert the Constitution of the Kingdom, by break" ing the Original-Contract between King and Peo" ple, and hath Violated the Fundamental-Laws, " and withdrawn himself out of the Kingdom. Now
 " the Word Deserted respects only the Withdraw" ing, but the Word Abdicated respects the whole ;
 " for which Purpose the Commons made Choice of it.

" The Commons do not Agree to the Second " Amendment to leave out the Words, And that " the Throne is thereby Vacant.

" 1. Because they Conceive, That as they " may well infer from so much of their own
 " Vote, as your Lordships have Agreed unto, That " King James the Second has Abdicated the Go" vernment, and that the Throne is thereby Va" cant : So that if they should admit your Lord-
 " ships Amendment, that he hath only Deserted
 " the Government ; yet even thence it would " follow, that the Throne is Vacant as to King
 " James the Second, Deserting the Government
 " being in true Construction Deserting the Throne.

" 2. The Commons Conceive, they need not " prove unto your Lordships, that as to any other " Person, the Throne is also Vacant : Your Lord-
 " ships (as They conceive) having already Ad" mitted it, by Your Addressing to the Prince of " Orange, the 25th of December last, To take upon " Him the Administration of Publick Affairs, both " Civil and Military ; and to take into His Care the " Kingdom of Ireland, till the Meeting of this Con" vention. In pursuance of such Letters, and " by Your Lordships renewing the same Address " to His Highness (as to Publick Affairs, and the " Kingdom of Ireland) since You Met, and by " appointing Days of Publick Thanksgivings to be " observed throughout the whole Kingdom. All " which the Commons conceive to imply, that it " was your Lordships Opinion, that the Throne
 " was Vacant, and to signifie so much to the Peo" ple of this Kingdom.

" 3. It is from those who are upon the Throne " England (when there are any such) from whom " the People of England ought to receive Prote" ction ; and to whom for that Cause they owe
 " the Allegiance of Subjects : But there being none
 " now from whom they expect Regal Protection,
 " and to whom for that Cause they owe the Al" legiance of Subjects, the Commons conceive the " Throne is Vacant.

The better to understand the Divisions in the House of Lords, it must be remembr'd, that while the King was the last time at Rochester, Monsieur Barillon, the French Ambassador was extraordinary busie in promoting Divisions amongst the Peers, upon which the Prince of Orange, as soon as He was informed of the King's Departure, sent an Order to that Minister, to leave the Kingdom in four and twenty Hours. Mons. Barillon demanded more Time, which being refused, he parted from London with the Marquis Rangoni, Envoy of Modena, to whom the Prince had granted a Guard, and was conducted to Dover by Mons. de L'Etang, a French-Refugee, and Lieutenant of His Highness's Horse-Guards ; from whence he Embark'd for Calais. Soon after, King James wrote a Letter from St. Germain, directed to the Lords and others of his

 " all those things that were set forth as the Causes

 " ing all the Ends of his Declaration answer'd,
 " the People beginning to be Undeceiv'd, and re" turning to their Duty, and well fore-seeing that " if a Free-Parliament should Meet at the Time " appointed, such a Settlement in all Probability " would be made both in Church and State, as " would totally defeat his Ambitious Designs, re" solv'd by all Means possible to prevent the " Meeting of the Parliament: That to do this
 " the most effectual way, the Prince thought fit " to lay a Restraint upon his Royal Person; for
 " as it were absurd to call that a Free-Parliament,
 " where there is any Force on either of the Two " Houses, so much less can that Parliament be said " to Act freely, where the Sovereign, by whose " Authority they Meet and Sit, and from whose " Royal Assent all their Acts receive their Life
 " and Sanction, is under actual Confinement:
 " That the Sense of the Indignities He had suf" fered, both in his own, and in the Person of " the Earl of Feverham, and the just Apprehen" sion of further Attempts, by them who already " endeavour'd to Murder his Reputation by In" famous Calumnies (as if he had been capable
 " of setting up a Supposititious Prince of Wales;) together with a serious Reflexion on a Saying of his Royal Father, when he was in the like Circumstances, that there is little Distance between the Prisons and the Graves of Princes, (which afterward prov'd but too true in his Case) could not but persuade him to make use of that Right, which the Law of Nature gives to the meanest of his Subjects, of freeing himself from that unjust Confinement: That this He did not more for the Security of his own Person, than that thereby He might be in a better Capacity for transacting and providing for every thing that might contribute to the Peace and Settlement of his Kingdoms: That as no Change of Fortune should ever make Him condescend to any thing unbecoming his Royal Station; so neither the Provocation nor Ingratitude of his own Subjects, nor any other Consideration should ever prevail with him to make the least Step contrary to the true Interest of the English Nation, which he ever did and ever must look upon as his own: That He requir'd them of his Privy-Council, to make these his Intentions known to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Lord-Mayor and Commons of the City of London, and to all his Subjects in general; and to assure them, that He desir'd nothing more than to return and hold a Free-Parliament, wherein He might have the best Opportunity of undeceiving his People, and shewing the Sincerity of those Protections He had often made, of preserving the Liberties and Properties of his Subjects, and the Protestant Religion, more especially the Church-of-England, as by Law Established: That in the mean-time they should send him their Advice, what was fit to be done by Him towards his Returning, and the accomplishing of these good Ends; and that He requir'd them to endeavour to suppress all Tumults and Disorders, that the Nation might receive the least Prejudice that was possible from the present Distractions.

This Letter was publicly Printed and Dispers'd in London, but being Counter-sign'd by the Earl of Melford, a profess'd Papist, and being dictated by the Counsels of France, it had very little Effect upon the People, whatever Impressions of Reserve and Caution it might make upon some of the Peers, who desired or feared the Return of the King. There being no avow'd Answer made to it, King James wrote another Letter Address'd to the Lords and Commons, Dated Feb. 3. N. S. wherein He tells them, " That He thought Himself obliged " in Conscience to do all he could to open his " People's Eyes, that they may see the true Inter-" rest of the Nation in this important Conjunction:

 " That finding He could no longer stay with Safe" ty nor act with Freedom, He had left the Reasons
 " of his Withdrawing from Rocheſter under his own " Hand: That understanding that Letter, which " He repeated here at length, was not taken to be " His, but was maliciously suppress'd by the Prince " of Orange; He writ to several of his Privy-Coun" cil, and directed Copies thereof to divers of them,
 " the Peers of the Realm, believing none durst in" tercept or open any of those Letters: That of " all these, He had no Account, nor did He won" der that all Arts were used to hinder them from " knowing his Sentiments: That He was Resolv'd " nothing should be omitted on his Part, that " could contribute towards the Redress of all former " Errors, or present Disorders, or add to the " Securing the Protestant Religion, or the Property " of the Subject; intending to refer the whole to " a Parliament, Legally Called, Freely Elected, and " Held without Constraint. And that none might " despair of his Mercy, he declar'd on the Word
 " of a King, that his Pardon should be extended " even to those that betray'd him, (some few ex" cepted) Resolving in that Parliament to cover
 " all Faults by an Act of Oblivion.

This Letter the Lord Preſton sent to the House of Commons, directed to their Speaker, but the House being Informed, that it came from King James, they did not think fit to open it, or to take any other Notice of it. A Copy of the same Letter was sent to the Marquess of Halsfax, as Speaker of the House of Lords; Some of the Peers were for opening, others for rejecting of it: It was at last Resolv'd, that the Lord Preſton should be sent for, who appear'd, and own'd, that the Letter was brought to him by a Scotch-Man; upon which his Lordship was Order'd to Attend the House again with the Bearer on Feb. 4. But his Lordship on that Day appointed was never call'd in, nor any farther Notice taken of the Letter.

But however, this Regard to the Person of King James, and the Old New-Notions of an indefeasible Right of Hereditary-Monarchy, began to work much upon the Minds of the Peers, and even of those who had been most forward to invite or to join the Prince: For on Jan. 29. the Lords began to consider of the Commons Voting the Throne to be Vacant, and Resolv'd into a Committee of the whole House, of which the Earl of Denby was Chairman. The First Motion was made not to Agree with the Commons, that the Throne was Vacant; and yet to suppose it for the present, and pass to this other Question, Whether the Throne being Vacant, it ought to be fill'd up by a Regent, or a King? The Earl of Nottingham fetch'd many Arguments from our English-History, to support his Opinion for a Regency; adding a fresh Instance from Portugal, where Don Pedro had only the Title of Regent confer'd upon him, while his Depos'd-Brother was Alive. This Speech is said to have had a great Influence on the House, and would have been follow'd by a Majority, had not the Marquess of Halsfax and the Earl of Denby strenuously oppos'd it; so that the Question being put to the Vote, Fifty-one were for a King, and Forty-nine only for a Regent; viz. the Dukes of Somerſet, Ormond, Southampton, Grafton, Beaufort and Northumberland; the Earls of Kent, Pembroke, Clarendon, Rocheſter, Craven, Westmoreland, Scarſdale, Chelſterfield, Litchfield, Yarmouth and Lindſey; Viſcount Weymouth; the Barons Cocentry, Breck, Leigh, Ferrars, Maynard, Shandois, Fermin, Arundel of Treceſe, Dartmouth,

The Earls of Huntingdon and Musgrave did not appear in the House: My Lord Churchill likewise kept at Home, upon some Indisposition: The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury was also absent. And indeed, the Abhorrence of a Deposing-Power, as an Art and Act of Popery, was so warm upon the Thoughts of the Clergy, that no Bishops came in to the Opinion of filling up the Throne, except the Bishops of London and Bristol. But four Dukes were soon brought-over, viz. the Duke of Ormond, and the three Natural Sons of King Charles II. Whilst the Lords were Debating that Preliminary Question, the Commons Pass'd a Vote, Declaring, That Popery was Inconsistent with the English Constitution; and therefore, all Papists shou'd be for ever Excluded from the Succession to the Crown of England: To which the House of Peers gave their Concurrence; and Propos'd farther, to add a Clause, That no King of England shou'd Marry a Roman-Catholic.

Lords Debates of Original-Contract;

On the next Day, Jan. 30th, the Lords put this Question, Whether or no there was an Original-Contract between King and People? In this Dispute, some labour'd to maintain, That Kings held their Crowns by Divine Right; while others did assert, That All Power Originally belong'd to the Community, and to the King, only by Mutual Compact. The House being Divided, 53 were for this last Position, and 46 only for the Negative; by which it appear'd, that the Party that were for a Regency began to lose ground. The next Question was, Whether King James had Broke that Original-Contract? Which, after a short Debate, was Carry'd in the Affirmative.

On Thursday Jan. 31st, Their Lordships took into Consideration the word Abdicated; and Concluded, that the word Deserted was more proper. They next examin'd the word Vacant; and put this Question, Whether King James, having Broke that Original-Contract between Him and His People, and Deserted the Government, the Throne was thereby Vacant? This Question was Debated with more Heat and Contention than any of the former; and, upon a Division, it was Carry'd in the Negative by Eleven Voices. From this, some Peers infer'd, That if there was no Vacancy, the Crown was devolv'd upon the next Heirs; and Mov'd, That the Prince and Princess of Orange shou'd be Declar'd King and Queen: Which was also Carry'd in the Negative by Five Voices. The next Day, Their Lordships Agreed to communicate their Resolutions to the House of Commons: But before they rose, the Marquesses of Halifax and Winchester, the Earls of Denby and Devonshire, and 36 more of the Peers, Enter'd their Protestations against the Vote of the Day before, (viz.) That the Throne was not Vacant.

And of the Vacancy of the Throne.

On Febr. 2d, It was Order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Assembled at Westminster, That the Day of Thanksgiving on the 6th of Febr. Instant, on which Day the late King James II. came to the Throne, shall not be Observ'd in this Kingdom. On this same Day, They Sent up their Amendments to the Vote of the House of Commons: Upon which, a Free-Conference was Appointed in the Painted-Chamber.

Conference between the Two Houses.

On Febr. 5th, Mr. Hambden Reported from the Conference with the Lords, That the Earl of Nottingham had spoke to this effect; "That the Lords had Desir'd this Conference, that they might be as happily United to the Commons in Opinion, as they were Inseparable in their Interest; and that they were at this time Uneasie, that they cou'd not Concur with the Commons in every thing: That the Lords did Insist upon the First Amendment; because they did not find that the word 1688. Abdicated was known to the Common-Law of England; and because, in the most common Acceptation of the Civil-Law, Abdicated, was a Voluntary Express Act of Renunciation; which was not in this Case: That the Lords also Insisted on the Second Amendment; for although Their Lordships had Agreed, That the King had Deserted the Government, and therefore had made Application to the Prince of Orange to take upon Him the Administration of the Government; yet there cou'd be no other Inference drawn from hence, but only, The Exercise of the Government by King James II. was Ceas'd: So as the Lords were willing to Secure the Nation against the Return of the said King into this Kingdom; but not that there was either such an Abdication by Him, or such a Vacancy in the Throne, as that the Crown was therefore become Elective: Which They cou'd not Agree to; (1.) Because, by the Constitution of the Government, the Monarchy is Hereditary, and not Elective. (2.) No Act of the King, can Bar or Destroy the Right of His Heirs to the Crown; and therefore, if the Throne be Vacant of King James, Allegiance is due to such Person as the Right of Succession does belong to." By this way of Reasoning, it is plain, That the Dissent of the Lords from the Commons, did not arise from any Favour to the Person or the Government of King James, but from a Tenderness to the Protestant Successors, and the Legal Notions of Hereditary Monarchy.

When Mr. Hambden made his Report of this Conference, the Question was put, Whether the Commons shou'd Concur with the Lords? And it was Carry'd in the Negative, by a very great Majority; and it was Resolved, That a Free-Conference be Desir'd with the Lords, upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference: To which the Lords Agreed. This Second Conference was Open'd by Mr. Hambden, who spoke thus: "My Lords, The Commons have Desir'd this Free-Conference from Your Lordships, upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference; that they may make appear to Your Lordships, That it is not without sufficient Reason, that they are induc'd to Maintain their Own Vote; to which Your Lordships have made some Amendments. — 'Tis true, My Lords, the present Difference between Your Lordships and the Commons, is only about a few Words: But the Commons think their Words so significant to the Purpose for which they are used, and so proper to the Case unto which they are apply'd, that, in so weighty a Matter as that now in Debate, they are by no means to be parted with.

Another
Free-Conference.

Speech of Mr. Hamden.

"The word Abdicated, the Commons conceive is of larger Signification, than the Word Your Lordships are pleas'd to use, Desert; but not too large to be apply'd to all the Recitals in the beginning of the Commons-Vote, to which they meant it shou'd be apply'd: Nor ought it to be restrain'd to a Voluntary Express Resignation, only in Word or Writing; Overt-Acts there are, that will be significant enough to amount to it.

"My Lords, That the Common-Law of England is not acquainted with the Word; it is from the Modesty of our Law, that it is not willing to suppose there shou'd be any Unfortunate Occasion of making Use of it: And We wou'd have been willing that We shou'd never have had such an Occasion as We have, to have Recourse to it. Your Lordships next Amendment, is, That Your Lordships have left-out the last Words in the Commons-Vote, And that the Throne is thereby Vacant.

"My Lords, The Commons conceive it is a true Proposition, and That the Throne is Vacant; and, they think they make it appear, that that is no new Phrase; neither is it a Phrase that perhaps

1688. "haps some of the Old Records may be Strangers to, or not well-acquainted with: But they think it not chargeable with the Consequences that Your Lordships have been pleas'd to draw from it, That it will make the Crown of England become Elective. If the Throne had been Full, We know Your Lordships wou'd have assign'd that, as a Reason of Your Disagreement, by telling us Who fill'd it; and it wou'd be known by some Publick Royal Act, which might notifie to the People, in Whom the Kingly-Government resided: Neither of which has been done; and yet Your Lordships will not allow the Throne to be Vacant.

"My Lords, I am unwilling to detain Your Lordships longer, from what may be better said, for Your Lordships Satisfaction in these Matters, by those whose Province it is: I am to acquaint Your Lordships, That the Commons do Agree, It is an Affair of very Great Importance. Here are other Gentlemen that are Appointed to Manage this Conference; and will give their Assistance, to bring it, We hope, to a happy Conclusion, in the Agreement of both Houses, in this so very Considerable a Point.

Then Mr. Sommers spoke thus: "My Lords, What is Appointed me to speak to, is, Your Lordships First Amendment; by which the word Abdicat, in the Commons-Vote, is chang'd into the word Deserted: And I am to acquaint Your Lordships, what some of the Grounds are, that induced the Commons to Insist upon the word Abdicat, and not to Agree to Your Lordships Amendment.

I. "The First Reason Your Lordships are pleas'd to Deliver, as for your changing the Word, is, That the word Abdicat, Your Lordships do not find, is a Word known to the Common-Law of England, and therefore ought not to be used: And the next is, That the Common Acceptation of the Word, amounts to a Voluntary Express Act of Renunciation; which (Your Lordships say) is not in this Case, nor will follow from the Premises.

"My Lords, As to the First of these Reasons, if it be an Objection, That the word Abdicat, hath not a known Sense in the Common-Law of England; there's the same Objection against the word Deserted: For there can be no Authority, or Book of Law, produced, wherein any Determinate Sense is given to the word Deserted. So that Your Lordships First Reason hath the same Force against Your Own Amendment, as it hath against the Term used by the Commons.

"The Words are both Latin Words, and us'd in the best Authors, and both of a known Signification; their Meaning is very well understood, though it be true, their Meaning be not the same: The word Abdicat, doth naturally and properly signifie, Entirely to Renounce, Throw off, Disown, Relinquish any Thing or Person, so as to have no further to do with it; and that whether it be done by express Words, or in Writing, (which is the Sense Your Lordships put upon it, and which is properly call'd Resignation, or Cession) or, by Doing such Acts as are Inconsistent with the Holding or Retaining of the Thing: Which the Commons take to be the present Case, and therefore made choice of the word Abdicat, as that which they thought did, above all others, most properly express that Meaning: And in this latter Sense it is taken by others; and that it is the true Signification of the Word, I shall shew Your Lordships out of the best Authors.

"The first I shall mention, is Grotius, [de Jure Belli & Pacis, l. 2. c. 4. §. 4.] Venit enim hoc non ex jure civili, sed ex jure naturali, quo quisque suum potest Abdicare, & ex naturali Presumptione qua voluisse, quis creditur, quod sufficienter significavit. And then he goes on, Recusari Hereditas

"non tantum verbis, sed etiam re potest, & quocis indicio voluntatis." 1688.

"Another Instance, which I shall mention, to shew, that for the Abdicating a thing, it is sufficient, to do an Act which is inconsistent with the Retaining it, though there be nothing of an express Renunciation, is out of Calvin's Lexicon Juridicum, where he says, (Generum Abdicat, qui sponsam repudiat;) He that Divorceth his Wife, Abdicat his Son-in-Law. Here is an Abdication without express Words; but is by doing such an Act, as doth sufficiently signifie his Purpose.

"The next Author that I shall quote, is Brissonius, [De Verborum Significatione] who hath this Passage; Homo liber qui seipsum vendit, Abdicat se statum suo: (that is) He who Sells himself, hath thereby done such an Act, as cannot consist with his former Estate of Freedom; and is therefore properly said, Se Abdicasse statum suo.

"Budens [in his Commentaries ad Legem Secundam, de Origine Juris] expounds the Words in the same Sense; Abdicare se Magistratu est idem quod abire penitus Magistratu: (that is) He that goes out of his Office of Magistracy, let it be in what manner he will, has Abdicated the Magistracy.

"And Grotius [in his Book de Jure Belli & Pacis, l. 1. c. 4. §. 9.] seems to expound the word Abdicare, by manifeste habere pro derelicto: (that is) That he who hath Abdicated any thing, hath so far Relinquish'd it, that he hath no Right of Return to it. And that is the Sense the Commons put upon the Word: It is an Entire Alienation of the Thing; and so stands in Opposition to Dicate: Dicat qui proprium aliquod facit; Abdicat qui alienat, so says Præcius, in his Lexicon Juris. It is therefore Insisted upon as the proper Word, by the Commons.

"But the word Deserted, (which is the Word us'd, in the Amendment, by Your Lordships) hath not only a very doubtful Signification; but in the Common Acceptance both of the Civil and Canon-Law, doth signifie only a Bare Withdrawing, a Temporary Quitting of a thing; and Neglect only, which leaves the Party at liberty of Returning to it again: Desertum pro Neglecto, says Spigelius in his Lexicon. But the Difference between Deserere and Derelinquere, is expressly laid down by Bartolus, upon the 8th Law of 58th Title of the 11th Book of the Code, and his Words are these; Nota diligenter ex hac Lege, quod aliud est Agrum Deserere, aliud Derelinquere; qui enim Derelinquit, ipsum ex penitentia non revocat: sed qui Deseret, intra biennium potest.

"Whereby it appears, My Lords, That, that is call'd Desertion, which is Temporary and Relievable: That is call'd Dereliction, where there is no Power of Right to Return.

"So in the best Latin Authors, and in the Civil-Law, Deserere Exercitum is us'd to signifie, Soldiers leaving their Colours, [Cod. lib. 12. §. 1.]

"And in the Canon-Law, to Desert a Benefice, signifies no more than to be Non-Resident; so is Calvin's Lexicon, Verb. Desert. Secund. Canones.

"In both Cases, the Party hath not only a Right of Returning, but is bound to Return again. Which, My Lords, as the Commons do not take to be the present Case, so They cannot think that Your Lordships do; because it is expressly said, in one of Your Reasons given in the last Amendment, That Your Lordships have been, and are willing, to Secure the Nation against the Return of King James: Which Your Lordships wou'd not in Justice do, if You did look upon it no more than a Negligent Withdrawing, which leaveth a liberty to the Party to Return.

"For which Reasons, My Lords, the Commons cannot Agree to the First Amendment, to insert

“ the Word Deserted, in stead of Abdicated, because it doth not, in any sort, come up to their Sence of the Thing: So, they do apprehend, it doth not reach Your Lordship's Meaning, as it is Express'd in Your Reasons; whereas they look upon the Word Abdicated to Express properly what is to be Inferred from that Part of the Vote to which Your Lordships have Agreed, That King James II. by going about to Subvert the Constitution, and by Breaking the Original Contract between King and People, and by Violating the Fundamental Laws, and With-drawing Himself out of the Kingdom, hath thereby Renounc'd to be a King according to the Constitution: By Avowing to Govern by a Despotick Power, unknown to the Constitution, and inconsistent with it; He hath Renounc'd to be a King according to the Law, such a King as He Swore to be at the Coronation, such a King, to whom the Allegiance of an English Subject is due; and hath set up another kind of Dominion, which is to all Intents an Abdication or Abandoning of his Royal Title, as fully as if it had been done by Express Words.

“ And, My Lords, for these Reasons the Commons do insist upon the Word Abdicated, and cannot Agree to the Word Deserted.

Argument of Serjeant Holt.

“ Mr. Serjeant Holt Argu'd thus: My Lords, I am Com-manded, by the Commons, to Assist in the Management of this Conference, and am to Speak to the same Point that the Gentleman did, who Spoke last to Your Lordship's First Amendment.

“ As to the First of Your Lordships Reasons, for that Amendment (with Submission to Your Lordships) I do conceive it not sufficient to alter the Minds of the Commons; or to induce them to change the Word Abdicated, for Your Lordships Word Deserted.

“ Your Lordships Reason is, That it is not a Word that is known to the Common-Law of England. But, My Lords, the Question is not so much, whether it be a Word as Ancient as the Common-Law, (though it may be too) for that will be no Objection against the using it, if it be a Word of a known and certain Signification; because that, we think, will justify the Commons making Use of it, according to Your Lordships own Expression.

“ That it is an Ancient Word, appears by the Authors that have been Quoted, and 'tis frequently met with in the best of Roman Writers, as Cicero, &c. And by the Derivation from Dico, an Ancient Latin Word.

“ That now it is a known English Word, and of a known and certain Signification with us, I will Quote to your Lordships an English Authority, and that is the Dictionary set forth by our Country-Man Minsheu, who hath the Word Abdicate, as an English Word; and says, that it signifies to Renounce, which is the Signification the Commons would have of it: So that I hope Your Lordships will not find Fault with their using a Word that is so Ancient in itself, and that hath such certain Signification in our own Language.

“ Then, My Lords, for that Part of Your Lordships Objection, That it is not a Word known to the Common-Law of England, that cannot prevail; for Your Lordships very well know, we have very few Words in our Tongue that are of equal Antiquity with the Common-Law; Your Lordships know the Language of England is alter'd greatly in the several Successions of Time, and the Intermixture of other Nations; and if we should be oblig'd to make use only of Words then known and in use, what we should deliver in such a Dialect, would be very Difficult to be understood.

“ Your Lordships second Reason, for your first Amendment in changing the Word Abdicated, for the Word Deserted, is, Because in the most common Acceptation of the Civil Law, Abdication is a voluntary Express Act of Renunciation. That is the general Acceptation of the Word, and, I think, the Commons do so use the Word in this Case, because it hath that Signification: But I do not know, whether Your Lordships mean a voluntary Express Act, or formal Deed of Renunciation: If you do so, I confess I know of none in this Case: But, My Lords, both in the Common-Law of England, and the Civil-Law, and in common Understanding, there are Express Acts of Renunciation that are not by Deed; for if Your Lordships please to observe, the Government and Magistracy is under a Trust, and any Acting contrary to that Trust is a Renouncing of the Trust, tho' it be not a Renouncing by formal Deed; For it is a plain Declaration, by Act and Deed, though not in Writing, that he, who hath the Trust, Acting contrary, is a Disclaim-er of the Trust: Especially, My Lords, if the Actings be such as are inconsistent with, and subvertive of this Trust; For how can a Man in Reason or Sense, express a greater Renunciation of a Trust, than by the constant Declarations of his Actings to be quite contrary to that Trust?

“ This, My Lords, is so plain, both in Understanding and Practice, that I need do no more but Repeat it again, and leave it with Your Lordships, That the doing an Act inconsistent with the Being and End of a Thing, or that shall not Answer the End of that Thing, but quite the contrary, that shall be Constru'd an Abdication, and formal Renunciation of that Thing.

The Managers of the Lords, having made their Report to the House; on the same Day, February 6th, there was a long Debate, whether or no they should insist upon their Amendments? By this time several of the Chief Members, who were before for a Regency, were come over to the Party, that were for filling up the Vacant Throne, which was also increas'd by the Arrival of some other Lords, in-somuch that the Two Questions about the Words, Abdicated and Vacant were now carry'd in the Affirmative. The Earl of Denny made an Excellent Speech, to prove the Vacancy of the Throne, and the necessity of Supplying it by the Prince and Princess of Orange, wherein he was stoutly seconded by the Marquis of Hallifax, who immediately put this Question: Whether their Highnesses, the Prince and Princess of Orange, should be declar'd King and Queen? Upon which, by a Majority of Twenty Voices, It was Resolv'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal Assembled at Westminster, That the Prince and Princess of Orange, shall be declar'd King and Queen of England, and of all the Dominions there-unto belonging.

On Thursday, Feb. 7. The Lords came to this Declaration of Settling the Succession of the Crown; That the Prince and Princess of Orange should be King and Queen of England, &c. for their Natural Lives, and Life of the longer Liver of them; and that the Sole and Full Regal Power be in the Prince only, in the Name of Both: And that after their Deceases, the Crown shall belong to the Heirs of the Body of the Princess; and for Default of such Issue, to the Princess Anne of Denmark, and the Heirs of Her Body; and for Default of such Issue, to the Heirs of the Body of the said Prince of Orange; and for Default of such Issue, to the Person that shall be Nam'd, and in such manner as shall be Limited and Regulated by Act of Parliament; and for Default of such Limitation and Regulation, to the Lawful Heirs of the said Prince of Orange. The Lords sent up this Declaratory Vote to the Commons,

The Lords at last Agree to the Words Abdicated and Vacant.

Resolution of the Lords for Sitting the Throne.

1688. mons, to which, after a short Debate, and some little Amendment, the Commons Agreed: The same Day the Lords sent a Message to the Commons, That they had Agreed to the Vote sent them up of the 28th of January last, without any Alterations. They also Communicated to the Commons the Oaths which the Lords thought fit to be taken, in stead of those of Allegiance and Supremacy, which were readily Approv'd by the Commons.

In the mean-time, a Committee of the House of Commons were Employ'd in Drawing up a Declaration, containing the Reasons, why King James had Vacated the Throne, and Asserting the ancient Rights and Liberties of the People of England; which Declaration being sent up to the Lords on the 1st of February, was after some Debates Agreed unto the Day following, when the Princes of Orange arriv'd at Gravesend, and went directly to Whitehall, amidst loud Acclamations, and all the Signs of Univerfal Joy.

On the next Day, being Wednesday, February 13. The Prince and Princess of Orange, being Seated on Two Armed Chairs, under a Canopy in the Banqueting-House, both Houses of the Convention waited upon Them in a Body, and caus'd the Clerk of the Crown to Read with an Audible Voice the following Declaration of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons Assembl'd at Westminster.

1688. Happy Agreement of the Two Houses. Arrival of the Princess of Orange. Declaration of the Two Houses.

“ WHEREAS the Late King James II. by the Assistance of divers Evil Counsellors, Judges, and Ministers Employ'd by him, did endeavour to Subvert and Extirpate the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom; by Assuming and Exercising a Power of Dispensing with, and Suspending of Laws, and the Execution of Laws, without Consent of Parliament; By Committing and Prosecuting divers worthy Prelates, for humbly Petitioning to be Excus'd from Concurring to the said Assum'd Power; By Issuing and Causing to be Executed, a Commission under the Great Seal, for Erecting a Court call'd, The Court of Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Causes; By Levying Money for, and to the Use of the Crown, by Pretence of Prerogative for other Time, and in other Manner, than the same was granted by Parliament; By Raising and Keeping a Standing Army within this Kingdom in Time of Peace, without Consent of Parliament; and Quartering Soldiers contrary to Law; By causing several good Subjects, being Protestants, to be Disarm'd at the same time, when Papists were both Arm'd, and Employ'd contrary to Law; By violating the Freedom of Election of Members to Serve in Parliament; By Prosecution in the Court of King's-Bench, for Matters and Causes Cognizable only in Parliament, and by divers other Illegal and Arbitrary Courses:

“ And whereas of Late Years, Partial, Corrupt and Unqualify'd Persons have been Return'd, and Serv'd on Juries in Tryals; and particularly divers Jurors in Trials for High-Treason, which were not Free-Holders: And Excessive Bail hath been Requir'd of Persons Committed in Criminal Causes, to Elude the Benefit of the Laws for the Liberty of the Subject: And Expensive Fines have been Impos'd; And Illegal and Cruel Punishments Inflicted: And several Grants and Promises made of Fines and Forfeitures, before any Conviction or Judgment against whom the same was to be Levy'd; All which are utterly and directly contrary to the known Laws and Statutes, and Freedom of this Realm:

“ And whereas the Late King James II. having Abdicated the Government, and the Throne

“ being thereby Vacant; His Highness, the Prince of Orange (whom it hath pleas'd Almighty God to make the Glorious Instrument of delivering this Kingdom from Popery and Arbitrary Power) did (by the Advice of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and divers Principal Persons of the Commons) cause Letters to be Written to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, being Protestants, and other Letters to the several Counties, Cities, Universities, Burroughs and Cinque-Ports, for the chusing of such Persons to Represent them, as were of Right to be sent to Parliament, to Meet and Sit at Westminster, Jan. 22. 1689. in Order to such an Establishment, as that their Religion, Laws and Liberties might not again be in Danger of being Subverted, upon which Letters, Elections have been accordingly made: And thereupon, the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, pursuant to their respective Letters and Elections, being now Assembl'd in a full and free Representation of this Nation, taking into their most Serious Consideration the best Means for the attaining the Ends aforesaid, do in the first Place (as their Ancestors in like Cases have usually done) for the vindicating their Ancient Rights and Liberties, declare;

“ That the pretended Power of Suspending Laws, or the Execution of Laws, by Regal Authority, without Consent of Parliament, is Illegal.

“ That the pretended Power of Dispensing with Laws, or the Executing of Laws by Regal Authority, as it hath been Assum'd and Exercis'd of Late, is Illegal.

“ That the Commission for Erecting the Late Courts of Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Causes, and all other Commissions and Courts of the like Nature, are Illegal and Pernicious.

“ That all Grants and Promises of Fines and Forfeitures of Particular Persons before Conviction, are Illegal and Void.

“ And that for Redress of all Grievances, and for the Amending, Strengthening and Preserving of the Laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently.

" And the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, do Pray the said Prince and Princefs of Orange to accept the fame accordingly.

" And that the Oaths hereafter-mentioned, be taken by all Perfons of whom the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy might be required by Law, in ftead of them; and that the said Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy be abrogated.

I A. B. do fincerely Promise and Swear, That I will be Faithful and bear true Allegiance to their Majesties, King William and Queen Mary. 1688.

So help me God.

I A. B. do Swear, That I do from my Heart Abhor, Detest and Abjure as Impious and Heretical, this Damnable Doctrine and Position, That Princes Excommunicated or Deprived by the Pope, or any Authority of the See of Rome, may be Depofed or Murdered by their Subjects, or any other whatfoever; And I do Declare, That no Foreign Prince, Perfon, Prelate, State or Potentate, hath or ought to have any Jurisdiction, Power, Superiority, Preheminence or Authority, Ecclesiastical or Spiritual, within this Realm.

So help me God.

After the Reading of this Declaration the Marquess of Halifax, Speaker of the House of Lords, made a Tender of the Crown to their Highnesses in the Name of Both Houses, whereupon the Prince returned this Answer.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

THIS is certainly the greatest Proof of the Trust you have in Me that can be given, which is the Thing that makes Us value it the more: And as I had no other Intention in coming hither, than to preserve your Religion, Laws and Liberties, fo you may be fure, that I fhall endeavour to fupport them, and fhall be willing to Concur in any thing that fhall be for the Good of the Kingdom, and to do all that is in my Power to advance the Welfare and Glory of the Nation.

On the fame Day, being Aff-Wednesday, the Prince and Princefs were Solemnly Proclaimed King and Queen of England, France and Ireland, firft at Whitehall, then at Temple-Bar, and again at the Royal-Exchange, each Proclamation being Echo'd with Univerfal Acclamations of Joy.

His Majesty is said to have offer'd the Great-Seal to the Earl of Nottingham, though he had Protested against the Vacancy of the Throne, and had Oppos'd the Settlement of the Crown; but the Earl Excus'd himself from Accepting of it, alledging his Unfitness for an Employment that requir'd a constant Application. The Marquess of Halifax had the same Offer made him; which he likewise declin'd. Whereupon the Seals were given (in Commission) to Sir John Maynard, Anthony Keck, and William Rawlinson, Esqrs; the two last of whom were Knighted by His Majesty. 1688.

The first time the King Advis'd with His Privy-Council, He Propos'd to 'em, Whether the Convention might be Legally turn'd into a Parliament? To which the Majority Agreeing, His Majesty, on Monday Febr. 18th, went to the House of Lords in great Solemnity, and being Seated on the Throne, and the Commons Attending at the Bar, with their Speaker, His Majesty made this Speech to both Houses.

Convention turn'd into a Parliament.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

"I Have lately told You, how Sensible I am of Your Kindness, and how much I Value the Confidence You have repos'd in Me: And I come Hither to Assure You, That I shall never do any thing that may justly lessen Your Good-Opinion of Me.

The King's Speech.

"I think it necessary to Acquaint You, That the Condition of Our Allies Abroad, and particularly that of Holland, is such, that unless some speedy Care be taken of them, they run a greater Hazard than You wou'd have them expos'd to.

"You Your-selves must be sensible, That the Posture of Affairs Here, require Your Serious Consideration; and that a Good Settlement at Home is necessary, not only for Your Own Peace, but for the Support of the Protestant Interest, both Here and Abroad.

"And particularly the State of Ireland is such, that the Dangers are grown too great to be obviated by any slow Methods.

"I must leave it to You, to Consider of the most Effectual Ways of Preventing the Inconveniences which may arise by Delays, and to 1688. " Judge what Forms may be most proper to " bring those Things to pass for the good of the " Nation, which I am confident are in all your " Minds, and which I on my Part, shall be al" ways ready to promote.

Bill to prevent Dissutes concerning this Parliament.

This Speech was receiv'd with a general Applause, and pursuant to the last Clause of it, the Lords immediately brought in a Bill to remove and prevent all Questions and Disputes concerning the Assembling and Sitting of this present Parliament; which they Read twice that Afternoon, and having Pass'd it the Day following, they sent it to the Commons for their Concurrence. Upon which the Commons went into a Committee of the whole House, and Mr. Hambden, the Chairman, put this Question, Whether a King Elected and Declared by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons Assembled at Westminster, 22d Jan. 1688. coming to and Consulting with the said Lords and Commons, did not make as compleat a Parliament and Legislative-Power, and Authority, to all Intents and Purposes, as if the said King should cause New Summons to be given, and New Elections to be made by Writs?
 This occasion'd a long and warm Debate; the Party who were for the Negative, Headed by Sir Edward Seymour and Sir Thomas Clargis, insisted upon the strict Ancient Constitution. The others Argued upon several Precedents, the latest in 1660.
 When the Lords and Commons convened by the Papers of the Liberties of England, were upon Reception of King Charles the II. Adjudg'd a Parliament, and they more-espically urg'd the present Necessity of Affairs, which would not admit of any Loss of Time, without infinite Danger Abroad and at Home. The Question was at last carried in the Affirmative, and Two Days after the Commons acquainted the Lords that they had Agreed to their Bill, with some Alterations and Amendments, relating to the Oaths, which by the said Bill were appointed to be taken by Both Houses with Amendments; being confirmed by the Lords, the whole Bill receiv'd the Royal-Assent on Saturday, Feb. 23. and so the Convention was chang'd into a Parliament. Yet some of the Commons had before protest'd that they would neither Submit to the Decisions of such a Parliament, nor Sit in it: And indeed some of 'em kept their Word as to this last Point. retiring into the Country upon frivolous Pretences, which occasion'd the Dilatory-Proceedings of this Session, and gave King James an Opportunity to get considerable Footing in Ireland, and the Hopes of Re-ascending his Throne.
 And the Discontented Party grew stronger in the House of Commons; for on Feb. 26. the Question being put, Whether the Revenue was expired by the Vacancy of the Throne, or whether it was devolv'd on their Majesties? The First Part of the Que-sition was carried in the Affirmative, and a Committee was thereupon appointed to Regulate their present Majesties Revenue, and some of that Committee contended to have it Settled on them for Three Years only.

Some Discontented Members retir'd into the Country.

Bill for Regulating Trials, dropt.

The Lords brought in a Bill on Feb. 26. for the better Regulating of the Trials of the Peers of England, which occasion'd great Debates, and at the Third Reading had the Protestation of Fifteen Lords against it, and when it was sent down to the Commons, it dropt there through the Influence of those Peers who had oppos'd it. On Feb. 28. upon Information that several Papists continued in the Cities of London and Westminster, the Lords order'd Sir William Waller to Secure, or cause to be Secured, all such Papists, or reputed Papists, and return their Names to the Committee appointed to bring in a Bill for removing all such from the said Cities, which Bill was accordingly presented to the House, on March the First: On which Day the King sent Two Remarkable Messages to the Parliament. The First was to the House of Lords, by 1688.

 the Lord Mordant, to this Effect, " That His Ma" jesty in that Conjunction, and for the Safety of " the Publick, had Secured some Persons as dan" gerous to the Government, and thought it might " be convenient to Secure more, but being very ten" der of doing any thing not fully warrant" ed by Law, He had given Order that the Lords
 " might be acquainted, with what He had thought " himself oblig'd to do for the Publick Peace and " Security of the Government". This Message " was occasion'd by the Securing the Earl of Arran,
 " Sir Robert Hamilton, and Two other Scotch-Men, " who by some intercepted-Letters from France, had " been discover'd to Plot the Restauration of King
 " James, and were thereupon Committed to the " Tower. The Lords immediately appointed a " Committee to prepare an Address to be present" ed to the King, upon this Occasion from Both " Houses, " expressing their Most Humble Thanks
 " for His Majesty's great Care of their Liberties, " and for His Gracious Communication of this " Matter; and Humbly to Advise and Desire His " Majesty to take such extraordinary Care of the " Government in this Conjunction, by Securing all " Disaffected Persons, as might prevent any Di" sturbance of the Publick Peace, and that such " Persons as were, or should be so Committed,
 " might be retain'd till the First Day of the next
 " Term, if His Majesty should see Cause for it".
 The Commons made some Difficulty to give their Concurrence to this Address, which seem'd to allow the King a Power of Dispensing with the Haber-cryus Act; and therefore thought it more Legal to bring in a bill to Empower His Majesty to apprehend and detain such Persons, as he should find just Cause to suspect were conspiring against the Government; which went in few Days thro' Both Houses, and afterwards Pass'd into an Act by the Royal Assent.

 of Both Houses.

The other Message was sent to the Commons by Mr. Wharton, who acquainted the House, " That " the King being sensible what a grievous Burden
 " the Duty arising from Hearth-Money was unto " his People, especially to the Poorer Sort, His " Majesty was pleas'd to Agree, either to the Re" gulation of it, or to the taking of it wholly a" way, not doubting but the Commons would take " Care of his Revenue another way". This prov'd to be an Act of great Prudence and Popularity, the Commons receiv'd it with an Universal Satisfaction, and presented this Address of Thanks for it on March 5.

Message of the King
 to the Commons.

WE Your Majesty's Most Dutiful and Loy" al Subjects, the Knights, Citizens and " Burgesses in Parliament Assembled, have taken " into our Serious Consideration Your Majesty's " Gracious Message, wherein Your Majesty is plea" sed to express your great Goodness, and Sense
 " of your People's Condition by your Tender " Consideration, That the Revenue of the Hearth-
 " Money is very grievous to them; And are plea" sed to agree either to the Regulation of it, or to " the taking of it wholly away. And as Your " Majesty is pleas'd in this to consider the Ease
 " of your People, we acknowledge ourselves ob" liged to Declare, That Your Majesty has fill'd
 " our Hearts with an intire Satisfaction and Gra" titude, by this Your Most Gracious and Unpre" cedented Offer. And we humbly crave Leave to " present this Assurance to Your Majesty, That " we will make such Grateful and Affectionate " Returns, and be so careful of the Support of " the Crown, that the World may see, to the dis" couraging of your Enemies, and Satisfaction of " all good Men, That Your Majesty Reigns in " the Hearts of your People; Which GOD grant
 " long to continue.

Address of the Commons to the King.

1688.

The Second, Fourth and Fifth Days of March were partly spent by Both Houses in taking the Oaths of Fealty appointed by the late Act for Removing and Preventing all Questions and Disputes concerning the Assembling and Sitting of this present Parliament; and in Subscribing the Declaration required by an Act of 30th Car. II. In the House of Commons few or none refused to take the said Oaths; but in the Upper-House, not above Ninety Temporal, and only Eight Spiritual-Lords comply'd with the Act: Those Eight Prelates were, the Arch-Bishop of York, and the Bishops of London, Lincoln, Bristol, Winchester, Rochester, Llandaff and St. Asaph, whose Example was afterwards followed by the Bishops of Carlisle, and even of St. David's. The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and some other of his Suffragans, absolutely refus'd to own the present Government, from a Conscientious Regard they had to the Allegiance they had Sworn to King James: And many other Discontented Persons fell in with 'em, from the Hopes or the Fears of his Restoration.

On Feb. 27. the King had acquainted the House of Commons with the certain News of the Late King James having Sailed from Brest with a considerable Number of French-Troops in order to Land in Ireland. Whereupon the Commons unanimously Voted, That they would stand by and assist the King, with their Lives and Fortunes, in Supporting his Alliances abroad, in Reducing of Ireland, and in Defence of the Protestant-Religion, and Laws of the Kingdom. This Vote was communicated to the Peers, who confirm'd it by entering the same into their Journal; and on the 5th Day of March Concurr'd also with the Commons, in the following Address,

WE Your Majesties Most Dutiful and Faithful Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons Assembled in Parliament, being highly Sensible of our late great and Signal Deliverance from Popery and Arbitrary-Power, whereof it has Pleas'd ALMIGHTY GOD to make You the Glorious Instrument; and desiring, to the utmost of our Abilities, to express our Gratitude to Your Majesty for so Great and Generous an Undertaking, no less necessary to Support the Protestant-Interest in Europe, than for Recovering and Maintaining the Civil-Rights and Liberties of these Nations, so notoriously Invaded and Undermined by Popish-Councils and Counsellors; being likewise fully convinced of the restless Spirits and continual Endeavours of Your Majesty's and the Nation's Enemies, for the Extirpation of the Protestant-Religion, and the Subversion of our Laws and Liberties, do unanimously Declare, That We will stand by and assist Your Majesty with our Lives and Fortunes, in Supporting the Alliances abroad, in reducing of Ireland, and in Defence of the Protestant-Religion and Laws of the Kingdom.

The Lord Great-Chamberlain having waited on the King to know when He would be Attended with this Address, His Majesty answer'd "He was going out of Town, but intended to Return the next Day, and then He would signify his Pleasure when Both Houses should wait on Him"; and accordingly His Majesty gave this Answer to Both Houses, on Friday, March 8th.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

IF any thing could add to the Esteem and Affection I have for Parliaments, and particularly for this, they would be much increased by the Kindness you shew to me, and the Zeal you express for the Publick Good, in the Address you have made, which, in the Manner as well as the Matter, has every thing in it that ought to recommend it to me.

"I will assure you, that I will never abuse the Confidence you have put in me, being fully perswaded that there is no sure Foundation of a good Agreement between a King and his People, but a Mutual Trust; when that is once broken, a Government is half Dissolv'd.

"It shall be therefore my Chief Care never to give any Parliament Cause to distrust me, and the best Methods I can use for that Purpose, is never to expect any thing from them, but what shall be their own Interest to grant.

"I came hither for the good of the Kingdom, and since it is your Desire that I am in this Station, I shall pursue the same Ends that brought me.

"God has been pleas'd to make me Instrumental to redeem you from the Ills you fear'd; and it is still my Desire, as well as my Duty, to serve you in your Religion, Laws and Liberties, which was the only Inducement that brought me into England; and to these I ascribe the Blessings that have attended this Undertaking.

"When I spoke last to you, I told you of the Necessity of assisting our Allies, and more especially the States of Holland, whose Readiness to relieve you, at so great a Hazard and Expence, from the Extrinities you lay under, needs no other Argument to move you to the Consideration of it.

"As I was then a Witness of their Zeal and Affection to promote the Expedition, and to second my Endeavours, even with the Neglect of their own Safety; so I am now Sensible of the Inevitable Ruine they have drawn upon themselves in giving you their Assistance, if you should not return it to them.

"They have really exhausted themselves to such a Degree, both as to Men and Money, that it is not easily to be imagin'd; and I am confident your Generosity will have as little Bounds towards them, as theirs had towards you; and that you will not only enable me to make good the Treaty with them, and Re-pay what they have actually laid out upon this Occasion, (of which an Account shall be given you) but that you will farther support them, to the utmost of your Ability, against the Power of their Enemies; who must be yours too, by their Interest, and their Religion, and do certainly design the Ruine of Holland to be a Step to your Destruction.

"I need not take Pains to tell you the Deploable Condition of Ireland, which, by the Zeal and Violence of the Popish-Party there, and by the Assistance and Encouragement they have from France, is brought to that Pass, that it is not advisable to attempt the Reducing of it but by a considerable Force; which, I think, ought not to be less than 20000 Horse and Foot, which, by the Blessing of God, will make the Work shorter, and in Consequence, the Charge easier, tho' the First Expence must, of Necessity, be very great.

"You are to consider, That towards the most speedy and effectual Success in relation to Ireland, as well as with a Regard to France, there must be such a Fleet, as may in Conjunction with the States, make us so entirely Masters of that Sea, that nothing may be sent from France to Ireland, or any-where else, that may give Disturbance to Us, or our Allies.

"I must also recommend to you the Consideration of the Revenue to Me, that it may be so Settled, as that it may be Collected without Disputes.

King's Answer to Both Houses.

1688.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

“ These Things will amount to a great Sum, and must of consequence be a present Weight upon the People : But considering, neither Your Religion nor Your Safety can probably be Secured without these Means, I conclude, Nothing can be too great a Price for their Preservation. And I will Engage My Solemn Word to You, That whatever You shall Give to these Publick Ends, shall be strictly Apply'd to them : And that as You so freely Offer to hazard All that is Dear to You, so I shall as freely Expose My Self for the Support of the Protestant-Religion, and the Safety and Honour of the Nation.

General Satisfaction.

The Parliament's Address, and the King's Answer, being made Publick, it was a Common-Satisfaction to the People of England ; and the City of London express'd their singular Content and Joy, by an Address of Thanks to the House of Lords : Which was very grateful to the Court. But it was no small Disturbance to the New-Government, that there began to be a Defection in the Army, as well as a Division in the Two Houses : For the Royal Scotch Regiment of Horse, that was Quarter'd at Abingdon, almost totally Deserted, Marching toward Scotland ; as did also above Five hundred of Dunbarton's Regiment, Headed by Five Captains, steering the same Course, with Four Field-Pieces. The News of this Defection being brought to Hampton-Court, His Majesty Order'd Mr. Herbert to communicate it to the Parliament. Whereupon both Houses Agreed to an Address, on March 15th, Humbly Beseeching His Majesty to take effectual Care for the speedy Suppression of that Rebellion ; and to Issue forth His Proclamation, Declaring these Officers and Soldiers, and their Adherents, to be Rebels and Traitors, and Requiring all His Subjects to Apprehend and Prosecute 'em as such. Accordingly the King Issued-out a Proclamation to that Effect ; and sent a sufficient Force of Horse and Dragoons, under General Ginkle, who soon Reduc'd those Mutinous Troops, and brought them to submit to the Mercy of King William, who sent 'em over into Holland. And to obviate the like Mischiefs for the future, an Act was Pass'd, For Punishing Officers and Soldiers who should Mutiny, or Desert Their Majesty's Service.

Scotch Regiment Desert the Service of King William.

Address of the Two Houses on this Occasion.

Act Pass'd by King William.

On Saturday March 16th, His Majesty went by Water to the House of Lords, Attended with the usual Solemnity ; and being in His Royal-Robes, Seated on the Throne, and the Commons being Sent for up, His Majesty gave the Royal-Assent to, (1.) An Act for Impowering His Majesty to Apprehend and Detain such Persons, as He shall find Just Cause to Suspect are Conspiring against the Government. And, (2.) to An Act for the Annulling and making Void the Attainder of William Ruffel Esq; commonly call'd Lord Ruffel. And then His Majesty made this Speech to both Houses :

My Lords and Gentlemen :

His Majesty's Speech to the Two Houses.

“ NOW I have the Occasion of Coming hither to Pass this Bill, which, I hope, will be for all Our Safeties ; I shall put You in mind of One Thing which will conduce much to Our Settlement, as a Settlement will to the Disappointment of Our Enemies.

“ I am, with all the Expedition I can, filling-up the Vacancies, that are in Offices and Places of Trust, by this late Revolution. - I hope You are sensible, there is a Necessity of some Law to Settle the Oaths to be taken by all Persons to be Admitted to such Places : I recommend it to Your Care, to make a speedy Provision for it. And as I doubt not but You will sufficiently Provide against Papists, so I hope You will leave Room for the Admission of all Protestants that are Willing and Able to Serve.

“ This Conjunction in My Service, will tend to the better Uniting You amongst Your-selves, and the Strengthening You against Your Common-Adversaries. 1688.

The better to understand the Clause, of leaving Room for the Admission of all Protestants ; it must be remembered, That the Arch-Bishop and Bishops, and many of the Clergy, had been so addicted to the High-Notions of Passive-Obedience, Non-Resistance, and the Divine-Right of an Hereditary-Monarchy, that they knew not how to reconcile the Revolution to those Bigotted Principles. And for that Reason, though they had earnestly Desir'd the Prince's Coming, and had the Chief of them Address'd to Him, after He was Come, to take the Administration of Affairs upon Him ; yet, as if they would have Him their Redeemer, without being their Protector, they did not care to pay any Allegiance to Him, nor to renounce their Obligations to King James. This Example of the Prelates and Clergy, had a great Influence on many other Members of the Church of England : And it was their Disaffection, that made the King more inclinable to favour the Dissenters, whom He generally look'd upon as better-affected to His Person and Title. This prepar'd the King and the Court to Desire, That all Protestants of what Denomination soever, might be Indifferently admitted to Offices and Employments Upon this Desire of the King, first signify'd to His Privy-Council, a Bill was Presented in the House of Lords, on Thursday March 14th, For Abrogating the former Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and Appointing other Oaths in their stead. Which being Read a Second time, a Select Committee of the House was Order'd to Draw up Two Clauses ; The one, To Explain the Abrogating the said Oaths ; and the other, To Take away the Necessity of Receiving the Sacrament, to make a Man capable of enjoying any Office, Employment, or Place of Trust. This Clause being Drawn up, and Reported to the House, was Rejected by a great Majority, who thought it necessary to preserve the Government in the Hands of those that were of the National-Church and Religion. And yet Seven Lords Protested against Limiting Offices by the Sacramental-Test, the Lords Delamere, Stamford, North and Grey, Chesterfield, Wharton, Lovelace, and Vaughan, who, on March 21st, Dissented, for these Reasons : (1.) “ That an hearty Union among Protestants, was a greater Security to the Church and State, than any Test that cou'd be invented. (2.) That an Obligation to Receive the Sacrament in Churches, was now a Test on the Protestants, rather than on the Papists ; and as long as it was so continu'd, there cou'd not be that hearty and perfect Union among Protestants, as had always been with'd, and was at this time indispensably necessary. And, lastly, That a greater Caution ought not to be requir'd from such as were admitted into Offices, than from the Members of the Two Houses of Parliament, who were not oblig'd to Receive the Sacrament, to enable 'em to Sit in either House.

Reasons why the King was jealous of some Church-men ; and

More tender of some Dissenters.

Clause of Favour to Protestant-Dissenters.

Protestation of Seven Lords.

When the Court had lost this Point, they made another Attempt in favour of the Moderate-Dissenters, which was, by inserting a Clause in the said Bill, To Prevent the Receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, upon any other Account, than in Obedience to the Holy Institution thereof : And to Provide, That any Man should be sufficiently qualify'd for any Office, Employment, or Place of Trust, who within a Year before or after his Admission or Entrance thereinto, did Receive the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, either according to the Usage of the Church of England, or in any other Protestant-Congregation, and cou'd produce a Certificate, under the Hands of the Minister, and Two other Credible Persons. But this Clause was also Rejected by a great Another Attempt in Favour of the Protestant-Dissenters.

1688. great Majority ; though Six Lords, Oxford, Lovelace, Wharton, Mordant, Montague, and Paget, Enter'd their Dissent, for these Reasons : (1.) " Because it gives a great Part of the Protestant Freemen of England, Reason to Complain of Inequality, and Hard-Usage, when they are Excluded from Publick Employments by Law : And also, because it deprives the King and Kingdom of divers Men fit and capable to serve the Publick, in several Stations ; and that for a meer Scruple of Conscience, which can by no means render them Suspected, much less Disaffected to the Government. (2.) Because His Majesty, as the Common and Indulgent Father of His People, having express'd an earnest Desire of Liberty for Tender Consciences, to His Protestant Subjects ; and my Lords the Bishops having, divers of them, on several Occasions, profess'd an Inclination to, and Own'd the Reasonableness of such a Christian-Temper ; We apprehend it will raise Suspicion in some Mens Minds, of something else than the Care of Religion, or the Publick, and different from a Design to heal our Breaches, when they find, that by Confining Secular-Employments to Ecclesiastical-Conformity, those are shut-out from Civil-Affairs, whose Doctrine and Worship may be Tolerated by Authority of Parliament ; there being a Bill before Us, by Order of the House, to that Purpose : Especially when, without this Exclusive-Rigour, the Church is Secur'd in all Her Privileges and Preferments ; no-Body being hereby Let-in to them, who is not strictly Conformable. (3.) Because, to set Marks of Distinction and Humiliation on any-sort of Men, who have not rendred themselves justly Suspected to the Government, as it is at all times to be avoided by the Makers of Just and Equitable Laws, so may be particularly of ill-Effect to the Reformed-Interest at Home and Abroad, in this present Conjunction, which stands in need of the United-Hands and Hearts of all Protestants, against the Open-Attempts and Secret-Endeavours of a Restless Party, and a Potent Neighbour, who is more Zealous than Rome itself, to plant Popery in these Kingdoms ; and labours, with the utmost Force, to settle his Tyranny, upon the Ruines of the Reformation, all through Europe. (4.) Because it turns the Edge of a Law (We know not by what Fate) upon Protestants, and Friends to the Government, which was intended against Papists, to Exclude them from Places of Trust, as Men avowedly Dangerous to Our Government and Religion : And thus, the taking the Sacrament, which was enjoin'd only as a Means to Discover Papists, is now made a Distinguishing-Duty amongst Protestants, to Weaken the Whole, by Casting-off a Part of them. (5.) Because Mysteries of Religion, and Divine-Worship, are of Divine-Original, and of a Nature so wholly distinct from the Secular-Affairs of Politick-Society, that they cannot be applied to those Ends ; and therefore, the Church, by the Law of the Gospel, aswell as Common-Prudence, ought to take Care, neither to offend Tender-Consciences Within itself, nor give offence to those Without, by mixing their Sacred-Mysteries with Secular-Interests. (6.) Because We cannot see how it can consist with the Law of God, Common-Equity, or the Right of any Free-born Subject, that any-One be Punish'd without Crime. If it be a Crime, not to take the Sacrament according to the Usage of the Church of England, every-One ought to be Punish'd for it ; which no-Body affirms : If it be no Crime ; those who are Capable, and judg'd Fit for Employments by the King, ought not to be Punish'd with a Law of Exclusion, for not doing that which 'tis no Crime to forbear. If it be urg'd still, as an effectual Test to Discover and Keep-out Papists ; the taking the Sacrament in these Protestant-Congregations where they are Members, and known, will be at least as effectual to that Purpose. As to the State of Scotland, the Prince's Declaration, dispers'd in that Kingdom, had a great Influence upon the Body of the People : But the Bishops and Episcopal-Clergy, being the more-immediate Creatures of the Court, had been Drawn-in to a more than ordinary Profession of Adherence to King James : For, upon News of the Expedition of the Prince of Orange, they were made to write this following Letter to the King.

1688. State of Scotland.

May it Please Your Most Sacred Majesty ;
 WE Prostrate Ourselves, to pay Our most-devote Thanks and Adoration to the Sovereign Majesty of Heaven and Earth, for Preserving Your Sacred Life and Person, so frequently Expos'd to the greatest Hazards, and as often Deliver'd ; and You miraculously Prosper'd with Glory and Victory, in Defence of the Rights and Honour of Your Majesty's August Brother, and of these Kingdoms : And that, by His Merciful Goodness, the Ragings of the Sea, and Mad-ness of Unreasonable Men, have been still'd and calm'd ; and Your Majesty, as the Darling of Heaven, peaceably seated on the Throne of Your Royal Ancestors, whose Long, Illustrious and Unparallel'd Line, is the greatest Glory of this Your Ancient Kingdom.

Letter of the Bishops to King James.

We pay Our most humble Gratitude to Your Majesty, for the repeated Assurances of Your Royal Protection to Our National-Church and Religion, as the Laws have Establish'd them ; which are very suitable to the Gracious Countenance, Encouragement and Protection, Your Majesty was pleas'd to afford to Our Church and Order, whilst We were happy in Your Presence among us.

We magnifie the Divine-Mercy, in blessing Your Majesty with a Son, and Us with a Prince, whom we pray Heaven may bless and preserve, to sway Your Royal Sceptres after You, and that he may Inherit, with Your Dominions, the Illustrious and Heroick Vertues of his August and Most Serene Parents.

We are amaz'd to hear of the Danger of an Invasion from Holland, which excites our Prayers for an Universal Repentance, from all Orders of Men, that GOD may yet spare His People, preserve Your Royal Person, and prevent the Effusion of Christian Blood ; and to give such Success to Your Majesty's Arms, that All who Invade Your Majesty's Just and Undoubted Rights, and Disturb or Interrupt the Peace of Your Realms, may be Disappointed, and clothed with Shame, so that on Your Royal Head the Crown may still flourish.

As, by the Grace of GOD, We shall preserve in Ourselves a firm and unshaken Loyalty ; so We shall be careful and zealous to promote, in all Your Subjects, an intrepid and stedfast Allegiance to Your Majesty, as an Essential-part of their Religion, and of the Glory of Our Holy Profession ; not doubting, but that GOD, in His great Mercy, who hath so often preserv'd and deliver'd Your Majesty, will still preserve and deliver You, by giving You the Hearts of Your Subjects, and the Necks of Your Enemies. So Pray We, who, in all Humility, are,

(May it Please Your Most Sacred Majesty)
 Your Majesty's Most Humble, Most Faithful, and Most Obedient Subjects and Servants.

This

1688. This Letter was fatal, not only to the Scotch-Bishops, but to Episcopacy itself in Scotland; For the Distinction was very apparent, the Presbyterians fell in with the Revolution, the Episcopal-Party did all they could to obstruct and oppose it. Hence upon the News of King James's being withdrawn, the Lord-Chancellor resigned immediately the Great Seat; and retired to Edinburgh; and the Populace of that City insulted not only the Romanists, but also the Episcopal-Party. The Prince being informed of these Things, and having first dispatched Major-General Mackey with some Troops under his Command into that Kingdom, he assembled such of the Scotch-Lords and Gentlemen, as were in Town, on the 7th of January, and made this Speech to them.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

THE only Reason that induced me to undergo so great an Undertaking, was, That I saw the Laws and Liberties of these Kingdoms overturned, and the Protestant-Religion in imminent Danger: And seeing you are here so many Noblemen and Gentlemen, I have called you together, that I may have your Advice, what is to be done for Securing the Protestant-Religion, and restoring your Laws and Liberties, according to my Declaration.

King William's Speech to the Scotch-Lords.

As soon as His Highness had retired, the Lords and Gentlemen went to the Council-Chamber at Whitehall, and having Chosen the Duke of Hamilton their President, they fell a-Consulting what Advice was fit to be given to His Highness in this Conjunction; and after some Hours Reasoning, they Agreed upon the Materials of it, and appointed the Clerks, with such as were to assist them, to draw up in Writing, what the Meeting thought expedient to advise His Highness, and to bring it into the Meeting the next Day in the Afternoon.

Tuesday the Eighth Instant, the Writing was presented in the Meeting, and some Time being spent in Reasoning about the fittest way of Convening a General Meeting of the Estates of Scotland; At last the Meeting came to Agree in their Opinion, and appointed the Advice to be Writ clean over, according to the Amendments. But as they were about to part for that Time, the Earl of Arran proposed to them, as his Lordship's Advice, That they should move the Prince of Orange, to desire the King to return and call a Free-Parliament, which would be the best way to Secure the Protestant-Religion, and Property, and to heal all Breaches. This Proposal seem'd to dissatisfie the whole Meeting, and especially the Duke of Hamilton, their President, Father to the Earl; but they presently parted.

Wednesday, the 9th of January, they Met at Three of the Clock in the same Room, where Sir Patrick Hume took Notice of the Proposal made by the Earl of Arran, and desired to know if there were any there, that would second it; but none appearing to do it, he said, "That what the Earl had proposed was evidently opposite and inimicous to His Highness, the Prince of Orange's Undertaking, his Declaration, and the good Intentions of preserving the Protestant-Religion, and of restoring their Laws and Liberties express'd in it; and farther desired, That the Meeting should declare this to be their Opinion of it". The Lord Cardross seconded Sir Patrick's Motion: It was Answer'd by the Duke of Hamilton, President of the Meeting, "That their Business was to prepare an Advice to be offer'd to the Prince, and the Advice being now ready to go to the Vote; there was no need that the Meeting should give their Sense of the Earl's Proposal, which neither before nor after Sir Patrick's Motion, any had pretended to own or second, so that it was fallen out of Doors; and that the Vote of the Meeting, upon the Advice brought in by their Order, would sufficiently declare their Opinion". This being seconded by the Earl of Sutherland, the Lord Cardross and Sir Patrick did acquiesce in it, and the Meeting Voted unanimously the Advice following.

WE the Lords and Gentlemen of the Kingdom of Scotland, Assembled at Your Highness's Desire, in this Extraordinary Conjunction, do give Your Highness Our Humble and Heartly Thanks for Your Pious and Generous Undertaking for preserving the Protestant-Religion, and restoring the Laws and Liberties of these Kingdoms.

Advice of the Scotch-Noblemen and Gentlemen to the Prince of Orange.

In Order to the attaining these Ends, Our Humble Advice and Desire is, That Your Highness take upon You the Administration of all Affairs, both Civil and Military, the Disposal of the Publick Revenues and Fortresses in the Kingdom of Scotland, and the doing every thing that is necessary for the Preservation of the Peace of the Kingdom, until a General Meeting of the States of the Nation; which We humbly desire Your Highness to call, to be holden at Edinburgh the 14th Day of March next, by your Letters or Proclamation, to be Publish'd at the Market-Crosses of Edinburgh, and other Head-boroughs of the several Shires and Stewartries, as sufficient Intimation to all concerned, and according to the Custom of the Kingdom: And that the Publication of these your Letters or Proclamation, be by the Sheriffs or Stewart-Clerks, for the Free-holders, who have the Value of Lands, holden according to Law, for making Elections; and by the Town-Clerks of the said Boroughs, for the Meeting of the whole Burgessees of the respective Royal Boroughs, to make their Elections at least Fifteen Days, before the Meeting of the Estates at Edinburgh, and the respective Clerks to make Intimation thereof, at least Ten Days before the Meeting for the Elections; and that the whole Electors and Members of the said Meeting at Edinburgh, qualified as above express'd, be Protestants, without any other Exception or Limitation whatsoever; to Deliberate and Resolve what is to be done for Securing the Protestant-Religion, and restoring the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, according to Your Highness's Declaration.

Dated at the Council-Chamber, the 10th Day of January, 1689.

This Address being Subscribed by above Thirty Lords and about Eighty Gentlemen, was presented in their Presence at St. James's, by the Duke of Hamilton, their President, to His Highness the Prince of Orange, who Thanked them for the Trust they reposed in him, and desired a Time to consider upon so weighty an Affair.

Upon the 14th of January, His Highness Met again with the Scotch Lords and Gentlemen at St. James, and spoke to them as follows.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

IN Pursuance of your Advice, I will, until the Meeting of the States in March next, give such Orders concerning the Affairs of Scotland, as are necessary concerning the Calling of the said Meeting, for the preserving of the Peace, the applying of the Publick Revenue to the most pressing Uses, and putting the Fortresses in the Hands of Persons, in whom the Nation can have a just Confidence: And I do further Assure you, that you will always find me ready to Concur with you, in every thing that may be found necessary for Securing the Protestant-Religion, and restoring the Laws and Liberties of the Nation.

The Prince his Speech.

1688.

The Earl of Crawford desired of His Highness, that himself, the Earl of Louthian, and others, who came to Town since the Address was presented, might have an Opportunity to Subscribe it, which was accordingly done; after which His Highness retired, and all shewed great Satisfaction with his Answer.

State of Ireland.

Ireland was like to be in a Bleeding Condition, and the Care of that Kingdom having not only been recommended to the Prince by the English Lords and Commons, but also by an Address of the Nobility and Gentry of that Country, Asssembled for that Purpose at the Duke of Ormond's House, who at the same Time presented His Highness with a Draught of the Chief Ports of that Kingdom; the Prince thought fit to Summon Tyrconnel by a Letter, to submit to the present Administration, and to receive those Troops which His Highness design'd for the Security of that Kingdom, assuring him, the Roman-Catholicks should enjoy the same Liberty as they did in King Charles the II'd's Time. Colonel Richard Hamilton, a Roman-Catholick, was the Person entrusted with the Letter and Message, who no sooner came to Dublin, but he wholly joyned with Tyrconnel, which so afflicted Mr. Temple, a hopeful Gentleman, that had advised the Prince to employ him, that he Drowned himself upon the News of it.

State of Religion.

As to the Affairs of the Church in this Year, there needs no distinguishing View of them; for the Dangers that threaten'd the Established-Church and the whole Reformation, made up the greatest Part of those Publick Grievances that brought about the wonderful Revolution. So that most of the Ecclesiastical-Matters are already intermix'd with the Civil, Popery, and Arbitrary-Power can hardly be separated from one another. We need only farther observe, that nothing did so much exasperate the Clergy of the Church-of-England as the obtruding upon 'em a Declaration to give their People a Liberty of dividing from them. And therefore the whole Body of the Clergy were Unanimous in refusing to Read it in their Churches. The Example of Courage began in the City of London, and was industriously recommended thro' all Parts of the Kingdom, in a Letter from a Clergyman in the City to his Friend in the Country, containing his Reasons for not Reading the Declaration, dated May 22d, 1688. The more Eminent Bishops would not suffer their Officers to disperse the Forms of Declaration as was by Authority requir'd, and so shelter'd the Clergy from any Punishment of Neglect or Contempt, which they were willing to take upon themselves: And even in those other Dioceses where, by the Obsequious Order of the Bishops, or the Cowardice of their Inferiour-Officers, the Declarations were laid in the respective Parishes, not one Minister in Five Hundred would submit to the Reading of it; and even of those who did sordidly comply, not One in Twenty seem'd to do it from any Principle, but that of Fear to offend, or Ambition to please the Court. And yet it is very observable, that Bishop Cartwright so labour'd the Point in his own Diocese of Chester, That by Threats and Terrors He drew in a small Number of his Clergy, not only to Read the Declaration, but to Triumph in the doing of it by this Address to the King.

The Humble Address of the Clergy of the County-Palatine of Chester, who Publish'd the Late Gracious Declaration in their Churches for Liberty of Conscience.

Clergy of Chester.

WE Your Majesty's Most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, well-weighing what we, as such, ought to render to so Sacred and Gracious a King, reckon'd we ow'd this and higher Instances of our Obedience; in Pursuance of which, and of Your Majesty's Order in Council, We heartily Read the Declaration for Liberty of Conscience; not repining that all other our Fellow-Subjects should with us enjoy a Portion of Your Royal-Favour. We are well-aware that many have well deserved, and as to the other Number, towards whom you use the Courteous and Noblest Way of Conquering, we hope you may be Successful, or at least your Power will preserve you Safe. But if the Matter of the Declaration were not according to our Wishes, yet the Publishing of it is according to our Duty, since it is Issued out from the express Prerogative of your Supremacy over us: And we are required by what is Statute-Law, the Rubrick of our Liturgy, to Publish what is enjoin'd by the King or our Bishop, (whose Care herein was remarkable) as much as what is prescribed in the Rules of this Book: So that we cannot but with Trouble of Mind hear of the Proceedings of the Seven Bishops, who, though they tenderly promis'd the Dissenters something, yet refused to do their Part about the Declaration, lest they should be Parties to it; which Reason, we with due Modesty, (and relying upon a higher Authority,) esteem insufficient, seeing the Parliament of 62. did not think the Reading the Common-Prayer was approving of it, without Assent and Consent, publickly declared.

We therefore, in all Submission, become earnest, though too mean, Intercessors to Your Most Gracious Majesty, in Behalf of the Church-of-England, that the Faults of these, and others, may not be laid to her Charge, in whose Communion there are many, and we hope there will be more, who concur in promoting the Purposes of your Mild Government. We further beg Leave to make our Congratulations for the happy Birth of the Young Prince in his Hereditary Successive Kingdom: We in this Palatinate are the First Lot of Inheritance to the First-Born of our Kings; and as we have a greater Part in him, so we have a more plentiful Joy that he is Born to us, praying a long Life to him, and the Inheriting of his Royal Father's Crowns and Vertues, we hereby bind Ourselves to continue steadfastly,

Your Majesty's most Devoted, Obedient, and Firm Subjects, and Servants.

The same Fit of Loyalty came upon some other Bishops, who attempted to possess their Clergy with the Necessity of Obeying the King; but the Effect of it was only to make the King's Authority and their Own the more contemptible. Among others, the Poor Bishop of Lincoln having wrote much against Popery, was the more afraid of it; and therefore to make his Peace at Court, He did endeavour to perswade his Clergy to join with him, in some Address of the like Nature: But after all his Solliciting He could bring over but One Mean Clergyman, and he of so little Reputation, that the Bishop was himself ashamed of him.

Poor Endeavours of the Bishop of Lincoln.

The Bishop of London was not only the most Instrumental in the Revolution, but the most Zealous in Promoting the Peace and Settlement of it; and therefore, on Dec. 21st, he waited on His Highness, being attended with some of his own Clergy, and ev'n with some of the Dissenting-Ministers, and in his own and their Name, made a Speech to the Prince, to this Effect; "That they came to pay Him their humble Duties, and grateful Respects, for His very great and most hazardous Undertaking, for their Deliverance, and the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, with the Ancient Laws and Liberties of this Nation: That they gave up daily many Thanksgivings to Almighty

Bishop of London most Instrumental in the Revolution.

His Lordship's Address to the Prince.

1688. "GOD, who had hitherto been graciously pleas'd so wonderfully to preserve his Person, and prosper and favour his good Design; and they promis'd the continuance of their most fervent Prayers to the same GOD, and all concurrent Endeavours, in their respective Circumstances, for the promoting yet farther that Work which was so happily begun; and also for the perfecting of it, not only in this Kingdom, but in other Christian Kingdoms." The Bishop likewise suggested to the Prince, "That some of the Dissenting-Ministers, and their Brethren, were there present, who having the same Sense of his Coming hither, with themselves, had join'd themselves with them, by him, to render him their humblest and most grateful Resentments.

The Prince
his Answer.

His Highness was pleas'd to Answer, That He Thank'd them for their Attendance; and did Assure 'em, That the Great End of His Difficult and Chargeable Expedition, was to Preserve and Secure the Protestant Religion (His own Religion, and their Religion;) and He should not think any Thing, (no, not Life itself) too Dear to hazard, in Promoting and Perfecting so good a Work: And as He Himself had offer'd up, with great Devotion, His most solemn Acknowledgments to Almighty GOD, for His Presence with Him, and Blessing upon His Endeavours and Arms hitherto, so He must desire the Continuance of all their Prayers to GOD for Him.

Those of the Dissenting-Ministers, who had not waited on the Prince, under the Protection of the Bishop of London, took another Opportunity of Attending His Highness at St. James's, on Wednesday Jan. 2d, when they were, to the Number of Ninety, or upwards, introduced by the Earl of Devonshire, the Lord Wharton, and the Lord Wiltshire, and Presented an Address, to this Effect:

Address of the Dissenting-Ministers.

"They profess'd their grateful Sense of His Highness's Hazardous and Heroical Expedition, which the Favour of Heaven had made so surprizingly Prosperous. They esteem'd it a Common-Felicity, That the Worthy Patriots of the Nobility and Gentry of this Kingdom, had Unanimously Concur'd unto His Highness's Design; by whose most prudent Advice, the Administration of Publick-Affairs was devolved, in this Difficult Conjuncture, into Hands, which the Nation and the World knew to be apt for the Greatest Undertakings, and so suitable to the present Exigency of our Case. They promis'd the utmost Endeavour, which, in their Stations, they were capable of affording, for promoting the Excellent and Most-desirable Ends for which His Highness had Declar'd. They added their continual and fervent Prayers to the Almighty, for the Preservation of His Highness's Person, and the Success of His future Endeavours, for the Defence and Propagation of the Protestant-Interest throughout the Christian World. They should All most willingly have chosen that for the Season of paying this Duty to His Highness, when the Lord Bishop and the Clergy of London Attended His Highness for the same Purpose, (which some of them did, and which His Lordship was pleas'd condescendingly to make mention of to His Highness) had their Notice of that intended Application been so early, as to make their more general Attendance possible to them at that time: Therefore, though they did now appear in a distinct Company, they did not on a distinct Account, but on that only which was Common to them, and to all Protestants. There were some of Eminent Note, whom Age, or present Infirmities, hinder'd from Coming with 'em, yet They Concurr'd in the same grateful Sense of this their Common-Deliverance.

The Prince
his Answer.

His Highness was pleas'd very favourably to receive this Application, and to Assure 'em, That He came purposely for the Defence of the Protestant-

Religion, for that was His Own Religion wherein He was born and bred, the Religion of His Country and His Ancestors; therefore He was Resolv'd, by the Grace of GOD, always to Adhere to it, and to do His utmost Endeavours for the Defence of it, and the Promoting a firm Union among Protestants.

It must be own'd, that this was a glorious Opportunity, of Reconciling all Moderate-Dissenters to the Communion of the Church of England; which might have been happily effected, if this Extraordinary Juncture had been Well-manag'd and Improv'd. For the Bishops, and most Eminent Clergy, had publickly profess'd to King James, their being willing to come to a Temper with their Dissenting-Brethren; and they had made their Applications to the Prince of Orange, upon the like Assurances of Peace and Union, by all proper and lawful Means. And at the same time, there was a like amicable Disposition in the Body of the Dissenters, who took Care to represent their Desires of Accommodation, by the Mouth of Dr. Bates, who being Attended by very many Dissenting-Ministers, made these follow-Speeches to Their Majesties.

This a ting all Protestants

To the KING.

May it Please Your Majesty;

"THE Series of Successful Events that has attended Your Glorious Enterprize, for the Saving these Kingdoms from so Imminent and Destructive Evils, has been so Eminent and Extraordinary, that it may force an Acknowledgment of the Divine-Providence from those who deny it, and raises Admiration in all who believe and Reverence it. The Beauty and Speed of this Happy Work, are the bright Signatures of His Hand, who creates Deliverance for His People. The Less of Humane Power, the More of the Divine Wisdom and Goodness has been Conspicuous in it. If the Deliverance had been obtain'd by Fierce and Bloody Battels, Victory itself had been Dejected and Sad, and Our Joy had been mix'd with Afflicting Bitterness: But as the Sun, ascending the Horizon, dispels, without Noise, the Darkness of the Night; so Your Serene Presence has, without Tumults and Disorders, chas'd away the Darkness that Invaded us. In the Sense of this Astonishing Deliverance, We Desire, with all possible Ardency of Affection, to Magnifie the Glorious Name of GOD, the Author of it, by whose entire Efficacy the Means have been Successful: And We cannot, without a warm Rapture of Thankfulness, recount our Obligations to Your Majesty, the Happy Instrument of it. Your Illustrious Greatness of Mind, in an Undertaking of such vast Expence; Your Heroick Zeal, in Exposing Your Most Precious Life in such an Adventurous Expedition; Your Wise Conduct, and unshaken Resolution, in Prosecuting Your Great Ends, are above the loftiest Flights of Language, and exceed all Praise. We owe to Your Majesty the Two Greatest and most Valuable Blessings that we can enjoy; The Preservation of the True Religion, our most Sacred Treasure; and the Recovery of the Falling State, and the Establishing it upon Just Foundations. According to our Duty, we promise unfainting Fidelity and true Allegiance to Your Majesty's Person and Government.— We are encourag'd by Your Gracious Promise, upon our First Address, humbly to desire and hope, That Your Majesty will be pleas'd, by Your Wisdom and Authority, to Establish a firm Union of Your Protestant Subjects in the Matters of Religion, by making the Rule of Christianity to be the Rule of Conformity. Our Blessed Union, in the Purity and Peace of the Gospel, will make this Church a Fair and Lovely Type of Heaven, and Terrible to our Anti-Christian Enemies: This will make England

" the Steady Centre from whence a Powerful Influence will be deriv'd, for the Support of Reformed Christianity Abroad: This will bring Immortal Honour to Your Name, above the Trophies and Triumphs of the most Renowned Conquerors. We do Assure Your Majesty, That we shall cordially embrace the Terms of Union, which the Ruling-Wisdom of Our SA V I O U R has prescribed in His Word.— We shall not trespass farther on Your Royal-Patience, but shall offer up our fervent Prayers to the King of kings, That He will please to direct Your Majesty by His Unerring Wisdom, and always encline Your Heart to His Glory, and encompass Your Sacred Person with His Favour, as with a Shield, and make Your Government an Universal Blessing to these Kingdoms.

His Majesty was pleas'd graciously to make this Answer: I take kindly Your Good-Wishes; and whatever is in my Power, shall be employ'd for obtaining such an Union among you. I do Assure you of My Protection and Kindness.

To the QUEEN.

May it Please Your Majesty;

" YOUR Happy Arrival in Your Native-Country, and Accession to the Crown, has diffus'd an Universal Joy through this Kingdom. 'Tis an Auspicious Sign of Publick-Felicity, when Supreme-Virtue and Supreme-Dignity meet in the same Person. Your Inviolable Firmness in the Profession of the Truth, and Exemplary Piety, are the most radiant Jewels in Your Crown. The Lustre of Your Conversation, unstain'd in the midst of Tempting Vanities, and adorn'd with every Grace, recommends Religion as the most Honourable and Amiable Quality, ev'n to those who are averse from hearing Sermons, and apt to despise Serious Instructions and Excitations to be Religious.— We humbly Desire Your Majesty will be pleas'd, by Your Wisdom and Goodness, to Compose the Differences between Your Protestant Subjects, in Things of less Moment concerning Religion. We hope those Reverend Persons who conspire with Us in the Main-End, the Glory of GOD, and the Publick-Good, will Consent to the Terms of Union, wherein all the Reformed-Churches Agree.— We shall sincerely Address our Requests to GOD, that He will please to pour down, in a rich Abundance, His Blessings upon Your Majesty's Person and Government, and preserve You to His Heavenly Kingdom.

Her Majesty was graciously pleas'd to Answer them thus: I will use all Endeavours for the obtaining an Union, that is necessary for the Edifying of the Church. I desire your Prayers.

As to Church-Preferments, Dr. Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter, flying from that City while the Prince of Orange was Marching to it, was rewarded by King James with the Translation to the Arch-Bishoprick of York, on Nov. 16th; and the Ceremonies of his Translation were performed at Lambeth on Saturday, Dec. 8. by his Grace the Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishops of St. Asaph, Ely, Rochester and Peterborough; and the Day after he did his Homage to His Majesty at Whitehall, and within Two Days after he joined with the Lords Spiritual and Temporal Assembled at Guild-Hall, to Invite the Prince of Orange to take the Administration of the Government upon him. Upon his Translation to York, King James commanded, though he stay'd not to compleat, the Translation of Sir Jonathan Trelawney (Lord-Bishop Bristol) to the See of Exeter. The Learned Dr. Seth Ward (Bishop of Salisbury) having outliv'd his Memory, and the greatest-part of his excellent Understanding, Died in his House at Knightsbridge near London, on Sunday Jan. 6th:

Upon which Dr. Gilbert Burnet, who had Come over with the Prince, and had so highly deserv'd of Him, was promoted to that See, at the beginning of March; and on the last Day of that Month, was Consecrated in the Chappel of the Bishop's Palace at Fulham, by the Bishops of London, Winchester, Lincoln, Llandaff, St. Asaph, and Carlisle, by virtue of a Commission Granted to them by His Grace the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, who began now to Deny the Legality of the New-Government, and therefore would not be Personally concern'd in the Consecration of Dr. Burnet: Though, by the Advice and Importunity of Doctor Woodward (Chancellor of that Diocese) His Grace yielded to that Expedient of giving-out his Commission; as if He could Authorize Others to do what he thought could not be lawfully done by Himself. On Apr. 3d, His Lordship was Sworn and Admitted Chancellor of the Most Noble Order of the Garter; and was always True and Faithful to the King's Person, Interest and Honour, and very Exemplary in his Diocese, for Discipline, Hospitality and Charity.

We left the Parliament Sitting. The House of Lords had Pass'd a Bill for Removing Papists from the Cities of London and Westminster, and Ten Miles distance from the same. To which the Commons, on March 23th, added a Proviso, relating to the Queen-Dowager, and Her Family, by which Her Articles of Marriage did seem to be Infring'd. To this Proviso the Peers Disagreed; alledging, That Her Majesty had for so many Years made such moderate Use of the said Articles, that there had not been any just Occasion of Complaint in the Enjoyment of 'em: That it was evident, in the Time of the late King James, when Her Majesty might have been encourag'd to entertain more Persons of Her own Religion; most of Her Servants, and those of the most Considerable Places, were continu'd, and also others receiv'd into Her Family, though Protestants; and that it might be of Ill-Consequence, if Her Majesty, by not Living easily here, should be oblig'd to retire into Foreign Parts. On the other side, The Commons, on April 8th, insisted upon the Proviso added by them: 1. Because it was no New Clause, and therefore impos'd no new Condition, upon Her Majesty it being the same that was Enacted in the Thirtieth of King Charles II. For the more effectual preserving the King's Person and Government. 2. Because to make an Alteration in the Law as it then stood, might look like some kind of Countenance to those of that Perswasion, at a Time when the Lords themselves had judg'd the Resort of Papists to London to be of so dangerous Consequence to the Government, as to make this Act to remove 'em Ten Miles from it. And 3dly, Because the Papists were not less active in their Designs and Practices to disturb the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, than they were in the Thirtieth of King Charles II. And therefore the like Reasons remain'd at this Time, to perswade the House of Commons to keep the Force of it entire. Upon Consideration of these Reasons offer'd by the Commons in a Free-Conference, their Lordships agreed to propose, That the Queen-Dowager should have Thirty Servants of the King's English-Subjects, provided none of them were Priests, Monks, or Fryars; to which Expedient, after several Conferences, and warm Debates, the Commons gave their Concurrence.

On Thursday, March 28. the Earl of Shrewsbury acquainted the House of Peers, That His Majesty, out of an earnest Desire to deliver his People from the Guilt, Reproaches and Penalties which many of them may be liable to; and to put an End to all Controversies arising between " the Subjects, by reason of any Discord in later Times, and to take away all Distinctions, and Occasions of Discord among them; to the end that they having an entire Confidence in His Majesty, and a perfect Union among themselves, might be encourag'd in their Duty to his Government, and more fully and securely enjoy the Benefit of it. And His Majesty judging, that the best way to render this his Gracious Intentions most extensive and effectual, was to pass a Free and General Pardon, Indemnity and Oblivion; His Majesty did most earnestly recommend the Consideration thereof to Both Houses of Parliament, That with all the Expedition a Matter of that kind would admit, they might prepare a Bill for that Purpose for the Royal Assent; with such Exceptions only, as to them should seem necessary, for the Vindication of Publick Justice, the Safety of their Majesties, and the Settlement and Welfare of the Nation for the future". At the same Time the Earl of Shrewsbury desir'd Leave of the House to bring in a Bill for the Naturalizing the Prince of Denmark, whom His Majesty intend'd to create a Duke of this Kingdom, and so to make him capable of Sitting in that House. Whereupon the Lords Order'd the Marquess of Winchester and the Earl of Bedford, to Attend the King with the Thanks of their House, for His Majesty's Gracious Messige to 'em concerning the Bill of Indemnity and Free-Pardon, and for his Intention of creating His Highness Prince George, a Duke of this Realm.

As pass'd by the King.

Titles and Honours.

On Wednesday, Apr. 2. His Majesty came by Water to the House of Lords, attended with the usual Solemnity; and being in His Royal-Robes Seated on the Throne, and the Commons being sent for up, His Majesty gave the Royal Assent to the following Acts. 1. An Act for exhibiting a Bill in this present Parliament, for Naturalizing the Most Noble Prince George of Denmark. 2. An Act for Reviving of Actions and Procces lately depending in the Courts at Westminster, and discontinued by the not holding of Hillary-Term, and for Supplying other Defects relating to Proceedings at Law. 3. An Act for Punishing Officers and Soldiers, who shall Mutiny or Desert their Majesty's Service.

His Majesty before his Coronation thought fit to Confer several Titles and Honours. In the First of these Acts the Coronation-Oath was provided (by Directions from the Court) to be Administr'd either by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, or the Bishop of London. The Choice of One of these Two Prelates being left to the King, His Majesty, lest He should be deny'd by the First, thought fit to pitch upon the Second, who accordingly Officiated in that Magnificent Ceremony, which on the Day appointed Apr. 11. was perform'd at Westminster in a Manner following.

“YOUR Moſt Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, the Commons of England Aſſembled in this preſent Parliament, having to their unſpeakable Joy, ſeen Your Majesties plac'd upon the Imperial Throne of this Kingdom, they have deſir'd Acceſs at this Time to Your Royal Preſence, humbly to Congratulate Your Majesties upon this Occaſion, and to wiſh Your Majesties a Long and Proſperous Reign, with all the Bleſſings that ever did attend a Crown.

Speaker's Speech to their Majesties.

“We are all Senſible that Your Majesties Greatneſs is the Security of your Subjects. It is from your Power that we derive to our ſelves an Assurance of being Defended from our Enemies; and from your Juſtice, that we expect a full Enjoyment of our Laws and Liberties: But that which compleats our Happineſs, is the Experience we have of Your Majesties continual Care to maintain the Proteſtant Religion; So that we can no longer apprehend any Danger of being deprived of that Ineſtimable Bleſſing, either by ſecret Practices or by open Violences.

“May the ſame Divine Providence which hath hitherto preſerved Your Majesty in the greateſt Dangers, and ſo often given you Victory over your Enemies, ſtill Crown your Undertakings with Succeſs.

To the King.

“And may thoſe Unparalleld Vertues, which adorn Your Majesty's Royal Perſon, be the Admiration of the Preſent Age, and an Example to the Future.

To the Queen.

“And may the Luſtre of both your Names ſo far out-ſhine the Glory of your Predeceſſors, that the Memory of their greateſt Actions may be forgotten, and your People no longer date the Eſta bliſhment of their Laws and Liberties from St. Edward's Days, but from the moſt Auſpicious King WILLIAM and Queen MARY.

To this Speech His Majesty made the following Answer, both in his own, and in his Queen's Name.

GENTLEMEN;

WE return you Our hearty Thanks, for the Kindneſs that yer have, upon all Occaſions, ſhew'd to Both of Us. We ſhall take Care, to the beſt of Our Power, of all things that conduce to the Good of the Kingdom: And I do not doubt, but, by GOD's Aſſiſtance, and Yours, We ſhall be Able, in a ſhort time, to make you a Flourishing People.

The King's Answer.

On Apr. 19th, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament Aſſembled, Preſented an Address to His Majesty, in the Banqueting-Houſe, to render His Majesty their moſt Humble and Hearty Thanks, for His Gracious Declaration, and repeated Assurances, that He will Maintain the Church of England, as by Law Eſta bliſh'd: And humbly to Pray His Majesty, to Summon a Convocation of the Clergy of this Kingdom. To which His Majesty the next Day return'd a moſt Gracious Answer, (that ſhall be expreſſy recited under the View of Religion.)

Lords Address.

On Wednesday Apr. 24th, His Majesty went to the House of Lords, and gave His Royal-Aſſent to theſe following Acts. (1.) An Act for Impowering His Majesty to Apprehend and Detain ſuch Perſons, as He ſhall find juſt Cauſe to Suſpect are Conſpiring againſt the Government. (2.) An Act for the Abrogating of the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and Appointing other Oaths. (3.) An Act for the Removing Papiſts, and reputed Papiſts, from the Cities of London and Westminster, and Ten Miles diſtance from the ſame. (4.) An Act for the Taking-away the Revenue ariſing by Hearth-Money. (5.) An Act Paſſ'd.

Act

1689. Act for the Encouraging the Exportation of Corn.
 (6.) An Act for the Explaining and Making-effectual a Statute made in the First Year of King James the Second, concerning the Havens and Peers of Great-Yarmouth.

There was yet no Open-War Declar'd against France: But the Reception of K. James in the French-Court, and His Transporting French-Forces into Ireland, made it necessary to Proclaim War against that Potent Monarch; as was expected Abroad, and defin'd here at Home. Under this Disposition, on Friday Apr. 26th, the Commons, in a Body, Waited on His Majesty at Whitehall, and Presented this Humble Address :

A baref of the Commons, for a War with France.

“ WE Your Majesty’s most Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, the Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, most humbly lay before Your Majesty, Our earnest Desire, That Your Majesty would be pleas’d to take into Your most Serious Consideration, the Destructive Methods of late taken by the French-King, against the Trade, Quiet and Interest, of this Your Kingdom; and particularly, the present Invasion of the Kingdom of Ireland, and Supporting Your Majesty’s Rebellious Subjects there.

“ Not doubting in the least, but that, through Your Majesty’s Wisdom, the Alliances already made, with such as may hereafter be Concluded, on this Occasion, by Your Majesty, may be effectual to Reduce the French-King to such a Condition, that it may not be in His Power hereafter to Violate the Peace of Christendom, nor Pr. justice the Trade or Prosperity of this Your Majesty’s Kingdom.

“ To this End, We most-humbly Beseech Your Majesty to rest Assured, upon this Our Solemn and Hearty Engagement, That when Your Majesty shall think fit to Enter into a War against the French-King, We will Give Your Majesty such Assistance, in a Parliamentary-way, as may enable Your Majesty (under that Protection and Blessing GOD Almighty has ever afforded You) to Support and Go-through with the same.

To which Address, His Majesty gave this Gracious Answer :

WILLIAM R.

The King’s Answer. I Receive this Address, as a Mark of the Confidence You have in Me, which I take very kindly; and shall endeavour, by all My Actions, to Confirm You in it.

I Assure You, That My Own Ambition shall never be an Argument to incline Me to Engage in a War, that may expose the Nation either to Danger or Expence.

But in the present Case, I look upon the War so much already Declar’d, in effect, by France, against England; that it is not so properly an Act of Choice, as an Inevitable Necessity, in Our Own Defence.

I shall only tell You, That as I have ventur’d My Life, and all that is Dear to Me, to Rescue this Nation from what it Suffer’d; I am Ready still to do the same, in order to the Preserving it from all its Enemies: And as I do not doubt of such an Assistance from You, as shall be suitable to Your Advice to Me, To Declare War against a Powerful Enemy; so You may Rely upon Me, That no-Part of that which You shall Give, for the Carrying it on with Success, shall be diverted, by Me, to any other Use.

The King’s Declaration for the French-Private-Flants.

Under this Resolution of a War with France, the King Publish’d, A Declaration for the Encouraging of French-Private-Flants to Transport themselves into this Kingdom; Promising them not only Protection for Themselves, Families and Estates, but also such Aid and Assistance in their several and respective Trades, and Ways of Livelihood, as that their Living and Being in this Realm may be Comfortable and Easie to them: And at the same time, A Proclamation, Prohibiting the Importation of all sorts of Manufactures and Commodities whatsoever, of the Growth, Production or Manufacture of France.

The Commons had Voted the Yearly Sum of One million two hundred thousand Pounds, for the Support of the Crown; and Six hundred thousand Pounds, for the Maintenance of the Forces to be employ’d in the Reduction of Ireland. They Prepar’d a Poll-Bill; which having Pass’d both Houses, His Majesty came, on May 1st, Attended with the usual Solemnity, to the House of Lords, where He gave His Royal Assent to, (1.) An Act for Raising Money, by a Poll, and otherwise, towards the Reducing of Ireland. (2.) An Act for Preventing Doubts and Questions concerning the Collecting the Publick-Revenue. (3.) An Act to Enable Younger Cook Esq; to Sell Lands to Pay his Debts, and Provide for his Younger Children.

The Speaker, when he Presented the Money-Bill, made this remarkable Speech :

May it Please Your Majesty;

“ THE Commons Assembled in this present Parliament, have taken into their most Serious Consideration, the Deplorable Condition of Ireland, where those fatal Counsels, that did so long Govern the Affairs of these Kingdoms, have so far prevail’d, that Your Arms and Garrisons there have been taken from Your Protestant-Subjects, and put into the Hands of Irish-Popists; and the English-Protestants that remain there, left naked and defenceless in the Power of those Enemies, which never yet shew’d them any Mercy, when they had them at an Advantage.

“ Nor is it the Strength of the Irish-Natives only, animated with the Zeal for Pepery, and a longing-Desire to free themselves from any Dependency upon the Crown of England, that is likely to create Your Majesty an Opposition there, but they have likewise cast themselves under the Protection of the French-King; who will, without doubt, employ that Force, with which, of late Years, he hath over-aw’d Europe, to support those Your Rebellious Subjects; thereby, if possible, to give Your Majesty a Diversion from Opposing, in other Parts of the World, his Ambitious Designs of an Universal-Monarchy.

“ The Commons therefore, seeing so evident a Necessity of Reducing that Kingdom under Your Majesty’s Obedience, and the great Expence Your Majesty must undergo, in Maintaining such a War, Do now humbly Present to Your Majesty their hearty Assistance, in a Poll-Bill, which they look upon as the most Speedy and Effectual Way of Raising Ready-Money on this Occasion; solemnly Engaging themselves to Supply Your Majesty with such future Aids, as may be proportionable to the Charge of the War, as long as it shall continue.

The King, being Well-assur’d of the Assistance of the Commons, acquainted the Lords with His Intention, of speedily Declaring War against France. Whereupon Their Lordships, on May 7th, Unanimously Resolv’d to Assist and Serve His Majesty therein, to Their utmost Power. The same Day, Their Majesty’s Declaration against the French-King, was solemnly Proclam’d, in a Masterly-Form, (said to be Drawn-up by Mr. Sommers.)

WILLIAM R.

Declaration of War against France.

“ I T having pleas'd Almighty GOD to make “ Us the Happy Instruments of Rescuing these “ Nations from Great and Imminent Dangers, “ and to place Us upon the Throne of these King“ doms; We think Ourselves oblig'd to endeavour, “ to the uttermost, to Promote the Welfare of “ Our People: Which can never be effectually “ Secured, but by Preventing the Miseries that “ threaten them from Abroad.

“ When We consider the many Unjust Methods “ the French-King hath, of late Years, taken to “ gratifie his Ambition: That he has not only “ Invaded the Territories of the Emperor and the “ Empire, now in Amity with Us, Laying waste “ whole Countries, and Destroying the Inhabitants, “ by his Armies; but Declar'd War against Our Allies, “ without any Provocation, in manifest Violation “ of the Treaties Confirm'd by the Guaranty of “ the Crown of England; We can do no less than “ Join with Our Allies, in Opposing the Designs of “ the French-King, as the Disturber of the Peace, “ and the Common-Enemy of the Christian World.

“ And besides the Obligations We lie under, by “ Treaties with Our Allies, which are a sufficient “ Justification of Us for Taking up Arms at this “ time, since They have Call'd upon Us so to do, “ the many Injuries done to Us, and to Our Sub“ jects, without any Reparation by the French-“ King, are such, that (however of late Years “ they were not taken Notice of, for Reasons well-“ known to the World, nevertheless) We will not “ pass them over, without a Publick and Just “ Repentment of such Outrages.

“ It is not long since the French took Licences “ from the English-Governor of Newfoundland, to “ Fish in the Seas upon that Coast, and pay'd a “ Tribute for such Licences, as an Acknowledg“ ment of the Sole-Right of the Crown of England “ to that Island: And yet of late, the Encroach“ ments of the French upon Our said Island, and “ Our Subjects Trade and Fishery, have been more “ like the Invasions of an Enemy, than becoming “ Friends, who enjoy'd the Advantages of that “ Trade only by Permission.

“ But that the French-King should Invade Our “ Charibbee-Islands, and Possess himself of Our Ter“ ritories of the Province of New-York, and of “ Hudson's-Bay, in a Hostile manner, Seizing Our “ Forts, Burning Our Subjects Houses, and En“ riching his People with the Spoil of their Goods “ and Merchandizes, detaining some of Our Sub“ jects under the Hardship of Imprisonment, “ causing others to be inhumanely Kill'd, and “ driving the rest to Sea in a small Vessel, with“ out Food and Necessaries to support them, are “ Actions not becoming even an Enemy: And yet “ he was so far from Declaring himself so, that “ at that very Time he was Negotiating here in “ England, by his Ministers, a Treaty of Neutrality “ and Good-Correspondence in America.

“ The Proceedings of the French-King, against “ Our Subjects in Europe, are so Notorious, “ that We shall not need to Enlarge upon them:
“ His Countenancing the Seizure of English-Ships “ by French-Privateers, Forbidding the Importa“ tion of great-Part of the Product and Manu“ factures of Our Kingdom, and imposing Exor“ bitant Customs upon the rest, notwithstanding the “ vast Advantage he and the French-Nation reap “ by their Commerce with England, are sufficient “ Evidence of his Design to Destroy the Trade, and “ consequently to Ruine the Navigation, upon which “ the Wealth and Safety of this Nation very much “ depends.

“ The Right of the Flag, Inherent in the Crown “ of England, has been Disputed, by his Orders, in “ Violation of Our Sovereignty of the Narrow-Seas, 1689.

“ which, in all Ages, has been Asserted by Our “ Predecessors, and We are resolv'd to Maintain, “ for the Honour of Our Crown, and of the “ English Nation.

“ But that which must nearly touch Us, is, his “ Unchristian Prosecution of many of Our English “ Protestant-Subjects in France, for Matters of Re“ ligion, contrary to the Law of Nations, and express “ Treaties, forcing them to Abjure their Religion, “ by strange and unusual Cruelties, and Imprison“ ing some of the Masters and Sea-men of Our “ Merchant-Ships, and Condemning others to the “ Gallies, upon pretence of having on-Board, either “ some of his own miserable Protestant-Subjects, “ or their Effects. And lastly, As he has, for “ some Years last past, endeavour'd, by Influa“ tions, and Promises of Assistance, to Overthrow “ the Government of England; so now, by Open “ and Violent Methods, and the Actual Invasion “ of Our Kingdom of Ireland, in Support of Our “ Subjects in Arms, and in Rebellion against Us, “ he is promoting the utter Extirpation of Our “ Good and Loyal Subjects in that Our King“ dom.

“ Being therefore thus necessitated to take up “ Arms, and relying on the Help of Almighty GOD, “ in Our Just Undertaking; We have thought fit “ to Declare, and do hereby Declare War against “ the French-King; and that We will, in Con“ junction with Our Allies, vigorously Prosecute “ the same by Sea and Land, (since he hath so “ unrighteously Begun it;) being assured of the “ hearty Concurrence and Assistance of Our Sub“ jects, in Support of so Good a Cause: Hereby “ Willing and Requiring Our General of Our “ Forces, Our Commissioners for Executing the “ Office of High-Admiral, Our Lieutenants of Our “ several Counties, Governors of Our Forts and “ Garrisons, and all other Officers and Soldiers “ under them, by Sea and Land, to Do and Exe“ cute all Acts of Hostility, in the Prosecution of “ this War, against the French-King, his Vassals “ and Subjects, and to Oppose their Attempts: “ Willing and Requiring all Our Subjects to take “ Notice of the same, whom We henceforth strictly “ Forbid to hold any Correspondence or Commu“ nication with the said French-King, or his Sub“ jects. And because there are remaining in Our “ Kingdoms, many of the Subjects of the French-“ King; We do Declare, and give Our Royal “ Word, That All such of the French-Nation as “ shall Demean themselves Dutifully towards Us, “ and not Correspond with Our Enemies, shall be “ Safe in their Persons and Estates, and Free from “ all Molestation and Trouble of any kind.

Given at Our Court at Hampton-Court, the 7th Day of May, 1689. In the First Year of Our Reign.

Some Days before this Proclamation, the War Engage-was effectually Declar'd, by an Engagement between ment of the English and French Fleets in Bantry-Bay: Of Eng-lish & which this Account was given, from on-Board French Their Majesties Ship the Elizabeth, the 2d of Fleets in May, 1689. Admiral Herbert having Refitted, Bantry-at Milford-Haven, the Damages which some of Bay. his Ships had sustain'd, by Ill-Weather, on the Coast of Ireland, intended to have gone directly to Brest; but the Wind coming Easterly, which might bring the French-Fleet out, he stood, on the 24th past, over to Kingsale, which he judg'd the likeliest way to meet 'em. On the 29th, our Scouts made a Signal, That they Discover'd a Fleet keeping their Wind: Which made us likewise keep ours all Night, to hinder their getting into Kingsale. The 30th, we heard the Enemy were gone into Baltimore, being 44 Sail: Whereupon we bore away towards that Place, but found “ there

1689.

“ there no Signs of them ; but in the Evening our Scouts got Sight of them again to the Westward of Cape-Clear. We Steered after them, and found they were got into the Bantry ; We lay off of the Bay all Night, and the next Morning by Break of Day stood in, where we found them at an Anchor. They got presently under Sail, and bore down upon us in a Line composed of Twenty-Eight Men of War and Five Fireships. When they came within Musquet-shot of the Defiance, the Headmost of our Ships, the French-Admiral put out the Signal of Battle, which was begun by them, Firing Great and Small Shot at the Defiance, and the rest as we came in our Line. We made several Boards to gain the Wind, or at least to engage them clofer ; but finding that way of working very disadvantageous, Admiral Herbert stood off to Sea, as well to have got our Ships into a Line, as to have gained the Wind of the Enemy, but found them so cautious in bearing down, that we could never get an Opportunity to do it ; so continued Battering upon a Stretch till Five in the Afternoon, when the French-Admiral tacked from us, and stood farther into the Bay. Admiral Herbert's Ship and some of the rest being disabled in their Rigging, we could not follow them ; but we continued some Time after before the Bay, and our Admiral gave them a Gun at parting. In this Action Captain George Aylmer, of the Portland, with One Lieutenant and Ninety-four Seamen were Killed, and about Two Hundred and Fifty Wounded, as appears by a Survey taken after the Fight, and our Ships received little or no Damage except in their Sail and Rigging. As for our Officers and Seamen this Right must be done them, That they behaved themselves with all the Courage and Cheerfulness that could be expected from the bravest Men : And on the other Side, without lessening the Enemy, it may be said, that they either wanted Courage or Skill to make use of the Advantage of the Place, the Wind, their Fireships, and their being at least double our Force ; for they had Eighteen Ships, the least whereof was as Big as the Elizabeth ; and it so happened, that at the Time of this Engagement, Admiral Herbert had with him but Eight Third Rates, Ten Fourth Rates, One Fifth Rate, and Two Tenders.

“ We are now returning towards Scilly, where the Rendezvous is appointed for our Fleet, which having got together, we are in hopes to make a Second Attempt upon the Enemy.

A Fortnight after His Majesty went to Portsmouth, both to hasten the Re-fitting of the Fleet, and to distribute Rewards to those Officers and Soldiers, who had distinguish'd themselves in the late Engagement. Admiral Herbert was declar'd, and soon after made Earl of Torrington ; Captain John Ashby, Commander of the Defiance ; and Captain Cloudesly Shovel of the Edgor, received the Honour of Knighthood, and each Seaman a Gratuity of Ten Shillings, which amounted to the Sum of Twenty Six Thousand Pounds, with a Bounty super-added to the Reliefs of those who had lost their Lives. Some report that when the King receiv'd the News of this Sea-Fight, He said, That such an Action was necessary in the Beginning of a War, but it would be rash in the Course of it.

In the mean-time to provide for Peace at Home, His Majesty took Care to constitute such Judges as were most Eminent for Learning and Integrity, and who in the most Difficult Times had bravely stood up in Defence of the Lives and Liberties of the People. Sir John Holt was made Lord Chief-Justice of the King's-Bench ; Sir William Dolben, Sir William Gregory, Giles Eyres, Esq ; Justices of the same Court ; Sir Henry Pollexfen, Lord Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas ; Sir John Povel, Thomas Rokeby, Esq ; Peyton Ventris, Esq ; Justices of the same ; Sir Robert Atkyns, Lord Chief-Baron of the Exchequer ; Sir Edward Nevil, Nicholas Letchmore, Esq ; John Turton, Esq, Barons of the same ; John Trenchard, Esq ; Chief-Justice of Chester ; Sir George Treby, Attorney-General, and John Sommers, Esq Sollicitor-General to His Majesty. Just before this Advancement, on May 2d. His Majesty called by his Writ, Sir Henry Pollexfen, Kt. Nicholas Letchmore, Thomas Rokeby, John Thurbarne, William Wogan, William Powlet, Nathaniel Bond, Giles Eyres, Henry Hatfel, John Blencowe, Peyton Ventris, John Povel, Roger Belwood, John Tremain, John Trenchard, and John Turton, Esqrs ; to take upon 'em the State and Degree of Serjeants at Law, who gave Rings with this seasonable Motto, Veni-endo Restituit Rem.

To return to the Parliament. To defray the extraordinary Expences of the War, the Commons had Pass'd an Additional Poll-Bill, which being sent up to the Lords for their Concurrence, their Lordships on May 9th. added a Clause to it, for Rating and Taxing the Peers by Commissioners of their own Naming, appointing a Collector to receive the Rates and Taxes of the Peers, and freeing their Persons from Imprisonment. To this Clause the Commons Disagreed ; 1. Because the Bill in Question Taxed Commoners only. 2. Because the Poll-Bill already passed, had sufficiently provided for Taxing all the Nobility, to which the Lords had consented. On the other Hand the Peers insisted on their Clause, alledging first, That it is the Common Course of Parliaments to pass Explanatory Acts, if any thing has been omitted, or ill-expressed, in any other Act Passed in the same Session, which was the present Case. 2. That the House of Commons had in this Bill taken Care of the Serjeants-Inns, and the Inns of Court and Chancery, That they should be rated by their own Members ; Therefore the Peers much more ought to be rated by none but those who are of their own House. 3. That the House of Peers, out of their extraordinary Zeal for the Reducing of Ireland, (the Poll-Bill coming up so late to 'em from the House of Commons, that they had not Time to deliberate upon every Part of it did make this Omission, which for that Reason only ought not to turn to their Prejudice, it being their undoubted Right which had been preserved in all former Poll-Bills, and particularly in the last 29. Car. II. The Proviso in that Bill being conceiv'd in the same Form, with the Clause now offered by their Lordships". To these Reasons the Commons answer'd, That the admitting of their Lordships Amendment would in a manner Repeal the Bill for the Tax, and therefore they must insist on their Disagreement to it. The Peers being as positive in Adhering to their Clause, the Commons let drop the Additional Poll-Bill, and in stead of that made and Pass'd a Bill for a Grant to their Majesties of an Aid of Twelve Pence in the Pound for One Year.

On Saturday, May 11. His Majesty came to the House of Peers, and gave the Royal Assent to (1.) An Act for the better Securing the Government by Disarming Papists and Reputed Papists. (2.) An Act that the Simoniack Promotion of one Person may not prejudice another. (3.) An Act for Rectifying a Mistake in a certain Act of this present Parliament, for the anoyning Papists from the Cities of London and Westminster. (4.) An Act for the Naturalization of Henry de Nassau, and others. (5.) An Act for Annulling and making Void the Attainder of Algernoon Sidney, Esq ;

1689. Aids to carry on the War. On May 15th, Mr. Papiion Reported, That as to Forfeitures, the Committee had perused the Lists delivered in by the Members of the several Counties, and on Examination did find great Difficulties in the Matter, as, Whether some that were Named had acted in their Offices? Whether others were not insolvent and unable to Pay; Whether others had not qualified themselves, and whether there were not several omitted; but that on Consideration of the whole, it was their Opinion that the Forfeitures in the several Counties might produce Three Hundred Forty Eight Thousand Pounds, without including the Counties of Bedford, Lincoln, and Cardigan, there being no List brought in of those Counties: That as to the Additional Excise, it was the Opinion of the Committee, that Nine-Pence per Barrel might produce One Hundred and Twenty Thousand Pounds per Annum; but that as to the Ground-Rents, the Committee could not as yet find out Means to come to any probable way of making a right Estimate, but they were endeavouring to do it.

Lords Debates upon their Privileges.

A Committee of Privileges had been appointed in the House of Peers, and upon Examination of the Case of the Earl of Devonshire, they reported their Opinion thus; That the Proceedings against the said Earl in the Court of King's-Bench in Easter-Term, in the Third Year of King James II. upon an Information of an Assault upon Mr. Culpeper, wherein his Lordship's Plea of Privilege of Parliament was over-ruled, and he was fin'd Thirty Thousand Pounds, and thereupon committed to the King's-Bench in Execution, was a great Violation of the Privilege of the Peers of England; and likewise that those Judges who sat in the said Court when the said Judgment was given, and the said Commitment made, should be required to Attend the Bar of this House, to answer for the great Offence which they had committed thereby. Hereupon the Lords Order'd, That Sir Robert Wright, who, upon the withdrawing of King James, had been sent Prisoner to Newgate, Sir Richard Holloway, Mr. Bradbury, Mr. Pettit, and Mr. Justice Paevel, should Attend their House on May 6. which they did accordingly; and being asked what they had to say for themselves in this Matter, Mr. Justice Paevel said, It was his great Misfortune, that He was misguided by some Books which he look'd on as Authorities, and which he found by their Lordships Judgments were not so; and he humbly begg'd their Lordships and the Earl of Devonshire's Pardon: That as to the Fine he thought it exorbitant, and look'd upon Three Thousand Pounds Fine enough, and that his Silence in that Business was his greatest Fault, for which he also begg'd Pardon. Sir Robert Wright alledged, That as to the Breach of Privilege they were misguided by Precedents; and as to the Fine, which was usually set (according to Men's Quality and Estate) it came from the Puny-Judge Thirty Thousand Pounds, and so to him last, according to the Course of the Court; and if he was mistaken he begg'd Pardon, for he never had the least Disrespect to the Earl of Devonshire. Then Sir Richard Holloway said, That he, as Second Judge, pronounced the Fine Thirty Thousand Pounds, which was set Nemine Contradicente: That if a lesser Fine had been propos'd, he should have accepted it, and begg'd my Lord Devonshire's Pardon, and submitted all to their Lordships. After this Examination, Notice was given to the King's Council, if they had any thing to offer, Whether a Peer of this Realm might by Law be committed in Execution for a Fine? The said Council did accordingly attend, but offer'd nothing on that Point; Wherefore, upon full Consideration of the several Cases and Precedents, wherein the Privilege of the Peers have been concern'd, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal did, on May. 15. Declare and Adjudge, That the 1689. Court of King's-Bench, in over-ruled the Earl of Devonshire's Plea of Privilege of Parliament, and forcing him to Plead over in Chief, it being within the usual Time of Privilege, did thereby commit a manifest Breach of Privilege; and that the Fine of Thirty Thousand Pounds impos'd by the Court of King's-Bench upon the said Earl, was excessive and exorbitant, and against Magna Charta, the Common Right of the Subject, and the Law of the Land; and that no Peer of this Realm, at any time ought to be committed for Non-Payment of a Fine to the King.

Resolutions of the Lords.

On the 9th of May, the Commons had sent up a Bill to the Lords, For Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and Settling the Succession of the Crown, which their Lordships having consider'd, they thought the latter Part of it Defective, no Mention being made in it of her Electoral Highness the Princess Sophia, Dutches of Hanover; and thought fit, amongst other Amendments, to add a Proviso in Her Highness's Favour. The Bill thus amended, was returned to the Commons on May 25. where a certain Party was so prevailing, that the House disagreed to their Lordships Proviso, some of them alledging, That a Parliament of England had never determin'd the Degrees of Succession beyond Two or Three Persons; That the mentioning the House of Hanover would give an Opportunity to Foreigners of intermeddling too far in the Affairs of this Nation; And Lastly, That before the Crown should devolve on the Princess Sophia, some of the Catholick Princes, who were nearest in Blood, and who by this Clause were to be excluded, might turn Protestants. The King, who wish'd nothing more earnestly than to see the Crown Setled in the Protestant Line, us'd his utmost Endeavours to bring the Commons to a Compliance with the Lords; declaring in Council, That his Queen, and both the Prince and Princess of Denmark desir'd it as well as himself. The Lords likewise warmly intited on their Clause, alledging on July 15th, "That tho' in the Instrument offered to their Majesties, the Limitation went no farther than to their Persons, yet in Law, which has Respect to all succeeding Ages, and that Settles for ever the Liberties of the Subject, they thought it reasonable to carry the Limitation of the Succession of the Crown farther than was necessary in that Instrument; in which the Crown was offered to their Majesties, and that had no other View but of the Succession of their Posterity: That they could see no Danger nor any ill Consequence that might follow a further Limitation, but very much to the contrary: For 1. This Secured the Nation effectually from the Danger of having any Papist to Reign in it at any Time hereafter, since of such a Number of Papists as stood next the Crown in the Lineal Succession, some might be prevailed on to make a Show of changing their Religion, if they had a Prospect of Succeeding to the Crown upon it, and no Danger being so great as the having One who is a pretended Protestant, but in Truth a concealed Papist, to Reign over us, the most effectual Way to Secure our Religion, was to declare the Succession in a Family that was known to be Protestant. 2. It was the Interest of England at present to do Right to that Great House, by Limiting the Succession according to the Proviso; for since this Limitation had been propos'd, if it should be now laid aside, it would look like Excluding of that House, which might provoke 'em to take Resolutions, that might be of great Prejudice to the Nation, in this present Conjunction.

These Reasons having been deliver'd to the Commons, and several Conferences having passed between Both Houses without any Effect, Heaven seem'd to Interpose, and to let fall these Differences,

The late Jud. es question'd.

1689. rances, by blessing Her Royal-Highness (the Princess of Denmark) with a Son, Born on the 24th of July, and Christen'd, on the 27th, by the Name of William; His Majesty, and the Earl of Dorset (on behalf of the King of Denmark) being God-fathers, and the Marchioness of Halifax God-mother. At the same time, His Majesty conferr'd the Title of Duke of Gloucester on the Royal-Infant, whose Auspicious Birth contributed much to dissipate the Fears of a Popish-Successor.

On Friday May 24th, His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and, with usual Solemnity, gave the Royal-Assent to, (1.) An Act for Exempting Their Majesties Protestant-Subjects Dissenting from the Church of England, from the Penalties of certain Laws. (2.) An Act for Annulling and Making void the Attainder of Alicia Lisle, Widow. (3.) An Act for the Sale or Leasing the Capital-Messuage, late Henry Coventry's Esq; in Pickadilly. And on Tuesday May 28th, His Majesty came again to the House of Lords, and gave His Royal-Assent to, (1.) An Act for Impowering Their Majesties to Commit, without Bail, such Persons as they shall find just Cause to Suspect are Conspiring against the Government. (2.) An Act for Building on Arundel-Grounds.

On May 31st, the House of Lords, having heard the Opinion of all the Judges, concerning the Illegality of Two Judgments given against Titus Oates, upon the Point of Perjury, for which he had brought his Writs of Error; whether the said Two Judgments should be Revers'd? Which being Resolv'd in the Negative, and the said Judgments Confirm'd, Thirteen Lords Enter'd their Dissents, upon these Reasons: 1st, "Because the King's-Bench, being a Temporal-Court, made it part of their Judgment, That Titus Oates, being a Clerk, should, for his Perjuries, be Divested of his Canonical and Priestly Habit; which is a Matter wholly out of their Power, belonging to the Ecclesiastical-Courts only. 2dly, Because the said Judgments are Barbarous, Inhumane, and Unchristian; and there is no Precedents to Warrant the Punishments of Whipping, and Committing to Prison for Life, for the Crime of Perjury, which yet were but Part of the Punishment inflict'd upon him. 3dly, Because the particular Matters upon which the Indictments were found, were the Points Objected against Oates's Testimony, in several of the Tryals, which were allow'd to be Good and Credible Witnesses, though Testify'd against him by most of the same Persons who Witness'd against him upon these Indictments. 4thly, Because this would be an Encouragement, and an Allowance for giving the like Cruel, Barbarous and Illegal Punishments hereafter, unless those Judgments were Revers'd. 5thly, Because Sir John Holt, Sir Henry Pollexfen, the Lords-Chief-Justices, Sir Robert Atkyns (Chief-Baron,) with Six Judges more, for these and many other Reasons, did, before that House, solemnly deliver their Opinions, and Unanimously Declare, That the said Judgments were contrary to Law and Ancient Practice; and therefore Erroneous, and ought to be Revers'd. And lastly, Because it was contrary to the Declaration of Rights, on the 12th of February last, wherein it doth appear, That Excessive Bail ought not to be requir'd, nor Excessive Fines impos'd, nor Cruel and Unusual Punishments inflict'd.

This Proclamation workt so powerfully in the House of Lords, that the following Day, their Lordships, after Hearing Counsel at the Bar, to Argue the Errors assign'd by Oates, did Order and Adjudge, That the Judgment given against the said Oates, should be Revers'd: And Leave was given for the bringing in a Bill for the Securing Persons, hereafter, from the Prejudice which might come from his Testimony. A Bill of Reversal Pass'd the Lower-House: And upon a Second Reading in the Upper, there were several Amendments made, and a Proviso insert'd, whereby it was Declar'd, That until the Matters for which Titus Oates was Committed for Perjury, were Heard and Determin'd in Parliament, the said Oates should not be receiv'd in any Court or Cause whatsoever, to be a Witness. Against which Proviso and Amendments, a Protection was Enter'd, by the Earls of Oxford, Suffolk, Monmouth, Montague, Macclesfield, Bedford, Stamford, and Suffolk, and by the Lords Newport, Berkley, Cornwallis, Paget, and Herbert. When the Bill was sent back to the Commons, they Disagreed to the Amendments. Upon which a memorable Conference began, between the Two Houses, on July 29th, which occasion'd great Heats, that might have risen into greater Flames, if the Parliament had not been suddenly Adjourn'd; and all that Oates was able to obtain in this Session, was only, on June 6th, an Address from the Lords, at the Commons Desire, Requesting His Majesty, "That whereas Titus Oates, Clerk, had already receiv'd a severe Punishment, for the Perjury whereof he had been formerly Convict'd, and some of the said Punishments would still be continu'd upon him, unless they should be Remitted by His Majesty; His Majesty would be graciously pleas'd to Grant His Pardon to the said Oates." The King readily Comply'd with the Lords Desire; and moreover, as soon as, by Their Lordships Order, Oates was Discharg'd from his Confinement, His Majesty receiv'd him into his Protection, and allow'd him a considerable Pension; which occasion'd various Reflections.

On June 15th, the Lords having Consider'd in a Grand-Committee, the State and Condition of the Kingdom, and what Means to use, for Securing the Nation, against the Designs of the Papists, and the Power of the French-King; Resolv'd upon an Address to be made to His Majesty, "To put the Isles of Wight, Jersey and Guernsey, Scilly, Dover-Castle, and other Places which might be expos'd to the Enemy, into a Posture of Defence: That Papists might be Disarm'd, their Horses taken from them, and they not be permitted to Travel above Five Miles from their Houses, and that Care be taken to prevent Protestants Concealing or Owning Papists Horses." At the same time, Their Lordships Impower'd the Committee, to look into the Miscarriages in Ireland, and to send for Persons and Papers, for their Information. This Committee Drew-up an Address, according to their Directions; and having acquainted the House, That they could not come to a full Discovery of the Miscarriages of Ireland, without a Sight of the Minute-Books of the Committee for Irish-Affairs, to the 1st of May last; the Lords Order'd thereupon, That another Address be Presented to the King, Desiring that the said Minute-Book might be communicated to the Committee. His Majesty's Answer to this Address, on June 18th, was, That He would Consider of it. Which obstructed the Proceedings of the Committee for near a Month, till the Commons, in the mean-time, Voted, That those Persons who had been the Occasion of Delaying the sending Relief to Ireland, and had Advic'd the King to Defer the giving Leave for some Members of the House of Lords to Inspect the Minute-Books of the Committee for Irish-Affairs, were Enemies to the King and Kingdom. And they were farther Debating to Address the King, for the Removing the Marquess of Halifax and Carnarthen from His Council. Upon this, His Majesty, on July 16th, acquainted the Lords, by the Earl of Nottingham, and the Commons, by Mr. Comptroller, That He gave Leave that a Committee of the Upper-House might Inspect the Book, according to their Desire. This Book not being sufficient to discover the Miscarriages of Ireland, the Lords, on July 29th, Order'd the Lords of Shrewsbury, bury and Nottingham to Address His Majesty, That He wou'd be pleas'd to give Order, That the Wittnesses in relation to Ireland, since His Majesty's taking the Administration of the Government upon Him, to the time the Council-Books began, might be communicated to the Committee of their House. Upon the two Earls delivering this Desire of the House, His Majesty Answer'd, That there were no Minutes of the Irish-Affairs, in the Time mention'd by Their Lordships.

On Saturday June 22d, His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and sending for the Commons, gave His Royal-Assent to, (1.) An Act for a Grant to Their Majesties of an Aid of Twelve-pence in the Pound for One Year, for the necessary Defence of their Realms. (2.) An Act for Enabling Lords-Commissioners for the Great-Seal, to Execute the Office of Lord-Chancellor or Lord-Keeper. 3. An Act for Reviving two former Acts for the Exporting of Leather. 4. An Act for the Exportation of Beer, Ale, Cyder and Mum. 5. An Act to Make-good a Recovery, suffered by the Earl of Peterborough and Lord Mordant. 6. An Act for Reversing the Attainder of Henry Cornish Esq; late Alderman of the City of London. 7. An Act to Enable Robert Penwarne to Sell Lands, to Pay his Brothers and Sisters Portions, and also to Pay Debts. 8. An Act to Enable Theodore Bathurst to make a Jointure for his Wife, and to Charge Monies on Part of his Estate in Yorkshire. 9. An Act for the better Assuring the Manor of Silton, and divers other Lands and Tenements in Silton in the County of Salop, unto Joseph Soley Gent. and his Heirs. 10. An Act for the Naturalization of Anne Astley, and others.

“ THE Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, do with all Duty and Humility acknowledge Your Majesty's great Care, for the Protection of the People, in that Your Majesty hath made it one of the First Acts of Your Reign, to Declare War against the French-King, and to seek Reparation for the Losses and Injuries Your Subjects have sustain'd from that Nation.

“ If we consider the Balance of Trade between the Two Kingdoms, we shall find the French-King, of late Years, continually loading the English-Manufactures with New Duties and Impositions; thereby Prohibiting, in effect, all Commerce in his Dominions, but for Ready-Money.

“ If we Consider our Laws and Liberties, he hath always Assisted and Encourag'd those that have design'd their Subversion. If we Consider our Religion; the Miseries he hath inflicted upon his Own Subjects of the same Profession, do sufficiently demonstrate how great an Enemy he is to Ours: And Whoever look upon the present State of Europe, and see the Injuries made upon Your Majesty's Allies, the horrible Devastations of their Countries, and the open Supporting Your Majesty's Rebellious Subjects, must needs confess, That the War which Your Majesty hath Declared against France, is at this time not only Just, but Necessary.

“ To this War, as Your Dutiful and Loyal Commons did humbly offer their Advice and Assistance, before Your Majesty Enter'd into it; so They are now come to Present Your Majesty with a Supply towards the Carrying it on: Humbly Desiring Your Majesty to rest Assured, That they shall never be wanting to expose both their Lives and Estates, in Defence of Your Majesty, against all Your Enemies.

Several Letters from King James, some of them Written with his own Hand, and Directed to divers Persons in London, and in the Country, having been Intercepted at Leverpoole, and sent to Court, His Majesty communicated the same to the Parliament: And because, among other Enigmatical Expressions, mention was made in them, of Contraband-Goods ready to be Shipt-off, in order to be Run into such Places where they might not be Seiz'd by Custom-House-Officers; which sufficiently discover'd the Design of an Invasion; Mr. Hambden, who at that time happen'd to be Chair-man of the Committee of the Whole House, represented the imminent Danger that threaten'd the Kingdom, and what Difficulties His Majesty lay under, to prevent it, for want of Money, and therefore Mov'd for a farther Supply. This Motion, from a Privy-Councillor, and at a time when the House was going to Adjourn, was thought very Unpolitick and preposterous; and was so far from being backt by any Member, that it rather occasion'd some sharp Reflections: For Mr. Hambden, among the Dangers to which the Nation was expos'd, having nam'd that of falling into the Hands of the French and Irish, Mr. S— Mov'd, to add the Dutch: And Mr. Garraway, though One of the Well-affected, said, “ That they had given Money enough for that Year; and if they had thought there had been Occasion for more, they wou'd have prevented the King's Demands: That it was not the Want of Money, but the Ill-Conduct of those that had the Management of Affairs, that caus'd the Difficulties the Government lay under: That the Miscarriages, in not Assisting the Protestants of Ireland, had been of so ill-Consequence, that, if not speedily Remedy'd, the House wou'd be oblig'd to take Notice of them.” When Mr. Garraway had done speaking, Mr. Howe stood up, and said, “ Their present Dangers, proceeded from their not Addressing the King to Remove His Evil-Counsellors;” as he himself had Mov'd, not long before. However, the House having taken the Intercepted Letters into Consideration, Resolv'd to Address His Majesty, To Desire Him to Secure all Papists of Note, and to Disarm and Take-away the Horses from the rest: And, as a Consequence of this Affair, a Bill was brought in, for Attainting several Persons in Rebellion against Their Majesties.

The King communicated the same Letters and Papers to the City of London. Upon which the Lord-Mayor, attended with the Sheriffs, on June 22d, Presented to His Majesty this Good Address:

“ WE Your Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the City of London, in Common-Council Assembled, being deeply sensible of Your Majesty's great Care, and tender Regard for our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and Your particular Favour and Condescension to this City, do render Your Majesty our most humble Thanks, for vouchsafing to communicate to us the several Letters, and other Papers, which have been now Read in this Common-Council, manifesting the Progress of Your Enemies, in Your Kingdom of Ireland, and also Discovering a Conspiracy within this Kingdom of England, to Aid and Abet Your said Enemies, in their Design to Invaide and bring the War upon this Kingdom.

“ And We most humbly beg Leave to Assure Your Majesty, That We will, as far as our Power extends, oppose ourselves to, and suppress all Designs of that nature, and will Search after, Disarm, Seize, Secure, and bring to Justice, all Persons concern'd therein, or contributing thereto: And We are Unanimously, Firmly and Unalterably, Resolv'd and Determin'd to Stand by, Defend and Maintain Your Majesty, and Your Government, with the uttermost Hazard and Expence of Our Lives and Estates, against all Insolence of the French-Papists.

About the same time, the French-Papists, taking Advantage of the Countenance given to the Protestants of that Nation, became very Insolent, publickly Traducing the Present Government, and dispersing several sorts of Libels, and Seditious Papers. The House of Lords being inform'd of their audacious Behaviour, and suspecting they might proceed to more dangerous Attempts, Order'd, on June 14th, " That an Address be Presented to His Majesty, desiring He wou'd Issue-out His Proclamation, That no French-Papist might come into Whitehall, St. James's, or St. James's-Park; and that all French-Papists, that were not Houholders or Merchants, shou'd leave the Kingdom within Six Weeks, and all others within Six Months, under the Pain of being Prosecuted as Alien-Enemies, according to Law." The Lords of the White-Staffs having Presented this Address, His Majesty Answer'd, He wou'd speedily give Order therein: But a short time after, on June 25th, the Lord-Chamberlain acquainted the House, " That His Majesty finding, upon farther Consideration, That to Banish all French-Papists, might be Disadvantageous to the Nation, they Trading to other Countries which were His Majesty's Allies; and besides, His Majesty having promised to protect them, whilst they liv'd peaceably here, thought fit to suspend the Issuing such a Proclamation, until he had ask'd their Lordships further Opinion in that Matter." Upon Consideration of this Message, the Peers thought fit to leave that Affair to His Majesty's Discretion: Many of them having heard the King often Declare, That He came over to Deliver the Protestants, and not to Persecute the Romanists. And indeed, not only Foreigners, but English-Papists, were us'd with so much Clemency, that they too were really Gainers by the Revolution: Not only in being exempted from those Publick Appearances which, in the late Reign, had been very Troublesome and Expensive to them; but ev'n in a Protection of their Persons and Estates from the Fury of the People, to which they had, in great part, been sacrific'd, if King William wou'd but have conniv'd at it.

Whilst the Lords were busie about the French-Papists, the Commons were Drawing up Articles of High-Treason, against Sir Adam Blare, Capt. Henry Vaughan, Capt. Frederick Mole, and John Eliot and Robert Gray Doctors in Physick, for Publishing and Dispersing the Declaration of King James, which he Publish'd in Ireland, May 8th, and Directed, To all his Loving Subjects in the Kingdom of England. When these Articles were Sent up to the Lords, and Read by them, a Committee was Appointed to Inspect Precedents of Impeachments, which much retarded the Prosecution of the Prisoners. On July 4th, Capt. Vaughan, Capt. Mole, and Dr. Elliot, were brought to the Bar of the House of Lords; and after the Articles of Impeachment had been Read to 'em, they desir'd to have a Copy of their Accusation, and both Time and Council allow'd them to make their Defence: Which being Granted, they were Remanded to Negate. On July 12th, they Deliver'd their Answers to the Articles Exhibited against them, wherein they Pleaded their Innocence, and submitted themselves, for their Trial, to their Lordships Judgment. Three Days after, Sir Adam Blare and Dr. Gray, who had fled, and, by a Proclamation, had been Apprehended, were Examind by the Speaker of the Lords, and then Committed to the Prison of the Gate-house. On July 22d, they put in the like Answers; and the several Copies being communicated to the Commons, no further Progress was made in this Business, during this Session.

The slow Proceedings of the Parliament, and the Heats and Animosities which divided both Houses, so much obstructed the Progress of the King's Designs, and the Common-Interest, that, on Friday June 28th, His Majesty thought fit to come to the House of Peers, and to make this Speech to both Houses:

My Lords and Gentlemen;

THE Time of the Year being so far advanc'd, and there being several Acts yet to be Pass'd for the Safety and Settlement of the Nation, I desire you wou'd Expedite them as soon as you can; it being necessary there shou'd shortly be a Recess, both that I may be at liberty to pursue the Business of Ireland with all possible Vigour, and that the Members of both Houses may repair to their several Counties, to Secure the Peace, and to put the Militia into some better Posture.

I am very sensible of the Zeal and Good-Affection which you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, have shew'd to the Publick, in Giving those Supplies you have done already: And I do not doubt, but, from the same Inducements, you will be ready to Give more, as the Occasions require, which, I must let you know, will be sooner than perhaps you may expect; because the Necessary Expence of this Year, will much exceed the Sums you have provided for it. And that you may make the truer Judgment in that Matter, I am very willing you shou'd see how all the Moneys have been hitherto Laid-out; and to that End, I have Commanded those Accompts to be speedily brought to You, by which you will see how very little of the Revenue has been apply'd to any other Use than that of the Navy and Land-Forces.

I must Remind you, of making an Effectual and Timely Provision of the Money for the States of Holland; and I doubt not, but you will take Care to see a fitting Revenue settled for My Self.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

I will add no more, but to recommend earnestly to You, to avoid all Occasions of Dispute or Delay, at a Time that requires Union and Vigour in Your Counsels, upon which the Preservation of all that is Dear to Us, doth so much depend: And I do promise, That nothing shall ever be wanting on My part, which may contribute towards it.

Both Houses return'd His Majesty Thanks, for His Gracious Speech, and did a little the more expedite some Bills that lay before 'em: For, on Thursday July 25th, His Majesty came again to the House of Peers, and gave His Royal-Assent to, (1.) An Act for an Additional-Duty of Excise, upon Beer, Ale, and other Liquors. (2.) An Act to Regulate the Administration of the Oaths requir'd to be taken by Commission or Warrant-Officers, employ'd in Their Majesty's Service by Land, by virtue of an Act made this present Session of Parliament, Intituled, [An Act for the Abrogating the Oaths of Supremacy and Alligiance, and Appointing other Oaths.] (3.) An Act for Taking-away the Court holden before the President and Council of the Marches of Wales. (4.) An Act to Vest in the Two Universities, the Presentations of Benefices belonging to Papists. (5.) An Act for Erecting a Court of Conscience at New-Castle upon Tyne. (6.) An Act for Erecting Courts of Conscience in the Cities of Bristol and Glocester, and the Liberties thereof. (7.) An Act for the better Regulating the Salt-Works in Droitwich. (8.) An Act to Enable Thomas Chattel to Sell Part of his Estate, for Payment of his Debts, and making Provision for his Wife and Children.

The King's Speech to the Two Houses.

1689. But several Things remained for Matter of Dispute and Difference between the Two Houses in this warm Season of the Year. A Bill for the Charging and Collecting the Duties upon Coffee, Tea and Chocolate at the Custom-House, being sent up by the Commons to the Lords, their Lordships on July 24. added a Clause to it, For a Draw-back on the Exportation of the said Commodities, with an Alteration of the Date from the 24th of July to the 25th of August. These Amendments were disagreed to by the Commons, who in a Conference alleg'd, "That they had always taken it for "their undoubted Privilege, (of which they have "been ever jealous and tender) That in all Aids
 "given to the King by the Commons, the Rate
 "or Tax ought not to be any ways altered by "the Lords: That the Amendments made by the "Lords, being in Point of Time, the Commons hop"ped their Lordships would not at this Time
 "renew a Question concerning the Method of "Granting Aids, which had formerly, in Instances "of this Nature, occasion'd great Debates, and "which might now beget many Conferences, spend "much Time, and end in Inconveniences: That "this Amendment propos'd by the Lords made "the Bill Incoherent; for Both Houses having "Agreed that the Forfeitures should Commence "from the 20th of July, it would look strange "that the Forfeitures should be given before the "Duty was made payable: That Ships were then "arriving daily with the Commodities mention'd in "the Bill, which would be a Loss to the King,
 "by putting the Commencement of the Duty so "far off. And that as to the Proviso their Lord-
 "ships had sent to the Commons, the Commons did "disagree to it, and for that did refer to their "First Reasons; for the Proviso being an Al"teration and Lessening of the Grant made by the "Commons, they hop'd for these Reasons, their "Lordships would agree with them, and not re"vive old Disputes". On the other Hand, the "Lords insisted on their Proviso and said, "They "were much surpriz'd at the Assertion of the "Commons, that in all Aids given to the King by "the Commons, the Rate or Tax ought not to be "altered by the Lords, since they conceiv'd it "had always been their undoubted Right, in "Case of any Aids given to the King, to lessen "the Rate or Tax Granted by the Commons, where"of several Precedents might be given, which "for the present they were willing to forbear, "that they might not revive old Disputes. But "that as to the Proviso now offer'd by the Lords,
 "their Lordships were, of Opinion, this General
 "Point was not the Case now in Difference, it "being neither an Alteration nor Lessening of "the Duty laid upon these Commodities: For what "was propos'd to be drawn back on the Expor"tation of them, could not be said to lessen the "Rates impos'd upon them: That it did indeed
 "take away so much from the King's Income,
 "but added much more to the Benefit of Trade,
 "of which the Lords conceived, they were equal "and competent Judges, and therefore thought "they had sufficient Grounds to insist on the "Proviso". This Dispute put a Stop to the Bill in this Session, but it pass'd at last with their Lordships Clause about the Draw-back, on the 16.
 of January following.

On August 3. the Commons in a Committee of the whole House, having consider'd the State of the Nation, came at last to this Resolution, That an Address be present'd to His Majesty upon these Heads: First, That there had been Delays in the Succours of Ireland. Secondly, That there were not sufficient Preparations to Transport the Forces to Ireland: And Thirdly, That several Ships had been taken for want of Guards and Convoys to preserve them. At the same Time the Question was put, Whether it should be represent'd to His Majesty, that it was thought inconvenient to His Majesty's Affairs, that the Marquess of Halifax was in His Majesty's Council? But this was decently carry'd in the Negative. On Aug. 12.

 Sir Thomas Littleton made a Report from the Committee, who examin'd the Matter of Miscarriages relating to Ireland and Londonderry; upon which it was Resolved, That an Address be present'd to His Majesty, that Colonel Lundee be sent over to Londonderry to be Tryed there for the Treasons laid to his Charge.

On August 13. the Commons sent up a Bill to the Lords, For the enjoining the Wearing the Woolen Manufacture of this Kingdom at certain Times in the Year. Upon which the Bailiffs, Wardens and Assistants of the Company of Silk-Weavers of London and Canterbury, present'd a Petition to their Lordships in a Tumultuous Manner, praying to be Heard, before the said Bill should be pass'd into a Law. The House Order'd their Speaker to tell the Petitioners, That the Lords did not then think fit to give an Answer, because they observ'd there was an unusual Manner of Application of Men, who ought to be better directed, by them who were Bailiffs, Wardens and Assistants of the Company: That the Lords did first require, That those Crowds should go home, and when that was done, neither they, nor other People of this Nation needed to doubt, but that their Lordships would do Justice, and bear the Objections of the Parties concern'd in this or any other Bill, that should come before 'em.
 And to prevent the Return of such unruly Multitudes who were suppos'd to be set on by the Enemies of the Government, the Lords desir'd His Majesty to Command some of the Horse and Foot Guards to be Aiding to the Civil Powers; and Or-der'd the Governour of the Tower to take Care to prevent any unlawful Concourse of People in those Hamlets; the Lord-Mayor of London to have a sufficient Number of the Trained Bands in readiness to hinder the Passing of any extraordinary Numbers of People through the City; and the Deputy-Lieutenants and Justices of the Peace of the County of Middlesex, to provide for the Security of the City, and Liberties of Westminster.
 The Weavers seeing these Preparations remain'd quiet in their Houses; whereupon the Lords on Aug. 17. discharg'd the Train-Bands which had been Post'd in the Palace-Yard. However, upon the Second Reading of the Bill for Wearing the Woolen Manufactures, it was on August 19. unanimously rejected by their Lordships.

The House of Commons having pass'd the Bill for Attaining several Persons in Rebellion against their Majesties, and sent it up to the Lords for their Concurrence; The Committee whom their Lordships appointed to examine the same, Reported their Opinion on July 30. That the Commons might be desir'd by a Conference to give a List to the House of Lords of the Persons that gave Evidence to the Commons, against the several Persons design'd in the Bill to be Attainted: That the Lords might be fully satisfied by Evidence, Viva Voce, to Attaint the several Persons, (as they suppos'd the Commons were;) for that if the Lords should by themselves enquire of such Evidence, they might fail of hearing all the Evidence the House of Commons had had. The Lords having Agreed to this Motion of the Committee, a Conference was desir'd and manag'd betwixt Both Houses, at which the Commons gave a List of the Witnesses, that depos'd at their Bar against the Persons mention'd in the Bill of Attainder. These Witnesses were William Watts, Matthew Gun, Basil Purefoy, and William Dalton, whose Evidence not satisfying the Lords, the Bill lay neglected for some Days, till the Commons having press'd their Lordships by Two Messages to give Expedition to it; The 1689. House on Aug. 19. Agreed with the Committee in leaving out Thomas Lord Howard, the Earl of Dover, the Lord Hunsdon, Sir Roger Strickland, Sir Edward Herbert, Colonel Hugh Southerland, and Sir William Jennings, because there did not appear sufficient Evidence against 'em. But after many Alterations the Bill itself was dropt.

In Compliance to the King's repeated Desires of giving Satisfaction to the States of Holland, the Commons did at last pass a Bill for Appropriating certain Duties for Paying the States-General of the United-Provinces the Charges of His Majesty's Expedition into this Kingdom. Which being Read in the House of Lords, Aug. 13. a Motion was made, that several Members of this House, and divers Servants of King Charles II. had Securities appropriated out of several Duties which passed away from them by this Bill, and therefore it was fit they should be Heard by their Counsel. This Motion being receiv'd and Counsel Heard, their Lordships gave their Consent to the Bill without any Amendment; but at the same Time, for an Argument of their preferring the King's Interest before their own, they agreed to present the following Address to His Majesty on Aug. 16.

Address of the Lords. THE Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, upon their Concurrence with the House of Commons, in a Bill Entituled, An Act for appropriating certain Duties for Paying the States-General, &c. and for other Uses, think it Incumbent on them in Honour and Justice, to lay before Your Majesty, how several of their own Body found themselves aggrieved thereby, in relation to some Debts owing to them, on the Account of having been Servants to King Charles II. and that their Claim to their Arrears on that Score was weaken'd and prejudic'd by this Bill, which cuts them off from all Pretences whatsoever, except such as can be comprehended within the Sums of Sixty Thousand Pounds, which is very far short of answering their just Demands, and which they conceive to have been better and more amply provided for, in an Act pass'd in the First Year of the Reign of the Late King James, Entituled, An Act for Granting to His Majesty an Imposition on all Tobacco and Sugar, Imported between the 24th Day of June, 1685, and the 24th of June, 1693. Yet being more concerned for the Welfare of Your Majesty's Affairs than their own particular Benefit, and being Sensible of the Importance it may be to Your Majesty, as well as to the Good of Christendom in this Conjunction, that the Debt owing to the States-General of the United-Provinces, upon Account of assisting Your Majesty at your coming into this Nation, for our Deliverance from Papery and Arbitrary Power, should be provided for to their Satisfaction, they have willingly desist'd from giving any Obstruction to the passing of the said Bill, and have entirely submitted their Share of their Recompence for their Long and Faithful Services to their Deceased Royal Master, to the Conveniency of Your Majesties present Circumstances.

Whereupon this House hath thought fit to represent to Your Majesty, this most Respectful and Dutiful Acquiescence of the Peers herein concerned to Your Majesty's Justice and Goodness, and to Beseech Your Majesty that You would be pleas'd to take their Condition, and the Manner of their present Resignation of it, into Your Gracious Consideration and Royal Protection, wherein this House doth promise themselves that the particular Peers concern'd will find an entire Security.

1689. " And whereas there is a Clause in this Bill which provides, That Sixty Thousand Pounds therein mentioned for the Late King Charles's Servants, should be applied to such only as were his Servants at the time of his Decease; It is the Humble Desire and Recommendation of this House to Your Majesty, that this Restraint may bring no Prejudice to the Just and Equitable Pretensions of such of the Servants of his said Late Majesty, as are Members of this House, or of others in their Circumstances; but that Your Majesty will be graciously pleas'd to look upon them, as Entituled to an equal Share of Your Favour and Consideration, which others, their Fellow-Servants, have generally had, or may pretend to, by Virtue of this or the former Act of Parliament before-mention'd.

The Marquess of Halifax, Speaker of the House of Lords, having waited on the King with this Address, His Majesty receiv'd the same very kindly; and as for those particular Peers that were concern'd in the Bill, He said, He was sensible of their Behaviour toward Him on this Occasion, and would not forget it.

On Tuesday, Aug. 20. His Majesty went to the House of Lords, and the Commons being sent for up, the Speaker presented the Bill for Paying the States-General, and made this Speech to His Majesty, acknowledging the Great Services done to this Nation by the Dutch, and at the same Time very artfully reminding the Dutch of their former Obligations to the English.

May it Please Your Majesty;

THE Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, taking into Consideration the great Assistance that was given by the States of the United-Provinces to Your Majesty, in Your Glorious Design of Restoring these Kingdoms to their ancient Rights and Liberties, and how for that End they entrusted their Army and Fleet to Your Majesty's Disposal, at a Time when they had War Declar'd, and an Invasion threaten'd by the French King, merely to divert them: They do here humbly present Your Majesty with a Bill, appointing certain Duties of Excise and Customs, for the Raising Six Hundred Thousand Pounds, which they desire may be applied by Your Majesty, for the Satisfaction of the Charges which have been Expended by the States in this Expedition.

It is little more than an Age since the illustrious Prince of Orange, Your Majesty's Great Grand-Father, whose Name will ever be Famous for his Love to his Country, did, by the Assistance of the English, redeem those Provinces from the like Oppressions; which shews how inseparable the Interest of those Two Nations are. And since it was the Policy of those that laboured our Destruction to divide us, it ought to be the Endeavour of all True Lovers of their Country, to keep us firmly united in order to our Preservation.

The Commons have likewise consider'd of the great Arrears, that were left due by King Charles the Second to his Servants, and have therefore made a Provision of Sixty Thousand Pounds for them, which they humbly desire Your Majesty would please to distribute among them, in such Proportions as Your Majesty in Your Princely Wisdom shall think most fit.

And having proceeded thus far in the weighty Affairs depending before them, they now become Humble Suitors to Your Majesty for a Recess, that thereby they may have the Opportunity of repairing into their several Counties, and promoting Your Majesty's Service, and what remains at present for want of Acts pass.

After this Speech, the King gave his Royal Af-sent to the said Bills; being, 1. An Act for Appropriating certain Duties, for paying the States-General of the United-Provinces their Charges, for His Majesty's Expedition into this Kingdom, and for other Uses. (2.) An Act for Prohibiting all Trade and Commerce with France. (3.) An Act for the better preventing the Exportation of Wool, and Encouraging the Woolen Manufacture of this Kingdom. (4.) An Additional Act for the appointing Commissioners, for the executing an Act of this present Parliament, Entitl'd, An Act for a Grant to Their Majesties of an Aid of 12d in the Pound, for One Year, for the necessary Defence of their Realms. (5.) An Act for Relief of the Protestant Irish Clergy. (6.) An Act to Repeal the Statute made in the Fifth Year of King Henry IV. against multiplying Gold and Silver. (7.) An Act for Explaining part of an Act made in the First Year of King James I. concerning Tann'd Leather. (8.) An Act to enable Trustees to grant Leases of the Estate of Richard Hele, Esq;. (9.) An Act for Enabling of Hannah Sherley, Widow, and Mary Battilley, alias Sherley, her Daughter, to settle and dispose of certain Lands and Tenements in the Counties of Middlesex and Essex. And then the Lord Privy-Seal, by the King's Command, acquainted the Two Houses, “ That it was His Majesty's Pleasure, that they “ should Adjourn till the 20th of the next Month; “ And that His Majesty intended they should farther Adjourn till Winter, unless there was some “ emergent Occasion for their Sitting; of which “ He would give them timely Notice by Proclamation. After which, the Two Houses Adjourn'd accordingly till the 20th of September next.

To take a short View of the Revolution in Scotland: The Convention of that Kingdom met on the 14th of March; and after Publick Prayers performed by the Bishop of Edenburgh (wherein he pray'd for the Safety and Restoration of King James) they began with the Choice of a President. The Marquess of Athol was propos'd by the Bishops, and the Party which adher'd to the Old King; but the Duke of Hamilton was set up in Competition by the Friends of King William, and carried it by near Forty Voices. They came presently to take into Consideration the Castle of Edenburgh, which was yet Commanded by the Duke of Gordon, a Papist, whom they requir'd to put that Castle into their Hands: The Duke desir'd an Indemnity for what was past, and Security for the future; upon which the Convention sent the Earls of Toredale and Lothian to him, with a Pardon in writing for himself and the Garrison: But after several Messages and Evasions, the Duke at last declar'd, That he would not Surrender the Castle. Whereupon the Convention sent up the Heralds at Arms to charge him immediately to submit; which he perfitting to refuse, the Heralds went to the Market-Cross, and solemnly Proclaim'd him a Traitor and Rebel.

Revolution in Scotland.

On March 16. one Crane an Englishman, who was said to be a Servant to King James's Queen, deliver'd a Letter from that Monarch to the Convention; and at the same time the President acquainted the Assembly, That the Lord Leven was arriv'd Express with another Letter from King William. Thereupon it was debated, which of the said Two Letters should be read First; the Majority carry'd it for King William: whose Letter was read with general Applause in manner following.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

WE are very sensible of the Kindness and Concern which your Nation has evinc'd towards Us, and our Undertakings for the Preservation of your Religion and Liberty, which were in such imminent Danger. Neither can we in the least doubt of your Confidence in Us, after having seen how far so many of your Nobility and Gentry have own'd Our Declaration; Countenancing and concurring with Us in Our Endeavours, and desiring Us, that We will take upon Us the Administration of Affairs Civil and Military, and to call a Meeting of the Estates, for Securing the Protestant-Religion, and the ancient Laws and Liberties of your Kingdom: which accordingly We have done.
 Now it lies in you to enter into such Consultations, as are most probable to Settle you on sure and lasting Foundations; which, We hope, you will set about with all convenient Speed, with regard to the Publick Good, and the general Interest and Inclinations of the People: That after so much Trouble and great Suffering, they may live happily and in Peace; and that you may lay aside all Animosities and Factions that may hinder so good a Work.
 We are glad to find so many of the Nobility and Gentry, when here in London, were so much inclin'd to an Union of both Kingdoms; and that they did look upon it as one of the best Means for procuring the Happiness of both Nations, and

From Our Court at Hampton-Court, the 7th Day of March, 1688.

After the reading of this Letter, a Committee was nam'd to draw up an Answer to it in the most Thankful and Dutiful Manner; and then, before they would adu it of the Letter from King James to be open'd, they pass'd an Act for asserting and maintaining the Laws of that Convention; and declaring, That they would not dissolve, but continue Sitting until the Government, Religion, Laws, Liberties and Properties were settl'd and Establish'd. After this, King James's Letter was read, that promis'd Pardon to all such as should return to their Duty before the last day of March; and threatening to Punish with the utmost Rigour of his Laws, all such as should stand out in Rebellion against Him or his Authority. This menacing Let- ter was the more ungrateful, it being Countersigned by the Earl of Melfort (a Person odious to all the Presbyterians of Scotland, who made up the Major part of the Convention) So that in stead of serving the Interest of King James, it rather pro-vok'd that Assembly to be the more unanimous and forward in settling the Government after the Example of England. The Messenger that brought the said Letter, was first secur'd, and then, as if not thought worth detaining, he was dismiss'd with a Puff in stead of an Answer.

The next Care of the Convention, was, to put that Kingdom into a Posture of Defence: for which purpose, They order'd a Proclamation to be Publish'd, requiring all Persons, from the Age of Sixteen to Sixty, to be in a readiness to take Arms, and rais'd Eight hundred Men, under the Command of the Earl of Leven, to Guard the City of Edenburgh. On the 19th of March, they pass'd an Act, approving the Address of the Scotch Nobility and Gentry in London; who had thankfully acknow- ledged the great Benefit done to their Nation by the Prince of Orange, and had desired His Highness to accept the Administration of the Government of that Kingdom. The same day, upon reading of some Letters from several Lords and Gentlemen in Ire- land, craving Assistance of the Convention; they or-der'd 2000 Muskets, and 20 Barrels of Powder to be immediately sent 'em: That a further Provision of Arms and Ammunition should be bought for 'em in Holland, and that two small Frigots should cruise between Scotland and Ireland for mutual In- telligence.

Whilst the Convention was thus providing for their own Security, and the Relief of their Prote- stant Brethren in Ireland, Viscount Dundee held a private Conference with the Duke of Gourdon, at the Postern-Gate of the Castle: Upon which the Convention order'd Dundee to appear before them; but he retir'd with thirty or forty Horse to Lin- lithgo. Thereupon a Party of Horse was sent after him; and the Convention apprehending he might surpris'd the Castle of Sterling, they immediately

1689. dispatch'd away the Governour thereof, the Earl of Marr, to secure that Important Fortress.

In the mean time, the Duke of Gourdon amus'd the Convention, by beating a Parley and desiring to Capitulate; till on March 22d, he sent a Message to the Magistrates of the City, to acquaint 'em,
 " That he had receiv'd Advices from Ireland of " King James's being landed there, and that to " express his Joy upon that News, he should be ob" lig'd to fire the Cannon round the Castle; but bid
 " them not be alarm'd at it, since he desir'd no " Hurt to the City." The Convention being informed of this Message, Order'd the Castle to be block'd up; and on March 23d an Act was pass'd and Proclaim'd, That none be suffer'd to Travel with Horses or Arms, who have not Passes, or cannot at least give a good Account of themselves. On the same Day, the Answer of the Convention to the King of England's Letter, was Sign'd in a Meeting of the whole House (very few excepted) and was order'd to be sent away immediately by my Lord Ross; who took leave for London, and Presented it to his Majesty in this Form.

May it Please Your Majesty;

" AS Religion, Liberty and Law, are the deep" est Concerns of Mankind, so the deep-
 " sense of the extreme Hazards these had been ex-" pos'd to, must produce suitable Returns from " the Kingdom of Scotland to his Majesty; whom " in all Sincerity and Gratitude they acknowledg'd
 " to be, under GOD, their great and seasonable
 " Deliverer: And they heartily Congratulated, " that as GOD had honour'd his Majesty to be " an Eminent Instrument for the Preservation of " his Triuh; so he had rewarded his Undertakings
 " with Success, in the considerable Progress which " he had made in delivering them, and in prefer-" ving to them the Protestant Religion. That they " return'd their most Dutiful Thanks to his Maje" sty, for his accepting the Administration of Pub- " lick Affairs, and Convening the Estates of that " Kingdom. That they should with all conveni" ent diligence take his gracious Letter into their " Consideration; hoping shortly, by the Blessing " of GOD, to fall upon such Resolutions, as might " be acceptable to his Majesty, secure the Prote- " stant Religion, and establish the Government, " Laws and Liberties of that Kingdom upon Solid " Foundations, most agreeable to the general Good
 " and Inclinations of the People: That as to the " Proposal of the Union, they doubted not but his " Majesty would so dispose that Matter, that there " might be an equal readiness in the Kingdom of " England, to accomplish it, as one of the best " means for securing the Happiness of these Nati" ons, and settling a lasting Peace: That they " had hitherto, and still should endeavour to avoid " Animosities or Prejudice, which might disturb " their Councils: That as they design'd the publick
 " Good, so it might be done with the general Con" currence and Approbation of the Nation. And " that in the mean-time, they desir'd the continu" ance of his Majesty's Care and Protection to" wards them in all their Concerns, whereof the " kind Expressions in his gracious Letter had gi" ven them full Assurance.

The Forces King William had sent into Scotland, under Major-General Mackay, consisting of Four Regiments of Foot and One of Dragoons, being ar-riv'd there, the Convention, on March 25. order'd them to be Quarter'd in Leith, and the Suburbs of Edenburgh. And on March 28. they gave a Commission to that General, to be Commander in Chief of such Militia, or other Forces, as should be rais'd for the Safety of that Kingdom in the present Jun- cture. On March 26. a Committee was nam'd for settling the Government, compos'd of Eight Lords, 1689. Eight Knights; and Eight Burgesses, the Bishops being left out, as most profestly disaffected to King William. This Committee made their Report, That the Throne was Vacant; and the whole House (except Twelve) approv'd of what the Committee had done, and pass'd the following Act. The Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland find and declare, That King James VII. being a profess'd Papist, did assume the Royal Power, and acted as King, without ever taking the Oath requir'd by Law; and hath, by the Advice of Evil and Wicked Counsellors, invaded the Fundamental Constitution of this Kingdom, and alter'd it from a Legal and Limited Monarchy, to an Arbitrary Despotick Power; and hath Govern'd the same to the Subversion of the Protestant Religion, and Violation of the Laws and Liberties of the Nation, Inverting all the Ends of Government, whereby he hath Forfeited the Right of the Crown, and the Throne is become Vacant.

Immediately after this, the Estates Voted and Order'd, That the same Committee should bring in an Act, for Settling the Crown upon their Majesties William and Mary, King and Queen of England; and to consider the Terms of the Destination of the Heirs of the Crown: And likewise to prepare and bring in an Instrument of Government to be offer'd with the Crown, for Redrelling the Grievances and Securing the Liberties of the People. According to this Vote the Committee drew up an Act, which was read and agreed unto by the Convention: by which Their Majesties were Proclaim'd King and Queen of Scotland, on Apr. 11. the very same Day they were Crown'd in England. This Act recited the Methods by which King James had Invaded the Constitution of that Kingdom. 1. By Erecting Publick-Schools and Societies of the Jesuits; and not only allowing Messes to be publickly said, but also converting Protestant-Churches and Chappels into Publick Mess-Houses, contrary to the express Laws against saying and hearing Messes. 2. By allowing Popish Books to be Printed, and dispers'd by a Patent to a Popish Printer, designing him Printer to His Majesty's Household, College and Chappel, contrary to Law. 3. By taking the Children of Protestant-Noblemen and Gentlemen, sending them abroad to be bred Papists; and bestowing Pensions upon Priests to pervert Protestants from their Religion, by Offers of Places and Preferments. 4. By discharging Protestants, at the same time He employ'd Papists in Places of greatest Trust, both Civil and Military, &c. and entrusting the Forts and Magazines in their Hands. 5. By imposing Oathis contrary to Law. 6. By exacting Money without Consent of Parliament or Convention of Estates. 7. By Levying and keeping up a Standing-Army in time of Peace, without Consent of Parliament, and maintaining them upon Free-Quarter. 8. By employing the Officers of the Army as Judges throughout the Kingdom; by whom the Subjects were put to Death, without Legal Trial, Jury or Record. 9. By imposing Exorbitant Fines, to the Value of the Parties Estates; exacting extravagant Bail, and disposing of Fines and Forfeitures before any Procees or Conviction. 10. By Imprisoning Persons without expressing the reason, and delaying to bring them to Trial. 11. By causing several Persons to be prosecuted, and their Estates to be forfeited, upon stretches of old and forfeited Laws; upon weak and frivolous Pretences, and upon lame and defective Proofs; as particularly, the late Earl of Argyle, to the Scandal of the Justice of the Nation. 12. By subverting the Rights of the Royal-Burroughs, the Third Estate of Parliament; imposing upon them not only Magistrates, but also the whole Town-Council and Clerks, contrary to their Liberties and express Charters, without any pre-1689. tence of Sentence, Surrender or Consent: So that the Commissioners to Parliaments being Chosen by the Magistrates and Councils, the King might, in effect, aswell Nominate the Estate of Parliament. Besides that many of the Magistrates, by him put in, were Papists; and the Boroughs were forced to pay Money for the Letters imposing those Illegal Magistrates upon them. 13. By sending Letters to the Chief-Courts of Justice, not only Ordering the Judges to stop, sine Die, but also Commanding how to Proceed in Cases depending before them, contrary to the express Laws; and by changing the Nature of the Judges Patents ad Vitam or Calpam, into a Commision de Beneplacito, to dispose them to a Compliance with Arbitrary Courtes, and turning them out of their Offices, if they refus'd to comply. 14. By granting Personal-Protections for Civil-Debts, contrary to Law.

Then in the same Act they Claim'd and Declar'd these their Ancient Rights and Liberties:

1. That by the Law of Scotland, no Papist could be King or Queen of the Realm, nor bear any Office therein; neither could any Protestant-Successor exercise the Regal-Power, till they had sworn the Coronation-Oath. 2. That all Proclamations Asserting an Absolute-Power, to Null and Disable Laws, in order to erecting Schools and Colleges for Jesuits, converting Protestant-Churches and Chappels into Mess-Houses, and the allowing Messes to be said; and that the allowing Popish-Books to be Printed and Dispers'd, was contrary to Law. 3. That the taking the Children of Noblemen, Gentlemen, and others, and keeping them Abroad, to be bred Papists; the making Funds and Donations to Popish-Schools and Colleges, the bestowing Pensions on Priests, and the Seducing Protestants from their Religion, by Offers of Places and Preferments, was contrary to Law. 4. That the Disarming of Protestants, and employing Papists in the greatest Places of Trust, both Civil and Military, &c. was contrary to Law. 5. That the Imposing an Oath, without Authority of Parliament, was contrary to Law. 6. That the Raising of Money, without Consent of Parliament, or Convention, was contrary to Law. 7. That employing the Officers of the Army as Judges, &c. was contrary to Law. 8. That the imposing Extraordinary Fines, &c. was contrary to Law. 9. That the Imprisoning of Persons, without expressing the Reasons, &c. was the same. 10. That the Prosecuting, and Seizing Mens Estates, as Forfeited, upon old stretches of old and obsolete Laws, &c. was contrary to Law. 11. That the Nominating and Imposing Magistrates, &c. upon Boroughs, contrary to their express Charter, was the same. 12. That the sending Letters to the Courts of Justice, ordaining the Judges to desist from Determining of Causes, and ordaining them how to Proceed in Causes depending before them, &c. was contrary to Law. 13. That the Granting of Personal-Protections, was the same. 14. That the forcing the Subjects to Depose against themselves, in Capital-Causes, however the Punishments were restricted, was contrary to Law. 15. That the using Torture, without Evidence, or in ordinary Crimes, was contrary to Law. 16. That the sending of an Army, in a Warlike manner, into any part of the Kingdom, in time of Peace, and exacting Locality and Free-Quarters, was the same. 17. That charging the Subjects with Law-Boroughs, at the King's Instance, and imposing Bonds, without Authority of Parliament, and the Suspending Advocates, for not Appearing when Bonds were offer'd, was contrary to Law. 18. That the putting Garisons into Private-“ Mens Houses, in time of Peace, without Authority of Parliament, was Illegal. 19. That the Opinions of the Lords of the Sessions, in the two Cases following, were Illegal; (viz.) That the concerting the Demand of the Supply of a Fore-faulted Person, although not given, was Treason; That Persons refusing to discover their Private-Thoughts, in relation to Points of Treason, or other Mens Actions, are Guilty of Treason. 20. That the Fining Husbands, for their Wives withdrawing from Church, was Illegal. 21. That Prelacy, and Superiority of an Office in the Church above Presbyters, is and has been a great and insupportable Burthen to this Nation, and contrary to the Inclinations of the Generality of the People, ever since the Reformation, they having Reform'd Papery by Presbytery; and therefore ought to be Abolish'd. 22. That it is the Right and Privilege of the Subject, to Protest, for Remedy of Law, to the King and Parliament, against Sentences pronounc'd by the Lords of the Sessions, provided the same do not stop Executions of the said Sentences. 23. That it is the Right of the Subject to Petition the King; and that all Prosecutions and Imprisonments for such Petitioning, were contrary to Law.

“ Therefore, The said Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland had Resolv'd, That WILLIAM and MARY, King and Queen of England, be Declared King and Queen of Scotland, to hold the Crown and Royal-Dignity of the said Kingdom, to them the said King and Queen, during their Lives, and the longest Ever of Them; and that the sole and full Exercise of the Power, be only in, and Exercis'd by Him the said King, in the Names of the said King and Queen, during their Lives; and after their Decease, that the said Crown and Royal-Dignity be to the Heirs of the Body of the said Queen: Which failing, to the Princess Anne of Denmark, and the Heirs of Her Body: Which also failing, to the Heirs of the Body of the said William King of England.

Oath of Fidelity.

By the same Act, they Abrogated the Oath of Allegiance, and Substituted this short Form of Fidelity: I A. B. do sincerely Promise and Swear, That I will be Faithful, and bear True Allegiance to Their Majesties, King William and Queen Mary. So help me God.

Then these Commissioners were sent to Their Majesties, the Earl of Argyle, Sir James Montgomery, and Sir John Dalrymple, who had a Publick-Reception, on Nov 11th, in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, Their Majesties being placed on the Throne, under a rich Canopy.

They first Presented a Letter from the Estates to His Majesty: Then the Instrument of Government: And then, a Paper containing the Grievances which they desir'd might be Redress'd: And lastly, an Address to His Majesty, for turning the Meeting of the said Estates into a Parliament. All which being Sign'd by His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, as President of the Meeting, and Read to Their Majesties, the King return'd to the Commissioners the following Answer.

The King's Answer to the Parliament of Scotland.

“ WHEN I Engaged in this Undertaking, I had particular Regard and Consideration for Scotland; and therefore I did emit a Declaration in relation to that, aswell as to this Kingdom, which I intend to Make good and Effectual to them. I take it very kindly, that Scotland hath express'd so much Confidence in, and Affection to Me: They shall find Me Willing to Assist 'em, in every thing that concerns the Weal and Interest of that Kingdom, by making what Laws shall be necessary for the Security of their Religion, Property and Liberty, and to Ease 'em of what may be justly Grievous to them.

Corona the Oath.

After which, the Coronation-Oath was tender'd to Their Majesties, which the Earl of Argyle spoke word by word distinctly, and the King and Queen repeated it after him, holding their Right-Hands up, after the manner of taking Oaths in Scotland. The Commissioners, by Authority of the Estates, represented to His Majesty, “ That the Clause of the Oath in relation to the Rooting-out of Hereticks, did not import the Destroying of Hereticks; and that, by the Law of Scotland, no Man was to be Persecuted for his private-Opinion; and ev'n Obstinate and Convicted Hereticks were only to be denounc'd Rebels, or Outlaw'd, whereby their Moveable Estates are Confiscated.” Hence His Majesty, at the repeating that Clause in the Oath, did Declare, That He did not mean, by these Words, that He was under any Obligation to become a Persecutor. To which the Commissioners made Answer, That neither the Meaning of the Oath, nor the Law of Scotland, did import it. Then the King Reply'd, That He took the Oath in that sense, and call'd the Commissioners, and others there present, to be Witnesses of his so doing.

Upon this Settlement, the Siege of Edinburgh-Castle was so vigorously Carry'd-on, that the Duke of Gourdon, seeing his Ammunition spent, his House wholly ruin'd by the Bombs, great Breaches made in the Walls by the Cannon, the Besiegers advanc'd to the Ditch, and despairing of Relief, on June 13, he Deliver'd-up that Important Fortress to Sir John Lamere, and Surrender'd himself and his whole Garrison entirely to King William's Discretion, on Condition of having their Lives, Liberties and Fortunes secured.

Duke of Gourdon Delivers-up the Castle of Edinburgh.

Nothing was now wanting to Reduce Scotland to the Obedience of King William and Queen Mary, but the Suppressing of Dundee, who was got into the Highlands, and had got together the Figure of an Army. Several Skirmishes happen'd between him and some Detachments of Their Majesty's Forces, Commanded by Lieutenant-General Mackay, Sir The Levingston Colonel of Dragoons, Colonel Ramsay, and Colonel Balfour, who were Join'd by the Lairds of Strathnaver, Grant, and Whitoch, and their Followers; in which being Worsted, he betook himself to the Hills again. His Party was almost dwindled to nothing, when having receiv'd a Reinforcement of 300 Irish, Headed by Colonel Canon, he rais'd the Highland-Clans, and with a Body of 6000 Foot, and 100 Horse, advanc'd to meet Mackay, who was Marching towards him with a Body of 4000 Foot, and four Troops of Horse and Dragoons. These two small Armies Engag'd two Miles on this side the Blair of Athol, and fought with great Obstinacy from Five in the Afternoon till Night: And though Mackay lost the Field, and was forc'd to retire in some Disorder towards Sterling with the broken-Remains of his Army; yet the Death of Dundee, who was slain in the Battle, did more than compensate for the other's Loss; considering he was the sole and whole Dependence of that Party, who afterwards were worsted every-where, and particularly once and again at St. John's-Town. In the last of these Conflicts, one single Regiment of the Earl of Angus, under the Command of Lieutenant-Colonel Cleland, gave so entire a Defeat to their whole Force, which consisted of near 4000 Men, that they never after cou'd appear in any considerable Body; and therefore many of the Chiefest among them submitted to Their Majesty's Clemency.

General Dundee slain.

In Ireland, the Earl of Tyrconnel, with great Zeal for his Unfortunate Master, had secur'd the most Important Places of that Kingdom, and not only Disarm'd and Pillag'd most of the Protestants, but also Imprison'd the Chiefest of 'em; and then sent an earnest Invitation to King James, to Come over with Forces and Money from France. Upon this

State of Ireland.

this Message Tyrconnel sent over Baron Rice a Roman-Catholic, and the Lord Montjoy a Protestant : The latter would not consent to go ; but upon Tyrconnel's granting him these Four Things : 1st, That no more New-Commissions should be given out, or New-Men rais'd : 2^{dly}, That no more of the Army should be sent into the North : 3^{dly}, That None should be question'd for what had pass'd : And 4^{thly}, That no Soldiers should be Quarter'd in Private-Houses. These Ambassadors set-out from Dublin about the 10th of January : As soon as they were gone, Tyrconnel broke all the Conditions he had made with the Lord Montjoy ; and, with greater Perfidiousness, His Lordship, immediately after his Arrival at Paris, was Committed Prisoner to the Bastile, on Account of the great Zeal he had lately shew'd for the Protestant-Interest. Soon after, King James took Shipping at Brest, with about 1500 Men, Commanded by Experienc'd French, Scotch and Irish-Officers, and safely Landed at Kingsale on the 12th of March. The next Day, His Majesty, with a numerous Attendance, went to Cork, where he was receiv'd by the Earl of Tyrconnel, who, in Glory, Executed one of the Magistrates, for Declaring for the Prince of Orange. On March 24th, King James Enter'd into the City of Dublin in a Triumphant-manner ; and next Morning, having Call'd a Council, Turn'd-out the Earl of Granard Chairman, Judge Keating, &c. and in their rooms plac'd Count D'Avaux the French-Ambassador, Dr. Cartwright Bishop of Chester, and Lieutenant-Colonel Dorrington, on whom the King had bestow'd the Royal-Regiment, in the room of the Duke of Ormond. Then His Majesty made the Earl of Tyrconnel a Duke, and Summon'd a Parliament to Meet at Dublin on the 7th of May.

Protestants in the North of Ireland Declare for King William.

The English-Protestants had been so very hardly us'd in the Provinces of Munster, Leinster, and Connaught, that most of 'em retir'd towards their Brethren in Ulster, who Declaring for King William and Queen Mary, had Seiz'd on the Towns of Kilmore, Coleraine, Inniskillin, and London-Derry. And yet the English that remain'd were so-little inclin'd to trust to the Promises of King James, that they rather chose to stand upon their Defence ; and gathering into One Body, made Shew of Opposing the King's Forces in the Open-Field : But being Routed by Lieutenant-General Hamilton, at a Place call'd Drummore, their Resistance and Defeat gave a just Occasion to His Majesty and Tyrconnel, to use those in their Power with far greater Severity, and to March towards the North with an Army of about 20000 Men, to force the rest out of their Strong-holds.

King William sends Forces to them :

King William being sensible of the desperate Condition of the Irish-Protestants, had already sent Captain James Hamilton, with Ammunition and Arms, to London-Derry, and nam'd Colonel Lunde, on whose Fidelity he depended, Governor of that City ; but it soon appear'd how much His Majesty was mistaken in him.

On Apr. 13th, Mr. George Walker, Rector of Donabmore in the County of Tyrone, who had rais'd a Regiment for Defence of the Poor Protestants, receiving Intelligence, that King James, having taken Coleraine and Kilmore, after a stout Resistance, was drawing his Forces towards Derry, hasten'd thither to give Lunde an Account of it. The Governor at first believ'd it only a False-Alarm, but was soon convinc'd of the contrary. The Enemy being advanc'd to Cledysford, Mr. Walker return'd to Lyfford, where he join'd Colonel Crafton, and afterwards, according to Lunde's Directions, took his Post at the Long-Causeway, which he vigorously Maintain'd a whole Night ; but being Overpower'd by the Enemy's Numbers, he Retreated to London-Derry, where he vainly endeavour'd to persuade Lunde to take the Field.

They Retreat to London-Derry.

On Apr. 17th, Lunde thought fit to Call a Council of War, and Order'd that Colonel Cuninghan and Colonel Richards, who, two Days before, came into the River Loughfoyle with their Regiments from England, should be Members of it. Accordingly they Met, and with other Gentlemen either equally Disaffected, or at best as little acquainted with the Condition of the Town, and the Resolution of the People, they at last Concluded, That there was no Provision in the Town of London-Derry, for the present Garrison, and the two Regiments a-Board, for above a Week, or Ten Days at most ; and it appearing that the Place was not Tenable against a Well-appointed Army, therefore it was not convenient, for His Majesty's Service, to Land the two Regiments : But, on the contrary, considering their present Circumstances, and the Likelihood that the Enemy would soon possess themselves of that Place, it was thought most convenient, That the Principal-Officers should privately Withdraw themselves, as well for their own Preservation, as in hopes that the Inhabitants, by a timely Capitulation, might make Terms the better with the Enemy. After this Resolution, an Instrument was Prepared, to be Subscrib'd by the Gentlemen and Chief-Citizens, and to be sent to King James, who was advanc'd in Person, with his Army, as far as St. John's-Town. Captain White was sent out to the King, to receive Proposals from Him ; and it was at the same time Agreed with Lieutenant-General Hamilton, That he should not March the Army within Four Miles of the Town. But, contrary to this Agreement, King James, upon the Confidence given him, that the Town would Surrender, at the Sight of his Formidable Army, Advanc'd at the Head of it, before the Walls, on the 18th of April. But meeting with a warm Reception, which put his Men into some Disorder, His Majesty retir'd to Saint John's-Town. In the mean-time, Mr. Muckeridge (the Town-Clerk) gave the People some Intimation of the Proceedings at the Council of War : Which Discovery so enrag'd them against the Governor and his Council, that they finding themselves in Danger, began to make their Escape in Confusion. The Governor could not so easily retire, and therefore thought fit to keep his Chamber. A Council being Appointed there, Mr. Walker and Major Baker endeavour'd to persuade him to Continue his Government : But he positively refusing to Concern himself, they, out of respect to his Commission, suffer'd him to Disguise himself, and in a Sally for Relief of Culmore, to pass in a Boat, with a Load of Match on his Back ; from whence he went to Scotland, and was there secur'd and sent to London, to Answer for the Miscarriages laid to his Charge.

The Town dispos'd to Surrender.

The Garrison of London-Derry resolv'd to Defend the Place :

The Garrison of London-Derry being thus encourag'd to Maintain the Town, Unanimously Resolv'd to Chuse Mr. Walker and Major Baker to be their Governors : But these Gentlemen modestly declin'd the Office, and sent a Letter to Colonel Cuninghan, desiring him to undertake the Charge ; but he pretending that he was, by his Instructions, oblig'd to obey the Orders of Colonel Lunde, refus'd the Proposal, and return'd into England, where both he and Colonel Richards were deservedly Cashier'd. Upon this Refusal, Mr. Walker and Major Baker accepted the Government of the Garrison, and Regimented the Men in the Town, to the Number of 7000, under 8 Colonels, and 333 Inferior-Officers. It was a Bold Undertaking, in this Brave Divine, and Major Baker, to Maintain, against a Formidable Army Commanded by a King in Person, an ill-fortify'd Town, with a Garrison compos'd of poor People frighten'd from their own Homes, and without a proportionable Number of Horse to Sally out, or Engineers to Instruct 'em in the necessary Works. Besides, they had not above Twenty Great-Guns, and not one 1689. of 'em well-mounted, nor above Ten Days Provision, in the Estimate of the former Governour; so that several deserted every Day, and others not only gave constant Intelligence to the Enemy, but industriously endeavour'd to betray the Place. Yet under all these Difficulties, the Two Governours with undaunted Courage, Resolv'd to Defend themselves to the utmost Extremity.

Besieged by K. James with a formidable Army. On Apr. 20. King James invested the Place, and the next Day began to Batter it, of which the Governours sent an Account to England by Mr. Bennet, acquainting King William with their Resolutions of Defence, and imploring a speedy Assistance. Several Attacks were made by the Besiegers, and as many Sallies by the Besieged, in both which the latter had always the Advantages; and they would have had less Reason to fear either the Numbers or Rage of their Enemies without, if they had not had the more cruel ones of Famine and Sickness within.

K. James retires to Dublin. Makes a Speech to the Parliament. On Apr. 29. King James retir'd from the Camp to Meet his Parliament at Dublin, where on May 7. He made a Speech, wherein He told 'em, "That the Exemplary Loyalty which that Nation express'd to him, at a Time when others of his Subjects so undutifully mis-behaved themselves to him, or so basely betray'd him; and their Seconding his Deputy as they did, in this bold and resolute Asserting his Right, in preserving that Kingdom for him, and putting it in a Posture of Defence, made him resolute to come to them, and to venture his Life with them, in Defence of their Liberties and his own Right: That to his great Satisfaction, he had not only found them ready to Serve him, but that their Courage had equall'd their Zeal: That he had always been for Liberty of Conscience, and against Invading any Man's Right or Liberty, having still in Mind that Saying of Holy Writ, Do as you would be done to, for this is the Law and the Prophets: That it was this Liberty of Conscience he gave, which his Enemies, both at Home and Abroad, dreaded to have Establish'd by Law in all his Dominions; and made them set themselves up against him, though for different Reasons; seeing that if he had once Settled it, his People (in the Opinion of the one) would have been too happy, and (in the Opinion of the other) too great: That this Argument was made use of to persuade their own People to join with them, and so many of his Subjects to use him as they had done; but nothing should ever persuade him to change his Mind as to that, and wheresoever he was Master, he design'd, GOD willing, to Establish it by Law, and have no other Test or Distinction but that of Loyalty, expecting their Concurrence in so Christian a Work, and in making Laws against Prophaneness and against all sorts of Debauchery: That he should most readily Consent to the making such good wholesome Laws as might be for the Good of the Nation, the Improvement of Trade, and relieving such as had been injur'd by the late Act of Settlement, as far forth as might be consistent with Reason, Justice, and the Publick Good of his People: That as he should do his Part to make them Happy and Rich, he made no Doubt of their Assistance, by enabling him to oppose the unjust Designs of his Enemies, and to make that Nation flourish: That to encourage them the more to it, they knew with how great Generosity and Kindness the Most Christian King gave sure Retreat to the Queen, his Son, and Himself, when they were forc'd out of England, and came to seek for Protection and Safety in his Kingdoms; how he embrac'd his Interest, and gave him such Supplies of all sorts, as enabled him to 1689. come to them, which without his obliging Assistance he could not have done; and that this he did at a Time when he had so many considerable Enemies to deal with, and still continu'd so to do. His Majesty concluded as he had begun, and assur'd them, he was as Sensible as they could desire of the Signal Loyalty they had express'd to him; and that he should make it his chief Study, as it had always been, to make them and all his Subjects Happy.

This Speech being ended, and the King withdrawn, Sir Richard Neagle, Attorney-General, who was chosen Speaker of the Commons, extoll'd to that House their great Obligations to the King of France, and recommended it as very proper for Both Houses to return His Majesty Thanks for his Gracious Speech, and to desire Count D'Armaux to do the same to his Most Christian Majesty on their Behalf for his Generous Assistance. These Addresses were drawn up and presented accordingly, and then a Bill was brought in containing a Recognition of the King's Title, and an Abhorrence of the Prince of Orange's Usurpation, and Dejection of the English. The next Day the King Publish'd a Declaration to all his Loving Subjects in the Kingdom of England, promising a Full Pardon to all his Subjects, if in Twenty-four Days after his Appearance in Person among 'em, they would return to their Obedience, by deserting his Enemies, and joining with Him: And then He concludes, But if after this Our Gracious Condescension they shall yet continue to assist Our Enemies and Rebels, We do, before GOD, Charge all the Blood which shall be afterward shed, upon them and their Adherents; and We doubt not, by the Blessing of GOD upon our Arms, to force the most obstinate to their Duty, tho', as We have made appear in reducing Our Rebellious Subjects in this Kingdom, We desire to use no other than Lenity and Mercy.

On May 12. A Bill was brought into the House of Commons by Chief-Justice Nugent, for Repealing the Act of Settlement, which, without any Opposition, was Read Three Times and sent to the Lords. In the Upper House the Bishop of Meath very learnedly argued against the Bill, alledging, amongst other Objections, "That no Penalty was provided on such as enter'd Estates without Injunctions; nor Considerations for Improvements; nor Saving for Remainders; nor Time given to Tenants and Possessors to remove their Stock and Corn; nor Provisions for Protectant Widows; and that it allow'd only Reprials for Original Purchase-Money, which was hard to make out, and was an Injury to the Second or Third Purchaser". But notwithstanding the Validity of these Reasons, back'd by an Address to King James from Judge Keating, in Behalf of the Purchasers under the Act of Settlement; and notwithstanding His Majesty's Answer to Keating, That he would not do Evil that Good might come on't; yet Chancellor Filton's Arguments prevail'd, and the Bill receiv'd the Royal Assent, and pass'd into an Act: Nor indeed could it be expected otherwise, the Majority of Both Houses consisting of Roman-Catholicks, on whom King James had his Sole Dependance, and who were the Sons and Descendants of those Persons that had forfeited their Estates for their Bloody Rebellion in 1641.

To give still a more fatal Blow, there was an Act of Attainder pass'd in Parliament, in order to which every Member of the House of Commons, return'd the Names of all such Protectant Gentlemen as lived near them, or in the County or Borough for which they Serv'd. When this Bill was presented to the King for his Assent, the Speaker of the House of Commons told him; That 1689. many were Attainted in that Act upon such Evidence as satisfied the House, and the rest upon Common Fame. In this Black Act there were no fewer Attainted than Two Arch-Bishops, One Duke, Seventeen Earls, Seven Countesses, Twenty-eight Viscounts, Two Viscountesses, Seven Bishops, Eighteen Barons, Thirty-three Baronets, Fifty-one Knights, Eighty-three Clergy-men, Two Thousand One Hundred Eighty Two Esquires and Gentlemen: And all of them, unheard, declar'd Traitors and adjudged to suffer the Pains of Death and Forfeiture. The famous Proscription at Rome, during the last Triumvirate, came not up, in some respects to the Horrors of this; for there were Condemn'd in this little Kingdom more than double the Number that were Proscrib'd through the vast Extent of the Roman-Empire. And to make this of Ireland yet the more terrible and unavoidable, the Act itself was conceal'd, and no Protestant allow'd a Copy of it till Four Months after it was Pass'd; whereas in that of Rome, the Names of the Persons Proscrib'd were affix'd upon all the Publick Places of the City, the very Day the Proscription was Decreed, and thereby Opportunity was given to many to preserve themselves by a speedy Flight. This Anti-Parliament, (it I may so call it) after they had made some other Acts, and amongst the rest one for Liberty of Conscience, was Prorogued on the 25th of July, to the 12th of January ensuing; and so ended this Session, whose Proceeding occasion'd no less Disturbance in the Kingdom of Ireland than the War itself.

Influence
in Ireland.

It was not thought enough that Tyrconnel had stopp'd the Maintenance of the University of Dublin, but upon King James's Arrival, the Vice-President, Fellows and Scholars were all further proceeded against, and turn'd out; their Furniture, Library, and Communion-Plate seiz'd, and every thing that belong'd to the College, and to the Private Fellows and Scholars, taken away. All this was done, notwithstanding that when they waited upon King James at his first Coming to Dublin, he was pleas'd to promise them; That he would preserve them in their Liberties and Properties, and rather augment than diminish their Privileges and Immunities, that had been granted them by his Predecessors. In the House they put a Garison and turn'd the Chappel into a Magazine, and the Chambers into Prisons for Protestants. One More, a Popish Priest, was made Provost, and one Mackarty, also a Priest, Library-Keeper, and the whole design'd for them and their Fraternity. One Arch-Bishoprick, several Bishopricks, and a great many other Dignities and Livings of the Church were design'dly kept Vacant, and the Revenues first paid into the Exchequer, and afterwards dispos'd of to Titular Bishops and Priests; while in the mean-time the Cures lay neglect'd, so that it appear'd plainly that the Design was to destroy the Succession of the Protestant Clergy-men. At length Things came to that Height, that most of the Churches in and about Dublin were seiz'd upon by the Government, and Luttrell, Governour of that City, issued out his Order, Commanding all Protestants, who were not House-keepers, to depart out of the said City; and all such as were House-keepers, to deliver up their Arms, both Offensive and Defensive; and likewise forbidding above Five Protestants meeting any-where upon pain of Death, or such other Punishment as a Court-Martial should think fit. The Governour being ask'd, whether this was design'd to hinder Meeting in Churches? He answer'd, this was design'd to prevent their Assembling there, as well as in other Places; and accordingly all the Protestant Churches were shut up throughout the whole Kingdom.

The Siege of London-Derry was carried on with the utmost Efforts, and the Place reduc'd to the last Extremity, when about the Middle of June, Major-General Kirke, with a Squadron from England, with Men, Provision and Arms, came into the Lough, but for above Six Weeks lay there at a Distance, not able to reach and relieve the Town. In the mean-time Major Baker died on June 20. to the great Loss and Grief of the Besieged: And on the other hand, Monsieur de Rose, the French-General, came in Person to Command the Irish-Camp, much to the Encouragement of the Besiegers. When the Garison was brought to the Necessity of feeding upon Horse-Flesh, Dogs, Cats, Rats and Mice, Tallow, Starch, Dry'd and Salted Hides, Lieutenant General Hamilton sent some Plausible Offers to 'em for a Temptation to Surrender; but they unanimously Resolv'd to eat the Irish, and then one another, rather than Yield; and their Answer to Hamilton was, That they much wondred he should expect they should place any Confidence in him, that had so unworthily broke his Faith with King William their Sovereign: That he was once generously trusted, though an Enemy, and yet betray'd his Trust, and they could not believe he had learn'd more Sincerity in an Irish-Camp.

This Bold Answer so enrag'd the French-General, that He Publish'd an Order directed to the Governours and Garison of London-Derry, importing, That if they did not deliver the Town to him by the first of July, according to Lieutenant-General Hamilton's Proposals, He would dispatch his Orders as far as Bali-Snanny, Charlemont, Belfast, and the Barony of Inishoven, and Plunder all Protestants that were either related to the Garison, or of their Faction, and then drive 'em under the Walls of their Town, where they should be suffered to Starve: But the Besieged receiv'd this Letter with the same Contempt and Indignation as they had done Hamilton's Proposals. The News of this Order being brought to Dublin, the Bishop of Meath humbly apply'd himself to King James, to prevent the Execution of it. His Majesty told that Prelate, That He had heard of the Order before, and had already countermanded it: That General Rose was a Foreigner, and had been used to such Proceedings, as were strange to Us, tho' common in other Places; and that if he had been his own Subject, He would have call'd him to an Account for it. But in Spight of Royal Clemency, about Seven Thousand Poor Protestants were brought under the Walls of London-Derry, where they must have famish'd if the Garison had not erected a Gallows in View of the Besiegers, threatening to Hang all the Prisoners they had taken during the Siege, by way of Reprisal. This Sight of the Gallows, and an importunate Letter of the Prisoners who were to suffer, did at last prevail upon Hamilton, so that on the 4th of July, the poor half-starv'd Protestants had Leave to return home: And this Stratagem prov'd only to the Benefit of the Garison, who crowd'd Five Hundred of their Useless People among the Naked Protestants under the Walls, who pass'd undistinguish'd with 'em, and in Exchange they got some Able and Strong Men out of their Numbers.

By this time the Scarcity of the vilest Eatables was increas'd to such a degree, that they began to be afraid of the Necessity of preying upon one another: And it is remarkable, that a certain Gentleman, who was Young and Corpulent, thought himself mark'd out for a Meal to the gaping Soldiers; and therefore thought fit to hide himself for three days. Under this dismal Scene of Despair, Mr. Walker, the Governour, remembered himself to be a Divine as well as a Military Commander; and therefore Preach'd in the Cathedral before the Garison; and reminded them of the many Instances of the Divine Providence, shewn to them since the beginning

This Discourse seem'd to come not only from a Christian Zeal, but ev'n from a Spirit of Prophecy; for about an Hour after Sermon, the Garison discover'd Three Ships, which Major-General Kirke had sent to their Relief. The Montjoy of Derry, commanded by Capt. Browning, and the Phoenix of Colrain by Capt. Douglas, being both loaden with Provision, were convoy'd by the Dartmouth Frigate: And after a furious firing from the Enemy on both sides the River, and the great difficulty of breaking and passing the Bomb, they did at last get up to the City; and brought unspeakable Joy and Transport to a Garison, which reckon'd only upon Two days Life, having nothing left but Nine lean Horses and a Pint of Meal to each Man. This brave and successful Undertaking so discourag'd the Enemy, that on the last of July they rais'd the Siege in the Night-time with great Confusion, and in their Retreat made a miserable Havock of the Country. The Garison of Iniskilling, under the Command of Gustavus Hamilton, Esq; had Signaliz'd themselves in many desperate Rencontres: And the day before the Siege of Derry was rais'd, they advanc'd near Twenty Miles to meet a Body of about Six Thousand Irish, upon their March under the Command of Major-General Mackarty; and at a Place call'd Newton, Butler fought and routed 'em, took Mackarty Prisoner, and kill'd and drown'd nigh Three Thousand of them, tho' themselves were not above Two Thousand in all, and lost not above Twenty Men, with about Fifty wounded. In the mean-time King William and the English Parliament were sensible of the great Importance of the Reduction of Ireland; and there were Eighteen Regiments of Foot and Five of Horse, rais'd for that Service with good Expedition; but the providing Ships to Transport 'em, a Train of Artillery to attend 'em, and Provisions to maintain 'em, was manag'd with great Slowness and supine Negligence. This Fault was charg'd on Mr. Harbord, who out of Avarice, had engross'd to himself the Two Offices of Pay-master and Purveyor-General of the Army, till the Duke of Schonberg prevail'd with him to resign that of Purveyor to Mr. Shales. The News of raising the Siege of Londonderry, put new life into this long-pending Expedition; and many of the New Levies began to be ship'd off at Chester and Liverpool: And General Schonberg having obtain'd leave of the Lords on July 16. to apply himself to the Commons; He return'd that Honourable House His grateful Acknowledgments, both for the great Respects and large Donative he had receiv'd from them; and presently after began his Journey toward Chester. On Aug. 12. he sail'd from thence with about Ninety Vessels of all sorts, and near Ten Thousand Men, Horse and Foot; and on the next day, after Noon, he arriv'd in the Bay of Carrick-Fergus, where the Army presently landed on Bangor-side, without Opposition. After sending out some Parties for Intelligence, he march'd his Forces to Belfast, which the Enemy had quitted, retiring to Carrick-Fergus, and where several Persons join'd him that durst not declare before. On Aug. 22. Duke Schonberg began the Siege of Carrick-Fergus; and in Four days time made such considerable Breaches, and was so ready for a general Assault, that the Garison was contented to accept what Conditions he pleas'd to offer; which were, "To be conducted with their Arms, and as much Baggage as they could carry on their Backs, to the next Irish Garison, which was Newry." In the mean-time the rest of the Horse, Foot and Dragoons, which for want of Transport-Ships had staid behind, were 1689. Embark'd at Highlake, and safely landed in Ireland; but the Artillery and Horses belonging to them were still at Chester. The Duke sent over his Orders for the greatest part of the Train of Artillery to be shipp'd, and the Fleet to sail with 'em, and all other Necessaries to Carlingford-Bay, while he march'd on his Army beyond Lisburn, and thro' Hillshorough, and pitch'd his Camp at Drummore; and the next day continu'd his March to Loughbritaine, where the Iniskilling-Horse and Dragoons joyn'd him, and cheerfully offer'd themselves to be an Advance-Guard to the Army. Upon this Approach, the Irish abandon'd Newry, a very strong Pass, having first set Fire to the Town; which News being brought to the General, he dispatch'd a Trumpeter to the Duke of Berwick, who commanded there, to acquaint him, Tho' if they went on to burn in this barbarous manner, he would not give any Quarter. This Message had so good effect, that the Irish abandon'd Dundalk without doing any harm to the Town: and Duke Schonberg march'd thither, and encamp'd his Army, who were here well-refresh'd, and on Sept. 9. reinforced by Three Regiments of Major-General Kirke, Sir John Hammo, and Brigadeer Stewart. The Duke design'd to have continu'd his Progress, but the Fleet with the Train of Artillery failing to come up in time to Carlingford, according to his Directions, was a great disappointment to him; so that he continu'd in an uncertain Posture, till Sept. 20. when he receiv'd Advice, That King James having gather'd all his Forces near Drogheda, advanc'd towards him. The day following, the Army of King James appear'd in Order of Battle, and a great Party of their Horse advanc'd towards the Entrenchments of the English-Camp: Several of our Officers were for an immediate Engagement, but Schonberg told 'em, Let 'em alone, we shall see what they will do; and when he saw their whole Body drawing within Cannon-shot of his Camp, yet he said still, He could not believe they design'd to Fight. However, one day seeing them form their Army into two Lines, he order'd his Foot to stand to their Arms, and his Horse to return to the Camp upon a certain Signal. The Soldiers, who were already struggling with Diseases and Want in their Tents, receiv'd these Orders with great cheerfulness; but in a little time the Irish drew off, and march'd away. Tho' the English Army were impatient to Fight, yet General Schonberg seem'd wisely to consider, that the Enemy was much superiour in Horse; that his own Men were undisciplin'd, and weaken'd by Hunger and Sickness, while the other Army was in Health and Plenty; and that the Loss of a Battle might be attended with the Loss of Ireland. Besides, he discover'd a dangerous Conspiracy in his own Camp, carried on by some French-Papists who had lifted themselves in the Protestant-Regiments of that Nation. A Captain of one of these Regiments being informed, that Four of his Soldiers and a Drummer, who were Roman-Catholicks, design'd to go over to the Enemy; he caus'd them to be secur'd, and found Letters about one of them to Mons. d'Avaux. Upon stricter Examination, the Fellow declar'd, he had the Letters from one du Plessis, likewise a Papist; who now serv'd as a private Soldier in one of the French-Regiments, tho' he had formerly been a Captain of Horse in France, from whence he was forc'd to retire for Murther. Du Plessis being seiz'd, ingenuously confest, That he had written to King James, and to the French-Ambassador, and acquainted them, that there were divers Papists in the Three French-Regiments, whom he promis'd to bring over to the Irish-Camp, upon Condition he might have the Command of them, and his Pardon in France. He and his Five Accomplices were ther-upon brought to their Trial, sentenc'd to Death by a Council of War, and accordingly Executed, Treachery of the French-Papists.

1689. Executed: after which the French-Colonels made strict Enquiry, what Papists there were in their Regiments, and found about 250, who, by Order of the General, were secur'd, disarm'd, and sent over Prisoners into England, and from thence to Holland, where they were set at Liberty.

Great sufferings of the English Army. The English Army suffer'd extremely much from a raging Sickness of Gripes and Flux, occasion'd by the Dampness of the Place, the Badness of the Weather, and ill Provisions, which swept away a great number of brave Officers: Among the rest there died Sir Edward Deering, a Gallant Gentleman, who had contributed more than any Man in the County of Kent, towards bringing about the Happy Revolution; Colonel Henry Wharton, a bold, brisk and brave Man, Brother to the present Ld. Wharton; Sir Thomas Gower and Col. Hungerford, two Young Gentlemen of distinguish'd Merit. Of common Soldiers there perish'd above Two Thousand, and as many Sick were shipp'd off to be transported to Belfast, but of them not above Eleven Hundred came ashore, the rest dying at Sea. Nay, so great was the Mortality, that by the beginning of the following Year, near Two Thirds of the Army that was transported over, were entirely lost.

Meeting of the Parliament. The English Parliament, in pursuance of their late Adjournment, met at Westminster, on Friday Sept. 20. when His Majesty signified His Pleasure to both Houses, that they should farther Adjourn to the 19th of Octob. next; and that he intended they should then Sit, whereof he had Order'd Notice to be given by Proclamation; which was accordingly Publish'd on Sept. 26. and on Saturday, Oct. 19. the King came to the House of Lords, and made this Gracious Speech, on the Occasion of their Meeting.

King's Speech to Both Houses.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

THOUGH the last Sitting continu'd so long, that perhaps it might have been more agreeable to you, in relation to your Private Concerns, not to have met again so soon; yet the Interest of the Publick, lays an indispenfable Obligation upon Me to call you together at this time.

In your last Meeting, you gave me so many Testimonies of your Affection, as well as Confidence in Me, that I do not at all question, but in this I shall receive fresh Proofs of both.

I esteem it one of the greatest Misfortunes can befall Me, that in the beginning of my Reign, I am forc'd to ask such large Supplies; tho' I have this Satisfaction, that they are desir'd for no other Purposes, but the carrying on those Wars, into which I entred with your Advice, and Assurance of your Assistance: Nor can I doubt of the Blessing of God upon an Undertaking, wherein I did not engage out of a vain Ambition, but from the Necessity of Opposing those who have so visibly discover'd their Designs of destroying our Religion and Liberties.

It is well known, how far I have Expos'd My Self to rescue this Nation from the Dangers that threatned, not only your Liberty, but the Protestant Religion in general; of which the Church of England is one of the greatest Supports, and for the Defence whereof, I am ready again to venture my Life.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

That which I have to ask of you at present is, That what you think fit to give towards the Charges of the War for this next Year, may be done without delay: And there is one Reason which more particularly obliges Me to press you to a speedy Determination in this Matter, because this next Month there is appointed, at the Hague, a General-Meeting of the Ministers of all the Princes and States concern'd in this War against France, in Order to Concert the Measures for the next Campaign: And till I know your Intentions, I shall not only be uncertain My Self what Resolutions to take; but Our Allies will be under the same Doubts, unless they see Me Supported by your Assistance. Besides, if I know not in time what you will do, I cannot make such Provisions as will be requisite; but shall be expos'd to the same Inconveniences the next Year, which were the Cause that the Preparations for this were neither so Effectual nor Expeditions as was necessary: The Charge will also be considerably lessen'd, by giving time to provide things in their proper Season, and without Confusion.

I have no other Aim in this, but to be in a Condition to Attack Our Enemies in so Vigorous a manner, as by the help of God, in a little time may bring us to a lasting and honourable Peace; by which my Subjects may be freed from the Extraordinary Expences of a Lingring War: And that I can have no greater Satisfaction than in contributing to their Ease, I hope I have already given Proof.

That you may be satisfy'd how the Money has been laid out, which you have already giv'n, I have directed the Accompts to be laid before you, when-ever you think fit to call for them.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

I have one Thing more to Recommend to you, which is, the Dispatch of a Bill of Indemnity; that the Minds of My Good Subjects being quieted, We may all Unanimously Concur to Promote the Welfare and Honour of the Kingdom.

After a short Prorogation, Both Houses met again, on Wednesday, Oct. 23. when the King came, and was pleas'd to speak to Both Houses to this Effect: That He having spoken to 'em so lately, He need not say any thing to 'em now, Matters having not been alter'd since that time; and therefore He refer'd 'em to what He had said to 'em when he was last there, and desired they would be speedy in their Resolutions. Then Both Houses went into a Consideration of His Majesty's Speech; and Both Houses return'd their Thanks: The Commons Resolving to stand by and assist His Majesty, in Reducing Ireland, and joining with his Allies abroad in a Vigorous Prosecution of the War against France. It is remarkable; That this Speech, which met with universal Applause, was compos'd by the King Himself, who, the day before, produc'd it to the Council, written with His Own Hand; telling 'em, He knew most of his Predecessors were us'd to commit the Drawing up of such Speeches to their Ministers, who generally had their Private Aims and Interests in View; to prevent which, He had thought fit to write it himself in French, because He was not so great a Master of the English Tongue: Therefore He desired them to look it over, and change what they found amiss, that it might be Translated into English. At the same Council, the Marquess of Halifax declar'd, That for several Reasons which he forbore to mention, he must desire to be excus'd from doing the Office of Speaker in the House of Lords; which was readily granted him, and Sir Robert Atkins, Lord Chief-Baron supply'd his Place.

On October 26. The Commons Resolv'd, That the Earl of Peterborough and Earl of Salisbury should be Impeached of High-Treason, for departing from their Allegiance, and being reconcil'd to the Church of Rome; and Order'd, That Sir Edw. Hales and Obadiab Walker, be Committed to the Tower for High-Treason, in being Reconcil'd to the Church of Rome, and for other High Crimes and Misdemeanours. And on Octob. 28. The Earl

The same easie Confinement was also granted to Mr. Graham and Mr. Burton, the Two great Exacters and Oppressors in the late Reign. And tho' it was Resolved by the Commons, That a Bill be brought in for inflicting Pains and Penalties upon such Persons as have been the Occasion of the Violating the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom, in the Two late Reigns; yet nothing was Inflicted upon any of 'em: But soon after the Attorney-General was Order'd to bring in a Bill of Indemnity, in such ample Manner, as might answer His Majesty's Gracious Intentions and Clemency; while the King Order'd the Accompts of the Expences of the last Summer, and of the State of the War for the ensuing Year, to be laid before them: Who having perused the same, Unanimously Voted, That for those Purposes, a Supply shou'd be Given to Their Majesties, not exceeding the Sum of Twenty hundred thousand Pounds, to be added to the Publick-Revenue.

Resolution of a Supply.

Resolution against Colonel Ludlow;

On Nov. 6th, the Commons Resolved, That an Humble Address be Presented to His Majesty, To Issue out A Proclamation for the Apprehending Colonel Ludlow, who stands Attainted of High-Treason, by Act of Parliament, for the Murther of King Charles I. And that His Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to propose a Reward to such as shall Apprehend him. The King comply'd with this Address, and Publish'd His Proclamation to that effect, on Nov. 14th, which was known to be after his safe Arrival in Holland with the Dutch-Ambassadors, from whence he return'd to his Retirement at Vevay, a small Town in the County of Vaux in Switzerland, where he Liv'd to a great Age, and left behind him those Memoirs which have been since Publish'd, and do apparently shew that he was One of the pure Republicans, and as much an Enemy to Cromwel, as to his Lawful King. On the same Day, it was Resolv'd, That a Bill be brought in, for the Forfeiture of the Estate and Honour of George late Lord Jeffreys (late Lord-Chancellor of England;) and it was recommended to Colonel Tipping to take Care of it. And, for a farther Terror to all the late Instruments of Popery and Arbitrary-Power, the House Agreed, on the 5th of November, That the Pecuniary Penalties incurr'd by all Privy-Councillors, Lords-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Militia-Officers, Justices of the Peace, and by any other Persons who had accepted or exercis'd any Office, or Place of Profit, either Military or Civil, (other than such as are now Officers in Their Majesties Army or Fleet) contrary to an Act of 25 Car. II. [Entitul'd, An Act for Preventing Dangers which may happen from Popish-Recusants] shou'd be speedily Levy'd, and apply'd to the Publick-Service. And the Lords, in the mean-time, Appointed a Committee, "To Examine, Who were the Advisers and Prosecuters of the Murders of the Ld. Russel, Col. Sidney, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Mr. Cornish, and others; and Who were the Advisers of Issuing out Writs of Quo Warranto's against Corporations, and Who were their Regulators; and also, Who were the Publick Asserters of the Dispensing-Power.

And against the Instruments of Popery and Arbitrary-Power.

Dr Walker has Thanks and a Gratuity, for his great Service.

On Monday Nov. 18th, on a Petition of Doctor Walker, it was Resolv'd by the Commons, "That an Humble Address be Presented to His Majesty, That He wou'd please to Distribute the Sum of Ten thousand Pounds among the Widows and Orphans of such as were Slain and Died in the Siege of London-Derry, and among the Clergy-Men that were there." And on Nov. 19th, Doctor Walker was Call'd in, and Mr. Speaker gave him the Thanks of the House; and desir'd him, in the Name of the House, to Thank all those who had Serv'd under him at the Siege of London-Derry, in Defence of the said Town.

On Nov. 23d, the House being Inform'd, That great Quantities of Corrupt and Unwholsom Victuals had been furnish'd to the Navy, this last Summer, which had been the Occasion, as was conceiv'd, of great Sickness and Mortality in the Fleet; and the same being Attested by several Members of the House, upon their own Knowledge: It was Resolv'd, "That Sir John Parsons, Sir Richard Haddock, Alderman Sturt, and Mr. Nicholas Fenn, Victuallers of the Fleet, shou'd be sent for in the Custody of the Serjeant at Arms, to Answer to the said Complaint." It was some Cover and Protection to 'em, that, within few Days after, His Majesty was pleas'd to Appoint Thomas Papillon, Simon Maine, John Agar, Humphry Ayles, and James Howe Esqrs, Commissioners for Victualling Their Majesties Navy.

Complaints of Ill-Victualling the Navy.

While the Commons were Enquiring into the Miscarriages of Ireland, they found, by the Information of Dr. Walker, that they were chiefly owing to the Neglect of Mr. Shales (Purveyor-General to the Army,) by whose Default, Duke Schonberg had waited for Artillery, Horses and Carriages, above a Month; that the Soldiers had all along wanted Bread, the Horses Shooes and Provender, and the Surgeons proper Medicines for the Sick. Whereupon it was Resolv'd, Nov. 26th, "That an Humble Address be Presented to His Majesty, That Mr. John Shales (Commissary-General of the Provisions for the Army in Ireland) be forthwith taken into Custody, and all his Accompts, Papers and Stores secur'd, and that a fit Person be put in his Place; and that His Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to Impower Duke Schonberg to do the same. On the next Day, Major Wildman acquainted the House, That he had attended His Majesty with that Address: Who was pleas'd to give this Answer; That He had some time since taken Order therein, being inform'd of the said Captain Shales's Misdemeanors in his Employment, and had Written to the Duke of Schonberg for that Purpose; a Copy of which Letter was brought to the House, and there read: And that His Majesty was pleas'd farther to add, That He verily believ'd, what was desir'd, was already effectually done; though, the Wind being contrary, He had not as yet receiv'd any Account thereof from Ireland.

Address against Commissary Shales.

On Nov. 30th, Mr. Comptroller deliver'd this Message from His Majesty, in Writing:

WILLIAM R.

HIS Majesty having already Declar'd His Resolutions to Prosecute the War in Ireland with the utmost Vigour, and being desirous to use the Means that may be most Satisfactory and Effectual in order to it; Is graciously pleas'd, That this House do Recommend a Number of Persons, not exceeding Seven, to be Commission'd by His Majesty to take Care of the Provisions, and such other Preparations as shall be Necessary for that Service.

Message of the King to the Commons.

His Majesty is farther pleas'd to let the House know, That upon Consideration of the Address of the 11th of November, He gives them Leave to Nominate some Persons to Go over into Ireland, to take an Account of the Number of the Army there, and the State and Condition of it; who shall receive His Majesty's Orders accordingly. But, on Dec. 2d, It was Resolv'd, "That this House doth humbly Desire to be Excus'd from Recommending any Persons to His Majesty, to be Employ'd in the Service of Ireland; and humbly leave it to His Majesty's great Wisdom, to Nominate fit-Persons for that Service. And whereas an Address had been Prepar'd, and Presented to His Majesty, That He wou'd please to let this House know, 1689.

“ know, Who Recommended Commiffary Shales to His Majesty, and Advis'd his being Employ'd? Mr. Dolben Reported, That the Committee had Attended His Majesty with that Address, and that His Majesty was pleas'd to give this Answer: Gentlemen, It is impossible for Me to give you an Answer to this Question. On the same Day, Mr. Speaker Attended His Majesty at the Banqueting-House in Whitehall, and Presented the Thanks of the House to His Majesty, for His Most Gracious Message of Saturday last, with the Resolution of the House upon it. And His Majesty was pleas'd to give this Answer: Gentlemen, I shall take all the Care that may be, to Carry on the War in Ireland with Vigour, and to Employ such Persons as may be most proper for the Service; and I doubt not but that I shall have the Assistance of the House of Commons, to Carry it on in such a Manner, as may be according to your Desires, and My Intentions.

But the Complaints of Mismanagement were so great, that, on Dec. 14th, the House Resolved, “ That an Humble Address be Presented to His Majesty, To lay before Him, the Ill-Conduct and Success of our Affairs, in reference to Ireland, the Armies and Fleet: And humbly to Desire His Majesty, That He will please to take it into His Consideration, and, in His Wisdom, to find out the Authors of these Miscarriages, and to Appoint Affairs to be Manag'd by Persons Unsuspected, and more to the Safety of His Majesty, and Satisfaction of His Subjects.

On Dec. 16th, His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and the Commons being sent for up, He gave His Royal-Assent to, (1.) An Act, Granting to Their Majesties an Aid of Two Shillings in the Pound, for One Year. (2.) An Act for Declaring the Rights of the Subject, and Settling the Succession of the Crown. (3.) An Act for Naturalizing William Watts an Infant. (4.) An Act for Declaring John Rogerfon to be a Natural-born Subject of this Realm. The Commons returning to their House, Desir'd Mr. Speaker to Print his Speech made this Day to His Majesty, upon Presenting the Money-Bill, which was as follows.

May it Please Your Majesty;

“ Your Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, the Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, taking into Consideration, the Great and Necessary Expences Your Majesty will sustain, in the Prosecution of the War, wherein Your Majesty is now Engaged, did, at their First Meeting in this present Session, Unanimously Agree, To Present Your Majesty with a Supply of Two Millions; the Greatest-part of which they Resolv'd to Charge upon their Lands, as the most Speedy and Effectual Way of Raising present Money for this Occasion. But finding that great Abuses had been committed, in Assiding the late Supply of the like Nature, they have endeavour'd to Provide against those Abuses in Raising of this present Tax; the Consideration whercof hath taken up much of their Time, and produced a Bill of an unusual Length, which I now Offer to Your Majesty's Gracious Acceptance.

They have likewise Agreed upon a Bill for Declaring of their Rights and Liberties, which were so Notoriously Violated in the late Reign; humbly Desiring Your Majesty to give Life to it, by the Royal-Assent: That so it may remain not only a Security to them from the like Attempts hereafter, but be a Lasting Monument to all Posterity, of what they owe to Your Majesty for their Deliverance.

In the mean-time, the House of Lords had often requir'd the Lord Griffin to Attend: But he still refusing to Appear, Their Lordships Desir'd the King, by an Address, to Summon him, by His

Royal-Proclamation, at such a Day as His Majesty shou'd Appoint, either to their House, (if then actually Sitting) or to One of the Secretaries of State. His Lordship being accordingly Summon'd, Surrender'd himself to the Lord Nottingham: And on the 19th of October, having made his Appearance before the House of Lords, the Speaker told him, That he knew what he had to do, before his Sitting in this House. Whereupon his Lordship desir'd Time to Consider of taking the Oaths, he not being Prepar'd for it: Which was readily Granted. But immediately after this, a Pacquet was Intercepted, which plainly Discover'd how little he was inclin'd to Own the present Government. This Discovery happen'd in the following Manner. — His Lordship having caus'd a large Pewter-Bottle to be made, with a Double-Bottom, order'd his Cook, at an Unseasonable Hour of the Night, to get the Falfe-Bottom Sodder'd. The Pewterer, finding a Pacquet between the two Bottoms of the Bottle, began to Suspect something; and the Cook not giving him a Satisfactory Answer about its Contents, he made-bold to Open it. The Supercription of several Letters Directed to King James, the Duke of Berwick, &c. justify'd the Pewterer's Suspicion; who immediately Seiz'd the Lord Griffin's Cook, and Carry'd him to One of the Secretaries of State: But he being gone to Bed, and his Servants refusing to admit the Pewterer to their Master's Presence, the Lord Griffin, who by this time began to apprehend what had befalln his Messenger, took this Opportunity to make his Escape. Besides the Letters, there was found an Account of some private Resolutions of the Council, and an Exact List of all the Land and Sea-Forces of England. Whereupon the Lord Griffin's House and Papers were Search'd, his Lady Committed to the Tower, several suspected Persons Arrested, and the Custom-House-Officers Order'd to Stop all Unknown Persons, that offer'd to Cross the Seas without Passes. The Lord Griffin having Absconded himself some few Days, and finding it difficult to go out of the Kingdom, Surrender'd himself to the Earl of Shrewsbury (Secretary of State.) who having Examind him, Committed him to the Custody of a Messenger, from whence he was Sent to the Tower. Thereupon the Commons Appointed a Committee, to Enquire how the Lord Griffin came to know a Resolution, which the King had communicated to Four Persons only: And the Lords Address'd His Majesty, to let him understand, That the said Lord being One of their Members, They were consequently his proper Judges. The King having left the Cognizance of this Affair to the Peers, they began to Examine the Papers Intercepted in the Pewter-Bottle, which were the only Evidence against the Lord Griffin: And because, some few Days before, it had been Resolv'd in that House, “ That Colonel Algernoon Sidney was Unjustly Condemn'd, nothing but Writings found in his Closet, having been produc'd against him;” the Earl of Rochester Argu'd, from a Parity of Reason, in Favour of the Lord Griffin, who, after several warm Debates, was set at Liberty, upon sufficient Bail.

While the Lord Griffin's Affair was depending, the Lord Preston, Viscount of Scotland, having Presented to the House of Lords, a Patent from King James, Dated from Verfailles, Jan. 21st, whereby he was created Baron of England; Their Lordships Voted him Guilty of High-Treason: But however, they thought fit to refer the Examination of that Matter to the Judges, their Assistants. My Lord Preston pretended, That the Patent being Dated One Day before the Meeting of the Convention, which had Voted the Throne Vacant, it ought therefore to be Valid. To which it was Answer'd, That the Vacancy was suppos'd to Begin from the Moment King James left the Kingdom, whereby

He Abdicated the Government. The next Day the Judges brought in the Lord Preston Guilty of a High-Misdemeanour, for which he was Committed to the Tower. Not long after, his Lordship acknowledg'd, and begg'd Pardon for his Fault, by a Petition to the Lords, which was rejected, upon his Subscribing himself, Viscount Preston, without expressing of what Kingdom; the next Day he presented another, wherein he stiled himself Viscount of Scotland: And moreover, it being alledged in his Behalf, that by accepting a Patent from King James, he never meant an Affront to King William, but only to secure his own Person from Imprisonment, (being at that Time Prosecuted at Law by the Lord Mountague for a considerable Sum of Money,) he was released from his Confinement without giving Bail.

Enquiry into the late King's Warrants's

The Lords acquainted the Commons, That they had appointed a Committee to inquire who had advis'd the issuing of Quo Warranto's against Corporations, and desir'd that Mr. Hamden, Junior, and Mr. Trenchard, Two of their Members, might appear before the Committee they had nam'd, to find out the Authors and Promoters of the Execution of the Lord Russel, Algernoon Sidney, Sir Thomas Armstrong, and Mr. Cornish. It is certain Mr. Hamden was able to give the Lords a great Light into that Affair, having been deeply engaged in that which was call'd the Presbyterian-Plot. Yet it is said this Enquiry was not so much intended against Mr. Hamden, as against the Marquess of Halifax, who had endeavour'd Mr. Hamden's Ruine, by procuring a Note from the Duke of Monmouth, which made Hamden the Chief Accomplise with the Lord Russel. But the Duke afterwards repenting of having accused one of his best Friends, earnestly demanded his Note from King Charles II. to whom the Marquess had deliver'd it, and which He at last obtain'd on this Condition, never to return into His Majesty's Presence. Mr. Hamden appear'd before the Lords Committee, and made a Long Speech, wherein he rather aim'd at recommending himself than of discovering the Authors and Promoters of the Execution of his late Friends. He extoll'd his Services to the present Government, and plainly insinuated, that the whole Intrigue of Inviting over the Prince of Orange, had been manag'd by himself, and Mr. Johnson, a Scotch-Man. Indeed Mr. Hamden was apt to over-value his own Services and Abilities, and therefore made several Offers at being Secretary of State; but the King thought him of too warm a Temper for a Place that requires a Sedate Judicious Man. One Day Mr. Hamden, with Design to remind the King of his own Merits, represented to His Majesty, that those of Mr. Johnson were still left unrewarded; to which the King reply'd, That he had not forget either Mr. Hamden or Mr. Johnson. However neither of 'em had much Reason to complain, the King having named the first to be his Envoy into Spain, and the other into Switzerland, which Employments they both refus'd; and thereupon Mr. Cocks, upon Mr. Hamden's Recommendation, was sent to the Switz-Cantons, and Mr. Stanhope, Brother to the Lord Chesterfield, but recommended by his own Merit, was dispatch'd to Madrid. About the same Time the Lord Paget was sent Envoy to the Emperor, and the Lord Dursley to Holland, to relieve the Earl of Pembroke, who was made a Privy-Councillor, and soon after First Commissioner of the Admiralty, in the room of Admiral Torrington, who voluntarily resigned that Place.

The Important Bill to Settle the Rights of the Subjects, and the Succession of the Crown, being passed the House of Commons, and sent to the Lords, their Lordships wisely considering how far King James had gone towards the introducing the Papish Religion into the Nation, took special Care to prevent the like for the future, by adding a Clause to the Bill, "That the Kings and Queens of England should be obliged at their coming to the Crown, to take the Test in the First Parliament that should be call'd at the Beginning of their Reign; and that if any King or Queen of England should embrace the Roman-Catholick-Religion, or Marry with a Roman-Catholick Prince or Princess, their Subjects should be absolv'd of their Allegiance; and that the Crown and Government of these Realms should from Time to Time descend to, and be enjoy'd by such Persons, being Protestants, as should have inherited the same, in Case the said Persons so reconcil'd to the Church of Rome, or Marrying a Papist, as aforesaid, were naturally dead". Some Days after, the Lords made a farther Progress in the Bill; and because the Dispensing-Power was mention'd in it, as one of the chiefest Grievances, some were of Opinion, that such a Power was a Prerogative inseparable from the Crown, and that in some Cases the King may Dispense, if not with a Law, yet with some Part of it. To support this Opinion, they alledg'd, That there was a Statute prohibiting all Foreign-Built Ships, or such as had not been Laden in this Kingdom, to Trade to the English-Plantations in America; but that nevertheless, for the Good of the Nation, the King might Dispense with that Statute, upon Account of the Negree-Trade, which the English drove with the Spaniards, and of which they had cut off the Dutch. Tho' little could be said in Opposition to those Reasons, yet because they fram'd too high the Royal Prerogatives, (which the Prevailing-Party design'd to moderate,) and seem'd to justify the late Mismanagements, they were rejected with some Heat. About this Time the Discontented grew so insolent, being heartned by the Slow Proceedings of the Commons, that the Lords thought it necessary to desire His Majesty to cause the Laws against Papists to be put in Execution.

Towards the Beginning of December, there had been a Question propounded in the House of Commons, Whether a Person having a Place at Court, or any Dependence upon the King, should be a Member of that House? The Debate thereupon was very warm, but at last the Question was carried in the Affirmative, it having been rightly urged, That if the Negative prevailed, the fittest Persons for Publick Employments would remain Excluded, and be Debar'd the Opportunity of Serving either the King or their Country. About the Middle of the Month, the Commons in a General Committee, considering the State of the Nation, some of the Dissatisfied Members made grievous Complaints of the late Miscarriages, and cast them directly upon the present Ministry: And He that spoke the loudest on this Occasion was Mr. Hamden Junior, who made a long Speech against those that had the Management of Affairs, by saying; "He could not but Wonder to see those very Persons in the Ministry whom the late King James had employ'd, even when his Affairs were most desperate, to Treat with the then Prince of Orange. He alledg'd the Example of William, First Prince of Orange, who never made use of the Duke of Alva's Ministers; of Henry IV. of France, who never employ'd those of his Competitor, the Duke of Mayenne, and of several other Princes; and mov'd for an Address to desire His Majesty to remove the Persons He had mark'd out from his Presence and Councils. This Speech might have made a greater Impression, but that at the same Time He complain'd, that several Common-Wealth's-Men were employ'd by the Government; upon which the whole House broke out into a general Laughter, as knowing that He, his Father, and their Debates upon Members having Places at Court.

1689. their Predecessors had been always reputed of the Republican-Party. As soon as the Commons had recover'd their Gravity, several Members stood up in Defence of the Illustrious Persons on whom Mr. Hamden had reflected; alledging, "That the Reason why they had been deputed to the Prince of Orange, was not because they were in King James's Interest, but rather, because they had all along disapprov'd his Conduct, and as such, had the general Esteem of the Nation, and were most likely to be agreeable to His Highness". However, Mr. Hamden did not altogether lose his Point, for the House Voted an Address, to lay before His Majesty the Ill Conduct and Success of Affairs, and to find out the Authors of those Miscarriages. Mr. Hamden being named, among others, to draw up this Address, gave People Occasion to think, that his Principal Aim was to have the Earl of Nottingham removed, that He might himself step into his Place of Secretary of State, to which he eagerly aspired, as presuming much upon his own Knowledge of Foreign Affairs. Before the Holy-days, Mr. Hamden Jun. brought in the Form of an Address to the Commons, but it contain'd such a tedious Detail of Miscarriages and Misfortunes, that several Members, and Mr. Hamden the Father, spoke against it, and insisted to have it drawn over again; to which the other Party agreed, tho' on a different Reason, That it ought indeed to be drawn up in another Form, not in order to Contract, but rather to enlarge it, and the Address was return'd for that Purpose.

Another Matter which occasion'd warm Debates was, the Settling a Part of the Publick Revenue on the Princess Anne of Denmark, which divided the House into Three Parties. The Lord Elan, Son to the Marquis of Halsfax, Mr. Finch and Mr. Godolphin, who spoke in Favour of Her Royal Highness, insisted that Seventy Thousand Pounds per Ann. was as little as could be allow'd Her, as it had been represented in the former Session. Some who considered the Publick Necessities, would have that Sum reduc'd to Fifty Thousand Pounds; and others again, being thought to be Influenc'd and Instructed by the King, were for leaving that Matter wholly to His Majesty's Discretion. Mr. Hamden Jun. who few Days before had thunder'd against the Court and Ministry, did now Side with this last Party, and pleaded the Danger of Settling a Revenue on a Princess that had so near a Claim to the Crown, Independently upon the King, whose Title was disputed by many Malecontents; and supported his Argument by the Example of the Queen, on whom it had lately been propos'd to Settle an Hundred Thousand Pounds a Year; but which was thought improper, and therefore rejected, though Her Majesty had no separate Interest from that of Her Royal Comfort. However, his Opinion was not followed, and the Debate was Adjourn'd to the next Day. In the mean-time His Majesty, who was unwilling that so nice an Affair should be so loudly Canvass'd in Parliament, sent the Earl of Sbrewsbury and Mr. Wharton to Her Royal Highness, with Design to persuade her to rely on his Generosity: But the Princess, who was for a fixed Settlement, prudently Answer'd, That since that Affair was before the Commons it must e'en take its Course, and be concluded by that Wise Body. So on Wednesday, Dec. 18. the House Order'd an Humble Address, "That His Majesty would be pleas'd to make a Provision for the Prince and Princess Anne of Denmark, of Fifty Thousand Pounds a Year, beginning at Christmas next". And Mr. Speaker, with the Members, going to Whitehall to present this Address, His Majesty was pleas'd to return this Answer: GENTLEMEN, Whichever comes from the House of Commons is so agreeable to Me, and particularly this Address, That I shall do what you desire of Me.

On the same Day, Monday, Dec. 23. His Majesty came to the House of Peers, and gave his Royal Assent to, (1.) An Act to prevent Doubts and Questions concerning the Collection of the Publick Revenue. (2.) An Act for Punishing Officers and Soldiers who shall Mutiny or Desert their Majesties Service; and for Punishing False-Musters. (3.) An Act to Enable the Lord Viscount Hereford, to make a Jointure upon his Marriage with Mrs. Elizabeth Norborne, notwithstanding his Minority.

Upon the Bill for Restoring Corporations to their Ancient Rights and Liberties, a Clause was offered and agreed to, Jan. 2. To Incapacitate for Seven Years such as had any-ways Acted in the Surrenders of Charters, from bearing any Office in the said Corporations: But at the Third Reading, on Jan. 10. This Clause was rejected, and the Bill carried up to the Lords without it. On Jan. 4. a Bill was brought in, For Sale of the Estates that were forfeited by those that were now in Rebellion against their Majesties in the Kingdom of Ireland. On Jan. 9. Francis Cholmondeley, Esq; a Member of the House of Commons, was by the Speaker's Warrant Committed Prisoner to the Tower of London, for his Contempt in Refusing to take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, appointed to be taken by the Members of the House; and it was Ordered, That a Bill be brought in to Enjoin the taking of the Oath of Allegiance by all Persons above the Age of Sixteen Years, and to require the Justices of the Peace to tender the same; and to commit such Persons to Prison without Bail or Mainprize, as shall refuse to take the same.

On Thursday, Jan. 16. His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and gave the Royal Assent to, (1.) An Act for a Grant to Their Majesties of an Additional Aid of Twelve-pence in the Pound for One Year. (2.) An Act for the Charging and Collecting the Duties upon Coffee, Tea, and Chocolate, at the Custom-House. (3.) An Act for Settling a Maintenance on the Children of Sidney Worthy, alias Mountague, Esq; in Case his Wife Survived him.

On Debate of the Bill for Annulling the Attainder of Sir Thomas Armstrong, and for inquiring who were his Prosecutors, Sir Robert Sneyer, then Attorney-General, was named by Mrs. Mathews, Daughter of Sir Thomas Armstrong, as One of her Father's greatest Adversaries; upon which it was Resolved on Monday, Jan. 20. That Sir Robert Sneyer's Name be put into the Bill as One of the Prosecutors of Sir Thomas Armstrong, and that he be expell'd the House for the same.

Upon Debate of the Privileges of the House, and the Abuse of Protections, given by several Members; It was Order'd, "That all Protections and Written Certificates of the Members of this House, be Declar'd Void in Law, and be forthwith Withdrawn and Call'd in, and that none be granted for the future; and that if any shall be granted by any Member, such Member shall be liable to the Censure of this House: And that the Privilege of Members for their Mensial Servants, be observ'd according to Law; and that if any Mensial Servant shall be Arrested and detained, contrary to Privilege, he shall (upon Complaint thereof made to the Speaker) be charg'd by Order from him. And that this be declar'd to be the Standing-Order of the House."

On the same Day, Jan. 23. the House Proceeding upon the Bill of Indemnity, and the Bill of Pains and Penalties to be inflicted upon such as shall be excepted out of the Bill of Indemnity, they Agreed, That Persons might be justly excepted out of the said Bill for any of these following Crimes. 1. Acts pass.

On Monday, Jan. 27. His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and gave the Royal Assent to, 1. An Act for the Review of the Poll-Bill, and for an Additional Poll. (2.) An Act to prevent Vexatious Suits against such as acted in order to the bringing in Their Majesties, or for their Service. (3.) An Act for the better Security and Relief of the Irish-Protestants. (4.) An Act to discharge the Duke of Norfolk, upon Payment of certain Sums of Money to the Lady Elizabeth Teresa Ruffel, Wife of Bartholomew Ruffel, Esq; (5.) An Act to Enable the Earl of Radnor to make a Joynure to his Wife, and to raise a Sum of Money out of divers Lands and Tenements in Cornwall. (6.) An Act to Enable Thomas Edon, Esq; to Sell Lands to pay his Debts, and to make Provision for his Wife, and for his Children, in case he should have any. (7.) An Act to Enable William Batson, Esq; to Sell Lands in the County of Oxon, and to Purchase and settle an Estate in the County of Suffolk to the same Uses.

After which His Majesty made a most Gracious Speech to Both Houses, which follows.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

King's speech.

I Am so sensible of the Readiness you have shew'd to Supply me with Money for the Carrying on the Wars I am Engag'd in, that I am glad of this Occasion, to give you Thanks for your Chearful Dispatch of that Matter, which was absolutely necessary for the Common Safety.

The best Return I can make to your Kindness, is, to Assure you, That as far as it will go, it shall all be Employ'd to the Purposes it was given.

It is a very sensible Affliction to Me, to see my good People Burthen'd with heavy Taxes; but since the speedy Recovering of Ireland, is, in my Opinion, the only Means to Ease them, and to Preserve the Peace and Honour of the Nation, I am resolv'd to go thither in Person, and with the Blessing of GOD

Almighty, endeavour to reduce that Kingdom, that it may no longer be a Charge to this. 1689.

And as I have already ventur'd my Life for the Preservation of the Religion, Laws and Liberties of this Nation; So I am now willing again to expose it, to secure you the quiet Enjoyment of them.

The Spring drates on, and it being requisite I should be Early in the Field, I must immediately apply my Thoughts to the giving Orders for the necessary Preparations: Which that I may have the more Leisure to do, I have thought convenient now to put an End to this Session.

And then the Right Honourable Sir Robert Atkyns, Lord Chief-Baron of Their Majesties Court of Exchequer, and Speaker of the House of Peers, said:

My Lords and Gentlemen;

“ It is His Majesty's Pleasure, That this Parliament be Prorogued to the Second Day of April next; And this Parliament is Prorogued to the Second Day of April next. Parliament prorog'd.”

The City of London were so sensible of their Liberties restor'd to 'em, that they paid all possible Duty and Honour to King William: And Sir Thomas Pilkington, being continu'd Lord-Mayor for the Year 1690. in the Name of the City Invited the King and Queen, the Prince and Princess of Denmark, and both Houses of Parliament, to Dinner at Guildhall, on the usual Solemnity, Octob. 29. When Their Majesties, attended by their Royal Highnesses, and a numerous Train of the Nobility and Gentry, went first to a Balcony prepar'd for them in Cheapside, to see the Show: Which for the great number of Livery-Men, the full Appearance of the Militia and Artillery, the rich Adornments of the Pageants, and the Splendid and good Order of the whole Proceeding, out-did all that had been seen before upon the like Occasion; and what deserves to be particularly mention'd, was, a Royal-Regiment of Volunteer-Horse, made up of the Chief-Citizens; who being very richly Accour'd, and led by the Earl of Monmouth, attended Their Majesties from Whitehall. The Cavalcade being past by, the King and Queen were Conducted by the Two Sheriffs to Guildhall, where they and their numerous Retinue were Entertain'd with a Magnificent Feast. His Majesty, to express his Satisfaction, Confer'd the Honour of Knighthood on Christopher Lethuillier and John Houblon, Esq; the two Sheriffs, and on Edward Clarke and Francis Child, two of the Aldermen. At Their Majesties Return in the Evening, the Soldiers had, at convenient Distances, lighted Flambeaus in their Hands, the Houses were all Illuminated, the Bells ringing, and nothing was omitted thro' the whole Course of this Days Solemnity, either by the Magistrates, or the People, that might show their Respect and Veneration, as well as their Dutiful Affection and Loyalty to Their Majesties, and the Sense they have of the Happiness they enjoy under their most benign and gracious Government. Not many Days after, some violent Malecontents offer'd an Indignity to the King's Picture in the Guildhall, by Cutting away the Sceptre and Crown: Whereupon the Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen Promis'd a Reward of Five hundred Pounds to any that shou'd Discover the Author of that Insolence. Loyalty of the City of London.

As to other Honours and Preferments conferr'd this Year: At the beginning of November, His Majesty was pleas'd to create Richard Lord Coote (Baron of Colony in Ireland) an Earl of that Kingdom, by the Name of Earl of Bellmont. About the middle of the Month, His Majesty Appointed Thomas Kirke Esq; to be his Consul at Genoa, Lambert Blackwel Esq; to be his Consul at Leghorne; Legborne; Walter Dolman Esq; his Consul at Alicant; Hugh Broughton Esq; his Consul at Venice; Lancelot Stepney Esq; his Consul in the City and Port of O-Porto in the Kingdom of Portugal; and James Paul Esq; his Consul for the Islands of Zant, Corfu, Cefalonia and Theaca, with the other adjacent Islands belonging to the Venetian-Territories, and the Province of Morea, with the Islands, Ports and Districts of and belonging to the same: And soon after, His Majesty was pleas'd to Constitute Robert Godshall Esq; his Consul at Seville, St. Lucar, and Places adjacent, within the Kingdom of Spain. On Dec. 14th, His Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood, in his Bed-Chamber, upon William Cranmore Esq; who Presented a Loyal Address of divers English-Merchants in and about the City of London. On Dec. 23d, His Majesty Knighted Thomas Miller of Chichester Esq; in Consideration of his great Loyalty and Services. On Febr. 13th, Sir Henry Goodrick Kt. and Bar. (Lieutenant-General of Their Majesties Ordnance) was Sworn of the Privy-Council. On Febr. 19th, His Majesty was pleas'd to Constitute William Cheney Esq; Sir John Knatchbul Bar. and Sir Wil. Pulteney Kt. his Commissioners for executing the Office of Keeper of the Privy-Seal. On March 19th, His Majesty was pleas'd to Constitute Sir John Loewther of Loewther Bar. Vice-Chamberlain of His Majesty's Household; Richard Hamden Esq; (who was also made Chancellor of the Exchequer); Thomas Pelham Esq; and Sir Stephen Fox, Lords-Commissioners of the Treasury; and Henry Guy Esq; to be One of the Commissioners of Their Majesties Customs, in the Place of Mr. Felham.

State of Religion.

As to the State of Religion, it was Natural for the Roman-Catholicks to Repine at the present Settlement, as apprehending their late Hopes were extinguish'd, and the Fears of Persecution were coming on 'em, since they had lost a King, whom they always esteem'd to be rais'd by GOD Almighty, to Re-establish the Roman-Faith and Worship in these Kingdoms: But it was strange, to see some of the Higher-Church-Men Disgusted with a Revolution that seem'd to have been Accomplish'd under the particular Direction of HEAVEN, for the Preservation of the Reformed-Establish'd-Religion. These Men murmur'd at the present Posture of Affairs, whispering, That All was Illegal and Unjustifiable; That the Doctrine of the Jesuits, in Absolving from Oaths of Allegiance, was now practically Translated into English: But that King James would shortly Return with a Powerful Army, and Settle Things upon a Right Foundation; for the Interest of the Church of England was Involv'd with that of His Majesty, and that the One cou'd not Subsist without the Restoration of the Other. These Seditious Insinuations were Countenanc'd by some Divines, who refus'd to take the Oaths: And therefore to give Satisfaction in this Point, several of the Bishops and Clergy, in Sermons and Discourses, did abundantly Justifie the Revolution, upon the Principles of Nature, Scripture, and the English-Constitution. Among others, Dr. Burnet (Bishop of Salisbury) Address'd a Pastoral-Letter, Dated May 15th, to the Clergy of his Diocese, concerning the Allegiance Due to King William and Queen Mary, wherein he happen'd to Offend by one Topick, the Right of Conquest; though he did but modestly alledge, "That there were few of those, who did not think, That the King, when He was Prince of Orange, had a Just Cause of War, when He first Undertook this Expedition: For ev'n, at Common-Law, an Heir in Remander, has just Cause to sue him that is in Possession, if he makes waste on the Inheritance which is in Reversion: That it is much more reasonable, since the thing is much more important, That the Heir of a Crown should interpose, when he sees him that is in Possession hurry'd on blindfold, to subject an Independent Kingdom to a Foreign Jurisdiction, and thereby to rob it both of its Glory and of its Security: that when it is manifest, that this must occasion the greatest Ruine and Miseries, possible to that Kingdom; and when a Pretended Heir was set up in such a manner, that the whole Kingdom believ'd him Spurious; in such a Case, it could not be deny'd, even according to the Highest Principles of Passive Obedience, that another Sovereign Prince might make War upon a King so abusing his Power: That this being the Case in Fact, here was a War begun upon just and lawful Grounds; and being so begun, it was the uncontroverted Opinion of all Lawyers, That the Success of a just War gives a lawful Title to that which is acquir'd in the Progress of it; and therefore King James having so far sunk in the War, that he abandon'd his People and deserted the Government, all his Right and Title did accrue to King William, in the Right of a Conquest over him. But tho' with Relation to King James's Rights, he was vested with them by the Successes of a War, yet His Majesty was willing, with relation to the Peers and People of England, to receive the Crown by their Determination, rather than to hold it in the Right of his Sword." The like Argument was more boldly pursu'd about Three Year after, in a Pamphlet, Entitled, King William and Queen Mary Conquerors, suppos'd to be written by Mr. Blount; at which the Parliament then Sitting were so offended, that they Order'd, both that Pamphlet and the Bishop's Letter, to be Publickly burnt by the Common-Executioner; tho' this latter seems then to be sacrific'd to a poor Jest upon the Author's Name.

On April 4. The House of Lords entred into a Consideration of the Report of the Amendments in the Bill for Uniting Their Majesties Protestant-Subjects: And, upon Debate, the Question was put, Whether to agree with the Committee in leaving out the Clause, about the Indifferency of the Posture at Receiving the Sacrament." The Votes were equal, and therefore according to the ancient Rule in the like Cases it was carried in the Negative. The next Day the Lords resum'd the Debate of the Report of the said Amendments, particularly of the Clause concerning a Commission to be given out by the King, to some Bishops and others of the Clergy; and it being propos'd, Whether some of the Laity should be added? The Votes were again equal on both Sides, and so it was again carried in the Negative; but some Peers enter'd their Dissents for these Reasons.

"First; Because the Act itself being, as the Preamble sets forth, designed for the Peace of the State; the putting the Clergy into Communion, with a total Exclusion of the Laity, lays this Humiliation on the Laity, as if the Clergy of the Church of England were alone Friends to the Peace of the State, and the Laity less able, or less concerned to provide for it.

"2. Because the Matter to be considered being barely of Humane-Constitution, viz. the Liturgy and Ceremonies of the Church of England, which had their Establishment from Kings, Lords Spiritual and Temperal, and Commons Assembled in Parliament, there can be no Reason why the Commissioners, for altering any-thing in that Civil-Constitution, should consist only of Men of one sort of them, unless it be suppos'd that Humane Reason is to be quitted in this Affair, and the Inspiration of Spiritual Men to be alone depended on.

"Because tho' upon Romish Principles the Clergy may have the Title to meddle alone in Matters of Religion, yet with us they cannot, where the Church is acknowledg'd and defin'd to consist of Clergy and Laity; and so those Matters of Religion “ Religion which fall under Humane Determination, being properly the Business of the Church, belong equally to both; for in what is of Divine-Institution, neither Clergy nor Laity can make any Alteration at all.

4. “ Because the pretending, That Differences and Delays may arise, by mixing Lay-Men with Ecclesiasticks, to the frustrating the Design of the Commission, is vain and out-of-doors; unless those that make use of this Pretence, suppose that the Clergy-part of the Church have distinct Interests or Designs from the Lay-part of the same Church; and will be a Reason, if Good, why one or other of them shou'd quit this House, for fear of obstructing the Business of it.

5. “ Because the Commission being intended for the Satisfaction of Dissenters, it wou'd be convenient, that Lay-Men of different Ranks, nay, perhaps of different Opinions too, shou'd be mix'd in it, the better to find Expedients for that End; rather than Clergy-Men alone of Our Church, who are generally observ'd to have all very much the same way of Reasoning and Thinking.

6. “ Because it is the most ready way to facilitate the Putting the Alterations into a Law, That Lay-Lords and Commoners shou'd be Join'd in the Commission, who may be able to Satisfie both Houses of the Reasons upon which they were made, and thereby remove all Fears and Jealousies ill Men may raise up against the Clergy, of their Endeavouring to Keep up, without Grounds, a distinct Interest from that of the Laity, whom they so carefully Exclude from being Join'd with them, in Consultations of Common-Concernment, that they will not have those have any Part in the Deliberation, who must have the greatest in Determining.

7. “ Because such a Restrain'd Commission lies liable to this great Objection, That it might be made use of to elude Repeated Promises, and the present General Expectation of Compliance with Tender-Consciences, when the Providing for it, is taken out of the ordinary Course of Parliament, to be put into the Hands of those alone, who were latest in admitting any Need of it, and who may be thought to be the more Unfit to be the Sole Composers of our Differences, when they are look'd upon, by some, as Parties.

Lastly, “ Because, after all, this carries a dangerous Supposition along with it, as if the Laity were not a Part of the Church, nor had any Power to meddle in Matters of Religion; a Supposition directly opposite to the Constitution both of Church and State: Which will make all Alterations utterly impossible, unless the Clergy alone be allow'd to have Power to make Laws in Matters of Religion; since what is Establish'd by Law, cannot be Taken away, but by Consent of Lay-Men in Parliament; the Clergy themselves having no Authority to meddle in this very Case, in which the Laity are Excluded by this Vote, but what they derive from Lay-Hands.

Subscrib'd,

Winchester, Mordant, Lovelace.

I Dissent, for this and other Reasons; because it is contrary to Three Statutes, made in the Reign of K. Henry VIII. and One in K. Edward VI. which Impower Thirty two Commissioners, to Alter the Canon and Ecclesiastical-Law, &c. whereof Sixteen to be of the Laity, and Sixteen of the Clergy.

STAMFORD.

On May 24th, the Act of Toleration, or Liberty of Conscience, receiv'd the Royal-Assent, Intituled, An Act for Exempting Their Majesty's Protestant-

Subjects, Dissenting from the Church of England, from the Penalties of certain Laws. The Reason of it was thus given, in the Preamble: Forasmuch as some Ease to Scrupulous-Consciences, in the Exercise of Religion, may be an effectual Means to Unite Their Majesties Protestant-Subjects in Interest and Affection; It was therefore Enacted, “ That none of the Penal-Laws shall be construd to extend to any Person or Persons Dissenting from the Church of England, that shall take the Oaths to the present Government, and Subscribe the Declaration mention'd in Stat. 20 Car. II. cap. 1. Provided, That no Assembly of Persons so Dissenting, should be had in any Place for Religious Worship with the Doors Lock'd, Barr'd or Bolted, during the time of such Meeting together; and Provided, That nothing should be construed to exempt any of the Persons aforesaid from Paying of Tythes, or other Parochial Duties: If any Dissenter shou'd be Chosen or Appointed to bear the Office of Constable, Church-warden, Overseer, &c. and shou'd scruple the Oaths required by Law to be taken, in respect of such Office, he shall or may execute such Office or Employment by a sufficient Deputy: That all Preachers or Teachers of any Congregation of Dissenting-Protestants, who shall Take the Oaths, and Subscribe the Declaration aforesaid, and also Subscribe the Articles of Religion, mention'd in Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 12. Except the 24th, 25th, and 26th, and these Words in the 20th Article, viz. [The Church hath Power to Decree Rites or Ceremonies, and Authority in Controversies of Faith; and yet] shall not be liable to any of the Pains and Penalties mention'd in Stat. 17 Car. II. 2. 22 Car. II. 13. & 14 Car. II. cap. 4. Every such Teacher shall be exempted from Serving upon any Jury, or from being Chosen and Appointed to bear the Office of Church-warden, Overseer of the Poor, &c. but any Justice of Peace may require any Person that goes to any Meeting, for Exercise of Religion, to Subscribe the Declaration, and to Take the Oaths; and in case of Refusal, is required to Commit such Person to Prison, without Bail or Mainprize, &c.” The like Liberty was given to Anabaptists: And the Quakers were admitted to it, on Condition of making this Declaration of Fidelity: I A. B. do sincerely Promise, and solemnly Declare, before God and the World, That I will be True and Faithful to King William and Queen Mary; and I do solemnly Profess and Declare, That I do, from my Heart, Abhor, Detest and Renounce, as Impious and Heretical, that Damnable Doctrine and Position, [That Princes Excommunicated or Deprived by the Pope, or any Authority of the See of Rome, may be Deposed or Murdered by their Subjects, or any other whatsoever.] And I do Declare, That no Foreign Prince, Person, Prelate, State or Potentate, hath, or ought to have, any Power, Jurisdiction, Superiority, Pre-eminence or Authority, Ecclesiastical or Spiritual, within this Realm. And Subscribing a Profession of their Christian Belief, in these Words: I A. B. Profess Faith in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ his Eternal Son the True God, and in the Holy Spirit, One God Blessed for evermore; and do Acknowledge the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, to be given by Divine Inspiration. “ Provided, That all the Laws made for the frequenting Divine-Service on the Lord's-Day, shall be still in Force and Executed against all Persons that Offend against the said Laws, except such Persons come to some Congregation permitted by this Act. Provided, That if any Person shall maliciously or contemptuously come into any Cathedral or Parish Church, or other

Bill for Union more desirable.
 Tho' the Body of Dissenters were contented with this Liberty, yet the more moderate and wiser Part of 'em would be glad to be taken into the National Establishment; and there was indeed a Bill of Union still depending in Parliament, which pass'd the House of Lords, and when it came down to the House of Commons, they desir'd His Majesty to summon a Convocation, and lay the Matter before them. Accordingly a Convocation was summon'd by the King's Writ, to meet on Dec. 4. In the mean-time His Majesty thought fit to fill up the Vacant Sees: And therefore on Octob. 13. Dr. Edward Stillingfleet, late Dean of St. Paul's, Bishop Elect of Worcester; Dr. Simon Patrick, late Dean of Peterborough, Bishop Elect of Chichester; and Dr. Gilbert Ironside, late Warden of Wadham-College in Oxford, Bishop Elect of Bristol, were Consecrated in the Chappel of Fulham-Palace by the Bishops of London, St. Asaph and Rocheſter, by Virtue of a Commission granted to them in that behalf. And because the time allow'd by Act of Parliament for the Clergy to take the Oaths was expired, those who refus'd to qualifie themselves were Suspended ab Officio; particularly the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of Gloceſter, Ely, Norwich, Bath and Wells, and Peterborough.

In order to prepare Matters to be consider'd by the Convocation, His Majesty issued out this Legal and Reasonable Commission, to the most Eminent Bishops and Divines.

These Commissioners often met, and drew up several Alterations to make Conformity the more easie and acceptable to all manner of Conscientious Persons; but some that were named in the Commission, did either not appear, or did soon desert their other Brethren upon a high Notion, That either no Alterations ought to be made, or at least that this was not a reasonable Time for the making of 'em; of which Number were Dr. Jane, Regius Professor of Divinity in Oxford, and some others. But the better and much greater Majority apply'd themselves to the Business of Accommodation, with great Industry and Prudence: That Point which created the greatest Difficulty, was about the admitting of Dissenting-Ministers to Officiate in the Church, when duely reconciled to it. Some of the Commissioners were inclined not to insist on the Re-ordination of 'em, alledging, That they ought not to shew less Regard to the Vocation of Presbyterian Ministers, than to that of Roman-Catholic Priests, whose Ordination was never question'd upon their joining in Communion with the Church of England. But the Majority thought it more proper to keep a middle Course, which was, first with respect to Romish-Priests, to leave it undecided whether their Ordination was good or no: But because they were not oblig'd to give Credit to their Certificates, That therefore such of 'em as for the future should turn Protestants, should live 1689. in Loy-Communion only, unless they were Re-ordained to a Legal Title of any Church or Cure: And Secondly, That tho' they did not determine the Ordination of Presbyterians to be altogether invalid; yet they thought it necessary for their Ministers to receive Orders from a Bishop, who, in conferring the same, might add a Clause to the Common-Form, as the Church had already Ordain'd in the Case of uncertain Baptism, to this Effect, If thou art not already Ordained, I Ordain thee, &c. and this was the greatest Concession that was made by the Commissioners. One of the Chief Dissenters has given this Opinion of their Proceedings: "These Commissioners often met and debated Matters, but were deserted by Dr. Jane and several others. They drew up sundry Alterations, a Copy of which I have by Me; but they having never thought fit to Communicate them to the Body of the Convocation, or to expose them to the View of the World from the Press, I know not how proper it would be for me to Print them. But this much I shall venture to say, That such Amendments as those were, with such an Allowance in the Point of Orders for Ordination by Presbyters, as is made 12. Elis. Cap. 12. would in all Probability have brought in Two Thirds of the Dissenters in England, which hang done, and at the same Time a Liberty continued to such as could not be comprehended, would have been greater Service than can easily be imagined.

Judgment of the Dissenters upon this Matter.

Account of this Affair from the Bishop's Son's Friend's Paper on Change, 1744.

One of the Commissioners has more lately given this better Account of it; "In the Reign of King James, those of the Church who saw the Papists drawing in the Dissenters to concur with them in their Designs against the Church, applied to the then Prince of Orange, desiring him to make use of his Interest in them for diverting them from that: And in those Letters which are yet extant, Assurances were given, That the Church was then in such a Temper, so well-convinced of former Errors, that if ever she got out of that Distress, all those Differences would be certainly made up: And to make this Assurance more publick, the Arch-Bishop and Bishops in that Petition, for which they were Imprisoned and Tried, Declared, That they were ready to come to a Temper in those Matters, both in Parliament and Convocation. Upon this it was, that the Prince of Orange promised in his Declaration, to use his Endeavours to heal all those Divisions: In order to the performing this, He, by a special Commission appointed all those Bishops who owned his Authority, He being then set on the Throne, together with a great many of the Clergy, to draw out the Grounds upon which the Dissenters had separated from us, and to offer Expedients in order to the Healing our Breaches. We had before us all the Books and Papers that they had at any time offered, setting forth their Demands; together with many Advices and Propositions which had been made at several times, by most of the Best and most Learned of our Divines; of which the late most Learned Bishop of Worcester had a great Collection: So we prepared a Scheme to be laid before the Convocation; but did not think that we ourselves, much less that any other Person, was any way limited, or bound to comply with what we resolv'd to propose. On the contrary, we said, if we saw better Reason, we would change our Minds: Yet this, which was only a Council created by the King to prepare Matters, was complain'd of, as an Imposing on the Convocation, and as a Limiting of it; and tho' a Royal License was sent them, yet a previous Resolution was taken, To admit of no Alterations. When we saw that we resolv'd to be quiet, and leave that Matter to better Times: But then the Enemies of the Civil Government began to work on the Jealousies and Fears of many well-minded Men; and the Preserving the Church, was given out as the Word, by those who meant France or St. Germans by it; and under this fatal Delusion many are apt to be misled to this Day.

The Convocation Met on Thursday, Nov. 21. and began in an unhappy Difference about the Choice of a Prolocutor. The Person design'd by the Bishop of London and most of his Brethren, and the Sober Part of the Clergy, was Dr. Tillotson, Dean of Canterbury, whom the King had lately made Clerk of his Closet, and used to call him the honestest Man, and the best Friend that ever He had in his Life; but it was carried by a Majority of Votes for Dr. Jane of Oxford, who being Presented on the 25. to the Bishop of London as President, for his Approbation, made a Customary Speech in Latin, wherein He extoll'd the Excellency of the Church of England as Established by Law, above all Christian Communities, and imply'd that it wanted no Amendments; and then ended with the Application of this Sentence by way of Triumph, Nehomus Leges Anglie mutari. The Bishop of London, to whom the Prolocutor had been Chaplain, made a Speech in the same Language with more Charity and Candor: He told the Clergy, they ought to endeavour a Temper in those Things that are not Essential in Religion, thereby to open the Door of Salvation to a multitude of Wraying Christians: That it must needs be their Duty, to shew the same Indulgence and Charity to the Dissenters under King William, which some of the Bishops and Clergy had promised to them in their Addresses to King James, and concluded with a Pathetical Exhortation to Unanimity and Concord.

Meeting of the Convocation.

Dr. Jane, Prolocutor, Bishop of London, President.

Bishop of London's Speech.

At the next Meeting, the Bishop of London, being sensible that the Majority of the Lower-House were resolv'd to oppose the intended Union with the Dissenters, acquainted the Convocation, That having communicated the Royal Commission by which they were empower'd to Act, to an Eminent Civilian, He had found it defective in not having the Great-Seal, and therefore He should Prorogue 'em till that was procur'd. During this Interval many Arguments were used to bring the most stiff of the Inferiour Clergy to a Charitable Condescension, and the much-desir'd Union, but to very little Purpose; there was a Jealousie and a Distrust not to be Conquer'd: Tho' there could be but Two Arguments of any Force to justify their Aversen'ds to enter upon the Terms of Accommodation; One was, That it seem'd to derogate from the Dignity of the Church of England to make any Step toward the Altering of her Constitution, till it did appear that the Dissenters themselves did desire a Reconciliation, and were ready to offer some Proposals or to accept of others. A Second Argument might be, That the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury and some of his Suffragans, and some other Divines, would not own the present Government, and were therefore ready to fall into a New Separation from their Brethren; so that at this Juncture it might be dangerous to make any Change that might give a Pretence of being for the Old Church, as well as for the Old King.

The Majority against any Accommodation with the Dissenters.

On Dec. 4. While Both Houses were together in Henry VIIIth's Chapel, the Earl of Nottingham brought in the King's Commission, and a Message from His Majesty in Writing, both which were Read, there being present Twelve Bishops and a good Number of the Inferiour Clergy. The Commission was as follows:

WILLIAM and MARY, by the Grace of God, King and Queen of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith.

The King's Commission to &c.

“ Faith, &c. To all to whom these Presents shall come, Greeting; Whereas, In and by one Act of Parliament, made at Westminster in the Twenty-fifth Year of the Reign of King Henry the VIII. Reciting, That whereas the King’s Humble and Obedient Subjects, the Clergy of this Realm of England, had not only acknowledged according to the Truth, that the Convocation of the same Clergy, were always, had been, and ought to be Assembled only by the King’s Writ; but also submitting themselves to the King’s Majesty, had promised in Verbo Sacerdotis, That they would never from thenceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or put in Ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute any new Canons, Constitutions, Ordinances, Provincial, or others, or by whatsoever other Name they should be called in the Convocation, unless the said King’s most Royal Assent and License might to them be had, to Make, Promulge and Execute the same; and that the said King did give his Royal Assent and Authority in that Behalf.

“ It was therefore Enacted by the Authority of the said Parliament, according to the said Submission and Petition of the said Clergy, among other things, That they, nor any of them from thenceforth should Enact, Promulge or Execute any such Canons, Constitutions, or Ordinances Provincial, by whatsoever Name they might be called in their Convocations in Time coming, which always should be Assembled by Authority of the King’s Writ, unless the same Clergy might have the King’s most Royal Assent and License, to Make, Promulge and Execute such Canons, Constitutions and Ordinances, Provincial or Synodals, upon pain of every one of the said Clergy doing contrary to the said Act, and being thereof Convict, to suffer Imprisonment, and make Fines at the King’s Will.

“ And further, by the said Act it is Provided, That no Canons, Constitutions or Ordinances should be made, or put in Execution within this Realm, by Authority of the Convocations of the Clergy, which should be contrariant or repugnant to the King’s Prerogative-Royal, or the Customs, Laws or Statutes of this Realm, any thing contained in the said Act to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

“ And Lastly, It is also Provided by the said Act, That such Canons, Constitutions, Ordinances and Synodals Provincial, which then were already made, and which then were not contrariant or repugnant to the Laws, Statutes and Customs of this Realm, nor to the Damage or Hurt of the King’s Prerogative-Royal, should then still be used and executed as they were before the making of the said Act, until such time as they should be Viewed, Searched, or otherwise Order’d and Determin’d by the Persons mention’d in the said Act, or the most part of them, according to the Tenor, Form and Effect of the said Act; as by the said Act, among divers other things, more fully and at large, it doth and may appear.

“ And whereas the particular Forms of Divine Worship, and Rites and Ceremonies appointed to be used therein, being Things of their own Nature Indifferent and Alterable, and so Acknowledged, it is but reasonable, that upon weighty and important Considerations, according to the various Exigency of Times and Occasions, such Changes and Alterations should be made therein, as to those that are in Place and Authority, should from time to time, seem either necessary or expedient.

“ And whereas the Book of Canons is fit to be Reviewed, and made more Suitable to the State of the Church: And whereas there are divers Defects and Abuses in the Ecclesiastical

“ Courts and Jurisdictions; and particularly there is not sufficient Provision made for the removing of Scandalous Ministers, and for the Reformation of Manners, either in Ministers or People: And whereas it is most fit that there should be a strict Method prescribed, for the Examination of such Persons as desire to be admitted into Holy Orders, both as to their Learning and Manners: Know ye, that We, for divers urgent and weighty Causes and Considerations, Us thereunto moving, of Our especial Grace, certain Knowledge, and meer Motion, have by Virtue of Our Prerogative-Royal, and Supreme Authority in Causes-Ecclesiastical, Given and Granted, and by these Presents do Give and Grant, Full, Free and Lawful Liberty, License, Power and Authority unto the Right Reverend Father in God, Henry, Lord-Bishop of London, President of this present Convocation for the Province of Canterbury, (upon the Suspension of the Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury,) during this present Parliament now Assembled; and in his Absence, to such other Bishop as shall be appointed President thereof, and to the rest of the Bishops of the same Province, and all Deans of Cathedral-Churches, Arch-Deacons, Chapters and Colleges, and the whole Clergy of every several Diocese, within the said Province: That they the said Lord-Bishop of London, or other President of the said Convocation, and the rest of the Clergy of this present Convocation within the said Province of Canterbury, or the greatest Number of them, whereof the President of the said Convocation to be always one, shall and may from time to time, during this present Parliament, Confer, Treat, Debate, Consider, Consult, and Agree of and upon such Points, Matters, Causes and Things, as We from time to time shall Propose or cause to be Proposed by the said Lord Bishop of London, or other President of the said Convocation, concerning Alterations and Amendments of the Liturgy and Canons, and Orders, Ordinances and Constitutions for the Reformation of Ecclesiastical-Courts, for the Removing of Scandalous Ministers, for the Reformation of Manners either in Ministers or People, and for the Examination of such Persons as desire to be admitted into Holy Orders; and all such other Points, Causes and Matters as We shall think Necessary and Expedient, for advancing the Honour and Service of ALMIGHTY GOD, the Good and Quiet of the Church, and the better Government thereof.

“ And We do also, by these Presents, Give and Grant unto the said Lord-Bishop of London, or other President of the said Convocation, and to the rest of the Bishops of the said Province of Canterbury, and unto all Deans of Cathedral-Churches, Arch-Deacons, Chapters and Colleges, and the whole Clergy of every several Diocese within the said Province, full, free and lawful Liberty, License, Power and Authority, That they the said Lord-Bishop of London, or other President of the said Convocation, and the rest of the said Bishops, and other the Clergy of the same Province, or the greatest Number of them that shall be present in Person, or by their Proxies, shall and may, from Time to Time, draw into Forms, Rules, Orders, Ordinances, Constitutions and Canons, such Matters as to them shall be thought Necessary and Expedient for the Purposes above-mention’d; and the same set down in Writing, from Time to Time, to Exhibit and Deliver, or cause to be Exhibited and Delivered unto Us; to the end that We, as Occasion shall require, may thereupon have the Advice of Our Parliament: And that such, and so many of the said Canons, Orders, Ordinances, 1689. " Constitutions, Matters, Causes and Things, as shall be thought Requisite and Convenient by Our said Parliament, may be Presented to Us in due Form, for Our Royal-Assent, if, upon Mature Consideration thereof, we shall think fit to Enact the same. In Witnesses whereof, we have caus'd these Our Letters to be made Patent.

Witnesses Ourselves at Westminster the Thirtieth Day of November, in the First Year of Our Reign.

Per Breve de Privato Sigillo,

BURKER.

His Majesty's Message to the Convocation, is as follows.

WILLIAM R.

The King's Message to the Convocation.

" HIS Majesty has Summon'd this Convocation, not only because 'tis Usual, upon Holding of a Parliament, but out of a Pious Zeal, to do every thing that may tend to the best Establishment of the Church of England, which is so Eminent a Part of the Reformation, and is certainly the best suited to the Constitution of this Government, and therefore does most signally deserve, and shall always have both His Favour and Protection; and He doubts not, but that you will Assist Him in promoting the Welfare of it, so that no Prejudices, which some Men may have labour'd to possess you, shall disappoint His good Intentions, or deprive the Church of any Benefit from your Consultations. His Majesty therefore expects, That the Things that shall be Propos'd, shall be Calmly and Impartially Consider'd by you; and assures you, That He will offer nothing to you, but what shall be for the Honour, Peace and Advantage, both of the Protestant-Religion in General, and particularly of the Church of England.

The Bishops Agreed on this Address to His Majesty :

The Convocation's Address to the King.

" WE Your Majesties Most Dutiful Subjects, the Bishops and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, in Convocation Assembled, having receiv'd Your Majesty's Gracious Message, together with a Commission from Your Majesty, by the Earl of Nottingham, hold Ourselves bound in Gratitude and Duty, to return our most humble Thanks and Acknowledgments, of the Grace and Goodness express'd in Your Majesty's Message, and the Zeal you shew in it for the Protestant-Religion in General, and the Church of England in Particular, and of the Trust and Confidence reposed in Us, by this Commission. We look upon these Marks of Your Majesty's Care and Favour, as the Continuance of the Great Deliverance Almighty GOD wrought for Us, by Your Means, in making You the blessed Instrument of Preserving Us from falling under the Cruelty of Papish Tyranny. For which, as We have often Thank'd Almighty GOD, so We cannot forget that high Obligation and Duty which We owe to Your Majesty; and on these new Assurances of Your Protection and Favour to Our Church, We beg Leave to renew the Assurance of Our constant Fidelity and Obedience to Your Majesty; Whom we Pray GOD to continue Long and Happily to Reign over Us.

Discontents and Divisions in the Lower-House.

The Lower-House, whose profess'd Business was to do nothing, would not Consent to this Address, but first pleaded for the Privilege of Presenting a separate Address of their own Drawing up; and then, dropping that Pretension, they fell to making Amendments, and gave a Reason 1689. why they cou'd not Concur with the Bishops, in their Form, in these Words: We are desirous to confine Our Address to His Majesty's Most Gracious Message, and to those Things only therein which concern the Church of England. Hereupon a Conference was desir'd, that was chiefly Manag'd between the Bishop of Salisbury and the Prolocutor; and these Reasons were Reported, why Their Lordships insisted on the express Mention of the Protestant-Religion: 1. " Because it is the known Denomination of the Common-Doctrine of the Western-part of Christendom, in Opposition to the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome. 2. Because the Leaving out this, may have Ill-Consequences, and be liable to strange Constructions, both at Home and Abroad, among Protestants aswell as Papists. 3. Because it Agrees with the General Reason, offer'd by the Clergy, for their Amendments, since this is expressly mention'd in the King's Message; and in this the Church of England being so much Concern'd, the Bishops think it ought to stand still in the Address. The Lower-House Debated these Reasons, and Disagreed to 'em; and then Resolv'd, That in stead of Protestant-Religion, they wou'd rather say, Protestant-Churches. Their Lordships Desir'd a Reason of this Alteration? Which was return'd to 'em in these Words: " We being the Representative of a Form'd Establish'd-Church, do not think fit to mention the word Religion, any farther than it is the Religion of some Form'd Establish'd-Church. The Lords return'd the Amendments, with this Alteration: " We doubt not the Interest of the Protestant-Religion, in this and all other Protestant-Churches.

The Lower-House seeming to fear it was a Diminution to the Church of England, to join it with Foreign Protestant-Churches, wou'd have the words [this and] to be omitted; and at last, with great Difficulty, this Address was Agreed on, and Presented to His Majesty in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, on Thursday Dec. 12th:

" WE Your Majesty's Most Loyal and Most Dutiful Subjects, the Bishops and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, in Convocation Assembled, having receiv'd a Most Gracious Message from Your Majesty, by the Earl of Nottingham, hold Ourselves bound in Duty and Gratitude, to return Our Most Humble Acknowledgments for the same, and the Pious Zeal and Care Your Majesty is pleas'd to express therein, for the Honour, Peace, Advantage and Establishment of the Church of England; whereby, We doubt not, the Interest of the Protestant-Religion in all other Protestant-Churches, which is Dear to Us, will be the better Secur'd, under the Influence of Your Majesty's Government and Protection. And We crave Leave to Assure Your Majesty, That in pursuance of that Trust and Confidence You repose in Us, We will Consider, whatsoever shall be Offered to Us from Your Majesty, without Prejudice, and with all Calmness and Impartiality: And that We will constantly pay the Fidelity and Allegiance which We have all Sworn to Your Majesty and the Queen; Whom we Pray GOD to Continue Long and Happily to Reign over Us.

His Majesty well understood why this Address omitted the Thanks which the Bishops had recommended His Royal Commission, and the Zeal He had shewn for the Protestant-Religion; and why there was no Expression of Tenderness to the Dissenters, and but a cool Regard to other Protestant-Churches. However, His Majesty return'd this Gracious Answer: My LORDS, I take this Address very kindly from the Convocation. You may depend

The King's Answer to the Address.

1689. depend upon it, That all I have Promis'd, and all I can Do, for the Service of the Church of England, I will Do : And I give you this new Assurance, That I will Improve all Occasions and Opportunities for its Service.

The Majority of the Lower-House had a reserved Kindness for the Non-Juring Bishops and Clergy ; and therefore, One of the Members made a zealous Speech, in Behalf of the Bishops under Suspension, " That something might be done, to qualifie 'em to Sit in Convocation ; yet so, as that the Convocation might not incur any Danger thereby." But this Matter was too hard for 'em, and therefore it was left to farther Consideration ; while they labour'd to find out some other Business, to divert 'em from that for which they were Call'd together : And therefore, on Dec. 11th, the Prolocutor Attended the President and Bishops, and, in the Name of the House, represented to Their Lordships, " That there were several Books of very Dangerous Consequence to the Christian Religion, and the Church of England ; particularly, Notes upon Athanasius's Creed, and Two Letters relating to the present Convocation, lately come abroad ; and desir'd Their Lordships Advice, in what Way, and how far safely, without incurring the Penalty of Stat. 25. Hen. VIII. the Convocation may Proceed, in the preventing the Publishing the like Scandalous Books for the future, and inflicting the Censure of the Church, according to the Canons provided in that behalf, upon the Authors of 'em." Upon which the Prolocutor soon after acquainted the House, " That the President had declar'd his Sence of the Ill-Consequence of those Books that were sent up from this House to Their Lordships ; and that, upon Enquiry, he cou'd not receive any Satisfaction, how far the Convocation might Proceed in that Affair, but he wou'd, as far as lay in him, take farther Order about it." When the President and his Brethren saw the Disposition of the Lower-House, they found it was to no Purpose to communicate any Proposals to 'em ; and therefore the Convocation was Prorogu'd to Jan. 24th, and soon after, with the Parliament, Prorogu'd and Dissolv'd. " It must be confess'd, (says a late Writer) That the Presbyterians did not a little contribute to exasperate the Convocation against 'em, having, at this very time, given Orders to near Fifty Young Students ; and Mr. Baxter (the Head of their Party) having Publish'd a Book, reflecting on the Church of England. It was also reported, That the Presbyterians of Scotland were the Authors of a Sham-Plot, which they father'd upon the Episcopal-Party of Glasgowe, that they might have a Pretence to Difarm 'em, and Oppr's 'em.

1690. On Thursday March 20th, the New-Parliament Met at Westminster, pursuant to Their Majesties Writs of Summons ; and His Majesty being in his Royal-Robes, Seated on the Throne, the Commons were Sent for up, by the Usher of the Black-Rod : Who accordingly Attending, the Lord-Chief-Baron Atkyns (Speaker of the House of Peers) by His Majesty's Command, signify'd to 'em His Majesty's Pleasure, " That they shou'd forthwith proceed to the Choice of a Speaker, and present him to His Majesty the next Morning." After which, the Commons return'd to their House, and made Choice of Sir John Trevor Kt. to be their Speaker ; who being the next Morning Presented to His Majesty, seated on the Throne in the House of Peers, His Majesty did graciously Approve of him, and then His Majesty made this Speech to both Houses :

My Lords and Gentlemen ;
I Am resolv'd to leave nothing unattempted on My Part, which may contribute to the

The King's Speech.

1690. Peace and Prosperity of this Nation : And finding My Prefence in Ireland will be absolutely necessary, for the more speedy Reducing of that Kingdom, I continue My Resolution of going thither as soon as may be ; and I have now Call'd you together, for your Assistance, to enable Me to prosecute the War with Speed and Vigour : In which I assure My Self of your cheerful Concurrence, being a Work so necessary for your own Safeties.

" In order to this, I Desire you will forthwith make a Settlement of the Revenue ; and I cannot doubt, but you will therein have as much Regard for the Honour and Dignity of the Monarchy in My Hands, as has been lately shew'd to Others : And I have so great a Confidence in you, That if no Quicker or More-convenient Way can be found, for the Raising of Ready-Money, (without which, the Service cannot be perform'd) I shall be very well Content, for the present, to have it made such a Fund of Credit, as may be Useful to Yourselfes, aswell as Me, in this Conjunction ; not having the least Apprehensions, but that you will provide for the taking off all such Anticipations as it shall happen to fall under.

" It is sufficiently known, how earnestly I have endeavour'd to Extinguish (or, at least, Compose) all Differences amongst My Subjects, and to that end, how often I have recommended an Act of Indemnity to the last Parliament : But since that Part of it, which related to the Preventing of private Suits, is already Enacted, and because Debates of that nature must take up more of your Time, than can now be spar'd from the Dispatch of those other Things, which are absolutely necessary for Our Common-Safety ; I Intend to send you an Act of Grace, with Exceptions of some few Persons only, but such as may be sufficient to shew My great Dislike of their Crimes ; and at the same time, My Readiness to extend Protection to all My other Subjects, who will thereby see, That they can Recommend themselves to Me, by no other Methods than what the Lawes prescribe, which shall always be the only Rule of My Government.

" A farther Reason, which Induceth Me to Send you this Act at this time, is, Because I am Desirous to leave no Colour of Excuse to any of My Subjects, for the Raising of Disturbances in the Government, and especially in the time of My Absence ; and I say this, both to inform you, and to let some Ill-affected Men see, that I am not unacquainted, how busie they are, in their present Endeavours, to Alter it.

" Amongst other Encouragements, which I find they give themselves, one of the Ways, by which they hope to compass their Designs, is, by creating Differences and Disagreements in your Counsels, which, I hope, you will be very careful to prevent ; for be assured, That Our greatest Enemies can have no better Instruments for their Purposes, than those who shall any way endeavour to Disturb or Delay your Speedy and Unanimous Proceeding upon these necessary Matters.

" I must recommend also to your Consideration, an Union with Scotland : I do not mean, it should be now entred upon ; but they having Propos'd this to Me some time since, and the Parliament there having Nominated Commissioners for that Purpose, I shou'd be glad that Commissioners might also be Nominated here, to Treat with them, and to see if such Terms cou'd be Agreed on, as might be for the Benefit of both Nations, so as to be ready to be Presented to you in some future Session.

1690.

My Lords and Gentlemen ;

" I have thought it most convenient, to leave the Administration of the Government in the Hands of the Queen, during my Absence ; and if it shall be judg'd necessary to have an Act of Parliament, for the better Confirmation of it to Her, I Desire you will let such an one be Prepared to be Presented to Me.

" I have this only to add, That the Season of the Year, and my Journey into Ireland, will admit but of a very short Session ; so that I must recommend to you the making such Dispatch, that We may not be engag'd in Debates, when Our Enemies shall be in the Field. For the Success of the War, and the more thrifty Management of it, will both principally depend upon your speedy Resolutions. And I hope it will not be long before we shall meet again, to perfect what the time will not now allow to be done.

This Speech had a good Influence on Both Houses ; and the Commons were now generally such as were well-affect'd to the present Government, and had a hearty Concern for the Support and Settlement of it : And yet there were some of the Old Speaking Members of the discontented Party, who, upon Occasion, betray'd their Temper different from that of the Majority. The first Business of Importance the Commons entred upon, was the Settling a Revenue for the Maintenance of the Civil-List. Upon which Occasion, Sir Charles Sidley made this bold and memorable Speech, against Exorbitant Pensions and Salaries :

Mr. SPEAKER ;

Speech of Sir Charles Sidley. " WE have Provided for the Army ; we have Provided for the Navy : And now, at last, a New Reckoning is brought us, we must likewise Provide for the Lists. Truly, Mr. Speaker, 'tis a sad Reflection, That some Men shou'd Wallow in Wealth and Places, whilst others Pay away, in Taxes, the Fourth-part of their Revenue, for the Support of the same Government. We are not upon Equal Terms, for His Majesty's Service : The Courtiers and Great Officers Charge, as it were, in Armour ; they feel not the Taxes, by reason of their Places, whilst the Country-Gentlemen are Shot through and through by them. — The King is pleas'd to lay his Wants before us, and, I am confident, expects our Advice upon it : We ought therefore to tell Him what Pensions are too Great ; what Places may be Extinguish'd, during the Time of the War, and Publick-Calamity. His Majesty sees nothing but Coaches and Six, and great Tables, and therefore cannot imagine the Want and Misery of the rest of his Subjects : He is a Brave and Generous Prince, but He's a Young King, encompass'd and hemm'd-in by a Company of Crafty Old Courtiers. To say no more, some have Places of 3000*l.* some of 6000*l.* and others of 8600*l.* per An. and I am told, the Commissioners of the Treasury have 1600*l.* per An. a-piece. Certainly, Publick-Pensions, whatever they have been formerly, are much too great for the present Want and Calamity that reigns every-where else : And it is a Scandal, that a Government so Sick at Heart as ours is, shou'd Look so well in the Face. — We must Save the King Money where-ever we can ; for I'm afraid the War is too great for our Purves, if Things be not Manag'd with all imaginable Thrift. When the People of England see all Things are Sav'd, that can be Sav'd ; that there are no Exorbitant Pensions, nor Unnecessary 1690.

Salaries, and all this Applied to the Use to which they are Given ; We shall Give, and They shall Pay, whatever His Majesty can Want, to Secure the Protestant-Religion, and to Keep out the King of France, and King James too, whom, by the way, I have not heard nam'd this Session ; whether out of Fear, Discretion, or Respect, I cannot tell. — I Conclude, Mr. Speaker, Let us Save the King what we can, and then let us proceed to Give Him what we are able.

The Ill-Intention of this Speech was diverted by the Wiser Members ; and the House soon fell upon the Resolution of Granting to Their Majesties all the Revenues that King James enjoy'd the 20th of December, 1688. as Rights of the Crown, (excepting Chimney-Money.) Then they Resolv'd, That Their Majesties shou'd be put into the Possession of such Additional Excises, as had been Granted to King Charles II. and King James II. and Order'd that Revenue to be a Security for the Raising the present Money. And farther, They Agreed to Grant, for Four Years, to begin from Christmas following, a Continuance of all such Customs as the Two late Kings had enjoy'd ; and upon which, Their Majesties might take up a Sum of Money, as shou'd be Regulated in a Bill for that Purpose. And aswell to Preserve, as to Improve, they Order'd, A Bill against Alienation of the Crown-Revenues, upon any Pretence whatsoever.

Encourag'd by these Votes, several Private-Persons advanc'd Money, to Supply the King's present Occasions, which were much the greater, for His Intended Expedition.

Not long after, a Bill was brought in to the Lower-House, Requiring all their Majesties Subjects to Abjure the late King James, under Pain of Imprisonment, without Bail or Mainprife : But, upon a Second Reading, it was laid aside, both because it might create an unnecessary Disturbance, and because it seem'd to bear too hard on the Liberties of the Subject. However, the Commons Prepar'd Two Acts, which tended to the same Purpose : By the First, They Declared Guilty of High-Treason, all those that were actually in the Service of King James in Ireland, and their Estates Forfeited to Their Majesties, unless their Children were Protestants. And by the Second, They Confirm'd all the Acts of the Convention-Parliament, by which, King William and Queen Mary were Acknowledg'd to be Lawful King and Queen of England.

The King was very intent upon going over in Person to Ireland, and putting an Issue to that dangerous War; and therefore he employ'd his Ministers in the House of Commons, to draw up a Bill for putting the Administration of the Government into the Queen's Hands, not only during the King's Absence in Ireland, but when-ever his Affairs should call him out of the Kingdom: And that nothing might happen to the Prejudice of the Government, whilst he himself was abroad, he thought fit to require, That the Deputy-Lieutenants of the several Counties, should be Authoriz'd to raise the Militia in case of necessity, and all Papists should be order'd to repair to their Places of Abode, and not stir above Five Miles from thence without leave. And that His Majesty might have the greater Confidence in the City of London, a Bill was to be brought in for Reversing the Judgment in a Quo Warranto against their Charter, and for restoring all their ancient Rights and Liberties. When these Things were ready, His Majesty came on Tuesday, May 20. to the House of Lords, and gave the Royal Assent to, (1.) An Act for the Exercise of the Government by Her Majesty, during His Majesty's Absence. (2.) An Act for Reversing the Judgment in a Quo Warranto against the City of London, and for Restoring the City of London to its ancient Rights and Privileges. (3.) An Act to declare the Right and Freedom of Election of Members to serve in Parliament for the Cinque-Ports. (4.) An Act for the Discouraging the Importation of Thrown Silk. (5.) An Act for Confirming to the Governour and Company Trading to Hudson's-Bay, their Privileges and Trade. (6.) An Act for the Encouraging and better Establishing the Manufacture of White Paper in this Kingdom; and to Two Private Acts.

The Bill of Indemnity and Free Pardon, so earnestly Recommended by His Majesty, did at last pass Both Houses, after great Debates held, and many Difficulties remov'd, about the Subject of it. The Clemency of the King, and the Generosity of the Parliament, were very great; for among all the late Instruments of Popery and Arbitrary Power, there were but Thirty Five Persons expressly excepted; and of them, few or none made Examples of the Justice of the Nation. The Persons excepted were,

And also excepted George Lord Jeffreys deceas'd. The King thought it proper to conclude the Session with this Act of Grace; and therefore on Friday, May 23. He came to the House of Lords, and gave the Royal Assent to this Act for the King and Queens most Gracious General and Free Pardon. After which His Majesty was pleased to make this Speech to Both Houses.

My Lords and Gentlemen;

I Have had such Assurance of your good Affections to Me, that I come now to Thank you, and particularly, for the Supplies you have given Me. The Season of the Year is so far advanc'd, that I can no longer delay my going into Ireland, and therefore I think it necessary to have an Adjournment of the Parliament: And though it shall be but to a short day, yet unless some great Occasion require it (of which you shall have due notice) I do not intend you shall sit to do Business until the Winter; and I hope, by

The two Houses adjourn.

Then the Lord Chief-Baron, Speaker of the House of Peers, told Both Houses, It was His Majesty's Pleasure; that they Adjourn themselves to the 7th day of July next.

Honours and Offices

On May 30. His Majesty was pleas'd to Constitute Richard Pyne, Esq; Sir Richard Reeves, Kt. and Robert Rochford, Esq; Commissioners of the Great-Seal of Ireland, as also Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer and General-Gaol-Delivery within the said Kingdom: And on June 3. Sir John Trevor, Knt. Speaker of the House of Commons, Sir William Rowlinson, Knt. and Sir George Hutchins, Knt. were Sworn Lords-Commissioners for the Great-Seal of England; and on the same day, Charles Marquess of Winchester, Lord-Chamberlain to the Queen, was Sworn one of the Lords of the Privy-Council. The next Morning, June 4. His Majesty set out on his Royal Voyage for Ireland; and Dining with Mr. Guy of Tring, he lay that Night at Northampton, the next at Litchfield, the third at Whitchurch, and came by Saturday-noon to Colonel Whitely's House, between Chester and Higblake. On Sunday Morning His Majesty went to Chester with a Numerous Attendance of Nobility and Gentry. His Majesty went directly to the Cathedral, the Mayor carrying the Sword, and the Senior-Alderman the Mace before him: At the Church-door, the Bishop and his Clergy received His Majesty, and Conducted him into the Chaire. After Divine-Service and a Sermon preached by the Bishop, His Majesty took Coach again, and went to Gayton, the House of Mr. Gleg, where he was met by Sir Cloudesly Shovel, and the rest of the Sea-Commanders. On Wednesday, June 11. His Majesty Embark'd at Higblake, and set sail about Noon with a Fair Wind, with six Men of War, commanded by Sir Cloudesly Shovel, six Yachts, and as many other Transport-Vessels, as made up a Fleet of above Three Hundred Sail. On Saturday Morning, by half an hour after One, His Majesty arriv'd in the Bay of Carrick-fergus, and about Three went ashore, and travell'd by Land about Eight Miles to Belfast: Where he was met by the Duke of Schonberg, the Prince of Wirtemberg, Major-General Kirke, and other General-Officers; being attended from England, by his Royal Highness Prince George of Denmark, the Duke of Ormond, the Earls of Oxford, Scarborough and Manchester, the Honourable Mr. Boyle, and many other Persons of Distinction. Next day being Sunday, Dr. Royse Preach'd before the King, on Heb. 6. 11. Through Faith they subdued Kingdoms. Two or three days after, His Majesty din'd with the General, at his Head-Quarters at Lisburne, and from thence went on to Hillsborough; where, on the 20th, he publish'd an Order, Forbidding the Pressing of Horses, and committing any Violences upon the Country-People. Then hearing some cautious Advices given by the General-Officers, he said, He did not come there to let Grass grow under his Feet, but he would pursue the War with the utmost Vigor. And therefore order'd the whole Army to march into the Field, and encamp at Loughbritland, where the King arriv'd, June 22. and taking a particular View of the Army, he found them to consist of Thirty Six Thousand Men in good Heart and Condition: From hence they marched to Newry, and on the 27th to Dundalk. King was so pleas'd with the Prospect of the Country as he rid along, that he said to those about him, It was worth Fighting for. Upon Advice, that the Enemy had abandon'd Ardee, the King immediately directed his March thither.

1690.

The late King James was no sooner inform'd of King William's Landing, but he agreed to the Necessity of meeting him in the Field; and therefore, on the 16th of June, he set out from Dublin with about Six Thousand French Foot, being old Experienced Soldiers, lately arriv'd from France, and committed the Guard of that City to Six Thousand of the County-Militia, under the Command of Colonel Lutterel. But, as if foreseeing his own Misfortunes, he had order'd Sir Patrick Trant, Commissioner of the Revenue, to prepare him Ships at Waterford, that after a Flight, he might secure his Retreat to France. King James coming up to the rest of his Forces, which now amounted to almost an equal number with those of King William's, besides Fifteen Thousand which remain'd in Garifons, he held a Council of War; wherein it was thought fit to repass the Boyne, and to weary out the English by Marches and Counter-marches along that River, which they thought impossible for them to pass, while they could defend the opposite Banks at such great Advantage.

K. James resolves to meet him in the Field.

On the 30th of June, King William being inform'd that the Enemy had repass'd the Boyne, Order'd his whole Army to move by Break of Day in Three Lines towards that River, which was about Three Miles distant from 'em; whereupon the Advanc'd-Guards of Horse commanded by Sir John Lanier, mov'd in very good Order, and by Nine of the Clock got within Two Miles of Drogheda. The King, who March'd in the Front of 'em, rode nearer to view the Enemy's Camp, which He found to be all along the River in Two Lines. Upon this Prospect His Majesty held a Consult and long Discourse with the Prince, Duke Schonberg, Duke of Ormond, Count Solms, Major-General Scravenmore, the Lord Sidney, and other Great Officers, who made their several Observations upon the Enemy; among the rest, Scravenmore seem'd to despise 'em, and said they were Un Petit Armee, for they could not reckon above Forty-six Regiments that lay Encamp'd; but the King wisely answer'd, " That they might have a great many Men in the Town, and that also there was a Hill to the South-West, beyond which Part of their Army might well lie: But however (says the King) We shall soon be better acquainted with their Numbers."

The Battle of the Boyne.

The King rid on to the Pass of the Old-Bridge, and stood upon the Side of the Bank within Musquet-shot of the Ford, there to take a nearer View of the Enemy's Posture, and in some time after rid about Two Hundred Paces up the River in full View of the Irish-Army, with an intrepid Bravery, and a fixt Resolution to Engage 'em. Whilst his Army was Marching in, He alighted from his Horse and sat down, upon a rising Ground, where He refresh'd himself for about an Hour, during which Time a Party of about Forty Horse advancing very slowly, made a Stand upon a Plow'd Field over against the King, and brought Two Field-Pieces with them, which they dropt by a Hedge on the said Ground. The King was no sooner Mounted again but the Irish Fired at him, and with the First Shot kill'd a Man, and Two Horses within an Hundred Paces of His Majesty. This Bullet was presently succeeded by another, that having first graz'd on the Bank of the River, did in its rising flant upon the King's right Shoulder, der, took out a Piece of his Coat, and tore the Skin and Fleth, and afterwards broke the Head of a Gentleman's Pistol. My Lord Coningsby no sooner saw His Majesty Wounded, but he rid up and clapt his Handkerchief upon the fore Place, while the King himself mounted again and kept on his Pace, and only said, There was no Necessity, the Bullet should have come nearer. The Enemy seeing some Disorder among those that attended King William, concluded presently He was kill'd, and immediately set up a Shout all over their Camp, and drew down several Squadrons of their Horse upon a Plain towards the River, as if they meant to pass and pursue the English Army. Nay the Report of King William's Death flew presently to Dublin, and from thence spread as far as Paris, where the People were encourag'd to express their Impious Joys by Bonfires and Illuminations. King William continued on Horse-back without the least Concern, till Four in the Afternoon when He Dined in the Field, and in the Evening was on Horse-back again; tho' He had been up from One in the Morning. About Nine at Night He call'd a Council of War, and declar'd his Resolution to pass the River next Day, which Duke Schomberg at first oppos'd, but finding the King positive, He advis'd, that Part of the Army, Horse and Foot, should be sent that Night towards Slain-Bridge, in order to pass the River thereabouts, and so get between the Enemy and the Pass at Duleck. This Advice seem'd to be at first well-relish'd, but it being afterwards oppos'd by the Dutch Generals, Duke Schomberg retir'd to his Tent, where not long after the Order of Battel was brought him, which He receiv'd with Discontent and Indifference, saying, It was the first that ever was sent him. Lieutenant-General Douglas was to Command the Right Wing of Foot, and Count Mynard de Schomberg the Horse, who were to March on early towards Slain-Bridge, and other Fords up the River, to Flank the Enemy, or get between their Camp and Dragheda, whilst in the meantime a Body of Foot were to force their Way, by the Pass at Old-Bridge. The Cannonading continued on both Sides till it was dark Night, when King William gave Orders that every Soldier should be provided with a good Stock of Ammunition, and be ready to March at Break of Day, with every Man a Green Bough or Sprig in his Hat, to distinguish him from the Enemy, who wore Pieces of white Paper in their Hats. The Word that Night being Westminster, His Majesty rode in Person about Twelve at Night, with Torches quite through the Army, and then retir'd to his Tent, impatient of the approaching Day.

Disposition of the Two Armies.

That expected Day, July the 1st, being come, about Six in the Morning Lieutenant-General Douglas March'd towards the Right with some Foot, as did Count Schomberg with the Horse; which being observ'd by the Enemy, they drew out their Horse and Foot towards the Left to oppose 'em. Our Right Wing was at first Order'd to pass all at Slain, but on better Information from the Guides, several Regiments were commanded to go over, at other Fords between the Camp and that Place. When our Horse approached the River, a Regiment of the Enemy's Dragoons Fired upon 'em, and made a Show of opposing their Passage; but being soon forc'd to retire with Loss, the English got over and advanc'd towards the Enemy's Main-Body, which they found drawn up in Two Lines. Hereupon Douglas drew up his Detachment in the same Figure, but having Six Battalions only of Foot to Twenty-four Squadrons of Horse and Dragoons, 1690.

He sent for more Foot to join Him; and in the mean-time He took my Lord Portland's Advice, of intermixing the Horse and Foot for their Security. More Foot being come up, this Figure was immediately alter'd, and all the Horse were drawn to the Right, whilst the Foot moved towards a Bog on the left, which Motion so frighted the Irish that they retreated in great Haste towards Duleck, but were vigorously pursu'd by Count Schomberg.

Tho' King William was ignorant of what had passed, yet supposing that by this time they had got over the River, He order'd Three Attacks to be made to open the several Passes; the Blew Dutch-Guards of Foot were the First that took the River at Old-Bridge, beating a March all the while till they got upon the Side of the Bank, and then the Drums ceasing, in they went Eight or Ten a-Breast wading to the Middle; and being got over amidst the Enemy's Fire, they drew up into Two Files, and then Fired upon the Irish behind the Hedges, who were so discourag'd that they ran away and scatter'd themselves in the next Field: But before the Dutch could put themselves into good Order, they were charg'd by a Squadron of Irish-Horse whom they beat off, and stood their own Ground with great Stoutness. The Regiments of Sir John Hanmore and Count Nassau were passing at another Part of the River, where a Squadron of Lieutenant-General Hamilton's Horse, rode briskly to the very Brink of the River to stop their Passage; but being not able to oppose their Landing, they wheel'd away, and in their Retreat fell upon the French Foot with so much Indignation, that Part of 'em broke thro' Monf. Le Callemotes, and Cambones Regiments, which wanted Pikes to stem their furious Career. Callemote himself receiv'd his Mortal Wound, and as he was carrying back by Four Soldiers to the English Camp, He encourag'd those that cross'd the River by these Words; A la Gloire, mes Enfants, a la Gloire, To Glory, my Boys, to Glory; which Words had their Force, and a sort of Prediction in 'em, for the Irish-Horse being obliged to wheel to the Left, and pass through a Village to recover their own Men, they were intercepted by the Dutch and Inniskillin-Foot, and most of 'em, after a valiant Resistance, were cut in pieces. By this time the Dutch Guards being advanc'd as far as the Hedges, into the open Field, the Irish-Horse came down upon 'em again with greater Numbers and redoubled Fury, but were so warmly receiv'd that they were forced to retire; yet a fresh Squadron of Horse advanc'd to support 'em, but they too were vigorously repuls'd, by the French-Protestants and Inniskillin-Men.

In the mean-time the Dunes came up to the Left, but were so valiantly attack'd in the Front by Hamilton's Horse, that they were forced to give Ground; and some of 'em run cross the River again. The Duke of Schomberg perceiving this Disorder, and seeing the French-Protestants were also left expos'd without a Commander, immediately pass'd the River in order to Head 'em, with so much Hurry that He would not be perswaded by Monsieur Foubert, one of his Aids de Camp to put on his Armour. He was no sooner got on the other Side, but He call'd to the French-Protestants in these brave Words: Allons, Messieurs, voila vostre Persecuteurs; (Come on, Gentlemen, see there your Persecutors.) pointing to the French-Papists in the Enemy's Army: Immediately Fifteen or Sixteen of King James's Guards, who were returning main Speed to their Main-Body, after the Slaughter of their Companions, fell furiously upon the Duke, and gave him Two Wounds over the Head. At the same time, 1690. time, the French-Refugees firing rashly upon the Enemy, are suppos'd to have shot the Duke through the Neck; upon which he fell from his Horse, and instantly Died. Monsieur Foubert, alighting to relieve him, was shot in the Arm: And Doctor Walker, so Famous for the Defence of London-Derry, about the same Time, in a different Action, receiv'd a Wound in the Belly, which he surviv'd but some few Moments.

King William Passes the Boyne.

His Majesty, accompany'd by the Prince of Denmark, Pass'd the River with the Left-Wing of Horse, and that with much Difficulty; for his Horse was Bogg'd on the other side, and Himself forc'd to alight, till one of his Attendance help'd him to get his Horse out, and mount again. As soon as his Troops were got over, and put in some Order, His Majesty Drew his Sword, (though the Wound he receiv'd the Day before, had made his Arm stiff and uneasy) and March'd at the Head of 'em towards the Enemy, who were Coming on again, in good Order, towards the English-Foot, that had now got over the Pass, and were Advancing bravely towards the Irish, though they were Double their Number. When these Two Bodies had got almost within Musket-shot of one another, the Enemy discover'd the Left-Wing of the English-Horse Moving towards 'em: At which they made a sudden Halt, Fac'd-about, and Retreated up the Hill again, to a little Village call'd Dunmore, about Half-a-Mile from the Pass. The English Marching in good Order, Came up with 'em at this Village, when the Irish Fac'd-about, and Charg'd with so much Briskness, that they made the English-Horse Give-ground, tho' they had the King at the Head of 'em. The King was so aham'd of their Shrinking, that He rid off to the Inniskilliners, and ask'd them what they wou'd do for Him? Their Chief-Officer told them, It was King William, who was doing them the Honour to Head 'em. Upon this they boldly came forward, and the King Leading 'em, receiv'd the Enemy's Fire; but then Wheeling to the Left, to fetch up his own Men again, the Inniskilliners, through a Mistake, retir'd after him above an Hundred Yards. This made the King Move to the Left, to put Himself at the Head of some Dutch-Troops that were Advancing; while, in the mean-time, the Inniskilliners, growing sensible of their Error, went on, and renew'd their Charge, with good Success. In this Place, the Duke of Schenberg's Regiment of Horse, made up of French-Refugees, behav'd themselves with undaunted Resolution, like Men that fought for their Friends and Protectors of another Nation, against the Enemies and Persecutors of their own Country. At the same time, another Party, Commanded by Lieutenant-General Ginkle, Charg'd in a Lane to the Left, but was soon Overpower'd by the Irish, and forced to Give-way. This being observ'd by a Party of Sir Albert Coningham's Dragoons, and another of Colonel Leveson's, the Officers Order'd their Men to alight, and Line a Hedge, as also an old House that flankt the Lane, from whence they pour'd in their Shot upon the Enemy, and did great Service, by Protecting General Ginkle, who continu'd in the Rear of his Men, and labour'd heartily to make them stand their Ground, and by giving the Dutch-Horse an Opportunity of Rallying; by which means, after Half an Hour's sharp Dispute, they were beat back again with considerable Loss.

On the other side, Lieutenant-General Hamilton, finding that his Foot did not answer his Expectation, put himself at the Head of the Horse, which were likewise Routed, and himself taken Prisoner. When he was brought to the King, His Majesty ask'd him, Whether the Irish wou'd Fight any more? Yes, Sir, (reply'd Hamilton) upon my Honour, I believe they will. When he pronounc'd the word Honour, the King look'd wishly upon him, and then turn'd about, repeating once or twice, Your Honour; intimating, that what he assur'd upon his Honour, was not to be depended on, since he had forfeited that before, by siding with Tyrconnel: And this was all the Rebuke the King gave him, for his Breach of Trust. In the mean-time, Count Schenberg, being inform'd of his Father's Death, Pursu'd the Enemy with that Fury, which a Noble and Just Resentment cou'd inspire, and drove them several Miles beyond the Village of Duleck, with great Slaughter: Nor did he desist from sacrificing Enemies to his Father's Ghost, till the Lord Portland, by the King's express Command, oblig'd him to return to the Place where the Foot made a Halt, and where they lay upon their Arms all Night.

King William had Reason not to regard what Hamilton told him; for, in effect, that General was no sooner taken, but the Fight ceas'd on that side: And Count Lanzoon, making up to King James, who (during the whole Action) led with some Squadrons of Horse on Dunmore-Bay, represented to His Majesty, "That He wou'd be soon Surrounded by the Enemy; and that he told Him, "He ought to think of nothing but a Retreat, which he doubted wou'd not be made good, with many Brave Officers then about Him, and the Remains of his French and Swiss-Troops." This Advice the Unfortunate King was very inclinable to take; and therefore, attended by the Regiment of Sarsfield, March'd off to Duleck, and from thence, in great haste, to Dublin: Whilst Count Lanzoon, Sheldon, and some other Officers, dispos'd all things for a Retreat, which they perform'd in very good Order.

King James's whole Loss in this Battle, was generally computed at 1500 Men, amongst whom were the Lord Dongan, the Lord Carlinsford, Sir Neal O-Neal, the Marquis D'Harquincourt; and several Prisoners, the Chief of whom was Lieutenant-General Hamilton, who, to do him Justice, behav'd himself with great Courage, and kept Victory doubtful, till he was made Prisoner. On the English-side fell above 500; an inconsiderable Number, considering the Gain of so important a Battle, if the Renowned Duke of Schenberg had not been amongst them. He was a Person of firm and compos'd Courage, and one of the best Generals that France ever bred. To the Lawrels he gather'd in Catalonia and in Flanders, he added the Glory of having fix'd the present King of Portugal on his Throne, and of having been Instrumental to the Settlement of King William. He had a great Experience of the World, knew Men and Things better than any Man of his Profession ever did, and was as great in Council, as at the Head of an Army. In his Declining Years, his Memory very much fail'd, but his Judgment remain'd true and clear to the last. He appear'd Courteous and Assable to every Body, and yet he had an Air of Grandeur that commanded Respect from all: He was of a Middle-Stature, Fair-Complexion'd, a very Sound, Hardy Man of his Age, and sat a Horse incomparably well. As he lov'd always to be Neat in his Cloaths, so was he ever Pleasant in his Conversation, of which this Repartee is a pregnant Instance: Some-time before he went for Ireland, he was walking in St. James's-Park, amidst Crowds of the Young and Gay, and being ask'd, What a Man of his Age had to do with such Company? His Answer was, That a good General makes his Retreat

Retreat as late as he can. He was Eighty-two Years of Age when he was Kill'd. And as Monsieur La Caillemote had follow'd that Great-Man in all his Fortunes, while Alive; so did he in his Death, for he did not long survive his Wounds.

As for the King Himself, He receiv'd no manner of Hurt in the Action, though He was in all the height of it; only a Cannon-Ball carry'd away a piece of his Boot. His Majesty did all that the Greatest of Generals cou'd do upon this Occasion: He Chose the Field, Dispos'd the Attacks, Drew up his Army, Charg'd the Enemy several times, Supported his Forces when they began to Shrink, and Demean'd Himself throughout with that Conduct, Gallantry, Resolution, and Presence of Mind; and was such a Poize for the inclining Victory to his Own Side, that the Irish themselves confess'd, That if the English chang'd Kings with them, they would fight the Battle over-again. However, Both Kings have been equally blam'd; the one, for not Improving the Advantage of his Victory; and the other, that of his Retreat. Those that have writ in Favour of King James, say, King William might have March'd directly to Dublin, a Place Open and Unfortify'd on every side; and prevented the Irish Assembling any more, and Securing Limerick, Galway, and several other Important Places. And such as are Partisans of King William, blame both King James, for leaving Ireland with so much Precipitation; and those He left behind, for not having carefully Collected the Remains of a Defeat that had cost them but few Men.

James lies to Dublin.

King James being arriv'd at Dublin, and having immediately Assembled the Magistrates and Council of the City, he told them; "That his Army in England having made a total Defection against Him, when He had the greatest Occasion for them, He retir'd to France, where He was kindly receiv'd by that King, and had all the Assurance imaginable to be Re-establish'd on his Throne: That in some-time after, he came to this Kingdom of Ireland, and found all his Roman-Catholick-Subjects, as Well-equip'd and Prepar'd to Defend his Cause, as their Ability would bear; and though He had been often told, That when it came to the Touch, they would never bear the Brunt of a Battle; He cou'd never credit the same till that Day, when having a good Army, and all Preparations fit to Engage a Foreign Invader, he found the fatal Truth of what He had been so-often Precaution'd. And tho' the Army did not Desert Him, as they did in England; yet, when it came to Trial, they basely fled the Field, and left it a Spoil to his Enemies; nor cou'd they be prevail'd upon to Rally, though the Loss, in the whole Defeat, was but Inconsiderable: So that henceforward He never more determin'd to Head an Irish-Army, and did now resolve to shift for Himself, as they themselves must do. That it had often been Debated, in case such a Resolution shou'd happen, Whether, upon Deserting the City of Dublin, the same might not be fired? He did therefore Charge them, on their Allegiance, That they neither shou'd Rifle it by Plunder, nor Destroy it by Fire; which in all Kingdoms would be judg'd very Barbarous, and must be believ'd to be done by His Orders; and if done, there would be but little Mercy to be expected from an Enrag'd Enemy. Concluding, "He was necessitated to yield to Force, but would never cease to labour their Deliverance, as long as He liv'd.

His Majesty having stay'd at Dublin one Night, the next Morning, attended by the Duke of Berwick and Tyrconnel, and the Marquess of Powis, He Posted away to Waterford, where He arriv'd the same Day, taking care to have the Bridges broke down behind him, for fear of being Pursued. There He went on-Board a Vessel call'd the Count de Lauzun, that was ready to receive Him: But the Sieur Foran, who Commanded the Squadron, meeting him at Sea, desir'd him to go on-Board one of his Frigots, for his quicker Passage; and by this means he got over once more into France, and fix'd his Residence at St. Germain.

R. James returns to France.

So soon as King James was gone, all the Considerable Papists fled from Dublin, and the Protestants were releas'd, who possess'd themselves of the Militia-Arms, and, with the Assistance of the Bishops of Meath and Limerick, form'd a Committee to take Care of Things, and sent Letters to King William, to give him an Account of what had pass'd, and humbly to Pray His Majesty to Honour that City with his Presence.

William invited to Dublin.

King William, before He left England, was very sensible of a Dangerous Conspiracy against Him, form'd upon the Hopes and Expectation of Success to King James and the French Power; and therefore, Four Days before He Set out for Ireland, He Publish'd a Proclamation for the Apprehending of several Disaffected-Persons, who, by Information given upon Oath, had Conspired together to raise Rebellion, and, for that Purpose, had made Provision of Arms, and had List'd themselves in several Regiments, Troops and Companies, under pretence of Commission from the late King James. His Majesty well knew of an intended Invasion from France, and a concerted Insurrection in England, if good Opportunity shou'd offer, by any Advantage obtain'd by the French-Fleet, which was at this time more Formidable than was expected, or cou'd be well imagin'd; and our own English-Navy was, for this one Year, inferior to it. His Majesty, however, was not wanting to make the best Preparations He cou'd by Sea; and having fitted up as good a Fleet as the Exigence of his Affairs would admit, He Appointed the Earl of Torrington Admiral, Ralph Delaval Esq, Vice-Admiral, and George Rooke Esq, Rear-Admiral, to Command the Red-Squadron; and made Mr. Russel Admiral of the Blue, with Sir John Ashby Vice-Admiral, and Sir Cloudesley Shovel Rear-Admiral, under him. And because there was a Common-Suspicion, that some of the Officers and Sea-men were Disaffected to the present Government, therefore, to purge 'em, while the Fleet lay in the Downs, this Address was made a Test of their Loyalty to King William:

A Plot in England, against K. William.

WE the Flag-Officers, Captains, and other Officers of Your Majesties Navy, being now ready to enter upon Action, for the Service of Your Majesties, and the Defence of our Country, do most humbly beg Leave to Declare to GOD, Your Majesties, and the whole World, That we do acknowledge Your Majesties to be the Undoubted Rightful King and Queen of England, and the Dominions thereto belonging: And we do hereby solemnly Renounce all Allegiance and Obedience to the late King James; and do faithfully Promise, That we will, with our Lives, Defend and Assist Your Majesties, against the said late King James, his Adherents, and all Your Enemies whatsoever.

the Danger of Her Royal Confort in Ireland; the Imminent Appearance of an Invasion from France; and at Home a divided People, some profestly owning an Allegiance to King James, and even others who had taken the Oaths, waiting for an Opportunity to renounce 'em. Under all these dubious Apprehensions Her Majesty betray'd no Fear, and lost no Time. Afssoon as She heard the King was safely Landed in Ireland, She began to Exercise the Power, by Act of Parliament devolv'd upon Her, in Two Seasonable Proclamations, both Dated the same Day, June the 17th. One commanding all Papists and reputed Papists forthwith to depart the Cities of London and Westminster, and from within Ten Miles of the same. Another for the Confinement of Popish Recufants within Five Miles of their respective Dwellings. And there was great Need of the utmost Vigilance and Care to prevent the Ruin of the Nation; for King James's Adherents, who by this Time began to be distinguish'd by the Name of Jacobites, being furnished by King William's Absence with a promising Opportunity, to Attempt the Restoring of their Abdicated Monarch, were concerting Measures with France to put their Designs in Execution. It was Agreed, that while Part of the French-Fleet should bear up the Thames, the Jacobites in London, who were grown very Bold and Numerous, by the Flocking of that Party from all Parts of the Country thither, should have made an Insurrection, and have Seised the Queen and Her Chief Ministers. Then certain Persons were to have taken upon 'em the Administration of Affairs till the Return of King James, who was to leave the Command of his Army to his Generals, and hasten with all Speed into England. The other Part of the French-Fleet, having join'd their Gallies, was to have Landed Eight Thousand Men at Torbay, with Arms for a greater Number. After which the Gallies and Men of War were to Sail into the Irish-Sea, to hinder the Return of King William and his Forces, and the Discontented Scotch were to have Revolted at the same Time in several Parts of that Kingdom.

The French Fleet in the Channel.

The French-Fleet having enter'd the Channel, as before concerted, hover'd some time about the English-Coast, as expecting the Effect of the Conspiracy that was to have broke out the 18th of June. The Vigilant Queen would not run the Hazards of Delay, but sent immediate Orders to Admiral Torrington to Fight the Enemy wherever he should meet him. Accordingly on the 24th of June that Admiral Sail'd from St. Helens the Wind at North-East, and stood toward the French-Fleet, which was seen the Evening before off of Fresh-Water Gate in the Ile of Wight; but the Wind taking him short, He came to an Anchor near Dungnesse, within Five Leagues of the Enemy, who at Eight next Morning were at Compton-Bay. On June the 30th, (the Day before the Battle at the Boyne) the Two Fleets drew up in Lines of Battle off of Beachy, and about Nine in the Morning, the Dutch having the Van-Guard began the Fight, as also did some of the English; but not being Seconded by the rest of the English-Fleet, which unexpectedly stood away, several of the Dutch-Ships, after they had fought most Gallantly, were either Burnt, Sunk or Disabled, and the English that Engag'd were very much shatter'd. The Fight continu'd from Morning till Evening, the Dutch maintaining their Stations with so much Resolution and Bravery against the whole French Force, which consisted Eighty-two Men of War, that they had much ado to escape being all destroy'd. Among other Officers they lost in this unequal Battle, were

Rear-Admiral Jan Dick, Rear-Admiral Brackel, and Captain Nordel; on the English Side, Captain Botham, Captain Pomroy, with Two Captains of the Marine-Regiments. Admiral Torrington was discarded, and afterwards brought to his Tryal, where he pleaded the Inequality of Strength and the Disadvantage of the Wind, and was thereupon Acquitted: Yet the Action was thought so Inglorious that he suffer'd extremely in his Reputation among the People, who were always apt to call a Misfortune a Miscarriage. It is certain that in the Year 1697. when several French-Officers who had been in the Engagement, came over into England after the Peace, when they could not be suspected of any Partial Design, they openly Justify'd and Commended the Earl's Conduct, and said, "He deserv'd to be Rewarded rather than Censur'd, since He had preserved the best Part of the Fleet from being totally destroy'd."

The News of the Advantage got by the French at Sea had no sooner reach'd London, but the Fears of a Descent created a general Consternation, which immediately spread itself through the whole Kingdom. The Queen was not Ignorant of the Danger, but did all that was possible to conceal her own Fears, and to inspire her Subjects with Valour and Resolution. The Lord-Mayor, and Aldermen, and the Lieutenancy of London were not wanting on this Critical Juncture to express their Zeal and Affection for the Government: For Attending Her Majesty in Council, they declar'd the unanimous Resolution of the City, to Defend and Preserve Their Majesties and their Government upon this extraordinary Juncture, with the Hazard of their Lives and the utmost of their Power; representing to Her Majesty that the several Regiments of the Militia of the City, consisting of about Nine Thousand Men are compleat in their Numbers; well-armed, and appointed, and ready to be Raised immediately, and to proceed in Their Majesties Service: That the Lieutenancy also had resolv'd, that Six Regiments of Auxiliaries should be Raised for the Service; and that the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons in Common-Council Assembled, had unanimously Resolved, by the voluntary Contribution of themselves and other Citizens, forthwith to raise and set out a Large Regiment of Horse and One Thousand Dragoons, for Their Majesties Service, (and had made considerable Progress therein already,) and Resolved likewise to maintain them at their own Charge in the Service for a Month, or longer, if there shall be Occasion. And they prayed Her Majesty that She would be pleas'd to Nominate and Appoint Officers to Command them. All which Her Majesty most graciously accepted, and was pleas'd to thank them for their Readiness, Loyalty and Zeal on this Occasion: and to the last Part answered, That She would Consider of it, and Appoint Officers to Command according to their Desire.

The French threaten'd a Descent.

Loyal Addresses from the City of London.

About the same Time, to Suppress the Fears of a Revolt in the West, an Address was presented to the Queen by Shadrach Vincent, Esq; from above Ten Thousand Tinners of Cornwall, giving all Assurances of Fidelity and Obedience, and faithfully promising (notwithstanding the artifice and ill Designs of disaffected Men to withdraw them from their Loyalty) an unalterable Allegiance to Their Majesties, owning and acknowledging Their Majesties alone to be their Lawful and Rightful King and Queen, and disclaiming all Allegiance to the late King James, or to the Pretended Prince of Wales after him. Within few Days after, the Deputy-Lieutenants and Officers of the Militia for for Middlesex and Westminster, made a Solemn Address and Solemn Declaration, That they perceived there were many mischievous and dangerous Practices, Consultations and Contrivances of Papists, and many others disaffected to Their Majesties and Their Government; and that it was most Notorious that the French-King by Confederacy with the late King and his Adherents, had made a bold Invasion of Their Majesties Dominion of the Narrow Seas, designing to destroy their Royal Fleet, and in Consequence to bring the Protestants of this Kingdom under his Tyranny and cruel Yoke of Bondage; and therefore they hold themselves bound in Duty to declare upon this Occasion, their deep Sense, Hatred and Abhorrence of the vile Ingratitude of those Papists and profest Protestants, who, notwithstanding Their Majesties Pardonning and Protecting them, had by Conspiracies with the late King's Adherents, or by their Murmurings against Their Majesties and the Present Government, or by their Refusal of the Oaths of Fidelity and Obedience to their Majesties, encouraged, assisted or abetted the late King in his Claims and Pretences of any Right and Title to the Government of these Realms, &c.

Wife Measures taken by the Queen.

Under these Encouragements the Queen forgot nothing, that the most active Prudence could suggest, as fit to be done in such a Juncture, without Hurry or a too visible Concern: She Publish'd a Proclamation, July the 5th, requiring all Seamen and Mariners to render themselves to Their Majesties, with suitable Rewards for coming in, and Penalties for absenting: She gave out Commissions, to put the Standing-Forces in a Condition to oppose the Enemy, and She Order'd the Militia in the Western Parts, to be in a readiness of Defending the Coasts and Assisting the Army: And to strike a Terror into the Conspirators with France, She Publish'd a Proclamation for Apprehending Edward Henry, Earl of Lichfield; Thomas, Earl of Aylesbury; William, Lord Montgomery; Roger, Earl of Castlemaine; Richard, Viscount Preston, Henry Lord Bellafys; Sir Edward Hales, Sir Robert Thorold, Sir Robert Hamilton, Sir Theophilus Oglethorpe, Colonel Edward Sackville, Lieutenant-Colonel William Richardson, Major Thomas Soaper, Captain David Lloy'd, William Penn, Esq; Edmond Elliot, Esq; Marmaduke Langdale, Esq; and Edward Rutter; being Persons who had Conspired with divers other disaffected Persons, to disturb and destroy the Government, and for that Purpose had abetted and adhered to their Majesties Enemies in the present Invasion. Nor was Her Majesty's Care of Affairs confin'd within Her own Dominions; for while She put Herself in a Posture of Defence at Home, She dispatch'd Mr. Harbord to the States-General, to let them know, how much Her Majesty was concern'd, at the Misfortune that had befall'n their Squadron in the late Engagement, and at their not-having been Seconded as they ought to have been; which Matter Her Majesty had directed to be examin'd into, in order to Recompenſe those that had done their Duty, and to Punish such as should be found to have deserv'd it: That Her Majesty had given Orders for Re-fitting the Dutch-Ships that were Disabled, at Her own Charge, and Commanded that all possible Care should be taken of the Sick and Wounded Seamen; and that Rewards should be given to the Widows of those that were Kill'd, behaving themselves bravely in the Fight, to encourage others to do well for the future. Moreover Mr. Harbord told the States, that Her Majesty had Order'd Twelve Great Ships to be forthwith fitted out, and that Her Majesty hop'd the States would likewise do their utmost to Reinforce their Fleet in this Conjunction: And Lastly, he acquainted them with the King's Happy Successes in Ireland. The States receiv'd this Message with great Satisfaction, and unanimously resolv'd to fit out immediately Thirteen Capital Ships and Six Frigots.

And yet all this Wisdom had hardly been sufficient to prevent the fatal Consequences of our Defeat at Sea, if the Victory at the Boyne, obtain'd the very next day, had not put a sudden and effectual Check to the Jacobite-Party. There has been a common Mistake spread among many People, That King William would not have hazarded a Battle, but upon an Express receiv'd that Morning, of the Beating of his Fleet, which he kept secret till the Action was over. But this is impossible to be reconcil'd to the Nature of the thing, in the Circumstances of Time and Place. King William having rested his Forces for one Night only, sent a Detachment next day to invest Drogheda, where was a great Magazine of Stores. The Governour, at first, seem'd resolute to defend the Place; but upon a Message from the King, That if His Majesty was forc'd to bring his Cannon before that Place, he must expect no Quarter, he march'd out with the Garrison, having their Baggage only, but leaving all their Arms and Stores behind them.

Victory of the Boyne prevented all Fears and Dangers.

On July 3. The Duke of Ormond, and Monſ. Auverquerque, were Detach'd with Nine Troops of Horse to secure the City of Dublin: The next day His Majesty, with the whole Army, march'd the same way, and on the 5th Encamp'd at Finglas; where he was inform'd, That King James was embark'd at Waterford, with the Duke of Berwick, Mr. Fitz-James, the Lord Powis, the Lord Tyrconnel, and the Marquis Delere: That some French Ships being arriv'd at Kingsale, many that had fled from the Battle, were posting thither to get away for France, but that the greatest Body of the Irish were gone towards Athlone: That 300 of the Swifs had deserted the Enemy; that the Town of Wexford had declar'd for King William, and that Sligo was abandon'd by the Irish.

King William's March.

On Sunday, July 6. King William rode in a Triumphant manner into Dublin, and went directly to St. Patrick's Church, attended by the Bishops of Meath and Limerick; and after the Publick Services were Solemnly perform'd, Dr. King Preached an affectionate Sermon upon the Power and Wisdom of the Providence of God, in protecting his People and defeating their Enemies. The Mayor and Aldermen waited on His Majesty, and the People endeavour'd, by all Demonstrations of Joy, to expreſs their just Sense of their great and happy Deliverance. In the Afternoon, the King return'd to the Camp; where the next day he Publish'd his Royal Declaration, "Promising both his Pardon and Protection to all the People of the Kingdom of Ireland, who either remain'd at home, or having fled from their Dwellings, should by the First day of August next, repair to their usual Places of Abode, and Surrender up their Arms: But threatening condign Punishment to all the desperate Leaders of the present Rebellion, who had violated those Laws, by which the Kingdom of Ireland was united, and inseparably annex'd to the Imperial Crown of England; and had call'd in the French, and committed all manner of Violences and Depredations against the Protestants of that Country, &c."

His Entry into Dublin.

On July 9. The King decamp'd from Finglas, and divided his Army into Two Bodies: With the Upon this rude Answer, Douglas resolv'd to make a General Assault, and had made some Progress in the Attempt of it; but for want of Forage, and upon a Report, That Sarsfield was advancing with Fifteen Thousand Men to relieve the Place, Douglas held a Council of War; wherein it was thought fit to raise the Siege, which he accordingly did on the 25th, having lost near 400 Men before the Town, of whom the greater part died of Sickness.

Entertained at Kilkenny.

His Majesty having left Brigadier Trelawny to command at Dublin, advanc'd with his Army towards Kilkenny; where, on July 19. he was splendidly Entertain'd by the Duke of Ormond, in his Castle, which had the good luck to have been preserv'd by Count Lauzun, with all the Goods and Furniture, and a Cellar well-stor'd. On the 21st the Army encamp'd at Carrick, from whence Major-General Kirk, with his own Regiment, and Colonel Brewer's, as also a Party of Horse, was sent towards Waterford, to demand Possession of that Town. The Two Regiments in Garrison, at first refus'd to Surrender, but upon drawing down the heavy Cannon, and the sending for more Forces, they agreed to march out with Arms and Baggage, on the 25th, and so were conducted to Malton. The Fort Duncannon, a Place of good Strength, which commands the River of Waterford, was likewise surrendred the next day. His Majesty went and view'd Waterford the same day it was given up, and took care that no Persons should be molested, contrary to the Articles of Surrendry: Among others, the Lord Dover was admitted to a more particular Protection, as having formerly apply'd himself, when the King was at Hillsborough, by Major-General Kirk's means, to desire a Pass for himself and Family to Flanders. The Lord George Howard did here likewise accept of his Majesty's Mercy.

Advances toward Limerick.

On July 27. The King left the Command of the Army to Count Soames, and went away to Carlou, in order to return to Dublin, and embark for England. But after some few Days, having an Account from the Queen, that the Designs of the Malecontents were discover'd and prevented, the Loss at Sea pretty well repair'd, and that the French had only Burnt One small Village in the West, and so gone off again, His Majesty resolv'd to return to the Army; which on the 4th Day of August He found encamp'd at Golden-Bridge, and by the 7th He reached Carrickellish, within Five Miles of Limerick, where Lieutenant-General Douglas join'd him. The next Morning the Earl of Portland and Brigadier Steward were detach'd towards Limerick with Nine Hundred Horse and Twelve Hundred Foot, who advanc'd within Cannon-shot of the Town with little Opposition; and in the Evening the King himself, attended by Prince George, Monsieur d'Anverquerque, Lieutenant-General Ginkle, and several other great Officers, with about Two Hundred Horse, went to view the Posture of the Enemy, and the Avenues to the Town. On the 9th the whole Army decamp'd at Five in the Morning, and made their Approaches in excellent Order, and drove the Enemy before them, till they came 1690. to a narrow Pass between two Bogs, within half a Mile of the Town, where the Irish Horse made a stand, and the Hedges were lin'd with Musquetters; but Colonel Earle led on his Foot with incredible Bravery, and continu'd this Hedge-Fight for two Hours, till he had driven the Irish under the very Walls of the Town, and possess'd himself of two Advantageous Posts, call'd, Cromwell's Fort, and the Old Chappel. The Army being well-posted, the King sent a Trumpeter with a Summons to the Town: A great many of the Garrison were for Capitulating, but Mons. Boisseleau, the Governour, the Duke of Berwick, and Colonel Sarsfield, oppos'd it with a great deal of Heat, saying, There was by this time an actual Insurrection in England; That the Dauphin was anded there with a great Army, and that the Prince of Orange would quickly be oblig'd to withdraw his Forces thither. Hereupon Boisseleau sent the Trumpeter back with a Letter, directed to Sir Robert Southwel, Secretary of State, (to avoid owning the Title of King William) importing, That he was surpriz'd at the Summons, but he thought the best way of gaining the Prince of Orange's good Opinion, was, by a Vigorous Defence of the Town, which his Master had committed to his Trust. About Eight in the Evening, the King went to his Camp, a little Mile from the Town, having been on Horseback from Five in the Morning, giving the necessary Orders, and exposing himself amidst the greatest Dangers: Nor was he safe in his Tent; for some Deserters having given the Enemy an Account of the Situation of it, they play'd so very briskly that way, that his Majesty was at last prevail'd with to remove.

Summons
the Garrison.

On August 11. One Obrian, an honest Country Gentleman, came to the Camp, and gave Notice, that Sarsfield with a Body of Five or Six Hundred Horse and Dragoons, had pass'd the River Shannon in the Night, Nine Miles above Limerick, and was out about some Extraordinary Design. The King immediately suspected an Attempt upon his Train of Artillery, that was then upon the Road from Kilkenny, under a small Guard; and therefore his Majesty gave Order, that Sir John Lanier with Five Hundred Horse should march to meet the Train. But wherever the Fault lay, it was One or Two in the Morning before the Party set out, and even then they advanc'd very slowly, till after they saw a great Light in the Air, and heard a strange rumbling Noise, which some rightly conjectur'd to be the Train blown up. For the Artillery having the day before march'd beyond Cullen, to a little old Ruinous Castle call'd Ballededy, not seven Miles from the English Camp: Sarsfield lurk'd all that day in the Mountains, and having notice where and how the Convoy lay, he took with him Guides that brought him to the very spot; where he surpriz'd them, killing about Sixty, and putting the rest to Flight: After which he gathered the Carriages and Waggon's of Bread and Ammunition into one heap, he fill'd the Guns with Powder, and placing their Mouths into the Ground, set fire to a Train that blew up all the Heap with a most astonishing Noise. The Irish got some Booty upon this Occasion, but took no Prisoners; only a Lieutenant of Colonel Earle's being Sick in a House hard by, was stripp'd and brought to Sarsfield; who us'd him with Civility, and told him, If he had not succeeded in that Enterprize, he would have gone to France. The Party of Horse that was sent from the Camp, came up in sight of the Enemy's Rear, after the
